XXII. But they do not ſtop there; for the Fathers being accuſtomed to argue Philoſophically about the Ideas of Plato, who had eſtabliſhed a ſort of Trinity, gave themſelves the ſame Liberty abont the Divine Eſſence, and from thence ſprang a World of Errors, and ſtrange and unavoidable Tenets, when they digged deep into that Myſtery. I * determine not whether Arius, or St. Athanaſius were Platoniſts, I chooſe rather to ſay that neither the Head of the Hereticks, nor that of the Orthodox, exactly followed the Principles of that Philoſopher; but by arguing too much in imitation of the Platoniſts, they brought forth a vaſt number of Heterodoxies. Revelation alone teaches us this Myſtery, and we ought to believe it not only becauſe it is God that ſpeaks; but we ought to believe of it what God, the Sovereign Wiſdom hath dictacted concerning it. The Scripture ſpeaks of it with abundance of ſimplicity, and gives no occaſion for the Queſtions that are Diſputed in the Schools. 'Twas only Philoſophy that ſtarted them and multiplied them. In ſeeking after thoſe Foreign Succours, they have weakened their Faith inſtead of confirming it. What does it concern me that Plato believed a Trinity of Names, or Perſons, which are not thoſe whom I adore? And if I take but a few of his Principles, whileſt I reject the others as being full of groſs Errors? I confeſs this Myſtery is above Reaſon, and yet I'll maintain that Reaſon diſcover'd it before Revelation: I own 'tis God which lays upon me the neceſſity of believing it; and after having hearkned to God, I have recourſe to Plato, as to a Guide that will open me the way, and lead me farther than the Holy Spirit; now is not this a down right Abſurdity and Contradiction? We ought not to wonder therefore if we do go aſtray by following ſuch a Guide. From thence doubtleſs it happened that Theophilus of Antioch ſaid, as Plato had done, that God deſigning to make the World, had begot the Word to ſerve him as his Miniſter; from whence it came that others have made the Son inferior to the Father, and acknowledged a Subordination between the Perſons of the Trinity; and ſaid, that the Holy Ghoſt was inferiour both to the Father and the Son, as the Platoniſts ſaid, that the Soul of the World was inferiour to the Word.

XXIII. They have gone ſo far that they have done all they could to juſtifie Plato. They will not have him to be in an Error, becauſe ſome of the Fathers have conceived the Son, as he conceived the Wiſdom, which made his Second God. They have Collected out of the Writings of the firſt Fathers whatſoever they have ſaid that was odd about the Trinity, that ſo they might protect Plato under the ſhelter of that Authority; as if the Errors of the one would make void thoſe of the other; or rather that we ought not to look on the Platonick Philoſophy, as the true Source from whence thoſe Errors had flowed. By the favour of a begging Orthodoxy, they have not failed ſometimes to open Paradice to Plato and his Diſciples.

XXIV. They pretend * at leaſt that they were not Idolaters, ſeeing that inſtead of Creatures, they Adore, and cauſe to be Adored the Perfections of God. But did not thoſe Philoſophers at the ſame time Adore the Creatures as ſenſible Images of the Intellectual World; and did not Plato in his Timæus recommend the Worſhip of falſe Gods, and the ſame Sacrifices as the People offered to their Idols? They clear him of the Charge of his Diſciples, and maintain that his Theology was much more Sound than that of his Followers, who have corrupted it ſince Chriſtianity came into the World, for fear leſt the nearneſs of their Tenets ſhould occaſion their Sect to be loſt; but on the contrary Amelius gained great Honour to himſelf in finding out the λόγος, the Word of his Maſter in the Goſpel of St. John. Chriſtianity Triumphant has often done them Honour, and as the Chriſtians gained ſome Reputation by having met with a Trinity in a Philoſopher, ſo the Platoniſts in their turn obtained another in ſeeing Chriſtians to adopt their Principles.

I. WE cannot take from the Jews thoſe Footſteps of the Trinity which the Holy Spirit has ſowed in the Scriptures. 'Twas there that God prepared the Mind to receive that incomprehenſible Myſtery. But yet it conducted People ſlowly, ſtep by ſtep, and the Knowledge of that great Truth was proportion'd to an Oeconomy covered over with their Shadows and Figures. If notwithſtanding all the Light that the Goſpel has ſcatter'd abroad, and the accompliſhment of the Propheſies, which of all the Commentaries is the moſt clear and ſenſible, we are hard put to it to find the Trinity in the Old Teſtament; we may preſume that the Jews gave but little attention to it, and that notwithſtanding all the Application wherewith they ſet themſelves about it, they had but a very dark and obſcure perception of it. However one of the Learned of the Age has thought that the Rabbies coming to the Succour of the Chriſtians, would have helped to Convert the Anti-Trinitarians; and riſing up in Judgment againſt their own Nation, they would have engaged them to the belief of a Doctrine Doctrine which is indeed the principal Obſtacle to their Converſion. This Argument would draw mighty conſequences after it. It ought to make a great impreſſion on the Jews, ſeeing it is forced from the Confeſſion of their Maſters. Beſides, theſe are diſintereſſed Judges who pronounce againſt the Anti-Trinitarians, who prove the Succeſſion of the Doctrine, and a Tradition ſprang up before there were any Thoughts of diſputing about the Matter. But it is to be feared that People who did nor ſee the Trinity in the New Teſtament, wherein it is clearly expreſſed, would be much more puzzled to find it in the Old, where one can have but very obſcure traces of it. Will the Rabbies be believed, who have ſpoken of this Myſtery after an ambiguous manner, preferably to the Chriſtians who ſet it out with all the Light they can? When they have withſtood the ſolid and weighty Proofs of the latter, can it be thought they'll ſubmit to the Authority of the others? 'Tis true, the Chriſtians ſeem at this day to be concerned in point of Intereſt to maintain and ſupport this Doctrine; but the Intereſt they have in it, and which ſprings but from their Perſuaſion that God hath revealed it; does this, I ſay, form a Prejudice ſufficient to reject all their Errors? Be it how it will, the Book of that learned Gentleman contains in it ſuch profound and compleat Erudition, that his Proofs deſerve to be related, for they cannot be read by many Perſons, becauſe they are wrote in a Language which few will give themſelves the trouble to learn, tho' it were high worth the while for the great number of excellent * Works that have been compoſed in it.

II. Moſes ſays, that the Gods created Heaven and Earth. That Legiſlator, who was intereſſed to bring back to the Unity of One God a People accuſtomed to worſhip a Plurality, becauſe they had lived in Egypt with Idolaters, would not have expreſſed himſelf in a manner as ſhould eſtabliſh a Number of Gods, if he had not meant to inſinuate that there were ſeveral Perſons in One ſole Eſſence.

The other Sacred Writers † have followed Moſes his Style: For Joſuah praiſes the holy Gods. Samuel ſpeaks of the living Gods, and David ſings of the righteous Gods, or Judges of the Earth, Theſe Prophets had no Affection for the Polytheiſm of the Heathen. They adored but One only God. Wherefore did they ſo often mention the Gods that created, the righteous, holy and living Gods, if it were not becauſe they knew there was a Plurality of Perſons. The R. Simeon Jochaides has made no difficulty or ſcruple to confeſs it: Come and ſee, ſays he, the Myſtery of the Name Elohim, Gods: There are three Degrees, and every Degree ſubſiſts by it ſelf: and yet they are all but One; they are alſo ſo united that they never ſeparate, the other Jews have ſo well felt the force of this Expreſſion, that they are obliged to have recourſe to a violent and wreſted Explication of it, maintaining that Moſes pointed at the Attributes of God, as his Power, and that infinite Wiſdom by which he created the World. 'Tis a kind of Confeſſion that the Jews make when they lie under the weight of this Difficulty that is objected againſt them: For when (for inſtance) a Man acts alone and makes a Book, we never will ſay that Men made that Book becauſe of the ſolid Judgment and Learning which is to be found in it. That is not therefore the true reaſon which obliged Moſes to ſay in his Book, that the Gods created the Heavens and the Earth.

III. Moſes often introduces God ſaying thus, Let us make Man after our own Image. To what God ſpoke he, and after what Image could he have been created, if not after God's? Let us go down, cries God, when he was reſolved to make out his Proceſs againſt the Sodomites; all theſe terms, couched in the Plural, denote the Intention Moſes had to ſhew a Plurality of Perſons. The Hiſtorian of Tobit *, who lived a long time after in Chaldea, being filled with the ſame Notion, and convinced that the Expreſſion was juſt, has put it where it was not: for he brings in God ſaying, let us make unto Adam an Aid like unto himſelf; and this is ſo much the more ſurpriſing as the Chaldee Paraphraſt has ſaid conformable to the Original †, I will make to Adam an help like to him ſelf. The LXX. Interpreters have || imitated Tobit's Hiſtorian. The Jews affirm that the LXX. had changed thoſe Expreſſions, for fear of diſpleaſing King Ptolomy. But that conjecture is falſe; for on the one hand they took care to eſtabliſh the Unity of One God againſt the Sentiments and Religion of that Idolatrous Prince, and on the other hand they did not fear that the Heathen who ſhould Study their Law, would abuſe thoſe Paſſages where they make God to ſpeak in a Plural term. The Modern Jews have not ſtrictly followed the Tradition of their Anceſtors; yet however they have ſo lively a ſence of the Impreſſion which thoſe terms have wrought upon them, that it is enough only to read their Anſwers to be convinced hereof. They ſay * that Moſes, to whom the Holy Spirit dictated, even to the very words, was afraid when he was about writing thoſe words, Let us make man after our own Image, and withdrew his hand, repreſenting to God that he ſhould do wrong to his Unity. Moſes foreſaw, as the Doctors will have it, that this would be the way to ſet up and eſtabliſh two Principles, the One good, and the Other evil, and to ſtrengthen a pernicious Doctrine upon his Authority: But God aſſured him again and again, by telling him that he muſt write what he dictated, without troubling himſelf about thoſe that were reſolved to err. The Others add, that God deſigned to give us an Example of Humility and Charity, by conſulting with his Subjects and Inferiours, in imitation of Kings who frequently admit them into their Councils. But who were thoſe Subjects that God could aſſociate with himſelf in the Creation of Man? For the Creature cannot create nor intervene as a partial Cauſe in a Work which requires an infinite Power. In fine, the Jews are ſtill more unreaſonable, when they repreſent God entertaining himſelf with the Works of every Day; for he muſt needs have a mighty mind to ſpeak, that will talk with inanimate Creatures. Take it which way you will, it appears by theſe Anſwers, that the Modern Jews do acknowledge there is a Plurality, tho' they will not avow it openly 'Tis no wonder then if the Antient Jews, as Tobit's Hiſtorian and the LXX. Interpreters, who had not the ſame Prejudices, nor the ſame Intereſt to oppoſe the Trinity, have ſeen that in it, which cannot keep it ſelf from being ſeen at this day.

IV. The Jews, not ſatisfied with acknowledging a Plurality, have ent'red into a greater detail. The Author of Eccleſiaſticus indicates a God the Father: I called, ſays he *, upon the Lord, the Father of my Lord, that he would not leave me in the days of my trouble. David ſpeaks not more elegantly in the Hundred and Tenth Pſalm, when he ſays, the Lord ſaid unto my Lord. And J. CHRIST makes uſe of the ſame Paſſage to prove to the Jews his Divinity, and how he was diſtinguiſhed from the Father. Judith * in her Song of Thankſgiving which ſhe makes to be reſounded to the Glory of God, who had delivered her Nation, ſhews plainly to us the holy Spirit : O God, cried ſhe, let all Creatures ſerve Thee; for Thou ſpakeſt, and they were made; Thou didſt ſend forth thy Spirit, and it created them. Theſe Paſſages, taken from Tobit, Judith and Eccleſiaſticus, tho' they be Apocryphal, yet fail not to prove a continuance of Tradition, which kept it ſelf up among the Jews ſince the Gift of Prophecy was extinguiſhed.

V. Philo † has followed this ſame Tradition; at leaſt we are aſſured that he acknowledged, beſides the Being that exiſts, two other Principles, one whereof was called God, and the other Lord. According to Philo thoſe two Principles were Uncreated, Eternal, Infinite, and Incomprehenſible. It ſeems then that we cannot better define the Perſons of the Trinity. He had already ſaid that God appearing to Sarah, accompanied with thoſe two Sovereign Powers, Empire and Goodneſs failed not, tho' he was one alone, to operate three figures, or three appearances in the Soul of Abraham : And as this Truth is incomprehenſible to Men, he judiciouſly remarks that it was a very great Myſtery not to be revealed to all the World. In ſhort, Sarah had put the Cakes upon the hearth, to know the Myſteries that ought to be concealed, and to bury them in Silence, inſtead of divulging them.

VI. The ſame thing is to be || obſerved in the Paraphraſes, or the Targum; for in all the places, where were found the Names of Jehovah, and Elohim, Onkelos, the Author of the Chaldee Paraphraſe upon the Pentateuch, whom the Jews look upon as a Man inſpired with the Holy Ghoſt, and the Chriſtians as a very nice and exact Interpreter, diſtinguiſhes Jehovah, the Word of Jehovah, and the Sheckinah. The Number of thoſe Paſſages is ſo great, as is enough to make a Volume. Wherefore did they diſtinguiſh ſo often Jehovah, the Word, or the Mimrah of Jehovah, and the Sheckinah, if they are not different Perſons. Let the Jews underſtand, if they will do ſo *, the holy Spirit, or the Son, by the Sheckinah, that is of no importance. If Philo and ſome other Jews believed that Moſes ſpake of the Wind, when he ſaid, that the Spirit of God moved on the Waters; Others have underſtood by that Spirit that was to reſt on the Meſſiah; and one of them has affirmed, that at the very moment of the Creation, the Throne of God was in the midſt of the Air, which was inflamed by the Spirit of the goodneſs of God bleſſed for evermore; and this Spirit of the goodneſs of God is the Third Perſon of the Trinity.

VII. The Cabaliſts † have yet much leſs Authority than the Paraphraſts, becauſe they are a great deal more Modern. It muſt be confeſſed alſo, that exactneſs is almoſt always wanting in their way of Reaſoning and Argumentation. Yet as this Science began in the time of Philo, and thoſe Doctors may have preſerved the Tradition of their Fathers, tho' they prove it ill‖, we muſt not refuſe to hear what they ſay upon ſo important a Matter. But we ſhould never have done, if we went to relate every thing they have ſaid upon this Subject. They diſtinguiſh the Perſons of the Trinity, and fix the number of them to three; they mark their perſonal Character, and their different Actions; they will alſo have the Second Perſon to proceed by emanation from the Firſt, and ſo the Third to proceed from the Second. And that ſo nothing may be wanting to compoſe a Syſtem wholy Chriſtian, they add, that it is a Myſtery incomprehenſible to human Reaſon.

It will ſuffice if we caſt our eyes upon their Sephiroths, and the order in which they range them, to be convinced of this. The Firſt of the Sephiroths is unknown to all Creatures, and is called Crown, which repreſents the Father. The Second is that Wiſdom by which the Temple of Jeruſalem was built, the World created, and by which all the Events of this lower Univerſe are directed. The Third is Prudence or Underſtanding, which we may look on as the Holy Ghoſt, ſeeing they teach at the ſame time that this third Sephiroth proceeds from the two former, which for that reaſon they have called his Father and Mother.

In a word, a Phyſitian of Florence, who after he was converted himſelf, laboured the Converſion of his Children and other Jews about the middle of the Sixteenth Century, maintained againſt them, that there was not any Controverſy between the Synagogue and the Church about the Trinity, ſeeing the Cabaliſts, who are Maſters of Truth, have ſaid the ſame Things as we Teach. 1. One of their Excellent Men affirmed, that there were three Lights; the antient Light; the pure Light, and the purified Light, which yet are but One God. 2. Moſes Nachmanides advanced three Sephiroths above all the reſt; they have never been ſeen by any one; there is not any defect in them, nor any diſunion. "If any one ſhould "add another to them, he would deſerve Death. "There is therefore nothing but a Diſpute about "words: You call three Lights, what Chriſtians "call the Father, Son and Holy-Ghoſt. That firſt "Eternal Number is the Father; the Wiſdom by "which God created the Heavens, is the Son; and "Prudence, or Underſtanding, which makes the "third number of the Cabaliſts, is the Chriſtians "Holy-Ghoſt. 3. The Cabaliſts have a word Agla ‖, "which is very much uſed among them, wherein "they find the Trinity. L'A. and L. make the "Name of God אל Æl. The G. is the Number of "Three, as the A. denotes the Unity; from whence "you muſt conclude that there are three of them "which make but one God. In ſhort, the Maſters "apply † thoſe words, He ſhall be lifted up, to the "Meſſiah, whom God ſhall raiſe above Abraham, "above Moſes, above the Angels, and by conſe-"quence he ſhall be God: for there is no Middle "between the Angels and the Deity. This converted Jew puſhed a great deal further his Cabaliſtical Proofs againſt his Children and Brethren, to whom they might be of uſe, ſince they are Proofs fetched from their own Principles.

VIII. We have related thoſe Proofs of the Jews belief concerning the Trinity without prepoſſeſſing the Reader, that ſo he may judge of them by his own Light. If it were permitted us to diſcover their Sentiments, we think two things ought to be diſtinguiſh'd. The Proofs that are drawn from the Scriptures and Apocryphal Books, and thoſe that are found in Philo and among the Rabbies. The firſt are ſufficient to give to the Antient Jews a belief of the Trinity, conformed to the Oeconomy under which they have lived. There were in the Writings of the Old Teſtament ſome footſteps or traces of the diſtinction of the Perſons; but thoſe traces were not full and evident, nor ſenſible enough; wherefore the generality of the Jews, gave no great attention to them, or at leaſt would not diſcover they did. If they knew but very imperfectly the Meſſiah promiſed by ſo many Propheſies, and which did ſo ſenſibly concern their Faith by the expectation and hopes of a glorious Deliverance; they yet knew leſs of the moſt impenetrable of all Myſteries, of the Trinity which was not ſo clearly revealed. Happily let them ſeek the Veſtiges of this Truth in the Old Teſtament, and not neglect the Succour that may be had there for their ſtrength'ning and confirmation. God hath long ſince prepared us for that great Myſtery, by ſcattering up and down in his Writings certain Expreſſions and Propoſitions which cannot be underſtood nor explained but by this means. They were the Foundation-Stones that contributed to the Perfection of the Building, and which diſcover that it is the ſame Architect that formed the firſt deſign, and brought it to a happy effect when the fulneſs of time was come. But we are not too much to overrate the belief that the Antient Jews had of it, ſince they ſaw not the whole extent of that deſign; and being taken up with conſidering thoſe Foundation-Stones, they did not carry their View to the uſe that was to be made of them, and the end which they anſwered in due proceſs of time. God not exacting from the Antient Fathers any more than a Faith proportioned to the Evidence and Degrees of his Revelation, they were not culpable when they had only a very implicite Faith of that Myſtery of the Trinity, and of the diſtinction of Perſons; and with ſuch an obſcure Faith they could not give of that Truth clear and evident Proofs, and ſuch as were capable of convincing even the Anti-Trinitarians.

IX. The Teſtimonies of Philo the Jew are much ſuſpected by a great many People, becauſe that Writer by his abundance of Allegories has made himſelf obſcure, and he Argues too ſubtilely to make impreſſions upon a Mind that is not prepoſſeſs'd, and much leſs on a Mind that is prejudiced to the contrary. There are found in Philo * ſome Expreſſions, or rather looſe Periods, which perhaps may dazle, but when one comes thoroughly to examine his meaning, and ſee how it will bear, we do not underſtand what he would be at by his words, or elſe that he had not any meaning at all in his Explication of the Trinity. What means he, for Example, when in one of the Paſſages cited, he "aſſures us, "That the two Powers which he u-"nites to God, are infinite, but the Goodneſs is "the Meaſure of the Good, and the Power (they "have ill tranſlated it the Emperor) is the Mea-"ſure of Subjects, and that the Emperor is the "Meaſure of all the Beings as well Material as Spi-"ritual? that thoſe Powers have the place both of "Rule and Precept; that it is good that theſe three "Meaſures do ferment and mingle together in the "Soul, that being fully convinced that there is a God "Supreme and Sovereign who is above thoſe Powers, "who appears ſometimes without them, and ſome-"times with them, it may receive the Character "of his Power and Goodneſs, and be initiated in-"to the Myſteries. If Philo deſigned to ſhew by thoſe Powers two Perſons diſtinct from the Father, it is evident he makes them inferiour to God, and that he owns but One Sovereign Being that the Soul ought to Adore, that it may participate of his Favours. He explains perhaps his Thoughts more clearly, when he ſpeaks of the appearance of God and the Angels that attended him. Let us ſee the Myſteries he finds there.

X. "When * the Soul is Illuminated with God, "as in full Mid-day, ſhe ſees three Images of one "and the ſame thing, and the others are the two "ſhadows that follow her. We ought not howe-"ver to take theſe Shadows according to the Letter, "for there is none in God; but God the Father "Father of all things is in the midſt, and on each ſide "of him march thoſe two Powers the neareſt and "moſt Antient; whereof One is called Creatreſs, "and the Other Royal; the One is called God, the "Other Lord. Behold here the Trinity finely explained; but in following this Myſtical Divine, we learn, "That God diſcovers to the Soul three "Images, and ſometimes he lets her ſee but two. "The Soul perceives but One when it is entirely "diſengaged or purified; ſhe raiſes up her ſelf not "only above a multitude of Number, but alſo above "the number of Two, and aſcends up to that ſimple, "ſincere Idea, which is One, and which has no need "of any other. But the Soul is left to ſee Three, when ſhe cannot raiſe her ſelf ſo high, as to comprehend that Being: ſo it would be an imperfection and defect in Faith only to know two Perſons of the Trinity, and to go to the Father by the Son and Holy Spirit; and in proportion as the Soul initiates it ſelf in the Myſteries of Faith, ſhe neglects thoſe two Powers, and adores only Him that is.

Philo, the more cleverly to explain his Thoughts, remarks, that "He who is, keeps in the middle: the "Image that follows is at his Right Hand, always "doing good, and is called God; the other is at "his Left Hand, and is a Royal Power, and is called "Lord. Thoſe who live uprightly and purely adore "only Him who is, and are not drawn aſide by any "other Object, for they tend always to the Wor-"ſhip of One. The others make themſelves known "to the Sovereign Father, and are recommended to "him ſometimes by the Beneficent Power, and ſome-"times by the Power Royal.

XI. What means all this? It ſeems they are finding there that Myſtical Theology, which has made ſuch a Noiſe in France and at Rome for theſe late Years. Thoſe Souls that live uprightly, and adore only Him who is, according to Philo, are perhaps thoſe that love God, without having any reſpect either to Reward or Puniſhment. God prefers them before all others, becauſe they Honour Him only for his own ſake. "Yet as he will not reject any One, ſo he "admits thoſe who come to him by the Beneficent "Power, that is to ſay, thoſe who ſerve him in hopes "of Reward; for tho' their Love be Mercenary, "and their Religion inſincere, yet they do not de-"part from the Temple, nor run after ſtrange Gods. "In ſhort, God doth not refuſe to receive thoſe that come to him by the Power Royal, or who are con-"verted and turn to him through fear of Puniſh-"ment, becauſe he is ſure that thoſe People will "not go from bad to worſe, but on the contrary, "will make ſome Progreſs in Piety.

XII. This Explication would ruin all, and by clearing what was obſcure in the firſt Expreſſions, it ſhews that the two Powers, which are taken for two Perſons, are the Attributes of God, his Power and his Goodneſs, whereby he draws Men to him. Wherefore, inſtead of making them real Beings, he compares them to Shadows and Figures; but let us penetrate farther into this Syſtem.

XIII. Philo has been accuſed for having Copied Plato; thus after they had overthrown the Trinity of that Philoſopher, that of Philo's would neceſſarily fall to the Ground. Wherefore they deny the Fact, and inſtead of making that Jew a Plagiary of a Heathen Philoſopher, they make him either the Original, or an exact Diſciple of Moſes. Father Petau undertakes to prove that Conformity of Style to be falſe, which has cauſed the ſaying that Plato Philoſophiſed and Philo Platoniſed, and he reduces himſelf to a Conformity of Principles and Maxims between thoſe two Authors: but now they ſay the Jew had never Read Greek, and that he was perfectly Ignorant of Plato's Sentiments, and had taken his own from the Books of Moſes. We will not enter into this Critical Diſcuſſion; but will endeavour to diſplay and clear Philo's Sentiments; and the better to ſucceed therein, two things ought to be diſtinguiſh'd in Philo. The manner how the Creator or Sovereign being abaſed and united himſelf to a Creature; and the Steps by which the Creature raiſes and unites it ſelf to the Sovereign Being. This diſtinction will clear up the Paſſages we have already cited, and the Sentiments of Plato.

XIV. Firſt, He could not conceive how the World ſhould be made by the Patron of the Divinity, nor how there ſhould be any reſemblance between the Sovereign Being and That it is productive of. He found too infinite a diſtance between the Creature and the Creator, the one to humble himſelf to the other; he thought it beneath a Sovereign God to ſet his Hand immediately to the Work, to make it. Euſebius, being wont to commend Philo *, as one of the Doctors who had Taught the Exiſtence of the Word, to prove it cites the place of a Book now loſt that demonſtrates it. Nothing that is Mortal can be made after the Image of the Father of the Univerſe and of all therein; but it may have the Image of the Second God, which is the Word. This Sovereign Being, which is before the Word and Reaſon, and which is above it, being in an infinite diſtance from all Creatures, it is impoſſible for a Creature to bear, or even to aſpire at his Image. When God therefore ſaid, Let us make Man after our own Image, He ſpake of that of the Word, and not of his own. The Difficulty which grew from that vaſt diſproportion which is between God and the Created World, is, what obliged Plato to imagine a Second God, and a Word.

XV. Philo † who framed to himſelf the Idea of a Word, ſaid, "That God was the Paſtor and King "ſitting upon his Throne, who governed there all "things with a Sovereign Juſtice, and that he had "eſtabliſhed the Word, his firſt-born Son, over "whom there is nothing more excellent, to be the "King's Lieutenant, and to govern that Flock; "becauſe the World and Matter, not having ſtrength "enough to ſupport it ſelf, he had eſtabliſhed the "Word to be the Stay of the Univerſe, to keep "the Parts compact together, and to be the indiſ-"ſolvable Bond of it. Behold here the Son and "Word inferior to the Father; One is the King, "the other the Lieutenant; and it is by this Lieu-"tenant that he Governs the World, and after the "Image of whom all Things were to be made, be-"cauſe no Creature can bear the Image of the So-"vereign Being.

XVI. There remains no more then but to find out the Soul of the World, which made the Third Divinity of the Platoniſts. 'Tis that part of their Syſtem that Philo has rejected, becauſe it was too openly to ſhock the Principles of his Religion, to make a World Animated and Inſpired by God, and which by that means becomes an Object of Adoration, as the Heathen ſaid. But yet he eſtabliſhed with the Platoniſts two Attributes of God, which he ſometimes changed into Perſons. 'Twas the Power Creator and the Power Royal. To conclude in a word, he made of the Second God an intelligible World, which was an Emanation of the Divinity, as the Plan of a Houſe is an Emanation of the Underſtanding of an Architect. The intelligible World, ſaid he *, is the Word of God, preparing himſelf to Create the World, as an intelligible City is the reaſoning of an Architect, who thinks to build a City according to the deſign he has formed of it.

XVII. He followed alſo the Syſtem of the Platoniſts, when he endeavoured to make the Creature reaſcend to God; for he raiſed it by degrees to the top of the Scale, or Ladder, that is to ſay, to the Sovereign Being. There were three ſorts of Souls, or rather of degrees, by which we aſcended to God. The loweſt Souls ſaw the Divinity in the midſt of his two Angels, or his two Powers: They had Three Images inſtead of One which is ſufficient for purified Spirits. What did he mean by that Myſtical Jargon? He could only intend by it that the generality of Mankind contemplated God in his Works, in that Wiſdom which governs the Univerſe, and in that Power which Created it, above which he owned there was a third Superior Being. The ſecond Order of Souls which went to God, was no doubt compoſed of thoſe that conſidered the intellectual World, or the Word; and laſtly, the Contemplative raiſed themſelves above Numbers till they came to the Unity, that is to ſay, even to the Sovereign Being that made all things. In this manner did Porphyry eſtabliſh a Union of the Soul with the Deity, to which he boaſted once he had been arrived: Thus that Contemplation ſo much admired, which makes the intimate Union of the Soul with the Deity, comes Originally from the Heathen, and from them it paſſed among the Jews. Philo found out this Myſtery in the appearance of Angels, in the midſt of whom God appear'd to Abraham; from whence 'tis eaſie to conclude, that whether he cauſed the Creature to aſcend, or the Creator was pleaſed to deſcend and come near to us, he only meant the Attributes of God; he made but a Trinity of Names, and by changing thoſe Names into Perſons, he ſpake an Abſurdity which the Modern Chriſtians ought not to adopt, tho' the Old Ones did it frequently.

XVII. The antient Chaldee Paraphraſes ſeem much more formal than Philo's; for without examining here what regards the Word, of which we ſhall ſpeak when we come to treat of the particular Queſtion relating to the Meſſiah; there is nothing more known among the Jews than the Sheckinah, which points out the Holy Ghoſt, the third Perſon in the Trinity. An * Anti-Trinitarian affirms, that by that is underſtood the Glory of God; wherefore the Paraphraſts have ſubſtituted the Sheckinah in all the places of Scripture where the Glory of God is mentioned; but the Fact is falſe. In ſhort, we find in the Targums, Jehovah, the Word and the Sheckinah often diſtinguiſhed, which proves that when they were compoſed, they acknowledged three different Perſons in the Divine Eſſence. My deſign is not to take away from the Learned the Glory of their Triumph over the Socinians; we are concerned to maintain this Truth againſt them, inſtead of oppoſing it. They become odious to the Zealots, when they leſſen the Proofs that have ſeemed to carry it againſt them. The miſchief would be here ſo much the more terrible as we ſhould do wrong both to the Jew and the Greek; for if we could perſuade the Jew as well as the Anti-Trinitarian, that the Synagogue has always believed the Trinity, their Converſion would be ſo much the eaſier. And yet without hearkening to either Side or Intereſt, we may be ſuffered to propoſe their Scruples, the better to remove them, and that there may remain the leſs obſcurity about the matter.

XIX. Is there not reaſon then to ſet the Goſpel in oppoſition to the Chaldee Paraphraſes? In Reading the Goſpel, we do not perceive the Jews have had Notions of the Trinity ſo diſtinct as to take notice of the Father, Son and Holy Ghoſt. The Jews believed the

Unity

Unity of God, made void by the Blaſphemy of J. CHRIST, who calls himſelf his Son, and they knew ſo little of the Holy Ghoſt, that they knew not even after the Baptiſm of John, that there had been ſuch an one. The Knowledge the Paraphraſts had of the Holy Ghoſt, was it loſt in the Nation after the production of their Work? And if it remained in their Writings, which were Read as Authentick Explications of the Scripture; How Ignorant were they at the time of J. CHRIST, of what they had taught ſo clearly but a little time before?.

I ſhall not here obſerve that the Jews renvers'd the order of the Perſons, by moſt commonly placing the Sheckinah in the ſecond Rank, and reſerving the Word for the laſt: This Fault would be pardonable to People who did but imperfectly know this Myſtery; but wherefore have they expreſſed the Holy Ghoſt by the word Sheckinah? That Spirit had his Name among the Jews as well as among the Chriſtians. The Paraphraſts uſed the term of the Spirit of God, in explaining thoſe words in Geneſis *, the Spirit of God moved upon the Face of the Waters. They alſo ſet him in a place where he ought not to be; for Moſes ſaying that the Spirit of Jacob their Father began to revive, when he ſaw the Chariots his Son had ſent for him, they have put, that the Holy Spirit began to revive in him. The Rabbies, explaining the manner how the Chief Prieſt conſulted God by Urim and Thummim, ſay, that He hearkened to the Holy Spirit. Maimonides believes that the Chief Prieſt ſaw in the Stones of the Ephod certain Letters which ſignified the Will of God; but he does not forbear ſaying alſo, that he ſpake by the Holy Ghoſt. In ſhort, Kimky affirms, that Moſes anſwered by the Holy Ghoſt, or Spirit, to the Enquiries of the People. This ſhews that the Holy Ghoſt was well known to the Jews. Wherefore then do we ſeek it in the Sheckinah? Wherefore have the Paraphraſts and Rabbies ſubſtituted this term in the room of that of the Holy Spirit, which was ſo familiar to them before? Unleſs it was becauſe they did not conceive either the Holy Ghoſt or the Sheckinah, as a Perſon in the Trinity; but as different degrees of the Preſence of God; the firſt degree of that Preſence being that which animated the Prophets. They placed their Holy Spirit, ſpeaking of the Urim and Thummim, in the ſecond Rank: and as they loſt thoſe two advantages to the ruin of the firſt Temple, they ſubſtituted two others inferiour to them; the one was the Sheckinah, and the other the Daughter of the Voice.

'Tis certain, if we examine the true ſence of the * Jewiſh Doctors, we ſhall eaſily find by that Sheckinah, ſo famous in their Writings, they did not underſtand one Perſon diſtinct from God; but his Preſence in a certain place, or upon certain Perſons. 'Tis in this Senſe they aſſure us, that the Sheckinah reſts upon the Meek and the Humble, but it takes its Wings and flies away from the Furious and Cholerick Perſon. They exhort to Hoſpitality, and to keep an open Table to all Comers, that ſo the Sheckinah may dwell with the Man that is Charitable. They maintain that the Sheckinah is every where, wherever there are two or three Perſons met together to Study the Law. It ſeems that J. CHRIST borrowed his Promiſe from thence, that wherever two or three were gathered together in his Name, he would be in the midſt of them. They ſay further, that he who evil entreats his Maſter, is the cauſe that the Sheckinah departs from Iſrael; that is to ſay, that God leaves him. I confeſs they very groſly explain this Preſence of the Deity, in imagining that it caſt forth in his Temple, where the Sheckinah reſided, a ſecret vertue, which drove away the Princes of the Air, and filled that Houſe with an unſpeakable Holineſs; but the Chriſtians have frequently had as groſs Notions. An Antient ſaid, that the Church was the Houſe of God; and if he was not ſeen there himſelf, yet he failed not to be preſent there by his Holy Spirit.

XX. The Proofs drawn from the Cabaliſts are poor and weak; for there is no reliance upon thoſe Doctors, who have no regular Syſtem, who ſeek and find in the Sacred Authors all that their heated imagination furniſhes them with, without ever troubling themſelves whether what they ſay agrees with the Notions of the Deity, or not. Beſides, the Cabaliſts having appeared but ſince the Goſpel was publiſhed to the World, we muſt ſuppoſe that they fell into an inconceivable Blindneſs; if they favoured the Chriſtian Religion, and laboured to prove its Myſteries the moſt impenetrable, but that is not evident. † In ſhort, when Jacob the Son of Amram in a MS. Work of his, Intituled, The Gate of Truth, laughs at the Chriſtians, who fetch Proofs from the Cabala in favour of the Trinity: For the Cabaliſts include under the Bark of the Letter Myſteries which the common People do not diſcover. The deſign of thoſe Divines is to teach them the Unity of one God cloathed with his Attributes, but to keep them in Ignorance of finding out the Trinity among them. Perhaps ſome expreſſion, ſome bold dazling ſtroke might eſcape the Doctors who lived before J. CHRIST; but the Cabaliſts that lived ſince, have been always upon their Guard againſt their Capital Enemy. They could have no deſign themſelves to prove Truths which the Chriſtians took ſo much pains to prove to the Hereticks: or elſe it muſt be ſaid that the Myſtery of the Trinity is one of thoſe Truths ſo agreeable to reaſon, and ſo impreſſed upon the Soul, that we know them and teach them, when we don't ſo much as think on't; nay, when our deſign is to oppoſe it: but on the other hand, the Trinity is a monſtrous Tenet to the Jews who believe that the Unity of a God is deſtroyed by it. Reaſon does not teach us this Myſtery, 'tis God alone that has revealed it, and Reaſon ſubmits not to its Revelation but with a great deal of Reluctancy.

XXI. I confeſs theſe are only Conjectures and Critical Obſervations, which cannot be oppoſed to Facts; but we have ſufficiently proved that the three firſt Sephiroths, or Splendours, are not the three Perſons in the Trinity.

The Sentiments of* Maimonides proved by that of Chriſtians who have ſaid it. X. Allegories in the Creation. XI. That the World ſhall never be Deſtroyed.

I. THE Jews have had four Opinions about the Creation of the World. Some, who indeed make up a great Number, follow Moſes and the Hiſtory of Geneſis. Others have conceived that there had been a World before this of ours, which God had deſtroyed, or put an end to, becauſe every World was to laſt but Seven thouſand Years. The Third have invented Spinoſiſm; and the laſt imagine that all Creatures came forth from God by way of Emanation; but they alſo load this Syſtem with divers Abſurdities.

II. The generality of the Jews believe the World was created by God, as Moſes ſays; and they put into the Number of Hereticks, driven out of the boſome of Iſrael, or excommunicated, all thoſe who ſay that matter was Coeternal with the Supreme Being.

However, there aroſe in * Maimonides's Time in the XIIth Century, a Controverſy about the Antiquity of the World. They imagined the World to be Eternal. Some bewitch'd with Ariſtotle's Philoſophy, which was in great Vogue at that time, followed his Opinion about the Eternity of the World; wherefore Maimonides † was obliged to confute him ſtoutly. Others pretended that Matter was Eternal. God was the Principle and the Cauſe of its exiſtence; he drew out the different Forms from it, as the Potter draws his Figures out of the Clay, and the Smith from the Iron which he ſhapes on his Anvile; but God never exiſted without this Matter, as the Matter never exiſted without God. All that he did as to the Creation, was to regulate his Movement which was before irregular, and to put all its Parts into that beautiful order in which we now ſee them. In a word, there have been People, who not being able to conceive that God, like to ordinary Workmen, could exiſt before his Work, or that he could be in Heaven without acting, maintained that he had created the World from all time, or rather, to ſpeak better, from all Eternity.

III. Thoſe who in the Synagogues will maintain the Eternity of the World, endeavour to protect themſelves from Cenſure by the Authority of Maimonides, becauſe they pretend that that great Rabbi has not put the Creation among the fundamental Articles of Faith. But it is eaſy to vindicate that Dr. for we read theſe words in the Confeſſion of Faith which he hath made; || If the World be created, then there is a Creator; for none can create himſelf; there is therefore a God. He adds, that God alone is Eternal, and that all things have had a Beginning. Moreover, he confutes the Opinion of the Philoſophers, and thoſe who, treading in their Steps, would have the World to be Eternal, becauſe that Opinion deſtroys the foundations of the Law, and there ariſes from it a vaſt number of Abſurdities againſt the Deity. In ſhort *, he declares that the Creation is one of the Foundations of that Faith which they are obliged to believe, and from which they ought never to be removed, but upon ſuch a Demonſtration as they will never be able to find.

IV. 'Tis true, ſometimes that Rabbi * argues but very poorly on the matter. If he diſputes againſt the Opinion of Ariſtotle, who maintain'd alſo the Eternity of the World, the generation and corruption in Heaven, he finds that of Plato convenient enough, becauſe it does not overthrow Miracles, and it may be reconciled to the Scripture. Indeed it appeared to him ſtrengthned upon ſolid Reaſons, tho' they were not demonſtrative. He added, that it would be as eaſy for thoſe who aſſerted the Eternity of the World, to explain all thoſe places of Scripture, wherein the Creation is mentioned, as to put a good ſence upon thoſe, where the ſame Scripture atrributes Arms and Hands to God. It ſeems alſo that he had not determined himſelf but purely out of intereſt on the ſide of the Creation preferably to the Eternity of the World; becauſe if the World was Eternal, and Men had created themſelves independantly on God, the glorious preference which the Jewiſh Nation has had over other Nations, would become Chymerical. But after what manner ſoever Maimonides † had argued, an impartial Reader cannot accuſe him of having believed the Eternity of the World, ſeeing he has rejected it entirely, and made Solomon's Apology, which the Hereticks cited as one of their Witneſſes.

V. They began again to revive the Queſtion of the Eternity of the World in the XVth Century. Samuel Sarza, who lived at that time, deſigned to conciliate the Heathen Philoſophers to Moſes, and to that end maintained that the World had not been deduced from nothing; but that it was made by a Succeſſive generation of ſeveral Days, as we read it in the Hiſtory of Geneſis; but Sarza having been ſentenced to Death by the Judges of his Nation, was condemned to be burnt Alive. Caparton, a Spaniſh Rabbi, who had ſomething that look'd like Divine in his Phyſiognomy, very ſtrenuouſly ſolicited for his Condemnation, and was ſeconded and back'd by a great number of the Rabbies of that time. This is a good Demonſtration of the Zeal they had in thoſe days for the right Faith; for in ſhort, we don't underſtand how they could condemn a Jew to be burnt Alive in Spain, without remitting him to the Chriſtians to inflict the Puniſhment.

VI. But if the Doctors are generally Orthodox about the Article of the Creation, yet we muſt needs own, that they did almoſt preſently divide from Moſes. We have obſerved that in the Synagogue they tolerated the Divines who affirmed that there was a World before this in which we live; becauſe Moſes began the Hiſtory of Geneſis by a B. ב which denotes two. It was indifferent to that Legiſlator to begin his Book by an א and to ſay, אלהים ברא

God created; but he inverted its Conſtruction, and began his Work by a B. that he might inſtruct his Noviciates that this was the Second World, and that the firſt was ended in the Seventh Millenary, according to the order that God eſtabliſhed in the Revolutions that ſhould be made.

VII. But this is not the only place in which they renounce Moſes, and yet believe they follow him ſtep by ſtep. R. Eliezer *, an antient and renowned Doctor, maintains, that God had created ſeven things before the Univerſe. The Law; for it was that Solomon ſpeaks of under the title of Wiſdom, when he ſays, the Lord hath poſſeſſed me from the beginning: Hell; Paradice; for God planted Paradice towards the Eaſt, and the Hebrew word מקדם Mikkedem may ſignifie before. The four other things that God had created before the World, were the Throne of his Glory, the Sanctuary, the Name of the Meſſiah, which is before † the Sun, and Repentance, without which the World could not be upheld. For God who had made the World, perceived that it tottered, becauſe Repentance was wanting; || as a Palace that could not ſubſiſt, if the King built it without laying a Foundation.

He demands afterwards of what the Heavens were created, and anſwers that it is from the Light of the Garment of God; for the Pſalmiſt ſays, he * covereth himſelf with light as with a Garment, and ſtretcheth out the Heavens like a Curtain. The Earth hath been formed out of the Snow, † which was under the Throne of the glory of God; for God ſaid to the Snow, be thou on the Earth, or rather be thou the Earth.

VIII. Maimonides ||, ſurpriſed with theſe Interpretations, ſuſpects that Eliezer believed, that the Light and the Throne of glory, which he mentions, had not been created; and that that antient Rabbi had adopted the Opinion of Plato, concerning the Creation of the World. He owns he never read the like in all the other Doctors. But is that to be thought much more ſtrange than the great Diſpute that was raiſed between the two Schools of Hillel and Schammai; One would have it that the Heaven was firſt created, becauſe 'tis requiſite that the Throne ſhould be made before the footſtool: The Heaven is his Throne, and the Earth is his footſtool. Hillel maintained the contrary, that the Earth was created firſt, becauſe the Floor ought to be laid before the Roof. What R. Abhu ſaid, that God had made ſeveral Worlds, and had deſtroy'd them, was it leſs ſtrange and aſtoniſhing?

IX. Maimonides (a), tho' he was more exact and judicious, yet had he any reaſon to teach that the World was not made in Six days, but in an inſtant, becauſe Moſes has not ſaid in a divided ſence, that God created the Heaven and the Earth? or at leaſt it may be tranſlated that God created the Heaven with the Earth, according as we learn from (b) Iſaiah, when he calleth to the Heaven and the Earth, they ſtand up together; as the Husbandman throweth in at one and the ſame time all his Seed; but the Corn ſprings up afterwards very differently, ſo God produced all things in a Moment; but they took their Situation and Order inſenſibly; and thus we are to underſtand what the Antients have ſaid, that God had not ſet the two great Lights in the Firmament till the fourth day, tho' he had created them the firſt. He ſaid, God being inveſted with an infinite Wiſdom and Power, ought to do all things in an inſtant. Moreover, the Schools of Hillel and Schammai, after they had for a long while bandied about this Matter, they at laſt ended it with this Deciſion, that the World was made in a Moment. The Sages had already anſwered the ſame thing to Alexander the Great, who asked o them which was made firſt, the Heaven or the Earth In ſhort, Philo treated thoſe as ignorant Men and Blockheads who followed the other Opinion. Theſe Arguments, ſupported by the Name of Maimonides, have made a ſtrong impreſſion on many of the Rabbies. When they are preſſed with the Authority of Moſes, they juſtifie themſelves by the Example of thoſe Chriſtians who have done the ſame thing. St. Auguſtin ſaid, that the ſix Days pointed out ſix Degrees of Angelical Light; and Cardinal Cajetan, among the Modern Interpreters, affirms, that God deſigned by this term to manifeſt the Dependance, and ſhew the Bounds he has ſet to the different Creatures. Beſides, they ſay that among the Jews as well as among the Chriſtians, the ſoundeſt part keep to Moſes his account, which is Simple. In a word, ſhould it be ſo that Light and Darkneſs had been together; that Adam and Eve had been formed the ſame Moment, and that God had reſted from the firſt hour, ſeeing his Work had been finiſhed: Yet Moſes aſſures us (c) to the contrary.

X. Maimonides holds it for a Maxim, that the literal Sence of the Hiſtory of the Creation gives us odd and untoward Notions of God. And therefore he would have us often to have recourſe to Allegorical Interpretations, and that will open a Door to let us ſee abundance of Myſteries in the Production of the Univerſe, and in the Temptation of the Serpent, upon which Samaël was mounted; that is to ſay, the ſame Demon that ſaid to Abraham, Thou art a fool, and thou doteſt in thy Old Age to be willing to ſacrifice thy Son; and which at the ſame time made Iſaac riſe up againſt his Father, to withſtand his binding him upon the Altar.

XI. To conclude, he (d) maintains openly that the World ſhall not be deſtroyed. He owns it is not the Opinion of the greateſt number of the Doctors; but he believes that there is not one ſingle Paſſage in the Scripture which proves the total Deſtruction of the Univerſe. 'Tis true, the Scripture often makes mention of the falling of the Stars; it ſays that the Heaven and the Earth ſhall be ſhaken, and that the Sun ſhall not give its light; but we are to underſtand theſe Prophecies as relating to the Downfall of the Enemies of the Church, as the Aſſyrians and Idumeans, on whom God threat'ned to inflict exemplary Puniſhmeut. He pretends there is not a more juſt Notion; for thoſe Men, who ſhined with Luſtre upon Earth as the Stars in the Firmament, who imagined themſelves to be more firm and ſtable than Heaven and Earth, ſhall periſh in an inſtant; they ſhall be found in moſt diſmal Darkneſs bewailing themſelves without remedy. 'Tis alſo eaſy there to prove that this was the meaning of the Prophets; ſeeing that when they ſpeak of the reſt and proſperity Iſrael was to enjoy after the Death of Sennacherib, they ſaid that the light of the Sun and of the Moon ſhall be encreaſed; as they had ſaid that the Sun ſhould be turned into Darkneſs, and the Moon ſhould not give her Light, when they ſpake of Affliction. 'Tis in this manner likewiſe that we are to underſtand of that great and terrible day which Joel mentions, Ch. 2. v. 11. for he ſpeaks of the defeat of Sennacherib, near to Jeruſalem, or of the Victory which the Meſſiah ſhould gain over Gog and Magog, near to the ſame City. In a word, he affirms that David and Jonathan ſpeak plainly of the Eternity of the World. Thus the principal Jewiſh Doctors repreſent the Origine and Fate of the Univerſe. We had not ſo far enlarged our ſelves, but becauſe we thought it neceſſary to give an Idea of the different ways they took about this matter.

The Third Opinion about the Creation.

The true Origine of Spinoſiſm. If this Axiom, Nothing can be made of Nothing, be true. It's Explication.

V. Common with the Cabaliſts who make it to be Spiritual. VI. The Cabaliſts their Agreement with Spinoſa. XIV. Proofs of this Fact. XV. In what ſence it is true, that Nothing can be made of Nothing. XVI. That this Axiom is falſe in a certain ſence. XVII. The Operations of God explained.

I. THERE is among the Jews a third Opinion about the Creation, which Spinoſa has reduced to a Syſtem. In truth that Jew had borrow'd the foundation of his Iniquity from the Rabbies of his Nation, who were known to him, rather than the Chineſes, or the Heathen Philoſophers. He has never cited the Cabaliſts as his Vouchers, becauſe that Man was ſo extreamly jealous of the Immortality of his Name, that he deſigned to paſs for an Original, and an Inventer of his Opinions. The Cabaliſts, no leſs greedy of glory than Spinoſa, might have claimed a Diſcovery which belonged to them, and gloried in that which has made Spinoſa immortal; but his Name was become too odious to enter into a Society of Atheiſm with him. In ſhort, the Jews roſe up againſt him. Orobio *, who lived at that time wrote againſt his Syſtem, which was full of Impiety. But they did not think writing enough, they Excommunicated him, and a zealous Jew gave him a cut with a Knife as he was going out of the Synagogue. 'Tis true, the Cabaliſts are tolerated in the Synagogue; but there is nothing ſo common as ſuch partiality of Judgments in Societies. They ſpare ſome, who have acquired the Privilege to Sin with Impunity, whileſt they are devouring others at a Morſel. The Cabaliſts for this long time have been as it were allow'd and authorized to throw about their Extravagances, and make themſelves to be admired by ſome Perſons who love to run after ſhadows and trifles, things of nought: But this comes about by their having the Art and Dexterity to veil themſelves under a Myſtical Language. They produce their Dreams and Viſions as Explications of Scripture, and ſpiritual Conjectures rather than as deciſions of Faith. Spinoſa, on the contrary, has made a Syſtem, and has endeavoured to prove it. He has kept very well to part of the obſcure and Myſtical Language of the Cabaliſts; and therefore thoſe who confute him are often accuſed of not underſtanding him; and his Diſciples affirm, that all thoſe who have attacked him, have not throughly comprehended his true thoughts. I know not, whether ſtruck with the abſurdity of the Conſequences which they draw from them, they dare not avow them; but they never unveil them, but leave that Myſtery always impenetrable, tho' they make their brags of having been initiated into them. He thought his Principles were as ſo many Demonſtrations. Beſides, he went farther than the Cabaliſts; for in explaining the Miracles of the Old Teſtament, and the manner how the Prophets ſpake, he deſtroyed the Miracles and divine Inſpiration, which by no means agreed with his Principles. In a word, he has undermined the Foundation of the Jewiſh Religion. It need not then be wondered at, that thoſe who profeſs it, are riſen up againſt him at the ſame time that they have the Cabaliſts in veneration, whoſe outward forms are infinitely more taking, and who keep themſelves in much ſtricter Bounds. In ſhort, the Synagogue of Amſterdam offered to tolerate him, provided he would diſſemble, and obſerve the outward forms in the exerciſe of Religion; but he would break out, become Maſter, and ſo by degrees left the Synagogue. It muſt then be no longer objected to us the toleration we had for the Cabaliſts, and not for Spinoſa, tho' he was but their Diſciple, and had ſuck'd his Principles out of their Writings. We will prove the thing independantly on all thoſe Circumſtances.

II. Spinoſa teaches that there is in the World but One only Subſtance; that God is that Subſtance, and that all the other exiſtent Beings are but Modifications.

This Syſtem is grounded firſt upon this Maxim, that one Subſtance cannot beget another Subſtance, and that Nothing cannot be created out of Nothing. It implies a Contradiction that God works upon nothing. It is impoſſible for Nothing to be the Subject, and the Matter on which God hath wrought. It is therefore impoſſible and contradictory that the World could hnve been created.

This firſt Principle is borrowed from the Cabaliſts, who affirm that this Maxim, Nothing cannot be created from nothing, is a fixed and ſenſible truth. Thoſe who maintain the contrary, according to them, ſhock not only the Reaſon, but the Wiſdom and Power of God: And as it is an evident Contradiction to ſay, that a thing is, and is not, ſo is it one alſo to maintain that it exiſts, and that it has been made out of nothing †.

III. I muſt confeſs they were not Cabaliſts who invented this firſt Principle. That difficulty which preſents it ſelf often enough to reaſon, had already ſhock'd Philoſophers. Epicurus had brought it againſt Heraclitus and the Stoicks. In ſhort, theſe laſt thought that the firſt matter ſubſiſted from all Eternity; but they forbore not to ſay, that the different Modifications, which they looked on as ſo many Beings different from Matter, had been produced from nothing by the Sovereign Being. They repreſented this Sovereign Being as a Fire operating in the Creatures that formed a more groſs Modification, more ſenſible in Plants and Animals, and which acted more ſubtilly in the Sun and Stars, the Modifications coming from a Principle quite foreign to, and dif-

De nihilo, tum quod ſequimur, jam tutius indè

Et quo quæq; modo fiant operâ ſine Divûm.

As this Axiom is true in a certain ſence, ſo we deſign not to trouble our ſelves about ſhewing what is falſe in it. Accuſtomed as we are to let our ſelves be ſtruck by ſenſible and material Objects which beget themſelves, and produce one another, we can ſcarce be perſuaded that the thing ſhould be done otherwiſe, and we make Matter on which God hath wrought to pre exiſt. Thus has Plutarch compared God to a Carpenter that built a Palace out of the Materials that he had before gathered and laid up ready for him; and to a Taylor that made a Suit of Clothes out of the Stuff that he had lying by him. We may nevertheleſs truly ſay, that this is the grand Foundation of all Impiety; for by depriving God of the Production of his firſt Work, we deſtroy the main proof of his Exiſtence. By taking away the Creation of the World from God, we take God from the World, or at leaſt we cannot help falling into great Abſurdities. It is true therefore that the Philoſophers have underſtood in a different manner this Axiom, that Nothing is made of Nothing; for ſome believe only that there is no new Subſtance made by Generation. There is nothing but Modifications, Accidents and Forms, that come from the Matter which had always pre exiſted: But others again underſtand by this Axiom, that it is impoſſible for ſome thing to come out of nothing, and for God to frame a World from it. This latter Explication was much more common than the other; for the Philoſophers were ſtruck with the ſame difficulty, which alſo at this day ſtrikes abundance of People, that Nothing cannot produce Nothing, and that it is impoſſible that God ſhould have made the World of Nothing. 'Tis alſo this latter Explication that Spinoſa follows.

IV. The ſecond Principle of Spinoſa, is, that there is but One Alone or Simple Subſtance, becauſe that cannot be called Subſtance, which is Eternal, Independant on any Superiour Cauſe, which always exiſts by it ſelf, and neceſſarily. As none but God exiſts from all Eternity, by himſelf, independantly on any other Cauſe: It muſt be acknowledged that if the Definition be good, there is no Subſtance in the Univerſe beſides God. It muſt not be objected to Spinoſa, that there are Subſtances which do not neceſſarily exiſt, as Beaſts and Men, and all the parts which compoſe the Univerſe; for he declares that it is indifferent to Man either to exiſt or not exiſt. But the Subſtance is not deſtroyed, there is but a different modification, as we ſhall obſerve in the third Principle.

V. The Cabaliſts ſay, as he does, that it is the common ſort of Philoſophers and Divines, who have imagined a Material World compoſed of different Subſtances, and diſtinguiſhed from God; for it is all one as to ſay, that God hath produced Darkneſs, Sin and Death, it is to maintain that God hath Created ſenſible and material Subſtances, different from his Nature and Eſſence; for Matter is but a privation of the Spirituality, as Darkneſs is a privation of Light; as Sin is a privation of Holineſs, and Death an extinction of Life. The Cabaliſts alſo agree with Spinoſa in acknowledging but One ſole and ſimple Subſtance; but that Wretch makes this Subſtance Material, to the end he might make a God Corporeal, and ſo deſtroy the Spirituality of that Being which he hardly conceives, and which abundance of Perſons have rejected before him.

Præter† inane & corpora, tertia per ſe,
Nulla poteſt rerum numero Natura relinqui.

The Cabaliſts, on the contrary, make this Subſtance Spiritual, and maintain that it could not have Created a thing ſo vile and fragile as matter. Wherefore they look on what they call Materiality as the greateſt of all Hereſies, and as down-right Atheiſm: But at the bottom the difference will quickly come to nothing and vaniſh.

VI. In ſhort, after all their fallings out and dividings they come together again, and unite of neceſſity; for it is not enough to ſay that there is a Simple, One, Material Subſtance, as Spinoſa terms it, or Spiritual, according to the Cabaliſts; but we ought to know the nature of the Objects which touch us, and which we know, our Bodies and Souls. Spinoſa ſays, that the One Simple Subſtance being inveſted with an infinite number of Artributes and Perfections, modifies it ſelf in a very different manner. The Bodies, which fill up a ſpace and a place, are the modifications of this Subſtance, ſo far as it is extended; and the Souls are the modifications of that ſame Subſtance, ſo far as it thinks. Thus all the parts of the Univerſe, the Bodies and Souls, are but different modifications of this ſame Subſtance, which exiſts from all Eternity, neceſſarily and independantly on any Cauſe.

The Cabaliſts alſo ſay, that all Creatures are as ſo many Emanations of the infinite Being, that the Attributes of that Eſſence being infinite, are able to produce an Infinity of effects. It can enlarge or contract it ſelf. It is ſaid‖ to extend it ſelf, when this Subſtance is in the Souls where it thinks; but it contracts it ſelf when it forms matter. The terms are different, but in the main they are only the modifications of Spinoſa. Indeed the Cabaliſt aſſerts, that the Subſtance Eternal and Spiritual ſhuts it ſelf up to compoſe the Air, the Rains, the Grains of Sand, Stones and Rocks, which are always Particles of the Eternal Subſtance; and by following theſe Principles, the Grain ſhutting it ſelf up may become a Marble; the Marble be changed into a Plant; the Plant animated to a Beaſt, and the Beaſt become a Man, an Angel, a God. On the other hand, the Eternal Subſtance becomes an Angel, a drowſie Spirit, a Man, a Beaſt, a Plant, Marble, Stone, and Grain of Sand, becauſe they are only different Modifications. Is not this all over Spinoſiſm?

VII. Perhaps it may be ſomewhat difficult to conceive how the Spiritual Eſſence contracts it ſelf, and becomes Matter. But is it leſs trouble for us to conceive how the Material Subſtance of Spinoſa is Spiritualized, or modifies it ſelf into Spirit, and forms a Thought? The one is as liable to the ſame Abſurdities as the other, and I can no more conceive how Matter thinks, than how a Spirit can contract it ſelf and be condenſed; or if there be any leſs difficulty in Spinoſa's Syſtem, becauſe it is eaſie to conceive a material God, whereas we have not any clear and diſtinct Notion of an Infinite Mind, or Spirit; at leaſt it muſt be confeſs'd, that the Abſurdities of Materiality and Spinoſiſm, are more great and ſenſible than thoſe which flow from the Cabaliſtical Theology. But without entring into that detail, we will ſee how they do explain Condenſation.

All

All Spirits come forth by the Emanation of the Deity which is the One only Subſtance; but ſome Spirits fall into a State of Fainting, Languiſhing and Sleepineſs. Theſe Unities of Lazie, Feeble, or Sleepy Spirits unite themſelves one with the other, and form by their Union what we call Matter. Thoſe Spirits come out of the Divine Eſſence as the Thought ariſes from the Soul; as the World depends on Subſtance; as the Effect comes from the moving Cauſe. There was a neceſſity in God to produce them, as there is in the Soul to produce Thoughts, tho at the ſame time it does it voluntarily; they are Co-eternal, and Co-exiſtent with the Deity. There is no difference of time betwixt them; but of Order and Nature. It happens to them only to thicken, grow big, and by their Union and Coalition to compoſe what we call Matter.

But notwithſtanding this mixing with one another, which makes the Matter more vile, it yet * radically remains a Spirit, and this Matter is only a certain, accidental modification of a Spiritual, Eternal Subſtance.

VIII. They add, that foraſmuch as this Particle of the Eternal Subſtance is debaſed by this means, it loſes for ſome time its Excellence and Felicity; it falls into a ſort of Lethargick Reſt and inſenſibility which much degrades it; but it will one Day reaſſume its former Excellency and Felicity.

In ſhort, they compare the Spiritual and Eternal Subſtance, when it acts Nobly and with Vivacity and Sprightlineſs, to a Man newly wakened, becauſe the Actions of ſuch a One are more Vigorous and Noble; and they compare the ſame Subſtance, when it acts Corporeally and in an imperfect manner, to the Condition of a Man faſt aſleep; but as a Man whether awake or aſleep, is ſtill the ſame, it is only his Modification that changes; ſo the Eternal Subſtance is always the ſame in the Bodies and Spirits, but it is differently modified in them; and if I miſtake not, this is what Spinoſa has dreſt up more to the Mode and Taſte of the refined Wits, who would not be indebted for their Syſtem to the Cabaliſts, becauſe they look upon them as the weakeſt Wits in the World.

IX. They demand of the Cabaliſts, if the Spirits that admit remiſſion and Sleep, are ſeparated from the Deity, or whether they are always united to it: for if ſeparated, then the One only Subſtance muſt be diviſible; and if they are not ſeparated, then that Subſtance becomes Material. They anſwer, that they will not make any attempts on the Unity of God which always ſubſiſts inviolably; that he is the Father and Author of all Spirits that are gone out from him by Emanation, and that he is all in them; and that the Matter is always radically in him. In ſhort, tho thoſe Spirits by leſſening themſelves are loos'd from God by degrees, they however will have it to be true, that the Divine Eſſence is neither diviſible, nor divided. They uſe the Compariſon of a running Brook whoſe pure Waters are continually paſſing, yet ceaſe not to be always the ſame, tho there may be in its Bed ſome Gravel, and Particles of Earth, which increaſe and grow bigger inſenſibly, and make at laſt a weighty Maſs. The Eſſence of God is always the ſame, whether it thinks in the Body or not; and thoſe ſo different Effects are but different Modifications of one and the ſame Spiritual Subſtance, which enlarges, or contracts and condenſes it ſelf; or elſe thoſe Spirits are as the Subtle Exhalations, which condenſe, and ſo form drops of Water.

X. In fine, all thoſe Spirits without number have a Power almoſt without bounds, indefinitus eſt enim Spiritus; but they weaken and looſen themſelves proportionably as they looſe their Knowledge, till ſuch time as they paſs from Sleep into the laſt degree of abaſement which they call Death. But then alſo there are as many degrees of Elevation, by which thoſe Spirits that were become groſs, purifie and ſpiritualize themſelves, remount to their firſt heighth, and re-unite themſelves to the Divine Eſſence, and they are always radically therein. The World is compoſed of theſe dead or ſleeping Spirits, which by that means are become Material. And this is what they call the Creation.

Spinoſa does not admit of this Detachment of Spirits which come from the Divine Eſſence. But I don't know whether the difference is not more in the Terms than in the Subſtance of the Tenet; for thoſe ſeveral States of Heavineſs, of Sleep and Death, are Metaphorical Terms, whereby they deſign to explain the nature of Bodies and their Production, without having any juſt Notion of it; for at the ſame time that thoſe Spirits are looſed, and (as I may ſay) detach'd from the Divine Eſſence, they maintain that it is indiviſible, and conceive it like a River, the Gravel and Stones whereof make a part as well as the Water that flows, tho the Gravel is more groſs and material than the Water.

XI. But by this means they run themſelves mightily on ground, for they aſcribe to the Spirits flowing from the Deity a conſiderable change, ſeeing they grow big and thick by ſleeping. But is not Spinoſa forced to adopt the ſame variation into the Subſtance which he calls God? 'Tis in vain for him to cry out that he acknowledges the Immutability of God? For 'tis ſtill alike true, that the parts of the Divine Subſtance change, ſeeing they take a different Form. As we commonly ſay, a Man is very much changed, when from a Lean Scrag, he becomes a Well-ſpread and Fat Man; and when his Joy is turned into Sadneſs: As Wood is turned to Aſhes when it is burnt. It muſt be confeſs'd that the Eternal Subſtance, which endures all theſe changes, is not immutable, unleſs the common Stile of Men be changed, and Annihilation and Change be confounded: but theſe two things are very different; for as it is moſt true that Subſtance never falls into nothing; ſo is it likewiſe falſe to ſay, that it does not often change, and the divine Subſtance has its thickning, its Sleep and its Death, in the Syſtem of Spinoſa as well as in that of the Cabaliſts. At leaſt they do not make God do mean, vile and criminal Actions: for if there is but one Subſtance, that thinks and is extended, which differently is modified in Bodies and Souls, 'tis the ſame Subſtance then that pronounces Blaſphemies in Wicked Men; that commits Murders, or other deeds of the Body, which Modeſty will not allow us to Name: whereas the Cabaliſts do a little qualifie and ſweeten this harſh and unpleaſant Notion, by looſening Minds in ſome manner from their firſt Subſtance, and by giving Matter and Senſations to them proportionably as they are weakened, or made drowſie, and deſcend into a kind of Death.

However it be, we find the grounds of Spinoſiſm in the Theologie of the Cabaliſts; that Spinoſa has only cloathed it with what Carthuſianiſm cou'd furniſh him, to prop up a ſinking building that threat'ned the ruin of the whole. Both confeſs that there is but One only Subſtance, which is Eternal and Independant. Both ſay that this Subſtance did not Create the World, becauſe Nothing cannot be made of Nothing; but that it is only modified after a different manner in Bodies and Souls, or Spirits; and theſe three Principles which are common with them, make up the Character of Spinoſiſm.

* Ibid. p. 310.

XII. We

XII. We agree with Spinoſa that there is but One only Subſtance which ſubſiſts by it ſelf from all Eternity, Independantly on any other Cauſe. We will add with the Cabaliſts, who reaſon as to this point better than Spinoſa, that this Independant Subſtance is Spiritual; for Matter is too vile and changeable to make a God of. But can any one conceive that there is no other Subſtance but That which is Infinite, Eternal and Independant? If only Angels and Souls were in the Univerſe, it might be ſaid, as ſome of the Antient Philoſophers have done, that Spirits are ſo many Particles of the Deity? But how is it conceivable that the Machine of the World ſhould be a part of that Eternal Subſtance we call God, or that God ſhould be Material and Corporeal, as Men are, and Mountains, and Rocks, and the Earth? On the other ſide, how can it be ſaid, that this Spiritual Subſtance ſhould let Spirits come out of his Boſom that have eternally co-exiſted with him, which grow thick by an I know not what kind of Sleep, and compoſe the Univerſe? Becauſe Philoſophers have defin'd Matter to be a Subſtance ſubſiſting by it ſelf, does it therefore follow, that this Subſtance muſt ſubſiſt Eternally and Independantly? But we ought at leaſt to hearken to the Authors of this definition, and ſince they declare ingenuouſly, that they mean two Subſtances, the one Created, the other Uncreated, and that they do not call the Created Subſtance a thing which ſubſiſts by it ſelf, but in oppoſition to the Accidents that can't ſubſiſt without a Subject, we ought therefore no longer to be abuſed by their definition, nor ſuffer it to be inſiſted on as a Maxim which muſt not further be diſputed.

XIII. If Spinoſa thinks the Philoſophers have been to blame for aſcribing the Title of Subſtance to Creatures, becauſe thereby they have confounded them with God, and that 'tis evident that they do not ſubſiſt by themſelves, but on the contrary are deſtroyed by ſtriking againſt other Bodies, or periſh by their own weakneſs, he would have ſome reaſon; but he ought to explain himſelf. Beſides, he would have loſt the ſingularity of his Syſtem; or that ſingularity would not at leaſt conſiſt but by the inventing of a new term, or rather by the new Sence he puts upon a term of Modification which had been invented long before his Days: And the Queſtion would yet have been very difficult to decide, if by calling Bodies Modifications, he had ſpoken more juſtly than the Philoſophers, who called them Subſtances. It is not alſo very likely that a Man ſhould give himſelf ſo much trouble for ſuch a trifle. He would have taken God away out of the World, by making a God of the World. He took all Creatures to be but Accidents of the Deity, which had in it ſelf their ſubject of Inheſion, as they ſpeak in the Schools.

XIV. This appears, 1. Becauſe he acknowledges but one ſole Subſtance. He never diſtinguiſhes two of them, the One Created, the Other Un-created; the One dependant on the Supreme Being, the Other independant on any Cauſe. He could not doubt but the Matter of which the Univerſe is compoſed, was a Subſtance; He muſt then have confounded it with the Eternal, Uncreated and Independant Subſtance. Why therefore do they maintain with ſo much heat that there is One only Eternal Subſtance, if there be two of them very different one from the other, and that That of which Bodies are formed, is not the ſame with That which is Eternal. 2. He could not but know what Modes and Modification ſignified. He could not take that Term but in the Sence of the Philoſophers, or ſome Modern Divines and Controvertiſts. Theſe laſt hold that there are Accidents that ſubſiſt without a Subject; But has Spinoſa ſpread this falſe Philoſophy without having any advantage by it himſelf? If he has done ſo, they are to blame who admire his Arguing and way of Philoſophizing. He is a worſe Philoſopher than the moſt bigotted furious Controvertiſts, who have no ſooner loſt out of ſight and beyond recovery their Doctrine of Tranſubſtantiation, for which thoſe Accidents without a Subject were invented, but they go back to their firſt Principles. Moreover, when ever thoſe Controvertiſts treat of that matter, they preſently ſecure themſelves under the ſhelter of a diſtinction between Phyſick and Theologie, Nature and Religion. 'Twas therefore impoſſible that Spinoſa ſhould have look'd on Men as Modes and Accidents that ſubſiſted without a Subject. He has follow'd the Principles of Carthuſianiſm, wherein he was very well vers'd, where the Modifications are of pure Accidents which ſtand in need of a Subſtance to ſupport them. There is no thinking without a Soul; there is no motion without a Body. Whiteneſs, roundneſs are attached to certain Subjects; deſtroy thoſe Objects, and bring them to nothing; the Accidents fall, and the Modification ceaſes. If Men and all Creatures are but Modifications of the One Subſtance, God is the Subject of Inheſion, in which all Creatures are inherent. * We may ſay that that Deity is round, is white; that it Walks; that it Argues; that it Changes, when there are white Objects, or round, Merchants, Diſputants, and that change ſhape and figure: As we ſay in common Philoſophy, that a Globe is round, that the Lilly is white, that Man is alter'd, when the Lineaments and Features of his Face are no more the ſame. 3. This appears yet more evidently, becauſe the great difficulty of Spinoſa and the Cabaliſts before him, was, that Nothing could not be made of nothing. That made them imagine an only Subſtance in the Univerſe, the thickning of Spirits, and different Modifications. If God hath Created Nothing and produced Nothing out of himſelf, then all the parts of the Univerſe muſt neceſſarily be parts of the One only Subſtance, differently modified, extended, or contracted, as we affirm.

XV. 'Tis granted to Spinoſa and his Maſters, that it is true, Nothing cannot be made of Nothing, and that there is, as we ſay, a formal oppoſition, and an infinite diſtance between Nothing and a Being, if we mean theſe three things; One that Nothing and a Being ſubſiſt at the ſame time. 'Tis certain this implies a contradiction as apparently, as to ſay that a Man is Blind, and yet he ſees; but as it is not impoſſible † that a Blind Man ſhould ceaſe from being ſo, and ſee Objects which were before hid from him; ſo neither is it impoſſible, that what did not exiſt, ſhould acquire an Exiſtence, and become a Being. Secondly, 'tis true, that Nothing cannot concur, or be the Cauſe of a Being. It ſeems they look upon nothing as a Subject upon which God works, much like the Ground which God made uſe of in the Creation of Man; now as that Subject exiſts not, becauſe it is Nothing, they may reaſonably ſay, that God could not bring Nothing out of Nothing. It would be ridiculous to ſay, that God brought Light out of Darkneſs, if we mean by that, that Darkneſs produced Light; but nothing hinders the Day from ſucceeding to Night; and that an infinite Power may produce Creatures, and give a Being to what had none before. Nothing has neither been the Subject, nor the Matter, nor the Inſtrument, nor the Cauſe of the Beings which God hath made. One would think this Remark ſhould be needleſs, becauſe no Body looks upon Nothing as a Fund on which God wrought, or which co-operated with him. However 'tis in this Sence Spinoſa diſputes againſt the Creation's being made out of Nothing. He very inſultingly demands, if any can conceive that Life ſhould proceed from Death. To ſay that, would be to look on Privations as the Cauſes of an infinite number of Effects. 'Tis the ſame thing as if one ſaid, that Nothing and the privation and want of Being, is the Cauſe of Being. Spinoſa ||, and his Aſſociates are in the right; the Privation of a thing is not the Cauſe of it. 'Tis not Darkneſs that produces Light, nor Death that begets Life. God does not command Nothing as a Slave that is obliged to act and ſubmit to his Orders; as he does not command Darkneſs nor Death to beget him Light or Life. Nothing is always Nothing; Death and Darkneſs are only Privations incapable of acting; but as God was able to produce Light which ſhould diſſipate Darkneſs, and to reſuſcitate a Body; the ſame God hath alſo been able to create Beings which never exiſted before, and to annihilate Nothing it ſelf, or at leaſt to diminiſh it by producing a mighty number of Creatures. Now as Death does not concur to the Reſurrection, and Darkneſs is not the Subject on which God works to derive Light from it; ſo Nothing does not co-operate with God, and is not the Cauſe of any Being, nor the Canvas on which God hath wrought, to bring forth ſo great a number of them. Here then we fight a Phantoſm, and change the Sentiment of Orthodox Chriſtians, that ſo we may turn it the more eaſily into ridicule. In a word, 'tis true, Nothing is not made of Nothing, or by Nothing, that is to ſay, without a Cauſe that pre-exiſts. As for Example, it would be impoſſible for the World to make it ſelf. There muſt be a Cauſe ſuperlatively powerful to produce it. The Maxim therefore, that Nothing is not made of Nothing, is true in theſe three Senſes.

* V. Bayle's Dict. Crit. p. 2767, &c.

XVI. But it is demanded, if God, whoſe Power is infinite, or, if you had rather, that independant Subſtance on every other Cauſe, can act independantly on Matter, and give Being to what was not before, according to Spinoſa, It muſt be decided that God cannot command Matter, to be. If he cannot, his Power is limited, or otherwiſe we muſt ſay, that the Exiſtence of Matter, by an Act of the Divine Power, implies a Contradiction. But how does this Exiſtence of Matter, produced by the Power of God, imply a Contradiction? and this ſame Exiſtence of Matter which exiſts from all Eternity, that is to ſay, which produc'd it ſelf, and which conſequently was derived from Nothing, does not this imply a Contradiction? Let us lay aſide the Ideas of Nothing, and the Maxim, Nothing is not made of Nothing, which perplexes it; and let us reduce it to its true ſenſe, and enquire whether the World was made of a pre-exiſtent Matter, or without Matter: For that is the meaning of thoſe words, the World was made of Nothing, the Univerſe proceeded from Nothing. 'Tis certain they do not mean that what is call'd Nothing, Nihilum, was the Subject, or the place from whence God brought out the Univerſe; but only that there was nothing before Matter was formed. I maintain it to be much harder to conceive that there was an Eternal matter which made it ſelf; weak, imperfect, as we beheld it, than to conceive that God by his infinite Power made the Matter which did not exiſt as yet. The reaſon hereof is plain, that the greateſt of all Perfections being that of giving Being to it ſelf, or of exiſting from all Eternity. I can't conceive that the firſt matter, vile, without form, and corruptible, ſhould be poſſeſſed with ſuch a Perfection, nor that it ſhould come from Nothing without any pre-exiſtent Cauſe. At leaſt I comprehend more eaſily that it began to exiſt, when God was pleaſed it ſhould. I can't conceive that my Soul was from all Eternity the ſame. Yet it muſt be confeſs'd, that God gives it an Exiſtence it had not before, or rather that it exiſts from all Eternity by it ſelf. It is no leſs difficult a matter to produce a rational Soul from a Subſtance that does not exiſt, than to produce a Body without Matter which has pre-exiſted. I know what I think; I know likewiſe that Matter can't produce Thought. To wiſh that Matter had this power, is to give it the faculty of producing a thing, which is much more perfect than it; and at the ſame time that they ſhould deny to God the power of creating what did not exiſt; they aſcribe to Matter the power of producing Thoughts which are far above it. If Thoughts, infinitely more noble and excellent than Atoms, or a heavy lump, cannot come out of Matter; and if the Intellect is not the effect of a corporeal Subſtance, then God muſt produce Thoughts, or the Soul which begets them, and a thing which did not exiſt before, begins to be. And now we require them to tell us, why God ſhou'd not have the ſame power to create Matter as to produce Souls? To conclude, I know better the nature of Matter which is ſenſible and circumſcribed, than I know the extent of the Power of God who is an infinite Spirit: preſs'd with two Difficulties which ariſe from the Creation of the World, I will rather throw my ſelf on the ſide of the Power of God, whoſe daily and inconteſtable Effects very far ſurpaſs my ſhallow reaſon and capacity, and ſhall more eaſily comprehend that it was able to produce Matter that exiſted not, than believe that Matter created it ſelf, or that it is a Principle ſubſiſting from all Eternity.

XVII. The operation of God is explain'd by the example of Creatures, and the different Modifications of which they are capable; the Soul produces Thoughts, Bodies give motion to other Bodies; the Sun ſcatters his Rays and his Light; the Object is painted in the Mirroir which reflects it back. 'Tis * ſaid that theſe are as many Creations; and in ſhort ſome Philoſophers do maintain, that God muſt needs diſplay an infinite Vertue and Power, of which the Creature is not capable, in making the Arms to move, and that he creates the Action which they produce, and which is communicated to the Boule in throwing it. But not to carry theſe Principles too far, we may ſafely conclude, that if the Creature, or God, produce indiſputable and ſenſible Effects, without our being able to conceive the manner how they are done, if he gives Exiſtence to things that were not before, beyond our reach to comprehend how they are brought to paſs; he was able alſo to give unto Matter an Exiſtence that it had not. I. THE Cabaliſts have another Syſtem far leſs intelligible than the foregoing one. They ſay indeed that Angels and this Sublunary World were framed out of Nothing; but at the ſame time hold that there are ſeveral Worlds, and that thoſe Worlds came from God by way of Emanation. They are compoſed of Light. That divine Light was very ſubtile and thin in its firſt Riſe, but it grew thicker and thicker by degrees, in Proportion as it was farther removed from the Supreme Being, to which it was originally attached. It is * explained by the example of Manna, which was a dew from Heaven congealed by the heavenly Light. 'Tis certain Akiba affirms, that Manna was engend'red by that light, which was condenſed, and ſo became material. R. Iſmaël finds great fault with this, becauſe Manna was the bread of Angels, and thoſe Intelligences are not nouriſhed by a light become material, but by the Light of God. Now to avoid this Inconvenience, they make two States of Saints in Heaven, the One ſhall not come to perfection there, and therefore their Souls ſhall be nouriſhed by this condenſed Light, like the Children of Iſrael who did eat it in the Wilderneſs; but the others ſhall be fortify'd with the pure Light. Be it how it will, thoſe Doctors agree about the condenſation of the Celeſtial and Divine Light. Manna was nothing but a ſort of congealment of that Light; and the other Creatures, which have ſome degree of Excellency, have been made of this Light as well as Manna. 'Tis this laſt Syſtem about the Creation which we are going to unravel as much as we ſhall be able.

II. Without doubt abundance of Abſurdities will be met with in it; but they all ariſe from a difficulty that mightily puzzles the Divines. Moſt of them finding an infinite diſtance between material, vile Bodies, and the Sovereign Deity, have not been able to comprehend that God created them immediately. To take away this Scandal, they have imagined two things. A certain Gradation of Creatures, the moſt Noble and Excellent of whom had produced Others; or rather they have made Principles to intervene between God and us, who diſcending by degrees, and, as I may ſo ſay, approaching nearer to our Nature, were enabled to produce it by the Power they had received from the Deity. We have already obſerved that it was this difficulty that perplexed Plato, and which drove him to the device of his word and intelligences between God and Man. Did not Ariſtotle make a kind of Idol of Nature? he looked upon her as a ſort of Intelligent being, which regulated all things with great Order and Wiſdom. She was the Center, and held a Middle, between God and the Creatures; and the Deity having made her the depoſitary of his Orders and Motions, reſted it ſelf, and committed to her all things which were to happen in the ſenſible World. And there are likewiſe too many Chriſtians, that can't endure to have this Idol wreſted out of their hands †. They alſo aſcribe to Nature an infinite number of Operations; they never ſpeak of her but with their Heads uncovered; they ſtand in awe of her; and give her a thouſand flattering Encomiums. What a horrid Crime was this for the new Philoſophers, who attempted to efface and anihilate a Name which had been ſo Sacred to all Antiquity! This Prejudice is ſo extremely violent, that even thoſe who keep themſelves moſt from popular Errours, ſubſtitute New Conceits in room of the Old. They diſpute ſtrongly even || at this day about the * Vital Spirit, and certain † Plaſtick Natures which thoſe Philoſophers and Divines have imagined, and to which is entruſted the Care of making the Productions of Nature. Theſe are ſo many Channels thro' which God, inſtead of acting immediately, leſſens the infinite diſtance that is between him and the Creatures. The Cabaliſts, their Heads being heated with ſo general a Prejudice, have taken a quite different Road, but it tends however to the ſame end.

being made out of Nothing. He very inſultingly demands, if any can conceive that Life ſhould proceed from Death. To ſay that, would be to look on Privations as the Cauſes of an infinite number of Effects. 'Tis the ſame thing as if one ſaid, that Nothing and the privation and want of Being, is the Cauſe of Being. Spinoſa ||, and his Aſſociates are in the right; the Privation of a thing is not the Cauſe of it. 'Tis not Darkneſs that produces Light, nor Death that begets Life. God does not command Nothing as a Slave that is obliged to act and ſubmit to his Orders; as he does not command Darkneſs nor Death to beget him Light or Life. Nothing is always Nothing; Death and Darkneſs are only Privations incapable of acting; but as God was able to produce Light which ſhould diſſipate Darkneſs, and to reſuſcitate a Body; the ſame God hath alſo been able to create Beings which never exiſted before, and to annihilate Nothing it ſelf, or at leaſt to diminiſh it by producing a mighty number of Creatures. Now as Death does not concur to the Reſurrection, and Darkneſs is not the Subject on which God works to derive Light from it; ſo Nothing does not co-operate with God, and is not the Cauſe of any Being, nor the Canvas on which God hath wrought, to bring forth ſo great a number of them. Here then we fight a Phantoſm, and change the Sentiment of Orthodox Chriſtians, that ſo we may turn it the more eaſily into ridicule. In a word, 'tis true, Nothing is not made of Nothing, or by Nothing, that is to ſay, without a Cauſe that pre-exiſts. As for Example, it would be impoſſible for the World to make it ſelf. There muſt be a Cauſe ſuperlatively powerful to produce it. The Maxim therefore, that Nothing is not made of Nothing, is true in theſe three Senſes.

XVI. But it is demanded, if God, whoſe Power is infinite, or, if you had rather, that independant Subſtance on every other Cauſe, can act independantly on Matter, and give Being to what was not before, according to Spinoſa, It muſt be decided that God cannot command Matter, to be. If he cannot, his Power is limited, or otherwiſe we muſt ſay, that the Exiſtence of Matter, by an Act of the Divine Power, implies a Contradiction. But how does this Exiſtence of Matter, produced by the Power of God, imply a Contradiction? and this ſame Exiſtence of Matter which exiſts from all Eternity, that is to ſay, which produc'd it ſelf, and which conſequently was derived from Nothing, does not this imply a Contradiction? Let us lay aſide the Ideas of Nothing, and the Maxim, Nothing is not made of Nothing, which perplexes it; and let us reduce it to its true ſenſe, and enquire whether the World was made of a pre-exiſtent Matter, or without Matter: For that is the meaning of thoſe words, the World was made of Nothing, the Univerſe proceeded from Nothing. 'Tis certain they do not mean that what is call'd Nothing, Nihilum, was the Subject, or the place from whence God brought out the Univerſe; but only that there was nothing before Matter was formed. I maintain it to be much harder to conceive that there was an Eternal matter which made it ſelf; weak, imperfect, as we beheld it, than to conceive that God by his infinite Power made the Matter which did not exiſt as yet. The reaſon hereof is plain, that the greateſt of all Perfections being that of giving Being to it ſelf, or of exiſting from all Eternity. I can't conceive that the firſt matter, vile, without form, and corruptible, ſhould be poſſeſſed with ſuch a Perfection, nor that it ſhould come from Nothing without any pre-exiſtent Cauſe. At leaſt I comprehend more eaſily that it began to exiſt, when God was pleaſed it ſhould. I can't conceive that my Soul was from all Eternity the ſame. Yet it muſt be confeſs'd, that God gives it an Exiſtence it had not before, or rather that it exiſts from all Eternity by it ſelf. It is no leſs difficult a matter to produce a rational Soul from a Subſtance that does not exiſt, than to produce a Body without Matter which has pre-exiſted. I know what I think; I know likewiſe that Matter can't produce Thought. To wiſh that Matter had this power, is to give it the faculty of producing a thing, which is much more perfect than it; and at the ſame time that they ſhould deny to God the power of creating what did not exiſt; they aſcribe to Matter the power of producing Thoughts which are far above it. If Thoughts, infinitely more noble and excellent than Atoms, or a heavy lump, cannot come out of Matter; and if the Intellect is not the effect of a corporeal Subſtance, then God muſt produce Thoughts, or the Soul which begets them, and a thing which did not exiſt before, begins to be. And now we require them to tell us, why God ſhou'd not have the ſame power to create Matter as to produce Souls? To conclude, I know better the nature of Matter which is ſenſible and circumſcribed, than I know the extent of the Power of God who is an infinite Spirit: preſs'd with two Difficulties which ariſe from the Creation of the World, I will rather throw my ſelf on the ſide of the Power of God, whoſe daily and inconteſtable Effects very far ſurpaſs my ſhallow reaſon and capacity, and ſhall more eaſily comprehend that it was able to produce Matter that exiſted not, than believe that Matter created it ſelf, or that it is a Principle ſubſiſting from all Eternity.

XVII. The operation of God is explain'd by the example of Creatures, and the different Modifications of which they are capable; the Soul produces Thoughts, Bodies give motion to other Bodies; the Sun ſcatters his Rays and his Light; the Object is painted in the Mirroir which reflects it back. 'Tis * ſaid that theſe are as many Creations; and in ſhort ſome Philoſophers do maintain, that God muſt needs diſplay an infinite Vertue and Power, of which the Creature is not capable, in making the Arms to move, and that he creates the Action which they produce, and which is communicated to the Boule in throwing it. But not to carry theſe Principles too far, we may ſafely conclude, that if the Creature, or God, produce indiſputable and ſenſible Effects, without our being able to conceive the manner how they are done, if he gives Exiſtence to things that were not before, beyond our reach to comprehend how they are brought to paſs; he was able alſo to give unto Matter an Exiſtence that it had not. My deſign is not to refute Spinoſa's Syſtem, which the Cabaliſts had brought forth before him, and of which a † Learned Gentleman has admirably well ſhewn the Abſurdities and horrible Conſequences, whilſt others have ſapp'd the Foundations and firſt Principles of it.

XVIII. We will only obſerve || that St. Jerome Attributes a ſort of Spinoſiſm to Origen; for he condemns him for having ſaid that all rational Creatures were but one and the ſame Subſtance united to the Deity; and whilſt he was in ſuſpence whether he ſhould own that the Son was begotten of the Father, and of the ſame Eſſence with him, becauſe he was afraid leſt he ſhould ſplit the Deity in two; he ſtoutly ſtood up and maintained, that the Creatures and God were but one ſole and ſame Subſtance: but I know not whether we ought to give an entire Credit to St. Jerome, who was Origen's declared Enemy; for whatever pains we may take to find the words upon which he grounds his Accuſation, they are not to be found in Origen. ate the Universe, because otherwise he would not have compleatly made out the Idea of the name Jehovah which he had given to himself, and which signifies that he exists; nor that of Adonai, which denotes his absolute Rule and Empire over Subjects. The World therefore must of necessity have had its Existence, and there likewise must have been Men subject to his Laws, to make him truly a Lord. As if God had from all Eternity given to himself the names of Jehovah and Adonai; and, as if he had of necessity been imposed to take them; or rather, as if he had not taken them but to the end he might make Men know his Eternal Existence, and his Authority over them.

IV. They examine into the reason why the World was not made before, and they find one for it in the manner of its Production. There first came forth an infinite Light which they called Or Æn Soph; It cannot be explained, nor conceived; it is above all Comprehension; it hath not had either beginning or time. Yet they own, at the same time that it was made, formed, and created, it is not Eternal, which implies a Contradiction. From this first Emanation flow'd a second great and resplendant Light which they call Adam Kadmon; Adam, the first of all that was made in the beginning. From this Adam have other Lights flowed, some whereof issued from his Brain, others from his Ears, and at last came the World of Points *; and from that World came forth four other Worlds, of which we shall speak hereafter. They affirm, that all these Emanations of Light succeeding one to another, it was not possible that God should create the World sooner, since there must be allowed time for his Emanations to beget, as I may say, and to succeed one to the other, which required without question several Revolutions of Ages.

V. The Letter † Jod, which is the name Jehovah, made several Voyages, and often descended to cast abroad a thicker Light, because that which subsisted before was too subtil and fluid to fix it self, and form the World. This Letter was considerably weakened with its first course, but borrowing fresh succours from the Letter || H, which is also in the name Jehovah, there appears the Crown, which is the first of all the Sephiroths, and virtually includes them all. This same Jod produced afterwards the other Sephiroths, proportionably as it descended and ascended, and thereby God opened the way for the Creation of the Universe.

VI. God designing to create the Universe, there were two great Difficulties to be overcome in it.

First, All was full; for the subtil and resplendant Light *, which came from the Divine Essence, had filled all things. He must therefore make a void space, wherein to place his Emanations and the Universe: For this end God press'd a little the Light that encompassed him, and that compressed Light gave back on each side, and left in the middle a huge empty Circle, in which the World might be placed. This is explained by the Comparison of a Man, who finding himself overburthen'd with too long a Garment, tucks it up. They alledge also the example of God, who changed his Form or manner of his Presence, both upon Mount Sinai, and when he appeared in a flame of fire out of the midst of a Bush; Exod. 3. v. 2. But all these Comparisons don't hinder, but that there remains an Idea of a sensible Substance in God. Nothing but Bodies can fill a place, and be compressed.

They add, that it was for the sake of the righteous and holy People that God made that Restriction or Condensation of his Light. They were not yet born; but however God had them in his Idea. That Idea rejoiced him; and they compare the Joy of God, which produced the Points, and afterwards the Letters of the Alphabet, and lastly Rewards and Punishments, to the motion of a Man that laughs with Joy.

The Light that came from the Divine Essence proved another Difficulty; for it was too full and subtil to form Creatures. Now to remove that, God drew a long Line, which descending into the lower parts, sometimes in a right manner, and sometimes with reflection, to make ten Circles, or ten Sephiroths, served as a Channel for the Light; It communicated it self in a less measure, and thickening proportionably the further it removed from its Center; and descending thro' the Channel, it became the fitter to form Spirits and Bodies.

VII. The first Emanation, more perfect than the rest, is called Adam Kadmon, the first of all that was created in the beginning. His name is taken from Genesis, where God said, Let us make man, or Adam, in our Image, after our likeness; and this Name was given him; because as the terrestrial Adam is a little World, so that from Heaven is a great World. As Man holds the first rank upon Earth, so the Celestial Adam enjoys it in Heaven; As it was for Man that God created all things, so the Lord † possessed the other in the beginning of his way, before he made any of his Works, and from antient times. In short, whereas by beginning with || Man, they ascend up by degrees to the Superiour Intelligences, even to God himself; so contrariwise, by beginning with the Celestial Adam, who is superlatively exalted above all, they descend even to the meanest and vilest of Creatures. They represent him as a Man that hath a Skull, a Brain, Eyes, and Hands, and each of his Parts contain profound Mysteries. Wisdom is the * Skull of the first Adam, and extends it self to the Ears; Understanding is his right Ear, and Prudence makes his left. His Feet are not lengthen'd beyond a certain inferiour World, for fear lest by stretching themselves to the utmost, they should reach even to infinity, and he himself become infinite. Upon his Diaphragm is a mass of Light which he has condensed there; but another Part is freed by the Eyes and Ears. The Line, which served for a Channel to the Light, hath imparted to him, besides Understanding and Goodness, the power of producing other Worlds. The World of the first Adam is greater than all the rest; they receive from it their Influences, and have their dependance on it. The Circles that dress up his Crown, denote his Life and Duration, which Plotin and the Ægyptians have represented by a Circle, or a Crown.

VIII. As all that has been said of this first † Adam seems to agree with a Person, some Christian Interpreters of the Cabala have thought that thereby was J. Christ, the Second Person of the Trinity. They are mistaken; for the Cabalists || give to this Adam a beginning. They have put a space between him and the Infinite, to denote that he was of a different Essence, and very far removed from the Perfection of the Cause which had produced it: And notwithstanding the Empire that is ascribed to him for the Production of other Worlds, yet he comes near to nothing, and is composed of other qualities. sides, ſides, the Jews, who frequently give the title of Son to their Seir Anpin, do never attribute it to Adam Kadmon, whom they exalt much above him.

IX. They diſtinguiſh four Sorts of Worlds, and four manners of Creation.

Firſt, there is a Production by way of Emanation, and thoſe are the Sephiroths and great Lights which come out from God, and compoſe the Aziluthique World. That is the Name given to it. Thoſe Lights are come forth from the infinite Being, as heat comes from Fire, the light of the Sun, and the Effect of the Cauſe that produces it. Thoſe Emanations are always near to God, where they preſerve a more pure and ſubtil Light: for the Light condenſes, grows thicker and duller in Proportion as it is diſtant from the infinite Being. 'Tis not evident that the Cabaliſts underſtood by thoſe Emanations the Perſons in the Trinity, tho' there are ſeveral things that agree therewith. 'Tis much more probable that they have made groſs and ſullied the Perfections of God, and aſcribed to them a ſort of Exiſtence ſeparate from him, tho' ſtill in his Neighbourhood. This alſo appears ſo much the more probable, becauſe they ſometimes call Aziluth the Grace granted to the LXX. Old Men who receiv'd a Portion of the Prophetick Spirit of Moſes.

X. The ſecond World is called Briathique, from a term which ſignifies * outward, or looſening or ſeparating. By that is meant the World and the Creation of Souls, which have been looſed from the firſt Cauſe, that are farther off removed than the Sephiroths, and that conſequently are more groſs and tenebrous. That World is called the Throne of Glory, and the Sephiroths of the Superiour World pour down their influences upon it.

XI. The third Degree of the Creation reſpects Angels. They affirm † that they were brought out of nothing, with a deſign to be placed in Celeſtial Bodies, of Air, or Fire; and therefore their formation is called Jetſirah, becauſe thoſe pure Spirits have been formed for a Subſtance which was deſigned them. There were ten Troops of thoſe Angels; at their Head was a Chief, called Metatron, exalted above them all, continually beholding the face of God, diſtributing to them every day bread convenient for them. They derive from him their Lives, and all other Advantages and Comforts of 'em; and therefore all the Angelick Order has taken their name from thence.

XII. Laſtly, God created Bodies which do not ſubſiſt by themſelves as Souls do, nor in another Subject as the Angels. They are compoſed of matter diviſible and changing; they can be deſtroyed, and this Creation of the ſenſible World is called Aſiah. Now here is the Notion of the Cabaliſts, whereof their Opinion is, that God hath created Souls, Angels and Bodies in a different manner; for as for Emanations, or Aziluthique World, they are the Attributes of the Deity, which they cloath in created Perſons, or Lights that flow from the infinite Being.

XIII. They alſo diſtinguiſh the Creation in another manner; for ſometimes they reckon up five Worlds created by God. The Sublunary World in which we live; Man who is the little World; the World of Spheres which is Heaven; the World of Angels; and laſtly, a Superiour World; above this Superiour World are alſo Emanations, or Aziluth; and above the Emanations is God, in whom all things exiſt.

XIV. How odd and fantaſtical ſoever all theſe conceits are, yet care is taken to juſtify the Divines who delivered them; and there are Chriſtians who often take that trouble upon them to eaſe the Jews thereof.

'Tis ſaid that they have followed the Method of the Eaſtern Philoſophers, Mercurius Treſmegiſtus, Plato, and the inſpired Writers, who have given to the Deity feet and hands, that ſo they may more ſenſibly expreſs his Operations. Dionyſius the Areopagite has ſaid, that becauſe it is impoſſible to go up to Heaven, or to ſee the Angels, we muſt therefore make uſe of the Succours that ſenſible matter furniſhes us with, the better to explain their Nature. Why then ſhould we refuſe the Jewiſh Rabbies a Liberty which the Chriſtians have ſo often made bold with? In perſuing this Method the Cabaliſts have been able to unfold the Deſign and End God had in creating the Univerſe; or rather the Idea he framed to himſelf of that great Work under the figure of a mighty Man, who imparted Light to other Worlds, and gave exiſtence to them. In perſuing the ſame Method, they have ſpoke of their || Arich Anpin, or the Man with a long Viſage; for thereby they would have repreſented the infinite Being and Eſſence of God. They gave him three Viſages; that is to ſay, the Crown, Wiſdom and Prudence. The Crown ſets forth that the Deity is eternal, and comprehends all things. Parmenides alſo called the Deity a burning and ſhining Crown. 'Tis thought alſo that Cicero, who related that paſſage of Parmenides, alluded to the Crown ſo famous among the Cabaliſts. There was given to that ſame Arich Anpin Wiſdom, who is the Eternal Son; and Prudence, which is the Holy Spirit, and the Spirit the Creator of the Platoniſts. We are taught * by the Seir Anpin, or the little Viſage, that the World is finite and bounded, and that God hath a particular Care of his Church; for, according to ſome Cabaliſts, the little Viſage and the little World is the Jewiſh Church, which contains all that is fair and beautiful in the long Viſage, or little World, and which conſequently is the Object of Divine Love. Laſtly, they made every thing to intervene that was neceſſary for the compoſition of the Univerſe. There muſt be Power to produce it, there muſt be Grandure, Goodneſs and Imbelliſhment. To conclude, all the Sephiroths were engaged in this mighty Work.

XV. The Chriſtians are not the beſt Expoſitors of the Cabala of the Jews. They think always of the Divine Perſons in the Trinity. As if there were but that one Article, with which their heads are perplexed, they would never come to the Opinion of the true Cabaliſts, who had not that Idea of the Chriſtians. They by their Notion of the Trinity only teach us, that there is to be found every thing one can deſire in the Sephiroths, and in the obſcure Expreſſions of thoſe Divines. Cohen Irira † a Portugueſe Cabaliſt, who wrote towards the latter end of the laſt Century, helps us much better to the underſtanding of the meaning of the Cabaliſts, by affirming, 1ſt. That the Light which filled all things, was too ſubtil to form Bodies, or even Spirits; and that Light which came from God was to be condenſed. This is the firſt Errour, that the World proceeded from the Deity by way of Emanation, and that the Spirits came from the Light. 2dly, He obſerves that God, not deſigning immediately to create himſelf, produced a Being whom he inveſted with a Power ſufficient for that end, which they call the firſt Adam, or Adam Kadmon. Not that God could not immediately create; but he was pleaſed not to do it, to the end his Power might appear more bright and glorious,

glorious, and that the Creatures might become more perfect. 3dly, That first Principle which God produced, to the end he might make use of it for the Creation of the Universe, was finite, and bounded; God gave him the Perfections that he has himself, and let him have some Imperfections which He hath not. God is independent, and that first Principle depended on him: God is infinite, and the first Principle is circumscribed; He is immutable, and the first Cause was subject to Change.

XVI. It must be confessed then, that those Divines differ much from the Ordinary Ideas, and from those which Moses has given us about the Creation. They not only speak a barbarous Language; but they broach Errors, and conceal them under I know not what Figures. We plainly see by Isaac Leria, a Jewish Commentator, who step by step followed his Master, that they do not ascribe the Creation immediately to God. They also make his goodness to consist in having made an inferiour Principle to Himself with power to act. Now to find J. Christ in this Principle; is not only to remove them from their Notion, but to give a very false one of the Son of God, who is infinite, immutable and independant.

XVII. If we should descend into a farther detail, we should find it very hard not to be exceedingly offended at their Seir Anpin, who is both a Man and a Woman. From this Mother, this Father, this Woman, or Nucba, which they make to intervene; from this Light which they make to break forth from the Skull, the Eyes and Ears of the great Anpin; are such Metaphors very proper to give a just Idea of the Perfections of God, and of the manner how he created the World? There is something very low and creeping in those Figures, which are so far from making us to distinguish what we are to fear, and what to love, or what ought to unite us to the Deity, that they do shamefully debase him, and make him contemptible to the last degree in the eyes of Men.

XVIII. 'Tis affirm'd that this Sentiment is entered in the * Targum of Jerusalem, because those who composed it, have substituted in Genesis the word Wisdom, which is One of the Ten Sephiroths, for that of Beginning. 'Tis thought that those antient Paraphrasts, coming into all the Principles of the Cabalists, have admitted their Sephiroths and Emanations, by which the World was made: But the term in the Original should be changed to find Wisdom there: for the Paraphrast has put Bekadmon, which expresses either the Order, or time in which God created. The meaning here is, that God created the World first, and before all Things. Manassah maintains † that without thinking of the Sephiroths, the Paraphrast had only a design to mark the Order that God had observed in the Creation of the World. His Goodness push'd him on to do it, his Wisdom ordained it, and his Power executed it: And the Authors of the Targum met with those three things in the three first words of Genesis, In the beginning God created. The Beginning signifies Wisdom, God the Power, and created the Goodness which made Him to act.

XIX. To this is added a Sphere ||, which 'tis said the Patriarchs made use of to know the course of the Stars. They observed therein three Circles; about the largest were read these words, the Heaven of Heavens; the Second is simply called Heaven, and the Third is the Extent. 'Tis certain the Second of these Circles is environed with a vast many others; but Seven of them are more particularly taken notice of, on which is read the Names of the Seven Planets, beginning with Saturn which is the most distant from us. Those Circles were disposed with so much Art, that there were perfectly distinguish'd in them the Degrees and the Distances. In short, in the Center was a hollow bowl, which represented the Earth, and in the Overture were seen several Characters, and among others the Names of the ten Sephiroths, which proves that they were known to the Patriarchs, as having contributed to the Production of the Universe.

But this Sphere could not have served the Patriarchs, seeing the names of the Months, as it were engraven on the Circle of the Moon, are the same names which have been given them since the Captivity of Babilon, after the change that happened in the Hebrew Tongue by a mixture of the Chaldaick. All that can be concluded from thence, is, that the Cabalists ascribe the Creation of the Universe to the Sephiroths, and which they look upon as the immediate Causes of the Production of the World; and that is a sensible Error for which the Christians ought not to make any Apologie.

XX. There is another Mistake about the Creation, of which some Fathers of the Church are guilty, as well as the Doctors of the Synagogue. 'Tis certain that it is a notoriously common Opinion among these latter, that the Heaven and the Planets are animated, This Belief has been very antient among them; for Philo * had borrowed it from Plato, whom he made his principal Delight and Study. He plainly said that the Planets were intelligent Creatures, which had never done ill, and were incapable of doing any. He added, that they have a circular Motion, because it is the most perfect, and that which agrees best with Souls and intelligent Substances.

Maimonides †, who followed Philo, observed three Things. The one was, that it ought not to be imagined that the Soul of Heaven was that of a Man, but that there is necessarily an Intelligence which animates it, and makes it to move. Secondly, he gives to the Circles a knowledge inferiour indeed to that of Angels, but much more enlarged than that with which we Mortals are endowed. The Stars not only know that God that made them, but they likewise know themselves, and God is the Object of their Desires. In a word, as they are more perfect than Man, so they are always seen in Action and Motion, and their Actions too are always good and holy. Manassah ||, who flourished in the last Age, gave in to this Opinion.

XXI. The Jews as to this Article are no more guilty than many of the Christians. I don't know whether Origen, who wrote in Egypt, and where Philo had a greater reputation, copy'd the Jewish Doctor, or whether he had gone up to the very Source, and borrowed from Plato that Article of his Theologie; but it is not to be denied that he had adopted it, making thereto some little Alterations. Origen * believed that the Souls having been all created at one and the same time, some were come down into Human Bodies, and others placed in the Stars and Planets. He speaks of the Soul of the Sun; and 'tis in vain the pains the Interpreters take to conceal the Errour of that Father, by saying that it is the Soul of Elias which is in the Body; for it is evident that he means the Sun and other Creatures, which St. Paul aſſures us was made ſubject to Vanity. In ſhort, that Father thought that the Stars and Planets were at liberty to Sin, and in that he differed from Philo and the other Jews. He relyed upon the Text in Job, which ſays that Behold even to the Moon and it ſhineth not, and the Stars are not pure in God's ſight, Job. 25. 5. He will have it that not only Men, but the Heavens, the Sun, Moon and Stars ſhall at the Day of Judgment appear to receive there the Puniſhment due to their Crimes, or the Reward for their good Actions.

XX. The Apologiſts of Origen, both Antient and Modern, have done what they could to clear him by reaſon of the ſilence of the Scriptures, which don't deny that thoſe heavenly Bodies are animated. On the contrary, they exhort the Sun and Moon, and all the Stars of light to praiſe the Lord; but it is very much that Origen, who ran ſo often after Allegories, and found a figurative Senſe where there was none, ſhould not perceive that there was therein a figure of Rhetorick, very common to Poets as well as to Orators. He is moreover juſtified by the Authority of divers Fathers who have ſpoke as he has done. But theſe Authorities ſhew, that the Fathers of the Church may be deceived in the plaineſt Matters; but they do not at all vindicate either Origen, or the Fathers, or the Jews.

I. MEN ſeem to be moſt pleaſed when they are Arguing about things they leaſt underſtand. They know but little of the nature of Souls; they know yet leſs the nature of Angels; and their Creation and Exiſtence cannot be known but by Revelation. The Sacred Writers, whom God inſpired, were fearful and ſober about the Matter. What reaſon then is there that Man ſhould be ſilent, and that bounds ſhould be ſet to his raſhneſs? Yet there are very few Subjects about which Men have ſo much Argued, as about Angels. Curious People conſult their Doctors, and theſe will not have them ſuſpect that they are Ignorant of what paſſes in Heaven, or be ſtinted by the Lights that Moſes has left them. 'Twould be to degrade them from their Doctorſhips, and bring them down to the State of poor ſimple People that can read Moſes, and that only interrogate Divines about Matters which the Scripture ſays nothing of. To confeſs one's Ignorance in things that are obſcure and Myſtical, would be an act of Modeſty, which is allowed by no means to thoſe whoſe Province it is to inſtruct others. For default of Sacred Writers, they will find out a Viſionary or Fanciful Man, diſguiſed under the Name of Dionyſius the Areopagite, that extravagantly ſubtilizes upon the Hierarchy of Angels; and this venerable Name is enough to clear the Moderns of Temerity, and encourages them to treat on this Subject as confidently as if they had gone through their Courſe of Theology in Paradice. I confeſs the Moderns are not the only guilty Perſons; for * before this falſe Dionyſius the Areopagite, the Fathers had brought forth uncertain conjectures, and erroneous Opinions concerning Angels, and the Jews had begun before them. This is a conſtant Truth, that they wander in the dark wilfully, and as we ſay with open Eyes, ſeeing they will give to Angels Attributes and Perfections without knowing them, and without conſulting God that formed them. This is to be the Subject of this Chapter. We ſhall here ſpeak of the Chriſtian as well as of the Jew, becauſe there is a great deal of Conformity between the Errours of the one and the other.

II. Becauſe Moſes ſays nothing of the time when the Angels were Created, they ſupply his Silence with their own Conjectures. Some think that God formed the Angels the ſecond Day of the Creation. No ſooner were they Created, but he conſulted them about what he was further to do †. Moſes inſinuates as much when he brings in God deliberating with them, ſaying, Let us make Man; let us go down * and confound their Language. The Doctors ſay likewiſe that God is never without his Houſe of Judgment, and that he does nothing without conſulting his Family which is in Heaven. They allude to their Cuſtom of having Houſes of Judgment, or a Council, wherein they deliberate about Affairs of extraordinary conſequence to their Synagogue. Maimonides obſerves however that God makes no uſe of the Council of Angels, nor does he adviſe with them; for God cannot be help'd by his Creatures: But by that we muſt underſtand that there is no production made by the operation of Angels. Yet there are other Doctors that affirm, that they were ſummoned to the Council of God about the making of Man, and that they divided in their Opinions; ſome approved of his being Created, and others rejected it, becauſe they foreſaw that Adam would Sin thro' complaiſance to his Wife. But God ſilenced the Angels who were Enemies to Man, and Created him before ever they perceived it, which made their Murmurings inſignificant. He likewiſe notified to them that they would alſo Sin by falling in Love with the Children of Men.

Others maintain ‡ that the Angels were not Created till the Fifth Day. A third Party will have it that God brought 'em forth every Day, and that they came out of a River called Dinor. Some gave the Angels the Power to Create one another; and thus the Angel Gabriel was Created by Michael, who is ſuperiour to him. In ſhort, Benj. Gerſon, who denies the Exiſtence of Angels, and endeavours to elude all the Paſſages of the Old Teſtament, where Moſes ſpeaks of their appearings, is not without his Diſciples and his Partiſans.

III. The Chriſtians are alſo divided about the matter; for Origen, St Gregory Nazianzen, St Ambroſe, and ſeveral other Fathers both of the Greek and Latin Churches, have taught that the Angels were Created before the World. St Baſil had imagined a certain Eternal Place fit for intelligent Natures, wherein he believed God had put them. Interpreters have been labouring to ſoften and qualifie this Eternity of place which cannot be conceived; but they are not able to do it otherwiſe than by ſaying, that God the ſole Eternal Being, is that place. Will any ſay that the Angels were in God, or in his Word, after they were Created? Theodore Biſhop of Mopſueſtia, who had took notice of this Errour of St Baſil, has cenſured it as groſs and fooliſh. 'Tis certain that Theodoret and he were of another Sentiment. The Fathers are acquitted by means of the Churches Silence, which had not decided that Queſtion. We are only concerned for the Doctors, who lived after the Council of Lateran, which pronounced that God at the beginning had jointly Created both the Spiritual and Material Nature; becauſe after that deciſion the contrary Opinion became a Hereſie; But if that be ſo, then the Jews did not Sin in all their Conceits about the Creation of Angels, ſince the Synagogue had not decided it; and tho' ſhe had, it would have been as eaſie to have defeated her Condemnation, as they did that of the Council of Lateran. In ſhort, ſome Interpreters, who will not have the Moderns condemned as Hereticks, who have Preach'd up their Fancies about the Creation of Angels, ſeeing they have not condemned thoſe of the Antients, do elude the Authority of the Council of Lateran, or explain it, by maintaining that jointly ſignifies equally: But the Council ſays in expreſs terms that both Spirits and Bodies were Created in the beginning of Time, which decides the Queſtion, and takes off the double Sence or Equivocation that has been found out to elude the Hereſie. But the Errour does not depend on the deciſion of the Council. A Celebrated * Writer among the Chriſtians aſſerts, that the Angels were Created long before the World for two Reaſons; One is, becauſe 'tis not likely that God ſhould be without Miniſtring Spirits to Praiſe and Laud him; the other, becauſe the Devil was already fallen, for at the very beginning of the Univerſe he tempted Man. The former is a reaſon of Bienſeance and Ceremony; and the Second is of little avail, if you'll ſuppoſe a Fact that is very probable, viz. That Man fell not on the firſt Day of his Creation, but that he enjoyed for ſome time the fruits of his Innocence. We commonly abridge that time, becauſe Moſes, who wrote an abridged Hiſtory, did not think himſelf obliged to diſtinguiſh Time where it did not make any thing conſiderable.

IV. There can be no Hereſie laid to the Charge of the Jews in what they Teach about the nature of Angels. † The Learned and penetrating Rabbies own, that there are Subſtances purely Spiritual, entirely diſengaged of Matter; and they admit of a Figure in all the Paſſages of Holy Scripture, which repreſent them under Corporeal Ideas, becauſe Angels do often take upon them the figure of Fire, of a Man, or a Woman.

Zacharias || lifted up his Eyes, and looked, and ſaw two Women, and the Wind was in their Wings. Thoſe Women were Angels, which took ſometimes the figure of a Woman; but that came into the Imagination of the Prophet. God placed Cherubims with a flaming Sword to defend the entring into the Terreſtrial Paradice; that is to ſay, that Angels had taken upon them the figure of an exceeding bright Flame. There is * alſo given to them that of Animals and of Oxen, to teach us that God hath an Eſſence as much exalted above Angels, as Man is above Beaſts. Wings are aſcribed to them only to let us know the Rapidity of their Motion. Eor as the Bird flies away, and appears again in an inſtant, ſo do the Angels come to our Succour, and are gone without our ever perceiving it. 'Tis a Perfection to be able to flie, and therefore Man deſires it? Yet as none but Angels flie, for that Reaſon Wings are ne- " ver given to God; and when David repreſents " him upon a Cherubim that flies, we † muſt not " think it was God, But the Cherubim that did " ſtretch ont thoſe Wings, and did flie. It would " be to debaſe God, and to ſet him in compariſon " with the Angels, to make him flie as they do. All theſe Explications do let us ſee that in the Synagogue Angels are looked upon as Spiritual Intelligences.

V. However there are ſome Rabbies more groſs, who not being able to digeſt what the Scriptures ſays of Angels, which repreſents them under the ſhape of an Oxe, a Lyon, a fiery Chariot, or with Wings, teach us || that there is a ſecond Order of Angels, which are called the Angels of the Miniſtry, who have Bodies as ſubtil as Fire. From the moment that they are thus gone out of the common road, by making thoſe pure Spirits ſo many material Beings; they go on further, and charge them with ſeveral Imperfections. 1. They believe there is a difference of Sex among thoſe happy Spirits, ſome whereof give, and others receive, after the manner of Women. 'Twas to make this Figure ſenſible that God had given the Figure of a Man to one of the Cherubs that covered the Propitiatory, and the other had that of a Woman. R. * Uriel has made this Myſtery yet more plain and evident; for in Paraphraſing upon thoſe words of the Prophet Iſaiah, which repreſents the Seraphims that cryed one unto another (Iſai. 6. 3.) he makes him to ſay, the One received of the Other. The Paraphraſe is extremely wide from the Text; for the Prophet puts into the mouths of the Seraphims the Praiſes of God, Holy, Holy, Holy is the Lord of Hoſts. It is alſo unclean and filthy; yet it is cryed up, becauſe it diſcovers the Commerce the Angels have among themſelves, and which they think is grounded upon Revelation. 2. They are perſuaded that the Angels take upon them the reſemblance of thoſe whom they protect. 'Tis no wonder, that the Rabbies † ſaw not the Son of God in the wreſtling of Jacob; for the Deity or Godhead of the Son was not known to them. But where found they that that Angel was Schamael, the Protector of Eſau, and that Jacob knew him by the reſemblance of his Brother? He was hid from him by the favour of the Night; but he eaſily diſcovered the Shape and Lineaments of his Face as ſoon as ever the day appeared. The Angel deſigned to avoid his being known by retiring before the riſing of the Sun, but Jacob ſuffered him not. 3. They affirm alſo that the Angels are ignorant of one part of what the Law ordained concerning the Cities of Refuge. They underſtand not the Chaldee Language, and therefore they bear not to God the Prayers of thoſe that put them up in that Language to him. They are frequently deceived; they hold dangerous Errours; for the Angel of Death, who is charg'd to cauſe ſuch a Man to die, ſometimes takes another, which occaſions great Diſorders. Their Jealouſy is violent; for they ſtrenuouſly fought againſt the Enemies of thoſe whom God has committed to their keeping. Thus the Angel Eſau fought with Jacob; and the Patron of the Egyptians hotly perſued the Iſraelites when they were quitting the Country. And therefore Moſes ſays, the Egyptians went away, that is to ſay, the Chief of the Egyptians. They are charged to ſing before God the Song, Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God of Hoſts; but they perform not this office but once, in a Day, in a Week, in a Month, in a Year, in an Age, or in Eternity. The Angel that wreſtled with Jacob, preſſed him to let him go, when the day began to break, becauſe it was his turn to ſing the Song that day, which as then he had never done. All thoſe who protect Idolatrous Nations, will be one day judged and puniſhed. They will return into their firſt Eſtate, and n'er be more ſeen.

VI. Chriſtians are not gone this length; but yet it is a deplorable thing to conſider, that the moſt antient Divines of the Church have believed Angels to be corporeal. Origen maintained that none but God alone, excluſive of all Creatures, was entirely diſingaged of Matter. Caſſianus joined in the ſame Sentiment; and tho' he called Angels and Souls ſpiritual Beings, yet he would ſtill cover them with ſome Matter, tho' much more fine and ſubtil than ours. It would be endleſs to cite Tertullian, St. Auguſtin, St. Baſil, Cyrril of Alexandria, and divers other great and famous Doctors of the antient Church, who have all aſſerted that Angels were material. They gave to theſe Spirits Bodies of a celeſtial Nature indeed, and of a particular Beauty; but yet they had a form by which they might be diſtinguiſhed. This was the Opinion of the Eaſtern Church, if we may believe Theodotus *; and Macarius added, that that was the great reaſon that had prevailed with God to cloath our Nature, that we might be enabled to communicate with all thoſe material Beings. Thoſe antient Doctors thought that the Angels had Bodies ſo thin and ſubtil, that they could not forbear looking on them as Spirits, and that they were compoſed of Air, or Fire. Juſtin Martyr †, going from conſequence to conſequence, ſought for nouriſhment fitting and proper for the ſuſtenance of theſe material Beings, ſaid, that in Heaven they had a particular Food, ſuch as Manna, which is called the bread of Angels: And to make good his Opinion, he obſerved that of the three Angels who appeared to Abraham, there were but two of them that did eat, becauſe the third was God, purely immaterial.

As ſoon as ever Angels are allowed to have Matter and Parts, which may be ſeparated, or may have need of nouriſhment to repair what it has loſt thro' the evaporation of the Spirits by Motion, or by the juſtling of other Bodies, at the ſame time it may as juſtly be ſaid with the Jews, that Angels are mortal. In this reſpect they argued more ſyllogiſtically and conſequentially than the Chriſtians who have denied it; and after their having admitted of the corporality of thoſe Spirits, they for all that make 'em immortal.

Juſtin Martyr avowed likewiſe, that the Angels to whom God had committed the Government of the World, falling in love with the Daughters of Men, joined themſelves with them, and from that Union were born the Demons.

VII. The Rabbies have alſo their Speculations about the Hierarchy of Angels, Eliezer ||, one of the moſt celebrated of them, makes four Orders of theſe Intelligences, in the midſt of whom is God, having a Diadem on his Head; the ineffable Name is on his Forehead; his Eyes run through all the Univerſe; on his left Hand is Death, and Life on his right. He throws out his Lightening and his Snow; his Scepter is of Fire. A veil conceals him from the Angels of the Miniſtry who attend upon him. Others reckon even to ten Orders of Angels which they place very differently from the Chriſtians. But if we compare what they ſay of them with the Viſions of Dionyſius the Areopagite *, or that of the Jeſuit Cellot †, and ſeveral others, who have regulated the Precedence and Ceremoniale of the Angels, we ſhall find that neither of them have much cauſe to reproach each other.

VIII. The Number of Spirits is multiplied almoſt to infinity, and that makes a Contradiction between Job and Daniel; for the latter affirms, that being near the Throne on which || the Antient of days was ſate, he beheld a fiery ſtream to iſſue, and come forth from before him; thouſand thouſands of Angels miniſtred unto him, and ten thouſand times ten thouſand ſtood before him. He limits therefore the number of Angels to ten thouſand Millions, and a thouſand thouſand; but Job *, ſpeaking of the Angels that ſerve God, cries out, is there any Number of his Armies? The Gemariſts anſwer †, 1. That the number of the Angels was indefinite, during all the time that the Tabernacle and the Temple continued. And therefore Job, who lived at that time, had reaſon to ſay, who ſhall count his Armies? Whereas, ſince the Deſtruction of the Temple the number of the Angels has conſiderably been diminiſhed; and therefore Daniel in his reckoning might reduce 'em to a fix'd number. This Anſwer is grounded on the Suppoſition that Angels are productive of one another; and as they are poſſible to be born, ſo likewiſe they may die. 2. 'Tis ſaid, that Daniel ſpeaks only of the Angels that were placed on the brink of the fiery Stream, which came from the ſweat of Animals, and was poured down on the heads of the Wicked. There were there a certain number of Spirits to execute the Orders of the Almighty, yet that does not hinder but that there may be others elſewhere, who cannot be numbred, as Job teaches. 3. Again, Angels are divided into ſeveral Troops, or Legions. 'Tis impoſſible to count the ſeveral Legions of thoſe Spirits, as Job ſpeaks, who ſhall count his Armies? But the number of one of thoſe Legions may be fixed, as Daniel did. It ſeems hereby that the Doctors look upon the number of the Angels as infinite, who ſhall count them? As the Names of the Angels have their Original from Chaldea, they retain thoſe they learned from Ezekiel and Daniel.

IX. Above all the Angels there is one Chief, whom the Rabbies call Metatron. He is made by them a kind of a God, and they aſcribe to him four Prerogatives. 1. This Angel Michaël is he that wraſtled with Jacob. God was troubled becauſe he had in that conteſt put the hollow of his Thigh out of joint, ſince that was a defect in a Prieſt that Sacrifices: The Angel reply'd, that he was the High-Prieſt of the living God: but God not being ſatisfied with that Anſwer, returns to him that Jacob was his high Prieſt upon Earth, and therefore made the Angel to go and heal the Patriarch, and ſet him over over his houſe, and over all his Generations. Daniel ſeems || to confirm this Suppoſal, ſeeing he affirms that Michael is the Chief, or Head of Iſrael. He calls him in another place a * great Prince, and Iſrael a great People. Let him come then Great, to conduct his Great one.

2. God ſaid to Moſes, † my Preſence ſhall go before thee; that is to ſay, the Angel of the Covenant, in whom you ſhall ſee my face. My name is in him, and you ſhall have reſt; for he ſhall be clement and gentle; he ſhall not treat you with the ſeverity of Juſtice, but with great compaſſion and tenderneſs. They add, that Moſes was not well pleaſed with this offer God made him to ſet that Angel, or half-God, at the head of the People, but that he ſaid boldly to God, I deſire you would go your ſelf in perſon; but Joſhua better inſtructed, accepted to march under the Conduct of the Prince of the Armies of the Lord, and worſhipped him. However it was, they owned him to be the Chief that governed the Armies of Old Iſraël, who fought their Enemies, and procured for them the Conqueſt of Canaan. And therefore Buxtorf aſſerts that the name of Metatron comes from that of Metator, becauſe that Angel marked out the Camps of the People in the Wilderneſs. In ſhort, this Angel Metatron performs in Heaven the Functions of a Mediator, for by him alone it is that you can have acceſs to God. He writes down the merits of the Jewiſh People, and from thence has his name of the Great Scribe. He alone has the right to ſit in Paradice, whileſt all the other Angels are ſtanding.

X. The Chriſtians have not fail'd making their advantage of ſo favourable a Syſtem as this. "This "exalted Angel above all Spirits, who is their Chief, "The Great Prince, the Image of the Lord, that wraſtled with Jacob; whom Joſhua adored; who led "him into the promiſed Land; who ſate down in a "Book the Merits of Iſrael; who alone has his Seat "in Heaven; and by whom alone we can have acceſs to God; is, according to the beſt Interpreters, the Meſſiah and J. Chriſt; the Angel of the "Covenant, and the Mediator between God and Man, "who is ſate down on the Right hand of his Father. This Angel is ſo much the more Excellent, as his Name is found in that of his Maſter, or Father; and this is done two ways: Firſt, becauſe the Name of || Schaddai which is God All-ſufficient of himſelf, and that of Metatron, contains the ſame Number, 314. Secondly, becauſe, according to ſome Rabbies, the ineffable name of Jehovah is in that Angel; and from this Aſſociation flows the Redemption and Salvation of Men. J. Chriſt * is the true Metatron, or Metator who is gone to prepare a place for his choſen in Heaven, and there to draw out a Camp for every faithful One to have his quarter in.

† Nos quoq; ſub Ducibus Cælum metabimur illis,
Ponemuſq; ſuos ad vaga ſigna dies.

The Jews call that Angel the Great Scribe, a title that agrees with the Meſſiah, who is the Councellor, and the Premier Secretary to God. I relate this Conjecture only to make the Chriſtian Criticks aſham'd of it. Is it then ſuch an honour to find J. Chriſt and our Religion in the Fables and ſhallow Conceits and Imaginations of the Jews, as to be at all that pains to place him therein with ſo much Induſtry. Do the Rabbies look on their firſt Angel as a God incarnate, who aſcended into Heaven, to draw a Line, and form a Camp there? The ſimple Alluſion of a Latin word Metator, with the Hebrew name of that Angel, is this enough to give ground for ſuch a Conjecture? The || Doctors make a thouſand inſults againſt that Chief of the Angels, when they bring in the other Spirits complaining of him, becauſe he has given birth to the Errour of the R. Acher, who ſeeing him Sitting in Heaven, believed him to be a Second Principle, equal to the Supreme God. The Angels asked Metatron why he did not riſe up, to undeceive Acher, and prevent his Errour; but whether his Anſwer ſhocked them inſtead of ſatisfying them, there were Sixty laſhes given him with flaming Rods. That cannot be the Meſſiah, unleſs they will ſay that Jeſus Chriſt was ſcourged by the Soldiers, becauſe he ſate down irreverently on the Right hand of his Father.

Theſe Stories about Metatron have not been invented but ſince Chriſtianity. 'Tis certain, the Latin name that is given him, and which the Jews, have brought over into their Gemara, is a full Indication, that they never adopted thoſe ſtrange terms, but ſince they were mixed with the Romans after the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem. The Rabbies had no deſign to favour the Chriſtians, nor to have in their view the Meſſiah whom they adore, unleſs you will inſinuate that God hath forced them whether they would or no, to interſert this great and weighty Truth among their Romantick Stories, which ſhocks all manner of likelyhood. The Metatron of the Jews is the Angel Michael, whoſe Titles and Dignity were raiſed by the Rabbies, becauſe they imagine that that Prince, whoſe name was only known ſince the Captivity, was the Leader of the Children of Iſrael.

XI. There is but one thing in which the Jews and ſome Chriſtians are agreed, And that is in this, that both of them often ſpeak of the Arch-angel Michael after an extravagant manner. They make a God of him, and affirm that that appears by his Name, which ſignifies, he is as God. They ſet him at the head of the Church as their Chief, becauſe the Prophet Daniel ſays, that Michael, * that Great Prince, which ſtandeth for the Children of thy people, ſhall ſtand up. In a word, He was ſeen fighting with the Devil for the Body of Moſes. In comparing the Metatron of the Jews with the Arch-angel Michael of the Chriſtian Interpreters, there will be found a ſenſible Conformity: But both of them are too laviſh in their Expreſſions.

XII. It cannot be thought very ſtrange that there ſhould be a Head or Chief among the Angels, ſince there is a Prince of the Devils, called Beelzebub. This Chief of the Angels by no means ought to be God, but is of the ſame Nature as the other created Spirits, and his name of Michael denotes only a cauſe or motive of admiration, who is as God. Daniel was ſo far from making a Deity of him, that he obſerves, that the Prince of the Kingdom of Perſia having withſtood him one and twenty days; Lo, Michael, ſays he, One of the Chief Princes, came to help him who ſpake to the Prophet, ſo that he remained in Perſia. Thoſe Chiefs are the Angels; for there is no multiplicity of Gods, nor of the Meſſiah. Moreover, they ſuppoſe that J. Chriſt ſpoke to Daniel. He therefore could not be the ſame Michael, one of the Chief Princes who came to help him; Thus the Prophet, far from making a God of Michael, is pleaſed to put him into the rank of Angels and Subaltern Spirits. He was likewiſe ſo Obedient to God, and under ſo great a dependance on him, that after he carried away the Body of Moſes, he durſt not bring againſt him a railing accuſation (Jude 9.) but only ſaid, the Lord rebuke thee; whereas the Son of God would have reproved him with Authority.

XIII. 'Tis certain the Jews continue their Agreement with the Chriſtian Doctors about the Miniſtry and Function of Angels. 1. The former obſerve, that there are four Angels never ſeen upon the Earth, becauſe they are always attending about the Throne of God. Michael is on the right hand, Gabriel on the left, Uriel is before God, and Raphael behind him. The Chriſtians alſo pretend that there are five Orders of Angels who go not out of Paradice; and the falſe Dionyſius the Areopagite obſerves, that when Iſaiah ſpeaks of a Seraphim, who flew unto him, having a live Coal in his hand, which he had taken with the tongs from off the Altar, and laid it upon his lips, that it is not to be imagined that that was a Spirit of the order of Seraphims, who never make uſe of Men; but that title was given to him only becauſe of the Function, wherewith God had entruſted him, as an Angel of the laſt Order. Iſai. 6. 6, 7.

2. It would be * in vain to relate the Paſſages of the Chriſtian Doctors, who have believed and ſaid, that every Nation and every Kingdom has its Angel, that preſides over it for its defence, and governance. Who knows not that moſt of the Antients, preferring the Verſion of the LXX. to the Original Hebrew which they did not underſtand, have made Moſes ſay, that God divided the Nations according to the number of the Angels of God, whereas it is expreſly ſaid, according to the number of the Children of Iſrael; and from that falſe Interpretation have concluded, that God had proportioned the number of the People to that of Angels whom he would make their Patrons. Origen went to determine even the number of thoſe Nations and Angels that † governed them; becauſe he had obſerved in the confuſion of Tongues, that there were LXXII. of them, he inferr'd from thence that there were ſo many tutelar Angels. To conclude, ſome Antients have believed, that as the Son of God, who led the People of Iſrael, had procured to himſelf the Knowledge of the Maſter of the Univerſe; ſo the Angels who had not the ſame Light, ſatisfied themſelves with turning the Eyes and Heart of the Nations towards the Sun and Moon, which they had adored. Clemens Alexandrinus ſays alſo, that they were given to them as ſo many Gods, to prevent their falling into Atheiſm. Now if the Fathers of the Chriſtian Church have erred ſo groſsly, the Jews may very well be excuſed; and we ought therefore to relate with moderation what they have believed about this matter.

XIV. Philo the Jew had begun to give too much to Angels, by looking upon them as the Pillars on which this Univerſe was ſupported. He has been followed, and ſome have believed, not only that every Nation had her particular Angel, which was powerfully intereſted in her behalf; but that there were ſome of them which preſided || over every thing. Azariel preſides over the Water; Gazardia over the the Eaſt, to take care of the Sun's riſing, and Nekid over Bread and other Suſtenance. They have Angels that preſide over every Planet, over every Month of the Year, and over the Hours of the Day. The Jews likewiſe believe that every Man has two Angels; the One good which guards him, the Other bad which examines his Actions. If on the Sabbath Day the two Angels, returning from the Synagogue, find the Bed made, the Table furniſhed, the Candles lighted, the good Angel rejoyces at it, and ſays, God grant that on the next Sabbath things may be found in as good order; and the bad Angel is obliged, in ſpite of his Teeth, to anſwer, Amen. If there be any diſorder in the Houſe, the bad Angel in his turn wiſhes that the ſame may happen on the next Sabbath, and the good Angel anſwers, Amen. So likewiſe ſome Chriſtians give to every particular their tutelar Angels. This Miniſtry is ſufficiently known not to relate here all the Offices that are given to them.

The Theologie of the Jews ſtops not there. Maimonides who had very much ſtudied Ariſtotle, maintained, that that Philoſopher had ſaid nothing contrary to the Law, except his believing that the Intelligences were Eternal, and that God had not produced them. He alſo maintained that Axiom, that the Sages of the Nations ſurpaſſed the Sages of Iſrael, in their Meditations upon the courſe of the Stars, and the Government of the World. In following the Principles of the antient Philoſophers he * ſaid, that there is a Sphere ſuperiour to all others that communicates Motion to them. And therefore he compared it to the Heart of Man which he calls the little World; becauſe as the Heart is the principle of all the Motions that are made by the Body; the firſt Sphere, which is the Heart of the Univerſe, produces all the Motions that are obſerved in it; and the Univerſe would be deſtroyed if this firſt Sphere ſhould ſtop a moment, juſt as the little World dies when the Heart ceaſes to beat. He obſerves that ſeveral Doctors of his Nation believed with Pythagoras, that the Heavens and the Stars by their Motion formed an Harmonious Sound; which could not be underſtood by reaſon of the diſtance; but which could not be doubted of, ſeeing that our Bodies cannot be moved without making a noiſe, tho' they be much leſs than the Celeſtial Orbs. He ſeems to reject that Opinion. I know not whether he be not to blame to aſcribe it to the Doctors. 'Tis certain, the Rabbies ſay, there are three things, the ſound whereof is carried from one end of the World to the other; the voice of the Roman people; that of the Sphere of the Sun, and of the Soul that leaves the World. But theſe are Metaphors whereby they deſigned to ſignifie the mighty Power of the Romans, and the violent Agonies of the Soul when it is leaving this Life; for there is no ſuch thing as its crying.

But however it be, Maimonides † ſays not only that all thoſe Spheres are dumb, and governed by Angels; but he pretends that thoſe really and in truth are the Angels. He attributes to them Knowledge, and the will whereby they exerciſe their Operations. He obſerves that the title of Angel or Meſſenger ſignifies the ſame thing. It may be therefore ſaid that the Intelligences, Spheres, and Elements, which execute the Will of God, are Angels, and ought to bear that Name. To conclude, he gives the title of Angel to all the Faculties, and inſults the Sages who deny it; for, ſays he ||, if they are told that God will ſend his Angel into the Womb of a Woman to form a Child there, they will believe that the Angel muſt firſt enter into the Womb of that Woman, without ever heeding what he teaches; that perhaps that Angel has a body of fire as large as the third part of the World. "Would it not be much "better to believe, that God hath given to that "Woman a faculty to Breed, and that that fa"culty is an Angel? Watever Maimonides may ſay about it, certainly there would have been a great deal of Abſurdity in his Sentiment, if he had not given a very extenſive Signification to the title of Angel, which he takes for every thing that executes the Will and Orders of God.

CHAP. X.

Whether the Jews invoke Angels.

I. Bartolocci affirms it. Litanies discovered in the Vatican. II. Proofs which Grisendi has fetched from Ghedalia. III. Excommunication publish'd in the Name of the Angels. IV. Testimony of St. Jerome and P. Simon V. Miracle of an Angel that preserves a Soul from being damned. VI. Sermon of St. Peter, and the Testimony of Origen against the Jews. VII. Prayers to Saints over their Sepulchres. VIII. Proofs that the Jews do not worship Angels. IX. Reflections upon the Proofs of that Worship. X. It is not found in the Talmud. XI. The Doctors have rejected it.

I. THE Jewish Rabbies have openly Protested that they neither worship Angels, nor any other Creature. Bartollocci * positively proves upon them that their Ancestors have done it, and that they had not left off that Worship but only to please the German Innovators who have abolished it in their Churches. And it must be confessed, that notwithstanding the Disclaimer of the Jews and of their constant practice, Bartolocci still produces such Proofs as they know not how to get over, they bear so hard upon them. First, He has got out of the Vatican-Library an Hebrew Manuscript, containing Litanies composed by a Poet, named R. Eliezer Hakalir, which are very like to those of the Romish Church. There is said in it to the Prince Actariel, Deliver Israel out of all affliction, and sollicite speedily for her Redemption. And the like favours are begg'd for Barachiel, Wathiel, Tobiel, Chauriel, Lerael, and other Princes, who are found placed there according to the situation of the Letters of the Alphabet, and under strange unknown Names. The Litany concludes with saying to Michael, Prince of Mercy, pray for Israel, that it may rule with great exaltedness.

II. Secondly, Grisendi † produces the Scholia's of Ghedalia upon Joseph Albo, where the Jews in one of their solemn Feasts say to the Angels, I earnestly beseech you to implore the Majesty of God. He confesses, this Prayer is not in the Ritual of the Jews at Rome, and he knows not whether this Litany be sung in the Synagogues that are out of Italy; but he says it has been received there. They do not here accuse the Protestants for having caused them to blot it out, Since None of those can be expected at Rome, where the Rabbies would make their Court by putting up Prayers to Angels.

That same Author quotes a long Passage out of Ghedalia which justifies the Worship his Nation gives to Angels, against those that accuse it for giving them too Large a Power. That Rabbi observes, that their Prayers are not addressed directly to Angels, but it is really God they invoke when they pray to them. They only go to them as to the King by his Ministers, and as one that presents his Petition to the first Officer of the Crown, yet still looks to the King as the Sourse and Spring of his Happiness and Favours that he has received. Those Scholia's which I have not seen, are so much the more surprizing, as Joseph Albo, upon whom they were made, puts into the number of erring Persons, those who make mention of Angels in their Prayers, and refutes them directly. Grisendi adds, that the Rabbies ascribe some Power to the Angels who are called Mediators. They observe, that Jacob, after he had directly apply'd himself to God, and begg'd of him both temporal and eternal Blessings for his two Sons, then addressed himself to the Angel to obtain of him that he would keep them from all Evil: From whence two things are concluded; the One is, that Jacob addressed his Prayer directly to the Angel; and the Opinion of Abravanel, who denies it, is false; the other is, that he gave to him the Power of preserving from Evil, whilest he left to God that of bestowing all good things: And it is in this very sense that another Doctor observes, that Jacob would have overset all, if he had begun by the Angel; but he had rightly kept the order, in putting God at the head of his Prayer, and in finishing it with the Angel. This perfectly agrees with the Principle of Grisendi, who is persuaded that if all Jacob's Prayer was implicitely addressed to God, the first Source of all good things, he prayed explicitely to the Angel.

III. Grisendi further remarks, that the Jews give mighty degrees of Authority to Angels, seeing that they excommunicate at the name of Actariel; and that in explaining the Promise that God made to Moses of sending his Angel before him, and that his Name should be with him, they observe, that that Angel is called Metatron, and that that Name is like that of God, because in counting the Arithmetical Lettes of that word, they make the same || number as that of All-mighty.

IV. One might draw an Argument from what * St. Jerome says, in his explaining the reproach that our Saviour Christ cast upon the Jews for their Swearing by the Creatures; for he makes that that Redeemer of the World to say, that they swore by the Angels, and that they honoured them. The Authority of that Father has seduced even the Protestants, who have not taken heed that the Gospel-Text does not speak of Angels; but of the City of the Great King, and of the Gift that is upon the Altar. The worshipping of Angels would be very antient if J. Christ had so early † condemn'd it; but St. Jerome is grosly deceiv'd in a thing so plain and evident. So that now his Testimony can be no more alledged, because it is false: But P. Simon has given us a Prayer to the Guardian Angel, inwhich is said to him, Be ye honoured and worshipped, Holy and Venerable Ministers of God; preserve me, and help me.

V. The Talmudists ascribe to the Angels || miraculous Deliverances; for they tell us, that a Woman demanding some Charity of Benjamin the Just, Keeper of the Alms, he promised he would give her some, provided he could find Money in the Coffer which was entrusted to him. The Woman, who was afraid lest the Coffer should be empty, represented her Misery, and that of seven Children who were like to be famished. Benjamin thereupon pulled somewhat out of his Pocket, and therewith relieved her. Soon after he himself fell Sick unto Death; but the Angels of the Ministry representing to God that he had saved the Lives of eight Persons, the Sentence of Death was deferred, and his Life prolonged. Now some are fully persuaded that such a Miracle deserves adoration; and Bartollocci concludes from it, that in effect we may very well worship Spirits that can secure us from Death.

The Jews are also persuaded that all the Good that God doth to them, flows from the merits of the Patriarchs, Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob; And that is the reaſon wherefore they pray to God to impute 'em to them. They tell us likewiſe that God, deſigning to puniſh the Iſraelites after the Sin of the Golden Calf, as he had done the Inhabitants of Sodom, he demanded of Moſes if there were ten righteous Perſons in all the Nation; upon this he named himſelf, with Aaron, Eliezer and Ithamar, his Nephews; and Phineas, Joſuah, and Caleb; but he could not find the Eighth; which obliged him to ask of God if the Dead do not live. God having anſwer'd him in the Affirmative, Moſes compleated the number of Ten righteous Perſons, by adding to them Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, at which God's Anger was appeaſed. From thence three things are concluded; the One, that the Merits of the Saints obtain Grace for Sinners; the other, that they pray for them, ſeeing that in this little Hiſtory they are united to Moſes, the Mediator of the People. In ſhort, 'tis evident by that, that according to the antient Rabbies, they invoked the Saints, and by conſequence the Angels.

VI. Since we are reporting * all that can be ſaid againſt the Jews, let us add that St. Peter has accuſed them of worſhipping Angels, Arch-Angels, Months and the Moon; and ſhall we not believe it when an Apoſtle has declared it? Celſus alſo maintained to Origen, that the Jews worſhipped the Heavens and the Angels that were contained therein: But theſe Proofs, tho' they be the moſt antient, yet are not the beſt; for the Sermon of St. Peter is forged; and if Clement of Alexandria has ſuffered himſelf to be deceived therein, we are not obliged to follow him. Beſides, the pretended St. Peter juſtifies the Jews; in ſaying, that they believe they worſhip God alone; but they worſhipped the Angels and did not know it, becauſe they gave too great a Power to thoſe Intelligences; and thus it is that he accuſes them of worſhipping the Months and the Moon, becauſe they overſcrupulouſly obſerve the courſe of that Planet, and Feaſt on the Firſt days of the Month. But that is not properly a Worſhipping. Origen takes notice likewiſe, that thoſe who obſerved the Law of Moſes, worſhipped only One God, and not the Heavens with him, becauſe that is contrary to the Law; ſo that at the time of thoſe Writers, the worſhip of the Creature was not known among the Jews.

VII. In fine, Wagenſeil obſerves, that † if the Jews don't invoke the Saints otherwiſe than over their Sepulchres, becauſe the Prayers that are made to them any where elſe ſignifie nothing, at leaſt they do it very near to their Graves and their Aſhes. 'Tis certain this, that when they began to venerate the Saints, they only did it on their Tombs, and in the places where their Reliques were depoſited. Thus St. Baſil || aſſures us, that thoſe who went to the Tomb of St. Mamas, had been healed there, and for that very Reaſon it was that they celebrated in his Church the Feaſt of forty Martyrs, becauſe they were interr'd there: Now if God be there where two or three are gathered together in his Name, by ſo much the ſtronger reaſon then is He in a place where there are Forty of them.

VIII. Tho' all theſe Proofs ſeem to be evident and poſitive, yet there are others that deſtroy the matter, and are full out as ſtrong. P. Simon, who gives us the Prayer that is made to the Guardian Angel, obſerves at the ſame time, that the Jewiſh Books forbid 'em to worſhip them, or to ſerve them, as Mediators and Interceſſors. This is not ſufficient perhaps, becauſe it is thought there is ſome ambiguity in the term Mediator, altho' the diſtinction of Mediator, Interceſſion and Saisfaction, invented for Neceſſity, was unknown to the Jews; but there is found in their Catechiſm an * Anathema pronounced againſt all that ſhall petition for any thing to an Angel, or any other Celeſtial Power. How then can it be ſaid to them, preſerve me, and help me? Maimonides † reckons as the Sixth Article of Faith, That God alone is to be adored, magnified, celebrated and praiſed. This heaping of Expreſſions denotes the Precaution with which he endeavours to take from the Elements, the Stars and Angels, all manner of Worſhip; for he excludes them utterly from it. Two other || Sages undermine and ſap the Foundations on which the Modern Chriſtians have upheld that Worſhip. One cenſures them for making God Proud and Stately, as if he would not receive Men, but forced them to addreſs their Prayers to Mediators, which he looks upon as a ſource of Idolatry. The other maintains not only that God hath forbidden all manner of Commerce with Interceſſors between Men and Himſelf, for that is the firſt ſort of Idolatry; But he hath moreover deſtroyed the Compariſon ſo often made uſe of to juſtify and authorize it. He introduces God ſpeaking and repreſenting that if the Mediation of Officers at Court be neceſſary for Subjects towards their Prince, that Neceſſity proceeds from the Kings, their often times refuſing Audience; but it is not ſo with God: "For "ſince You have ſeen, ſaith God, that I have ſpoken "from Heaven to You, do'nt uſe me in that man-"ner; do not introduce the Cuſtom of having ſuch "Interceſſors. Sacrifices are the true way to ob-"tain my favour; build me an Altar, put only your "truſt in me, without relying upon any other Creature." They are ſenſible here of one Difficulty that is commonly made againſt them relating to Saints, and that is, that they do not underſtand the Prayers of their Votaries, and inſtead of refuting it, they approve of it. They cannot invoke the Angels, nor their Chiefs, ſuch as Gabriel and Michael, &c. ſaid the famous Kimki. Abraham our father is long ſince dead. The Father knows not his Son but whileſt he is alive. God alone is that Father that lives for ever, and redeems us from all Miſery and Calamity. I confeſs, I know not which way to reconcile the words of theſe Rabbies with what we have produced; for they blow up the worſhip of Saints and Angels from the Foundation; they look upon it as the firſt Species of Idolatry; they condemn as Straglers, and anathematize thoſe who practiſe it with their Litanies.

IX. I do not pretend to decide; yet I hope it will be permitted me to make three Reflections on the Proofs that have been alledged in favour of this Worſhip. 1. They draw it from their Writings by Conſequences, and thoſe Conſequences founded on certain Facts or Propoſitions which the Rabbies have deviſed. They aſcribe Miracles to Angels; they look upon Abraham as a Source of Bleſſings for them; but they do not from thence conclude that they muſt be adored. That is a Concluſion which ariſes from the Principles of the Church of Rome, where they adore the Inſtruments of the Grace and Benediction of God; but theſe two Notions may be ſeparated, and the Jews do it as well as the Reformed.

X. This ought to be found in the Talmud, which treats of the moſt minute Matters of Religion. But there is no mention of it there; No bounds are preſcribed to it; no Precepts and Rules are given for it. Thoſe Prayers to Angels are to be met with in ſome of their ſcattered Books, in a Manuſcript that is in the Vatican, in a private Ritual. They are not to be read in the Jews their common Books of Devotion at Rome, or in Italy; neither are they to be found in the formulary of the Spaniards and Portugueſe. 'Tis plain then, that all theſe Recherches and ſtrict Examinations ſerve only to prove, that there are ſome ſuperſtitious Jews who have invoked their Guardian Angels, and at the ſame time have thought that that Invocation carried not along with it any ſtain or blemiſh of Idolatry.

XI. Laſtly, to theſe Proofs, moſt of which are ſecret and kept hid, they oppoſe the common Catechiſm of the Jews; the Anathemaes againſt thoſe who worſhip Angels, and have their Names come into their Prayers; they oppoſe the great Names of Abravanel, Maimonides, who ſpeak deciſively, tho' they lived long before the Reformation: In a word, they oppoſe Manaſſé, that famous Rabby of the laſt Age, who ought to underſtand his Religion, if any one ever did; and yet he plainly and avowedly decides againſt this pretended Adoration.

I. THREE different beginnings are given to Demons. 1. Sometimes 'tis maintained, that God created them the ſame Day that he created Hell to be the place of their Habitation. He formed them Spiritual, becauſe he was not at leiſure to give them Bodies. The Feſtival of the Sabbath began the very moment of their * Creation, and God was forced to break off his Work, that ſo he might not violate the repoſe of the Feſtival. Maimonides †, a Man of great Authority in the Synagogue, who was aſhamed of a Doctrine that makes God commit evil, and makes him alſo ſcrupulous about the obſervation of the Sabbath, rejected it abſolutely. He cites alſo a Paſſage out of the ſame Book that we have juſt now mentioned (vizt. Bereſchyt Rabba) to prove that Evil does not come from Heaven. 2. Others imagine that Adam having been a long time without knowing his Wife, the Angel Samael being ſmitten with her Beauty, joined himſelf with her, and ſhe conceived and brought forth Demons. They likewiſe affirm that Adam, whom they make a ſort of a wicked Perſon, was the Father of evil Spirits. They reckon beſides, for there is hereupon a great diverſity of Opinions, four Mothers of Devils, one whereof was Nahama, Siſter to Tubal Cain, beautiful as the Angels, to whom ſhe reſigned her ſelf; ſhe ſtill lives, and ſubtilly gets into Mens beds when they are faſt aſleep, and then engages them to pollute themſelves with her. The other is Lilit, too famous a Woman not to have her Hiſtory reported in a few words. God had given her to Adam for his Wife, after he had made her of the Earth as well as him; but they did not very well agree together, becauſe ſhe would not be obedient to him. I know not whether Adam came to blowswith her or not, but ſhe flew away from him. Complaints hereof were carried to the Tribunal of God, who ſtrait ſent three Angels after Lilit with orders to bring her back to her Husband, and to threaten her that in caſe ſhe refuſed, a hundred of her Children ſhould die every day. The Angels found Lilit upon the Red Sea, juſt at the place where the Egyptians were afterwards overthrown, and periſhed. They deſign'd to have drowned her, becauſe ſhe refuſed to follow them; but they let her live becauſe ſhe repreſented to them that ſhe had not been created but only to make war on Children. All that the Angels could obtain of her, was, that ſhe could not kill any Young Child in thoſe places where ſhe ſhould find the Names of thoſe three Angels written; and thereupon they denounced the Curſe of God upon her, by vertue whereof there died every day a hundred Demons. This Story has made ſuch an Impreſſion on the Minds of the People, that when any Woman is brought to bed in Germany, they always place little bits of Paper at the four Corners of the Lying-in Chamber, with theſe words written on them, Let Adam and Eve be here preſent, and Lilith be gone; and upon the Door they put Sennoi, Sanſennoi, Samangeloph, which are the Names of the three Angels whom God ſent in perſuit of Lilit, and which they thought had Charms ſufficient to drive away the Demons. And they are not the Women alone that do this; but the Men in like manner write the Names of theſe Angels upon Parchment, which they wear cloſe next their Skin. They add to them divers Figures and other Words, which they fancy are able to keep Lilit and other Demons and Spectres from coming near 'em. Some Rabbies believe that Lilith is the Moon, which has borrowed that Name from Lil, לִיל which ſignifies Night, and whoſe Influences may be either Advantageous or very Unfortunate to New-born Children. The Full Moon, ſays Abravanel, is happy for Children; but if they be born in the Increaſe, or Waine, the horns of that Planet cauſe Death; or if they live, generally they are guilty of ſome enormous Crimes. The ſame Superſtition reigned among the Heathen People, and the Goddeſs Lucina, which they invoked in their times of Travel, was the Moon.

among the Jews ſome Divines, who believe that the Angels created in a State of Innocence, fell from it thro' a kind of Jealouſy for Man, and their revolt from God; which comes neareſt to, and agrees beſt with the Account Moſes has given of it.

II. Others tell us that after Adam was created, God cauſed two Angels to deſcend and follow him wherever he went, the One on his left hand, and the other on his right. After his Sin and Fall the Angel on his left hand begat other Spirits that peopled the Air, and who were imployed in * Scourging of Men: And indeed they believe that the Demons were created Male and Female, and from their conjunction proceeded Others. They ſay alſo, that the Souls of the Damned are for ſome time changed into Demons, to go and torment Men, viſit their Tombs, ſee the worms gnawing their dead Bodies, which afflicts them, and afterwards they return to Hell.

III. Theſe Demons have † three Advantages in common with the Angels. They have Wings like them; they fly as well as they from one end of the World to the other; and, in ſhort, they are knowing in matters of futurity. They have alſo three Imperfections in common with Men; for they are neceſſitated to eat and drink, they beget and multiply, and at laſt die as we do.

IV. 'Tis God who ſends them forth to Men; and to that end are they placed near his Throne on his left hand, whileſt the good Angels attend on his right. They ſtrengthen this conceit of theirs from a Paſſage in Job, which mentions a Dialogue between God and the Devil, that was held in the midſt of the Angels. They imagine very fooliſhly that that Dialogue was had here upon Earth, by the Miniſtry of ſome Angel, whom God ſent expreſs to carry his Orders, becauſe the Devils receive all their Knowledge by the Miniſtry of thoſe happy Spirits, that come to reveal to them what God hath ordained. The || Author of the Queſtions publiſhed under the Name of St. Athanaſius, and which is very antient, has adopted this Opinion. But why are they unwilling to have God, who is infinite, act immediately over Devils, either in giving them the knowledge of his Will, or in making them the Executioners of it? To what purpoſe ſerves the intervention of an Angel and a mediate Cauſe to go and tell the Devils in Hell, or upon Earth, what they are ignorant of? What Job ſaid of the Diſcourſe the Devil had with God, ought not to be taken literally, for it is a figure of Rhetorick under which God comprehends two certain Truths; the One, that the Devil is the Calumniator and Oppreſſor of the Saints; and the other, that notwithſtanding all his Hatred and Cruelty, he cannot act further than God commiſſions him. The Jews ſeem'd to have followed this Sentiment, when they put the Devils on the left hand of God's Throne, to receive his Orders.

V. We deceive our ſelves when we take literally what they ſay about God's ſending five Demons to puniſh the Iſraelites, whereof One was Choler, and the other the Scum of an inflamed Rage. Upon ſuch like occaſions as theſe we ought to help the Cabaliſts, in diſcovering their meaning, which was only to inform the Jews, that God being extremely incenſed againſt his People, was reſolved to chaſtiſe them; and that Moſes ſtopp'd the current of his Wrath; for Choler is not a Demon, and the Scum of Choler, or (what I call'd before) an inflamed rage cannot be looked upon as one of thoſe Evil Spirits.

VI. I know not whether we may not enforce their Conjectures yet further, and affirm, that there is ſome concealed Myſtery in what the Jewiſh Rabbies ſay, about the Soul's going out of the Body whileſt we are aſleep, and the Demons making uſe of that abſence, to ſully and defile it; and therefore we ought to be very careful to waſh our ſelves every Morning, that ſo we may be purified before we touch, or do any thing. There are for that reaſon Prayers * wherein Thanks are given to God for his reſtoring a Soul to its Body: Bleſſed be thou, O Lord, ſay the Jews, for that thou reſtoreſt Souls to their dead Bodies; and it is not meant there of the Reſurrection, but of a living Man who returns Thanks for himſelf. Thus they ſpeak, becauſe they look upon Sleep as a Death, and the Eſtate in which the Soul is, whileſt it is aſleep, as an Abſence: They explain their Prayers themſelves, by adding that Sleep is compared to Death, and one of the Sixty ſorts of Death. They reckon up Sixty ſorts of Death, whereof Sleep is the Second: In perſuing this Notion, they may very well ſay, that the Soul, which at that time ſhews no ſign of Reaſon, or of Life, is flown and is abſent, and that the Devil takes his advantage of this annihilation, to diſhonour the Body, and lead it to impurity, as it happens but too often in Dreams. I know not whether this be their meaning; but thus far they all agree, that Devils are buſyed every night in tormenting of Men.

VII. God holding on his diſcourſe with the Angels, perceived a great diſpute aroſe among 'em upon the account of Man. Jealouſy had ſeized them; they maintained before God that Man was only Vanity, and that it was quite wrong to give him ſo great an Empire. God juſtified the excellence of his Work by two Reaſons. The One, that Man would laud and praiſe him upon Earth, as the Angels glorified him in Heaven. Secondly, He asked thoſe proud and inſolent Angels, if they knew the Names of all the Creatures; they owned their Ignorance, which was ſo much the more ſhameful, becauſe Adam, who appeared preſently after, recited them all without miſtaking one. Schamael, who was the Preſident and Chief of that Celeſtial Aſſembly, loſt all Patience; he aroſe, went down to the Earth, and having obſerved that the Serpent was more ſubtil than any beaſt of the field which the Lord God had made, he made uſe of him to ſeduce Eve. In this manner do the Jews relate the fall of the Angels; and from their own Story it appears that there was one Chief among them before their Apoſtacy, and that that Chief was called Schamael. In the main, they differ not very much from the Chriſtians; for there is one party of the antient Doctors of this Church that have looked on the Devil before his Fall as the Prince of all the Angels. Gregory the Great aſſures us, that he was created the firſt of all: And therefore he ſays, that Job † calls the Behemoth the Chief of the works of God, and that he who commanded Angels, is become their Subject, and Obedient to their Power. Tertullian, Lactantius and Cyril of || Jeruſalem, who call him for that reaſon an Arch-Angel, have been of the ſame Sentiment.

VIII. 'Tis true, the Jews ſay, that that firſt Angel who fell and drew along with him into that Rebellion a great many others, was called Schamael, whereas the Roman Catholicks who pretend to be better inſtructed in this matter, affirm that he was called Lucifer. They oppoſe alſo the Hereticks by the conſent of the Fathers, who being perſuaded that Lucifer is the Name of the Chief of the Demons, have applied the passages of Isaiah and Ezekiel to him. But it is not worth while to keep such a pother about a difference of Names. What need of all that heat, and why should Men be tax'd with Heresie about such a trifle? We know as little whether Lucifer be the true Name of the Devil, as whether Schamael be so. If they dispute it upon the Authority of the Fathers, why is he not called Behemoth, seeing that Job calls him so; and as able a Pope as any of them all, has decided, that it was the Devil which was the first of all the Works of God? If one would have a greater Authority than that of Fathers, why will they not submit to that of J. CHRIST, who says that Beelzebub is the Prince of the Devils? Are they certain that J. CHRIST was then in Jest when he called him so? In short, the passages in Isaiah and Ezekiel are without all doubt applied to the Kings of Tyre and Babilon. The Devil is not in the least to be found there, unless you'll have recourse to a Mystical and Allegorical Sence, which makes no proof at all. There are none but the Latin Fathers at most who have seen there plainly the true Name of the first Devil; for the Greeks never call him Phosphore nor Eosphore. Why then are their Brains puzzled about the Name of the Chief of the Demons, whether Lucifer rather than Schamael? And why do they say he is called Schamael rather than Lucifer? The only Essential difference which is observed between the Jews and the Christians, turns upon some circumstances concerning the fall of the Apostate Angels; but in the main they agree with the Fathers in the most important Matters, or rather the Fathers of the Church have borrowed from the Jews what they have delivered to us of the Fall of Angels thro' the Love of Women.

X. Moses said, that the Sons of God seeing that the Daughters of Men were fair, took them Wives and defiled themselves with them. Philo the Jew has substituted Angels in the room of the Sons of God, and observes that Moses has given the Title of Angels to those whom the Philosophers call Genij. Enoch has * related not only the Fall of Angels with the Women, but he has given all the circumstances of it. He names † the Twenty Angels that complotted to Marry, and bound themselves in that design by a Curse, that so all the Wrath of God should not fall upon their Chief Semixas, if he Married singly. They took Wives in the Year 1170. of the World, and from those Marriages were born the Giants. These Demons afterwards taught Men Arts and Sciences. Azael instructed Boys in the making of Arms, and Maids to Paint. Semixas taught them Rage and Fury. Pharmarus learn'd them Magick and Necromancy. These Lessons being with greediness receiv'd by both Sexes, caused a most dreadful disorder. I do not know whether God was asleep or no, but four Loyal Angels presented themselves before his Throne, and remonstrated to him the disorder that those Giants had caused; the Spirits of the Souls of Dead Men cry; and their Sighs mount even to the Gate of Heaven, without being able to come up unto thee, because of the Injustice and Wickedness that is committed upon the Earth, thou seest that, and dost not tell us what is to be done.

This remonstrance however had its effect. "God "commanded Uriel to go and acquaint the Son of "Lamech, who was Noah, that he should be secu- "red from Death Eternally. He ordered Raphael "to seize Exael, one of the Rebellious and Apo- "state Angels; to throw him bound Hands and Feet "into utter Darkness, to open the Desert which is "in another Desert, and to cast him there; to put "upon him sharp Stones, and to keep him from "ever seeing the Light, until he shall be cast in- "to the burning Lake at the Day of Judgment. The "Angel Gabriel was charged to set the Giants to- "gether by the Ears, that so they might kill one a- "nother; and Michael was to take Semixas, and "all the Marry'd Angels, that so when they had "seen the Gyants and all their Children destroyed, "they should be bound for Seventy Generations in "the Holes and Caverns of the Earth, until the Day "of the Accomplishment of all things, and of Judg- "ment, when they shall be thrown into an Abyss of "Fire and of Eternal Torments.

XI. The Modern Jews have been extravagant upon these Stories, for they have affirmed that Schamael, being mounted on a Serpent, seduced Eve, by whom she conceived, and brought forth Cain. What does Moses mean, (if we believe them) when he relates that Adam * knew Eve? If it be not to tell us in civil terms that the Devil had made him a Cuckold, and that he perceived his Wife to be big with Child. He knew very well by Cain's Countenance that he did not resemble Men, but Angels; And therefore Eve cryed out, and said, I have gotten a Man from the Lord.

Adam being highly incensed that Cain had killed Abel, who was really his Son, parted from his Wife for the space of a Hundred and Twenty Years. What have I to do to get Children, seeing others kill 'em, said he, in his Passion? Yet however two Female Spirits united themselves to him, and begat a Stock. The Demons, who were the Offspring of that mixture, are filthy and polluted; they are frequently found at Doors, in Pits, and in secret Places, where they haunt and cruelly treat Men.

In a word, we have already observed the Sin of the two Angels, Schembazai and Azael, who being deeply in Love with the Damsels whose Beauty had Charmed them, Marry'd them, had Children by them, taught the Women to Trick and Paint themselves, and obliged God to drown Mankind for the Corruption that had already overwhelmed them.

XII. The Fathers of the Christian Church have not blushed to Copy one part of these Fabulous Histories. In the Text of Moses they have substituted Angels in the room of the Sons of God, as Philo had done; they have asserted, that the Demons fell in Love with the Daughters of Men, and Giants were born of them. They have said likewise as well as the Rabbies, that the Demons had taught the Women to Paint, and set out themselves with false Beauties. Tertullian took care not to forget making use of this Argument against the Ornaments and Luxury that was grown already so great even in his time. 'Tis not a few singular Doctors that have followed this Opinion; their Number is great. They are Famous; they have caused this Matter to be set down in the very Petitions they have drawn up in favour of the Christian Religion; and to gain a higher Authority in the Minds of the People, and to speak with greater confidence; they have pretended that the Book of Enoch was Canonical, because St. Jude had cited it.

XIII. I will not enter with a Modern Christian into an examination of the Question, whether the Angels being of a different Species from Men, tho' even they should have fine and subtil Bodies, could beget a Progeny, as Mules that proceed from two Animals of different Species.

I would rather examine two other things; the one, whether St Jude has Authorized the Stories that are told about the Fall of the Angels, and their

* Enoch. Fragment. Græc. apud scaliger. in Not. ad Euseb. p. 144. † Some Jews speak but of two Angels who offered their Service to God. * Zohar in Bereschyt. p. 36. V. Bart. Bibl. Rabb. t. 1. p. 291.

Love

Love for Women; the other is, whether the fragment of Enoch be of ſufficient Authority to adopt them.

The firſt of theſe Queſtions is nice and delicate; for the Hiſtory of the Angels their impurity is true, tho it appears ridiculous to us; or the Epiſtle of St Jude is not Canonical. 'Tis certain, we ought not to receive any Book for Divine, in which Fabulous Stories are reported as if they were real Events, and which are to ſerve as a Bridle to Sinners. This muſt be of neceſſity, either that St. Jude has told us a Falſity, or that the Fact which he reports, is true. If he has told us a Falſity, God hath not inſpired him. 'Tis true, the Doctors are divided; ſome, as the Fathers whom we have cited, have believed, that the Angels ſuffered themſelves to be corrupted by Women; Others, who have ſeen that it was a perfect Fable, have rejected the Epiſtle of St. Jude: But theſe two Sentiments labour under great difficulties, and therefore we are for taking a third and middle way, and are perſuaded that St Jude has not compared the Crime of the Angels to the Sin of Sodom, and that they have very ill tranſlated the words of that Apoſtle. In ſhort. St Jude ſays, that God keeps in everlaſting Chains unto the Judgment of the Great Day, the Angels that kept not their Original State. Here ends the Article concerning the Angels, whoſe Puniſhment is an excellent Leſſon for Sinners. He afterwards produces a ſecond example of Sodom and Gomorrah, and the Cities about them, who in like manner had given themſelves to Fornication, and going after ſtrange Fleſh. St Jude does not then ſpeak of the Angels, but of the Inhabitants of Sodom and the Neighbouring Cities * that had imitated her impurities. 'Tis certain, it cannot be ſaid of the Angels that they went after other Fleſh, ſeeing they are Spiritual Intelligences; but that was the Wickedneſs of the Inhabitants of the Neighbouring Cities of Sodom that had a part in the Puniſhment. This Explication is ſo natural and conformable to the Text, that I can't conceive why they bring in there the Angels with the Sodomites, ſince the Cenſure falls upon the Cities that burn'd with the Inhabitants of Sodom, for having gone after other Fleſh. We ought not therefore to eſtabliſh this Fable upon the Authority of St Jude who ſays nothing of it.

XIV. As for the Book of Enoch, whereof ſome Fragments are ſtill extant, 'tis generally taken for a ſuppoſititious Work. I don't believe St. Jude would have cited a Book compoſed under the Name of that Patriarch; for he only hinted at ſome words of that Holy Man. He ſaid, and St Jude might have learnt the words, or Propheſie of Enoch by a Tradition preſerved among the Jewiſh People; and it is from the ſame Source and Fountain that he has drawn what he tells of Michael the Arch-Angel his contending with the Devil, about the Body of Moſes. Tertullian and St Auguſtin ſeem to have known that Book, ſeeing they both mention it. The firſt ſays, that the Book of Enoch ought not to be rejected, ſince he has Propheſied of our Lord; and the ſecond maintains the contrary, "That tho he has written ſomething "that is Divine, by reaſon of the Authority of St Jude, who ſays ſo; yet there was no reaſon how-"ever to put it in the Cannon, which was kept "in the Temple of Jeruſalem, and of which the "Prieſts had the Cuſtody.

The oppoſite Opinions of theſe two Fathers is very plain and evident; for one of them would needs have the Book of Enoch received as a thing that belongs to us; and the other affirms, that it has been with Juſtice all along rejected out of the Cannon. Tertullian had read that the Demons had taught the Women the Art of Painting and Beautifying themſelves, and that was enough for him to adopt that Book, becauſe he declaimed againſt Women, and oppoſed them with all his might: But he confeſſes, that that Book could not have been wrote but ſince the Deluge, or by Eſdras, which is a meer Chimera: And he falls a declaiming againſt the Jews, as if they had thro' Malice and in ſpight robbed us of every thing that relates to J. CHRIST. St. Auſtin mentions only what St. Jude has cited out of the Book of Enoch, and it is entirely upon his Authority that he ſpeaks of it. If it be true therefore, that St. Jude had not ſeen that Book of Enoch, and that he had given us the Propheſie of that Patriarch purely from Tradition, we have good ground to believe that St. Auguſtin, who ſends us back to St. Jude, had not ſeen it. Moſt certainly this Book was firſt compoſed by a Jew, and thoſe two Fathers have not forbore ſpeaking advantageouſly of it, becauſe they have followed the general prejudice, and built upon a falſe ſuppoſition, in imagining that St. Jude had cited the Book of Enoch, whereas he only gives us a ſingle paſſage, or a word, out of it.

XV. It cannot be denyed but that it was a Jew who pawn'd that Work upon the Patriarch Enoch; Nor is it neceſſary that he ſhould have wrote it in Hebrew, and afterwards that it ſhould be tranſlated into Greek, as a very Learned Perſon * has thought; for the Jews wrote ſometimes in Greek, and the Fragments that are left us, are an Original. We can't decide the time in which this Impoſtor may have lived; but it is apparent that he did not write till after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and in the ſecond Age of the Church, where the Learned of that diſperſed Nation began to appear again. He followed the Principles of his Religion, and the Theologie of his Age. 1. 'Twas thought at that time, that the Angels were corrupted by the Love of Women; for that is proved undeniably by the Teſtimony of Philo and Tertullian. Rau Joſeph, being interrogated about Azael who is the Exael of Enoch, makes a long Hiſtory, ſuch as we have been talking of, about the love of Demons, and the Art of Painting and Tricking which they had taught the Women: Yet this Dr. is very Antient. 2. If the Names of the Angels, mentioned by Enoch be compared with thoſe which the Jews have contrived, we ſhall obſerve, that they contented themſelves with diſguiſing them; and that diſguiſe was neceſſary; ſeeing that the † One are the good Angels, and the other the bad. The Tyriel of Enoch is the Actariel of the Litanies; Sariel the Prince is Lariel, &c. 3. That Oath of Execration, which the Angels take among themſelves, is borrowed from the Hiſtory of Joſeph, whoſe Brethren bound themſelves together by ſuch a like Execration, according to the Rabbies. 4. The falſe Enoch diſtinguiſhes the Spirit, from the Souls of the Dead conformably to the Sentiment of the Jews, who believe the Spirit to be above the Soul, ψυχη. 5. They were thoſe Spirits which cryed; which is borrowed from the Blood of Abel, and the Cries of the Sins of Sodom, rather than of that of the Saints in the Apocalypſe, but little known in the firſt Ages. The Angels who preſent unto God the Complaints of the Dead, were the Angels of the Miniſtry, ſo famous among the Jews; and we ſee nothing that can relate to the Cenſer in the Apocalypſe. Rev. 8. In ſhort, the Fire of Hell; that Abyſs of Fire, in which the Devil is to be Tormented, was known well enough to the Jews.

niſm, where the Giants are bound, tied hard with Cords, and thrown into the Abyſſes of the Earth, as thoſe of Enoch;

Titania proles
Fulmine dejecti fundo volvuntur in imo.

There is not the leaſt thing, not ſo much as the Stones and Rocks of the Fable, but what he puts into his Narration. Enoch cited by St. Jude, knew the Day of Judgment, ſeeing he has made ſuch a magnificent deſcription of it. We are not to wonder then if we meet with the ſame thing in the Fragments of Scaliger. But that obliges us to reſtore the falſe Enoch to the Jews, who alſo believe him, and to whom the Honour of having mingled therein divers Stories is due. That Jew, who was likewiſe well acquainted with the Fables of the Greeks lived in Egypt, where Philo had brought forth his Hiſtory of the Amorous Angels.

XVII. The Rabbies give * much Strength and Agility to the Devils at the time when God puniſhed them; for Axa and Azael being driven from Heaven by a Rod of Iron, and going down to the bottomleſs Pit, had the cunning to ſhrowd themſelves up in Air thro' which they paſſed. They aſſumed Bodies; they re-marryed; and from thence was born that number of Proſelytes that went out of Egypt with Moſes. Idolaters, ill Converts and who were always the Ring-Leaders of the Rebels againſt God, and Chief of the Republick.

XVIII. Tis certain, they believe that the condition of thoſe Spirits changes from time to time with the Revolutions of Empires over which they have an Authoritative influence. Duma, for example, was one of the Apoſtate Angels that preſided over Egypt. He for a long while withſtood Moſes, who beſought Pharaoh to let the Children of Iſrael go, and from thence proceeded his almoſt invincible Obſtinacy. But God having pronounced the fatal Sentence, I will bring my Judgments upon the Gods of Egypt, Duma was obliged to comply. He loſt all the Authority he had enjoyed till then, and was ſent back into Hell, where he has the ſuperintendancy over Damned Souls. Others ſay he has only the Charge over the Dying.

Its largeneſs.* XIX. The Tree of Knowledge. XX. Stories about the Creation of the Woman.

I. A Modern Rabby *, who had much ſtudied the Antients, aſſures us, that the pre-exiſtence of Souls is a Sentiment generally receiv'd among them. They affirm that they were all formed from the firſt Day of the Creation, and that they were all found in the Garden of Eden: God ſpake to them when he ſaid, Let us make Man: he united them to Bodies according as he formed them. They encourage themſelves in this conceit upon what God has ſaid in Iſaiah, "*the Souls which I have made.*Rev. 57.16. He would not have made uſe of a time paſt, if he created ſtill every Day a great number of them. The Work ought to have been finiſhed long before, ſeeing God ſays, I have made.

II. Thoſe Souls enjoyed a great Happineſs in Heaven, in expecting when they might be united to Bodies: Yet however they may merit ſomething by their conduct, and that is one reaſon why there is ſo vaſt a difference in Marriages, whereof ſome are Fortunate, and others Miſerable; becauſe God ſends thoſe Souls according to their Merits. They were created double, that ſo there might be one Soul for the Husband, and another for the Wife. When theſe Souls, which were made one for the other, are found united upon the Earth, their condition is infallibly happy, and the Marriage eaſy and pleaſant. But God, to puniſh Souls that have not anſwered the excellence of their Original, ſeparates thoſe which had been made one for the other, and then 'tis impoſſible but that there ſhould be diviſion and all manner of diſorder. Origen had not adopted this laſt Article of the Jewiſh Theologie; for he believed that Souls had pre-exiſted, and that God united them to Bodies Celeſtial, Terreſtrial, Groſs, or Subtil, according to what they had done in Heaven; and ſcarce any body is ignorant that Origen had a great many Diſciples and Adherers among Chriſtians.

III. The Souls were created the firſt day with the Light; for the word Light is mentioned no leſs than five times in the Firſt Chapter of Geneſis, which it is not to be ſure without ſome Myſtery. In fact, God brought forth five different Lights: that of Sephiroths; that of Intelligences ſeparated from matter; the Souls which Solomon † calls a Light; Angels; and laſtly, that great Light which enlightened the World, before the Sun.

IV. Theſe Souls came out pure from the hands of God. There is ſtill to this day recited a Prayer aſcribed to the Doctors of the great Synagogue, in which is read, O God! the Soul that Thou haſt given me is pure; Thou haſt created it, Thou haſt faſhioned it, Thou haſt breathed it into me; thou keepeſt it within me; Thou will't retake it when it ſhall fly away, and will't reſtore it at the time that thou haſt pointed out.

V. There is to be found in this Prayer all that which reſpects the Soul; for behold, how a Learned || Interpreter has Commented on it, the Soul which thou haſt given me, is pure; to teach us that it is a Spiritual, ſubtil Subſtance, that has been formed after a pure and clean manner. Thou haſt created it, that is to ſay, at the beginning of the World with other Souls. Thou haſt faſhioned it, becauſe our Soul is a Spiritual Body, compoſed of a celeſtial and inſenſible Matter; and the Cabaliſts add, that it is united to the Body to receive either Puniſhment or Reward, according to what it has done here in the Fleſh. O God! Thou haſt breath'd it into me; that is to ſay, Thou haſt united it to my Body without the intervention of any Celeſtial Body, which ordinarily leaves an influence upon vegetative and ſenſitive Souls. Thou keepeſt it, becauſe God is the Keeper of Men. Thou wilt retake it, which proves that it is immortal; Thou wilt alſo reſtore it me, which aſſures us of the truth of the Reſurrection.

VI. The Talmudiſts * ſupply us with a World of Stories upon the Chapter of Adam and his Creation. They tell us Twelve hours of the day were wholy taken up in the forming of him, without any interminſſion. The firſt hour God ſpent in getting together the Duſt from which he was to be made, and he became an Embryo. On the Second he ſtood upright on his Feet. On the Fourth he gave names to all Cattle, and to the fowl of the Air, and to every beaſt of the Field. The Seventh was employed about his marrying of Eve, whom God had brought to him as a Paranimph or Bride, after he had curl'd her Hair. The Jewiſh Women do ſtill to this day endeavour to imitate thoſe Curlings, which at Venice are called Banetes, a word that ſignifies Vanity. On the Tenth Adam ſinn'd; he was judged ſoon after; and on the Twelfth he was ſenſible, of Pain, and the Curſe on the Ground; that in Sorrow and ſweat of his face, by reaſon of travel, he ſhould eat his Bread all the days of his Life.

VII. God had made him ſo large that he filled the World, or at leaſt reached up to Heaven. The Angels aſtoniſh'd murmur'd at it, and ſaid to God that now there were two Sovereign Beings, the One in Heaven, the Other on the Earth. God advertiſed of this, † lean'd his hand upon Adam's head, and reduc'd him to the Stature of a thouſand Cubits; but in giving to the firſt Man ſuch an immenſe bigneſs, they would only ſay, that he knew all the Secrets of Nature, and that that Knowledge did conſiderably diminiſh by Sin; that which is Orthodox. They add, that God at firſt had made him double, as the Heathen repreſent Janus to us with two Fronts; and therefore there needed only one ſtroke of the Hatchet to divide thoſe two Bodies, and this is clearly explained by the Prophet, who affirms that God had formed him behind and before; and as Moſes ſays alſo, that God made them Male and Female; from whence they conclude, that the firſt was an Hermophrodite. Maimonides has endeavour'd to juſtify thoſe Doctors by aſſuring us that all this is Myſtical. Yet Plato had the ſame Conceptions.

VIII. Without inſiſting on all theſe Viſions which they have multiply'd almoſt to infinite, the Doctors maintain, 1. That Adam was created in a State of Perfection; for if he had come into the World as an Infant, he would have ſtood in need of a Nurſe and a Preceptor. 2. He was a ſubtil Creature. The matter of his Body was ſo delicate and fine, that he came near to the nature of Angels; and his Underſtanding was as perfect as that of a Man's can be. He || had a Knowledge of God and of all Spiritual Objects, without having ever learn'd it; it was ſufficient to think of it; and therefore they called him the Son of God. He knew even the Name of God; for Adam having given Names to all Animals, God asked him what was his Name, and he anſwered, JEHOVAH, 'tis Thou who art: and to that it is that God makes the Alluſion in the Prophet Iſaiah *, when he ſays, I am the Lord, that is my Name, that is to ſay, the Name that Adam has given me, and which I have taken to my ſelf.

IX. They do not agree that the Woman was ſo perfect as the Man, becauſe God had not made her but only to be a help meet for him: neither do they believe that God made her after his own Image. A Chriſtian † Divine has adopted this Sentiment by endeavouring to qualify and ſweeten it; for he tells us, that the Image of God was much more bright and ſhining in Man than in Woman; and therefore ſhe needed a Husband to ſerve as a Preceptor to her, and to teach her the Law and Will of God, whereas Adam had received it immediately from his own Mouth.

X. The Doctors likewiſe believe that Man made after the Image of God was circumciſed; but they don't conſider that in ſetting forth ſo much the excellency of a Ceremony, they at the ſame time make a God Corporeal. Adam plunged himſelf at firſt into a moſt fearful Debauch, by coupling with Beaſts without ever being able to ſatisfie his unruly appetite, till he was united to Eve. Others ſay, on the contrary, that Eve was the forbidden Fruit, whom he was not to touch without a Crime; but being tranſported by the temptation which the ſurprizing and extraordinary Beauty of the Woman cauſed, he ſinned and fell. They will not have Cain to proceed from Adam, becauſe he was born of the Serpent that had tempted Eve. He was ſo afflicted at the death of Abel, that he continued a Hundred and thirty Years without knowing his Wife, and it was then he began to get Children in his own likeneſs, after his Image. He is reproached for his Apoſtacy, in that he endeavoured even to make the fleſh of his foreskin to grow again, that ſo he might efface the Image of God; and that reproach was grounded upon a Paſſage in Hoſea, which accuſed the Jews for having broken their Covenant with God; But they like men, ſays the Text (it is like Adam in the Margent, Hoſ. 6 7.) have transgreſs'd the Covenant; and they will needs have the Covenant to be that, of which Circumciſion was the Seal. Adam, after he had broken that Covenant, repented; he afflicted his Body for the ſpace of ſeven Weeks in the River Gihon, and that poor Carkaſs was ſo miſerably ſcarify'd, that it became as pierced with holes as a Sieve. 'Tis ſaid there are Myſteries wrapt up in all theſe Stories as perhaps there may be ſome, but it would require a great deal of time as well as wit to unravel 'em all. Let us only obſerve, that thoſe who ſet Rules for the uſe of Metaphors, and pretend that they never ſerve themſelves of them till firſt their Readers are prepared for them, and they are ſure that they read in their Minds what they think, are but little acquainted with the genius of the Eaſtern People, and their Rules will be found here much too ſhort.

XI. The Jews are accuſed || of giving Strength and Support to the Syſtem of the Præ Adamites, which they have explained in these last Ages with abundance of niceness and subtilty; but 'tis certain they believe that Adam was the first of all men. Sangarius gives Janbuschar for a Preceptor to Adam; but he neither tells us his Sentiment, nor that of his Nation. He has rather followed the Conceits of the Indians and some Barbarians, who report, that three Men, whose names were Janbuschar, Zagrith, and Roan, lived before Adam, and that the first of them had been his Preceptor. In vain do they make use of the Authority of Maimonides, one of the Sagest Doctors of the Jews; for if he reports, that Adam was the first of all those Men that were born by an ordinary Generation, he attributes that Conjecture to the Zabiens, and he is so far from proving it, that he looks upon it as a false Idea, which ought to be rejected; and that they had not thought of the Notion, but only to defend the Eternity of the World, which those People, that inhabited Persia, maintained. We'll say one word of the Religion of the Zabiens, and of the Errours which Maimonides imputes to them, since so fit an opportunity here presents it self.

XII. One of those Learned Englishmen, who penetrate into the most dark and obscure Matters, pretends he has unfolded the Religion of the Zabeans and proved them to be Orthodox. They could not derive their Religion from a purer Source, since they had received it from Shem, and Elam his Son. If it was found charged with any Superstitions, Abraham reformed it, and preserved it so reformed against Nimrod who persecuted it. Zoroastre was another Reformer, who re established the Worship of the true God. 'Tis true, a perpetual Fire was burning in the Temples of the Zabiens, or Persians, and they fed it often through Devotion with Aromatick Spices and other pretious things; but there was such another-like Fire upon the Altar of Jerusalem, which was never to go out. It was doubtless this very conformity that determined Cyrus to suffer the Temple to be rebuilt. He also caused those words to be inserted in his Edict or Decree, which sufficiently denotes the Motive that made him do it; for he calls it the Temple in which they offer Sacrifice to a perpetual fire. They seemed also to worship the Sun; but that was but a Subaltern Worship which was directed to the Sovereign Being. They did not direct their Prayers directly to it, and the genuflections they made in its presence, were like the Homages that are paid to the Person of Kings, or Ministers of State. The Persians, who have kept to the Religion of their Ancestors, maintain still to this day to those that ask them, that their worship is purely and entirely civil. There is therefore reason to believe, that People, who had a Religion so pure, and so far remote from the Heathen Idolatry, whose Temples they overturned, did not believe the Eternity of the World.

XIII. We cannot sufficiently admire the vast Learning that Mr. Hyde has displayed about this Matter: Yet I hope it will be permitted me to make one Reflection upon it. 'Tis that the Arabian and Persian Authors, from whom he fetches his Proofs, are not antient enough to discover to us the Religion of the old Persians, since they are so great a Number of Ages separated from them. Nor ought those Arabian and Persian Authors to be prefer'd to the Greek Historians, who certainly best understood that Religion in the time when it flourished. Xenophon represents Cyrus on Horseback, after he had prayed Jupiter to march and to fight with him. Darius cryed out also, O Jupiter! Protector of my Country. 'Tis not therefore true, that their Prayers are immediately addressed, or that they offer up Sacrifices to the Sun:

Placat † equo Persis Hyperiona cinctum,
Ne datur celeri victima tarda Deo.

† Ovid. Fast. 1.

I shall not trouble the Reader with more Proofs drawn from the Antients, only shall observe, that those words in the Edict of Cyrus, they Sacrifice by an eternal fire, or as the Latin Interpreter * has translated it, sacrifice ye in the perpetual fire, is not found but in the Septuagint Version; for in the Hebrew it is read † that they bear, or lay the Foundations, which are the main strength of the Building, and the Sence requires it, for afterwards there is mention made of its heighth and largeness. Besides, 'tis incontestable that the Jews did not sacrifice to the fire, nor was there among them any Symbol of the Deity, as there was among the Persians. Cyrus could not have compared those two things; for one was the Symbol of the Deity, and the other served only to consume the Sacrifices. Victims were offered to the fire, among the Persians, and the Devots sacrificed to it even to their richest Jewels. It had its Priests and Priestesses as well as the Sun; but among the Jews there was no such thing. Moreover, the Persians || had other Gods; the Moon, the Earth; Oromasdes and Arimanes were famous among them. The Antients, who have spoke of those Deities, ought certainly to be believed much before the Arabian and Persian Writers, who lived many Ages after them.

XIV. There would still be some further inclination to believe those Authors, were they but more exact and judicious in Matters that are known to us; but on the contrary, they * disguise even the life of Abraham. How many ridiculous Stories do they tell us upon the account of that Patriarch? They make of Thares a great Lord, and favourite of the Emperour. Others say he was but a Sculptor that carved Idols; but at that time there was a great acuteness of understanding requisite, as well as much Study and Labour, to make the Images and Statues of the Gods. Abraham, illuminated by Grace, was converted at about the Age of 16 Years. He entred into a Temple, and broke down all the Idols of it: Upon which he was thrown into such a Furnace as Daniel was; but he came safe out of it. All this now is only grounded on a false Interpretation of what is said in Genesis of Abraham's coming out of Ur, which they have translated fire, instead of a City. That converted Patriarch ran thro' many Difficulties in converting others. He employed Force, armed his Domesticks and Allies, and by that means re-established the antient Religion and the Unity of a God among the Persians, who boast even to this day of having derived their Religion from him. Are Authors that vent such Fables as these to be rely'd on? Can we find thro' all the Sacred History that Abraham ever travell'd to convert Idolaters? and can any Proof be gathered from thence that the Persians have followed the Religion of the Patriarchs, and that afterwards that Nation alone should have escaped the Mischief of all others round about it, not excepting that of the Jews themselves who are fallen into a most gross Idolatry after they had known the truth?

XV. Certainly if we would follow the Arabians, at least we should believe the most Antient. Maimonides ||, who lived in the XIIth Century, cites several of them whom he had read; and among others that of the Agriculture of the Egyptians, which contained their Religion: and he saw nothing there of all that is in our Canonical Books; but on the contrary they maintained that Adam, the first of all Men born of a Woman, was the Apostle of the Moon, because he had taught to worship that Planet. They despised Noah, because he did not use Images; they consecrated Statues of Silver to the Moon, and those of Gold were for the Sun; they divided Metals and Climates among the Stars, because they thought they had mighty influences over those things that were assigned them, and over the Images consecrated to them. This Religion, tho' taken out of the Writings of the Zabiens, yet is very different from that which Mr. Hyde attributes to them. We ought therefore to believe those antient Authors cited by Maimonides; and then we must say that they did believe the Eternity of the World, and owned Men to be placed on the Earth before ever Adam was. The R. Bechai * tells us, that the first Caldeans were honest People: For, "if the Nazarens, that is to say, "Christians, were so good at their beginning, then "much more were Men of the first World so, who "were born with greater Simplicity. They did not "worship the Sun, but they kindled Fires on the "Earth to return Praises and Thanksgivings unto "God, for that which he lighted for them in Heaven; and looking up to those bright Planets, they "prayed the Angels that God had placed in them, "to incline 'em to be favourable and gracious to "them. But Cham and his Posterity fixing upon the "material Object, worshipped the Fire. But this way of arguing does not conclude in favour of the Zabiens, who lived since the Deluge, and Abraham's time. On the other hand Bechai confesses, that the Descendants of the antient Caldeans suffered themselves to be corrupted like other Nations. We are not then to make them Orthodox at the expence of Maimonides, nor charge that celebrated Doctor with the Errour of the Zabiens about the Eternity of the World, and of Men before Adam, since he has but related their Opinions, without giving us his Own.

XVI. The Jews say commonly that Adam was created Young, of the Stature of a compleat Man, because all things were to be created in a State of Perfection: And as he immediately came out of the hands of God, he was sovereignly wise, and a Prophet, created after the Image of God. We should never have done if we brought every thing that this Image of the Deity in Man has made them say. Let it suffice to observe, that amongst all the Doctors that have their different Ways and Sentiments, there are several of them, as Maimonides and Kimki, who, without having any regard to the Body of the first Man, place it in his Soul and Intellectual Faculties. The former of them † acknowledges, that there were Doctors who believed it was to deny the existence of God, to maintain that he had not a Body, because Man is material, and God had made him after his own Image; but he observes, that the Image is the specifick Vertue that causes us to exist, and by consequence the Soul is that Image. He seems to carry the matter too far, for he will have it, that the Idolaters who prostrate themselves before Images, would not have given them that Name, because of some lines of resemblance with the Originals; but because they attribute some vertue to those sensible Figures. Abravanel, who explains himself more ingenuously, observes, that God made Man after his own Image, 1. Because the Vertues and Perfections of the Deity were displayed in Adam, as Images and Shadows. God possesses all things in the highest degree of Perfection; but Man had at least some Traces and Lineaments of it. 2. Man was the Image of God, because he was the World en abregé, and in some manner participated of the four Elements, and of all the things that compose the Universe. As all the Parts of the World are reunited by the Spirit of God, which directs and conducts them; so all the different parts of matter, whereof Man is formed, are reunited by the Soul, which causes them to move. 3. Lastly, he declares that Man was made after the Image of God, because of his Reason, and of that great Wisdom wherewith God had endowed him.

Yet there are Others who pretend, that this Image consisted in the Liberty that Man enjoyed. Angels love goodness out of necessity, 'tis Man alone can love Vertue or Vice: He like God can act or not act; they don't consider that God delights in goodness more necessarily than Angels who could Sin, as it appears for instance in those that fell; and that if this Liberty of indifferenee for good is a degree of Excellence, they exalt the first Man above God. Others say, that the Image of God is seen in the Immortality of the Soul. Others place it in that Authority which Adam had over all the Creatures. Jarki explains these words otherwise, Let us make man after our own Image; for he resolves it, that God speaks there of the Idea which he had made of Man in his Secret Council, and of the rough draught he had designed of him to Himself.

XVII. The Anti-trinitarians are much in the wrong for relying upon the Testimony of the Jews, to prove, that Adam was born mortal, and that Sin in that respect made no change as to his condition; for they ‖ say openly that if our first Fathers had continued in their Innocence, all their succeeding Generations would not have been sensible of the Motions of Concupiscence, and they had then lived for ever. R. Bechai *, disputing against the Philosophers that stood up in defence of the Mortality of the first Man, maintains, that it was not allowable for them to quit the Theologie which their Ancestors found in the Writings of the Prophets, which taught us, that Man had lived eternally if he had not sinned. Nachmanides †, in the Conference that bears his Name, speaks not so positively; but however thus much he says, that if Adam had not sinn'd, he might possibly have lived eternally. In short, Manasseh ‖ who was living about the middle of the last Age, in a place where he could not be ignorant of the pretention of the Socinians, proves three things which directly fly in the teeth of them; One is, that the Immortality of the first Man, if he had persevered in his Innocence, is grounded on Scripture; Another, that Hana, the Son of Hanina, R. Jehuda, and abundance of Rabbies whose Testimonies he cites, have been of that Opinion. And in a word, he shews, that this Immortality of Man agrees with Reason, seeing that Adam had no inward Cause to make him die, and that he was afraid of nothing from without, for he lived in a most delightful place, and that the Fruit of the Tree of Life, wherewith he was to be nourished, increased his Vigour.

XVIII. The Tree of Life was of an immense bigness. All the Waters of the Earth came from under that Tree; and it was so large and big, that one could hardly have walk'd round about it in 500 Years time: But such an excessive bigness is attributed to it, only to give a more sensible Idea of its Perfection. 'Tis disputed whether it was a Vine, or Corn, or a Fig-tree. Methinks of all the Conjectures, the Jews * have chosen the worst; for not any of these Fruits was pleasant to the Eye. They don't don't look on it as a band of the Covenant which God had contracted with the firſt Man, nor as a Sign that ſecured to him the faithfulneſs of God; but they † pretend that it comprehended a quickening vertue, and by a natural quality which God had beſtow'd on that Plant, it was enabled to preſerve Immortality to Adam. In conſequence of this firſt Tenet, the Jews ſay, that God was obliged to drive rebellious Man out of Paradice, for fear leſt he ſhould Eat of that Fruit which would have repaired all he had loſt of radical moiſture, and made him live for ever. The Chriſtians come not much ſhort of the Jews in theſe two Articles. I know not how many Fathers, thinking it might be dangerous, and a kind of ſowing of Hereſie, to believe, that the tereſtrial Paradice, and the Trees of Life, of the Knowledge of good and evil, were ſenſible, have turned all into Allegories; and ſome Others, perſuaded that the Tree contained in it an immortalizing Vertue, have maintain'd that Adam would not have died even after he had ſinned, if he had been able to have eaten of the fruit of that Tree. This is to be found elegantly expreſſed in a Treatiſe || which bears the Name of St. Auguſtin, tho' it be none of his.

XIX. It is natural after this to give to the Tree of the Knowledge of good and evil, the vertue of enlight'ning the Soul, and of procuring to it a Knowledge it had not before. Some * Jews have not failed to do it, and we may place Joſephus at the head of them. Damaſcene, among the Chriſtians, has ſaid alſo that the fruit of that Tree had the Power or Vertue to acquaint Man with his Nature; but they have abandoned that Sentiment of ſome Doctors as well in the Synagogue as in the Church. But by following this Tenet two Errours muſt neceſſarily be fallen into: One, that the firſt Man in the State of Innocence, when his Perfections ought to have ſhone brighteſt, was moſt groſsly ignorant; the Other, that he would have acquired one degree of Perfection by his Revolt and Sin. What! did Sin produce Knowledge? Maimonides † obſerves, that he had ſeen a Doctor that maintain'd this Opinion. He would needs have Adam to have been created a Beaſt without Knowledge, and that he had not acquired that degree of Light but by Sin; but he convinced him of his Errour by proving that Man had an Underſtanding, and in that reſpect it was that God made him after his own Image. Moreover, God ſpoke to him after the Creation, and gave him Laws. What Adam learn'd by his Fall, was, to know the turpitude fixed to his Nakedneſs which was till then unknown to him. The Scales were not fallen from his Eyes; he did not only ſee what he ſaw not before, But he began to find Shame, where he had not obſerved any before his Sinning. Manaſſah || ſays that Adam, until he fell, had only the Knowledge of what was Good; but by his Revolt and Tranſgreſſion he came to underſtand Evil as well as he had known Good: And for that reaſon God ſaw it fit to make him Subject to Death.

XX. We will be very ſhort in what we ſhall ſay concerning the Creation of the Woman. Perhaps ſome may take our Relation about it to be only ſo much Pleaſantry; but waiving all that, we ought not to forget ſo noble a Part of Human Kind. 'Tis ſaid then, that God did not deſign to create her at firſt, becauſe he foreſaw that Man would quickly complain of her Malice. He expected that Adam ſhould have asked her of him, and he would not have failed making her, ſo ſoon as he had taken notice how that all the Creatures appear'd before him in Pairs. God took all the Precautions that were neceſſary to make her good, but all in vain. He would not take her from the Head, for fear ſhe ſhould be given to coquetry: Yet, tho' there was a great deal of Pains taken about her, that Miſchief was not prevented; and the Prophet Iſaiah * long ſince complained, that the Daughters of Zion walked haughtily with ſtretched forth naked necks. God was unwilling to take her from the Eyes for fear ſhe ſhould be given to winking, and other wandring Motions of the Eyes; and yet the ſame Prophet complains that they had wanton Eyes, full of Airs of Gallantry. Neither had he a mind to take her from the Mouth, leaſt ſhe ſhould talk too much; but we are not now able to make 'em hold their Tongues, nor ſtop the flux of their Mouths. He took her not from the Ear neither, for fear leſt ſhe ſhould be an Eav's-dropper; and yet it is ſaid of Sarah, that ſhe heard at the tent-door, Gen. 18. 10. for ſhe liſtened to know the Secret of the Angels. God made her not out of the Heart for fear ſhe ſhould be jealous; and yet how many tormenting Fears and Jealouſies do wrack the Souls of poor young Maids as well as Married Women. There is no Paſſion next to that of Love, which they more eaſily give way to. A Siſter, who is more happy, eſpecially in Gallants, is the object of the other Siſter's hatred; and Merit and Beauty are Crimes never to be pardoned. Neither would God form the Woman out of the Feet, or Hands, for fear they ſhould be Gadders and Goſſips, or leaſt an itch of Pilfering and Shop-lifting ſhould ſeize them: and † yet Dinah went out to ſee the daughters of the Land, and was ruined by it; and before her || Rachel had ſtolen her Father's Gods. They have had much ado to find out a ſound and honeſt Part in Man, from whence it ſeems there would not come out ſome defect or other; and the Woman has not failed to have 'em all. This is the Deſcription the Jewiſh Authors give us of her; And perhaps they will find it ſo juſt, that they'll not put it in the rank of their Dreams and Viſions, but they will imagine that they deſigned to include a known truth under figurative terms.

Of Providence: Of the Sin of the firſt Man, and of its Effects.

I. Providence acknowledged. II. Whether God knows Events. III. Providence explained in the Book of Job. Different Opinions very Antient. IV. Diviſion between the Jewiſh Doctors like to that of Job's Friends. V. Different degrees of Providence. VI. Sentiment of Philo about the Sin of Adam. Adam's repentance. XIII. Whether Sin is born with us. XIV. Divers Opinions about it. XV. The Orthodox but few.

I. THE Jews maintain that Providence governs all Creatures, from the Unicorn even to Hens Eggs.

Eggs. The Chriſtians have accuſed Maimonides * for having renverſed this capital Tenet of Religion; but he throws this Sentiment upon Epicurus, and ſome Hereticks in Iſrael, and treats thoſe as Atheiſts who deny that all things depend on God. He believes that that ſpecial Providence which watches over every action of Man, does not concern it ſelf about the ruſtling of Leaves, or producing of Worms; for every thing that reſpects Animals and Creatures, happens by accident, as Ariſtotle ſays. St. Jerome had taught this long before him; and herein both the one and the other have deviated from the Sentiments of their Church. 'Tis certain, the Tenet of Providence makes one of the Articles of the Jewiſh Catechiſm; and the famous Orobio, who died the laſt Age, maintained it againſt Spinoſa, whom he condemned for having introduced a fatal Neceſſity, only to rob God of his Providence, and his eternal Liberty.

II. However, this matter is differently explained. As the Doctors are mighty Sticklers for the Reading of Ariſtotle and ſuch other Philoſophers, they have with care examined whether God knew all Events, and this Queſtion has extreamly puzzled them. Some have ſaid, that God could only know himſelf, becauſe Knowledge multiplying it ſelf proportionably to the Objects that are known, we muſt admit in God ſeveral Knowledges. Beſides, God can know nothing but what is immutable; yet moſt of the Events depend on the Will of Man which is free. Maimonides † confeſſes, that as we are incapable of knowing the Eſſence of God, it is alſo impoſſible for us to fathom the Nature of his Knowledge. We muſt content our ſelves therefore to ſay, that God knows all things, and is ignorant of nothing, that his Knowledge is not acquired by degrees, nor is it charged with any imperfection: In a word, if we ſometimes meet with contradictions and difficulties, they ariſe from our Ignorance, and the diſproportion there is between God and us. This kind of Arguing is Wiſe and Judicious. Moreover he || thought we ought to tolerate the different Opinions which Wiſe Men and Philoſophers had formed concerning the Knowledge of God and his Providence, ſince they Sinned not through Ignorance, but becauſe the matter is incomprehenſible.

III. He diſcovers in the Diſcourſes of Job and his Friends the ſource of all the Sentiments that the Philoſophers and Sages have defended about this matter. It ſignifies little whether ſuch a Man ever lived, or whether it be only imaginary; neither how we place him, whether in the time of Moſes, of David, or of the Captivity of Babilon. If that Book be a Parable, we learn from it five things. Job aſcribed to God an abſolute Power over his Creatures; and conſidering that Man was ſo far removed and diſtant from the Deity, he might deal with him according to his good Pleaſure, without having any reſpect to the Juſtice or Injuſtice of his Actions: Am I * perfect, or wicked, all comes to one. Seeing this Sentiment does not pleaſe all the Doctors, ſome have ſaid, that he knew God then only by the Cabala, or by Tradition; and therefore he reaſoned ill, but at laſt he was better inſtructed in the ways of Providence.

Eliphas thought the contrary, that Providence Puniſhed and Rewarded Man according to his deſert; and therefore it chaſtized Job †: Is not thy Wickedneſs great? and thine Iniquities infinite?

Bildad maintain'd, that God ſometimes chaſtens his Children in order to reward them afterwards more gloriouſly. He does not always puniſh the Sin that they have committed; but has a deſign to try their Faith, and to recompence it. If || thou waſt pure and upright, ſurely now God would awake for thee, and make the Habitation of thy Righteouſneſs proſperous.

Zophar ſaid, that it was not in us to ſearch out the Reaſon's of God's Government: canſt thou by * ſearching find out God? canſt thou find out the Almighty to Perfection?

Laſtly, Elihu, wiſer than the others, teaches us two things. The one is, that if an Angel Prays for the Miſerable, God ſuffers himſelf to be overcome, and the Angels have power to obtain that favour even to three times for one and the ſame Man. Secondly, he enlarges upon the wondrous things that God hath done in the Univerſe for Beaſts and inanimate Creatures; and from thence concludes, that God hath a different way of Government towards Man from other of his Creatures: for he takes care of Man and neglects the Beaſts. As there is a very wide difference between the operations of Man, and that of the Beaſt, ſo there is much what the ſame between the care that God hath for the One and for the Other.

IV. All thoſe Opinions about Providence, as high up as Job, have been maintained by the Jewiſh Doctors; we may add alſo to them the Chriſtians; for the one have declared for the abſolute Power of the Deity in the diſtribution of Good and Evil. Some have invented the Chaſtiſements of Love which is not to be met with in the Law But the moſt common Opinion among the Jews, is, that Man is perfectly free; that he has the power of doing whatſoever Man is capable of producing; that God, who ſees his Actions, puniſhes or rewards them. On one hand God requires of them what is his due; but on the other, he never deprives the Creature of the reward he has deſerv'd. All the Evils that happen unto Man, tho' it be but the pricking of a Briar that goes into his hand, are the Puniſhments of ſome Sin; and the leaſt good that is poured out upon Man, or upon the Church, is a recompence which the Divine Juſtice beſtows, becauſe of the good Works that the Will has brought forth. If God doth good to his Children who are but newly born, it is on a proſpect of the good Deeds which they will one day perform.

V. Maimonides adds to this, that Providence is not equal towards Men; for God ſaid to Abraham, Gen. 15. 1. I will be thy Shield; but he ſpeaks very differently of others who were not ſo much the Object of his Affections. He diſtinguiſhes four ſorts of Objects; the Prophets, in whom God acted Prophetically; the Saints, who receive very ſtrong and powerful impreſſions of Holineſs; the Wicked, in whom Providence acts but weakly; and the Beaſts whom he almoſt abandons. But that Learned Man expreſſed himſelf ill; for Providence equally watches over all Creatures; but it produces different effects in 'em. Moreover, his Cares are extended over Beaſts; and he has laboured in vain to find that Opinion in the Book of Job, or in the diſcourſes of Elihu. There were among the Excellent, ſome Doctors very far from the Sentiment of Maimonides, for they believed that there was a retribution for Beaſts; but both the one and the other have carried this too far.

VI. The firſt act of Providence regards the Sin of the firſt Man, which ſhe has directed as well as that of his Poſterity.

Philo, † accuſtomed to turn every thing into Allegories, maintains, that the forbidden Fruit was Sin, which is found virtually in the Soul, as the Seal in the Wax, which is ſuſceptible of that impreſſion by its ſoftneſs. Adam to whom God ſpeaks, was the Soul, and the only reason capable of receiving his Laws. The Seducing Woman signifies the Sences that were given to the Soul to help it in its Operations, and which have lost it. The Serpent is the voluptuous Pleasure that deceived Eve; for Pleasure disguises it self in order to slip in the more easily. Lastly, Death, wherewith God threat'ned the first Man, was Sin, which, by introducing it self into the Soul, causes it to Die; and it was to express that Spiritual Death, more terrible than the other, that God redoubled that Term, Thou shalt Die the Death. But that Punishment did not pass to his Posterity; for there is not a Soul that comes into the World without the Knowledge, and destitute of the Power of doing good, tho it does not always make use of it. Thus they adulterate and falsifie the most settled Facts, and most certain Truths by the help of Allegories; and it is a long while that the Jews have laboured under this Malady.

Soul,

VII. Thus likewise they relate, that the Angel of Death mounted the Serpent, which was as big as a Camel, and in that proud Equipage he went to Eve to seduce her by a deceitful Tongue. 'Twas not then the Serpent, but the Angel Samael that spake, and seduced the Woman. 'Tis certain, they laugh at the Christians, for giving to the Serpent the Faculty of speaking, which God never gave to any Beast. If he caused Balaam's Ass to speak, he prepares at least the Reader for it, and advertises him that it was a Miracle; but the same Moses being silent when he made the Serpent to act, has given us to understand, that his Language was not like that of Men. Some believe that that Reptile, instead of speaking, crept up all along the Tree, did Eat of the forbidden fruit, and the Woman who was there present, seeing him to do it with impunity, thought she might do so too, and thereupon took the Fruit which caused her Death: So that the Serpent did not speak, but only set Eve an example, which she soon followed.

VIII. They have another Conceit about this Matter; for they † say that the Serpent, whilest he was in discourse with Eve, cast upon her a nasty stinking smell, which she imparted to all her Posterity; and which only the Israelites have been exempted from, because they received the Law standing at the nether part of Mount Sinai; and the Proselytes, because their Star was also upon the Mountain: but the Gentiles, who were removed far from thence, have this stinking smell, and it continues among them to this Day: And therefore they look upon Christians as so many Stinkards. The Christians confess ingenuously, that in the Stile of the Rabbies, this stinking Savour, which passes from Generation to Generation, principally respects the Soul, and is to be understood of Original Sin: But being touch'd to the Quick at the injury that is done them, they || observe, that it is a Character peculiarly belonging to the Jews, to be known by their smell: and that this nasty stink is so sensible an effect of the Curse of God that it is not washed away but by Baptism. Fortunatus has sung in his Verses this Marvel of the Sacrament, in speaking of Five Hundred Jews whom Avitus had converted in the Year 579.

Abluitur † Judæus odor Baptismate divo,
Et nova progenies reddita surgit aquis.
Vincens ambrosios suavi spiramine rore,
Vertice perfusi Chrismatis eflat odor.

Balsamon * reports likewise, that the Saracens imagined their Children were possessed with the Devil, and stunk like Dogs, till they had received Baptism. What a Conceit was here! Could it be believed that Christians should have espoused Miracles and Prejudices against the Jews, that are so evidently false? Yet some People have added, that Blood comes out from them at their Fundament || 1. as it fell out to the Philistins, when they had carried away the Ark; and to make the thing miraculous, 'tis said that this happens on Good-Fridays, or on the New-Moons. In short, they affirm, that their Children are born with a bloody Arm, for their blasphemous Saying, let his Blood be upon us, and upon our Children. What the Jews have said of the stench cleaving to Men, only respects Sin wherewith the Soul is defiled, and from which they think themselves exempted, or at least secured, by their Knowledge and observation of the Law.

IX. The Cabalists give us a quite different Idea of the Sin of the first Man, which we must not let pass in silence, because it is somewhat Singular.

We have † observed that God, having press'd hard together that infinite Light which he inhabits, formed a great Void, or Space, in which he placed the World, and in the midst whereof he sate Adam. All was pure in that Space; but Adam defiled it by three different Sins, Impurity, Idolatry, and the effusion of blood. Until then Sin had been shut up, and had but very little appeared, like the wick of a Lamp almost drowned in Oyl, and burning, but with a very glimmering flame, scarce throwing any light outwards: But the first Man drew the evil out of his Bosom, where it lay concealed, and begat I know not how many Devils and Evil Spirits; that is to say, that he committed abundance of Sins. This is what Isaiah the Prophet insinuates, when he says of God, I form the Light, I create Darkness. Isai. 45. 7. Darkness, or Evil, had been created, but lay hid till Adam by his Commissions brought it to light, and published it. The visible Space having been defiled by the Fall of the first Man, God resolved to purify it; but this could not be done but by the Study of the Law, and that is what they call the purifying Sighs and breathings. The People of Israel, a People holy to the Lord, was chosen for this Purification of the World. Moses, their Chief, undertook to do it, and led them into the Wilderness, because there was the Center of Corruption, and the place of Assembly for the Army of Demons; there was the Scorpion and the fiery Serpent. In short, they seized the Chief of this Army, and whilest the People of Israel were marching in the Wilderness, they drew him bound and hand-cuff'd after 'em, and from time to time they punished him severely.

The whole Purification had been made, if the Israelites had persevered in their Obedience; but the golden Calf spoiled all; and therefore that was retarded to the time of the Messiah, who was to do it. But yet they left not off sojourning there still. The Samaritans are charged with purifying one part of the World. God bounded there their Cares, because they did not Study the Law with a sufficient Zeal. But the other Jews have been dispersed into the three other parts of the Universe, that so they might purify those. 'Tis for that reason that God hath driven them all into Exile, whilest he keeps still some remains of Holiness in the place where the Temple was. It would be to no purpose to make Reflections upon this imaginary System; it is enough to say, that it is a production of the Cabalists.

X. They agree pretty well, that temporal Death was the consequent of the Sin of the first Man. In short,

ſhort, there are ſeveral Examples in the Targum upon Eccleſiaſtes, in which are read thoſe words, that are not to be found in the Bibles of Buxtorf and Le Jeai, that the Serpent which ſeduced Eve, was the cauſe that death came to fall upon Adam, and upon all the Inhabitants of the Earth. They * reckon that all Men who die, go to Adam, to complain, and tell him, You are the cauſe of our ſuffering and miſery; but he juſtifies himſelf in repreſenting to all thoſe poor complaining Souls, that he never committed but one Sin, whereas they have deſerved Death a thouſand times over by their manifold Sins and Wickedneſſes, which they had lewdly committed. In a word, 'tis one of their Axioms, That there is no Death without Sin, nor Correction without Iniquity.

XI. But here muſt be obſerved two Things; One, that Death inflicted upon Adam, was only temporal, and God did not repeat that word Death a Second time, in ſaying, thou ſhalt die the death, but to make the truth of his threatning ſtrike a deeper Impreſſion, or elſe to denote the Maladies and Diſtempers that were to precede Death: But God exempted from thoſe Preparatives them that loved him, ſuch as Noah, Iſaac, and the Patriarchs. The Rabbies † laugh at the divine Juſtice which ſhould condemn all Men to Hell, becauſe a gormandizing Woman had eaten an Apple; and tho' they do not diſown but that the Meſſiah, when he comes, ſhall ſuffer much, yet they abſolutely deny that his Sufferings will have any relation to the Sin of Adam.

They pretend alſo ſometimes that the firſt Man would have lived notwithſtanding his Crime and God's threatning of him, if he could but have took of the Fruit of the Tree of Life which God immediately concealed from him; and that ſufficiently appears by the fear he was in, leſt Adam ſhould put forth his hand to take it, and ſo make himſelf immortal.

To conclude, If Men die to this day, it does not follow that it is becauſe of the firſt Sin; but becauſe our Bodies are compoſed of four different Elements, which cauſe Corruption and Diſſolution by their ſtruggling with one another; or elſe becauſe the Fruit deſigned for the Preſervation of Human Kind, is no more to be found.

XII. Adam raiſed himſelf from his Fall by Repentance, the example whereof he gave to his ſucceeding Children; as he had given to them that of Sin. He poured out torrents of tears for his Crime; and doubtleſs it was that abundance of Sorrow and weeping, the Rabbies have ſhewn after their manner, in repreſenting to us that the illuſtrious Penitent threw himſelf into a River where he remained ſeveral Weeks; or elſe they deſigned to teach us, that Adam was purify'd, by waſhing himſelf in a River of pure Water, therein following the conjecture of the Heathens.

XIII. There is a Dialogue of the Emperour Antoninus, who is ſuppos'd to have had ſo great a love for the Jews, as to join with a Rabbi who lived under that Prince, in the compoſition of a Book, called, the Miſnah, wherein was examined the Queſtion concerning Original Sin. The Rabbi maintains there to Antoninus, that Evil Deſire (for ſo they call natural Corruption) is formed in the Soul at the very inſtant it firſt has its being. But the Emperour being exaſperated at that Notion, and conceiving Sin to be a cruel Beaſt, objects to the Doctor that Evil Deſire would tear out the very Entrails of the Mother, if it was formed in her Womb; and the perplexed Rabbi thro' a ridiculous Objection altered his Opinion, and alledged the Paſſage of Scripture, which ſays, that the heart of Man is evil from his Youth. He acknowledged a corruption in Man, but he would not have it born with him, but that it began to produce it ſelf in his Youth.

XIV. It muſt be confeſſed that the Jews, have little Knowledge of this Truth. They feel, as the Philoſophers ſaid, a ſomething an I know not what, that withſtands right Reaſon, a Malice that diſcovers it ſelf from the moſt tender years, without ever having been contracted, either by uſe, or evil Examples; but they are ignorant from whence it comes. They go ſometimes ſo far as to ſay, that God had planted it in the heart of Adam, and that he continues to do it in the Souls of his Children. They confound it oftentimes with the Devil. They place two Deſires in the Soul, the one good, the other bad, which are in continual warfare with one another, as St. Paul ſaid, that the Fleſh luſteth againſt the Spirit; but they believe that theſe two Deſires come equally from God.

Maimonides ||, whom the Synagogue reverences, as one of her great Maſters, ſays, it is as impoſſible to conceive, that a Man ſhould be born with Sin, or Grace, as it would be to comprehend that he ſhould be born expert and a Maſter in an Art. He looks upon Original Sin as an impoſſibility. Yet he confeſſes in other places, there are ſome tempers ſo wild, that it is a folly to go about to correct them: Some are ſo cholerick that there is no calming their impetuoſity; and others ſo flitting and volatile that there is no fixing of them: There muſt therefore be ſome diſorder in Nature, before ever it could be contracted by Uſage and Habit.

The Author * of the Queſtions which Brenius has publiſhed, denies alſo Original Sin; but he contradicts himſelf preſently by giving to Man the figmentum malum, the Evil inclination, which is combated by the good deſire that God beſtows at the Age of Thirteen, when he comes to be the Son of Precept, and capable of fulfilling the Law. In ſhort, they ſay openly, that Sin not being capable of having any place but in the Soul, God would be the Author of it, if he produced a Soul corrupted; and all the Puniſhments of Adam's Sin being corporeal, and ſenſible, they ought not to fancy that there be any other. We are born Slaves of a Father a Slave. That is enough, and we need not add to that Slavery, or rather to the miſery of the Body loaded with Infirmities, and become Subject to Death.

XV. Yet there are ſome that do acknowledge Natural Corruption, and expreſs it by all the Names which the Sacred Writers make uſe of, to give us a juſt Conception of it. They ſay with God that it is an Evil; and with Moſes that it is the foreskin of the fleſh, that ought to be cut off. They, according to David, call it a Pollution; with Solomon, an Enemy; with Iſaiah, an Offence; and a Stone with Ezekiel, which God muſt take away to give an heart of fleſh. After having affirmed, with Joel, that it is a ſecret thing, they add, that as the Fruit is bitter, when the Seed that produces it has ſome bitterneſs in it; ſo Children that are born of corrupt Parents, muſt partake of their Corruption. To conclude, they demand in the Gemara † whether luſt be perceived at the inſtant of the Formation, or of the Birth; and it is anſwered 'tis at that of the Birth; for the Scripture ſays that ſin lieth at the door. Gen. 4. 7. But thoſe who thus explain the Nature of Original Sin, are few in number, and there are great Doctors that deny it, or at leaſt do not own it.

Philo's Sentiment about Grace. XVII. Preventing grace taught. XVIII. Concomitant grace Neceſſary. XIX. The Nature of that Succour which God gives to Man.

I. AS it can't be denied that Man is a Sinner, whether Corruption be born with him, or that it proceeds from a foreign Principle, there ought to be ſought out ſome Remedies for it. The Jews breath out Sighs, and pour out fervent Prayers, to be preſerved from that Corruption and its ſad Effects: O God, cry they *, who art full of Compaſſion, withhold from us evil Thoughts! O God, do not deliver us into the hands of the Enemies of our Souls, ſince thou knoweſt that our Sins are a fire, and we are the Stubble! O God, inſpire us with good deſires, and let them reign over us. It ſeems by this, that they cannot frame a ſtronger Idea of Corruption, than to look upon it as an inward Fire which would conſume the Chaff, if an Almighty and moſt merciful hand hinder'd not the effect of it; but we are not to ſtop at the Motions of Conſcience, which oftentimes ſpeaks Orthodoxly in Men who pretend to have the Vanity to be juſt; as in humble Souls. The ſence of a weakneſs which we cannot overcome, draws from us ſuch Expreſſions, as we do not underſtand all the force of. Here is a Miracle on God's part that prevents the Fire from conſuming the Chaff or Stubble. Yet interrogate the Rabbi, and ask him whether he believes the natural Corruption as active as the Fire; his Heart as weak and unable to ſecure it ſelf from Sin as the Chaff from being conſumed, and grace as efficacious as would be the hand of God that ſhould hinder the Stubble from being conſumed, when it is thrown into the Fire? he will exclaim againſt thoſe Prayers of his Breviary, and reduce them even to nothing.

II. They * follow the Style of the Prophets, and cry to God, Turn us, O Lord, and ſo ſhall we be turned. They ſtill agree with Ezekiel, that God takes away the heart of Stone, to give them an heart of Fleſh, upon which the Law might be imprinted: But at the ſame time that they ſpeak as the Prophet does, they acknowledge it is Man who is the Maſter of his own Converſion; and that it is ſufficient to conduct him into the place where the Law is taught; for then if his heart be of Stone, it ſhall be changed and ſoft'ned, ſince Job has ſaid that the water diſſolves Stone. The Law is called a Water by Iſaiah, who cried ||, Ho! every one that thirſteth, come ye to the waters, that is to ſay, to the Law to hear it. If the heart of the Sinner be of Iron, when he enters into the Court of Audience, he'll ſoon become a contrite and penitent heart; ſince the Law is the Hammer that breaks whatſoever is moſt hard in pieces.

III. Satisfactions are the Second means whereby Sin is remedied, They formerly believed that Sins were expiated by the Blood of the Sacrifices which were offered in the Temple; but now that Sacrifices are ceaſed, the Jews imagine that the Evils they endure, and the Death of their Children, is a ſatisfaction ſufficient to the Juſtice of God. Some add to the Chaſtiſements which Providence diſtributes to them, Macerations and Auſterities, and others ſupply the defects of antient Victims, by giving their Sins to the Devil, by the Sacrifice of a Cock, which they offer up with impertinent Ceremonies; but this Cuſtom is particular and private, and has alſo been left off in ſeveral places where they uſed it heretofore, becauſe they were laugh'd out of that Superſtition.

IV. Some Rabbies are to be met with, who affirm, that as Adam had begot Sin, ſo the Meſſiah, who is the Second Adam, ſhall aboliſh it. I know not whether this Conceit did not come into their heads ſince the Publication of the Goſpel, when it was made known to them by a great number of Texts taken from the Prophet Iſaiah, that the Meſſiah is to make an abolition of, and propitiation for Sin. We muſt obſerve here four things. One is, that this was not the Notion the Jews had among themſelves concerning the Meſſiah at the time when J. CHRIST firſt appeared: For they ſpoke of nothing but Conqueſts, and Temporal Proſperity; and the Woman of Samaria imagined that the Meſſiah, when he came, would teach new Myſteries, and tell 'em all things; but none ever thought of the Shameful Death, or of the Croſs of the Son of God. If ſince they have made a Meſſiah, the Son of Joſeph, ſuffering and dying, they are the Chriſtians that have forced this Confeſſion and Teſtimony from their Enemies. 2. Thoſe * who believe that the Meſſiah will aboliſh Sin, are but few in Number. On the contrary, they openly deny that he could make a general Expiation for Sin, becauſe being himſelf but a private Perſon, he could only act for himſelf; and they inſult the Chriſtians, who glory in that he hath expiated for Sin, and bruiſed the head of the Serpent, ſeeing that Sin ſtill lives, the Devil reigns, and Death has dominion over them. 3. Thoſe alſo who give to the Meſſiah the Power to aboliſh Sin, don't form to themſelves the ſame Idea of him as the Chriſtians do. They believe only that the Meſſiah will aboliſh the wicked Inclination, and offer it up to God as a Sacrifice; that he will cut off the wicked from the Earth, and thoſe that remain therein ſhall be filled with Knowledge and true Piety.

V. In a word, they † believe that the Meſſiah, who will be perfectly Holy, ſhall convert the Nations, and cauſe the true God to be worſhip'd in all places; but they know nothing of the Satisfaction which he has paid for Sin; and when 'tis objected, that the Temporal Proſperity of a Nation does not deſerve a Meſſiah's coming into the World for, they preſently hit in your Teeth the Sentiment of ſome Chriſtians, who will have him to come down from Heaven, the Throne of his Glory, to make him reign a Thouſand Years here upon Earth.

VI. The great means by which they eſchew, as well as make amends for Sin, is Repentance. They ſay 'tis the Foundation and Support of the World, without which it would not ſubſiſt. 'Tis that which carries a Man to the Throne of God, and obtains Pardon not only for himſelf, but for the whole Univerſe. A Jew being * asked how he hop'd to be juſtify'd, anſwered, by the repentance deſcribed by the Prophets, and which conſiſts in change and newneſs of life; for if the wicked be converted, ſays God in Ezekiel, and will keep my Commandments, I will not remember his Iniquities any more. They cite the Example of David, who after he had taken the Wife of Uriah the Hittite, by his ſolemn Repentance, had a Piety which ſerved for his own Family, for Jeruſalem, and all its Inhabitants. They have the Law in ſo great a veneration, that they think it almoſt the only Sin that damns, for any to believe, that God hath not given it, that his Precepts are unprofitable, or are not worth the trouble of obſerving them, when one has both time and convenience for ſo doing.

VII. Yet in imitation of the antient Phariſees, whoſe Steps they follow, they confine Obedience within very narrow bounds; and tho' they give to Man the power to fulfil the Law perfectly, yet they can't forbear ſaying, that God does not require of us an exact Performance, ſeeing we never found one inſtance of it; and that Moſes himſelf, who brought it down from Mount Sinai, had not obſerved it.

They maintain that they are diſpenſed with the obſervation of ſeveral of the Commandments, becauſe they want both time and conveniency. They are in the right † to alledge (for example) the Sacrifices that can no more be offered, ſince there is now no more a Temple, nor Altar; but they carry their Principle too far by ſtretching it, as they do, even to Moral Precepts, which they diſpence with as well as with thoſe that are Ceremonial. They reckon a Man's merits in proportion to the Number of the Commandments he keeps: But it will ſuffice if he fulfil but one of 'em to have his portion in the glory of the World (or Age) to come. Thus ſays a Rabbi || who has wrote ſince Luther, and whoſe work is in higheſt Reputation and Eſteem among them, tho' he ſhuts up Religion and Piety within too ſtrict bounds.

VIII. Good Works ſeem to them to be abſolutely neceſſary. " They are the Buckler that covers man " from the Juſtice of God: and as He who goes upon " the Sea is obliged to provide himſelf with victu- " als, becauſe he will find none upon the Water; " ſo muſt they whileſt they are living make a Pro- " viſion of good Works, becauſe they can get " none at the Day of Judgment. They diſtinguiſh ten degrees of Sanctification, and tack to every degree its peculiar Reward. God gives the Knowledge of his Secrets to the humble, becauſe the Secret of the Lord is with them that fear him, Pſal. 25. 14. and he ſends forth his Prophetick Spirit to thoſe who have Charity. As Men proportion Puniſhments and Rewards according to their Dignity, ſo Kings treat otherwiſe their Officers and great Miniſters than they do a private Gentleman: Now God being infinite, the Puniſhments which he inflicts, and the Recompences which he diſtributes, ought to be infinite. However, they ſoften that Expreſſion, by ſaying, that when God judges according to the rigour of his Juſtice, the Puniſhment is infinite, eternal, and the reward temporal, becauſe then there is no reſpect to the Perſon, but to the nature of the Action; which is finite, and deſerves but a tranſitory good. 'Twill be ſaid perhaps that Sin, which is finite as well as a good Action, ought not to be puniſhed eternally; but there is a great deal of difference, becauſe God looks to the intention of the Guilty which is extremely evil, As for the Reward, it changes its nature, and from ſlight and tranſitory it becomes eternal, by paſſing from the Throne of Juſtice to that of Mercy: At leaſt thus does a celebrated Rabbi * argue.

IX. They enter into the detail of the Vertues and Precepts which they are obliged to Practiſe, in order to expiate for Sins. They reckon there a Confeſſion of their Faults; I Repent, ſay they, I am aſhamed of my fault, and I never will fall into it again. They believe that Prayer is in the room of the antient Sacrifices, and two Angels are commonly in the Synagogue to obſerve thoſe that Pray: The Angel carries back to his Houſe the Perſon that has done it with Zeal, and then takes his leave of him in telling † him, thine Iniquity is taken away, and thy Sin purged, Iſa. 6. 7. They value their Alms at an exceſſive rate; for they ſay that he who gives a Crown to the Poor, effaces his Sin, and enjoys the Viſion of God. They ſtrengthen themſelves mightily on the Teſtimony of David, who ſays, I will behold thy Face in Righteouſneſs. They mean by that Alms. They have alſo their Faſts, and Macerations; for they whip themſelves unmercifully. They reckon them as ſo many Satisfactions which they pay to Divine Juſtice: " O God, cry they, whileſt thy Sanctuary " was in Being, the Sinner offered Sacrifices to " Thee, and his Crime was thereby expiated; " but now that thy Temple is ruined, I beſeech " Thee, O Eternal God of my Fathers, let the Blood " and Fat of my Body, that diminiſh by the Faſt- " ing and Macerations which I ſuffer, be accepted " by Thee as a Sacrifice: O God, be propitious to " me! When the Sufferings of this preſent Life " are not ſufficient, Death perfects them. O God, let his Death be an expiation for his Sins, and for all Iſrael.

X. All this is common to them with moſt Chriſtians; but we muſt obſerve this ſingularity; that they change their Name in Pennance: They would have ſome reaſon for their ſo doing, if they look'd on that change as a motive to engage them to change their Lives. 'Twas, in ſhort, the conjecture of Maimonides. " They ought to ſay to themſelves, " I am no more the ſame Perſon, ſince I bear not the " ſame Name. My Life therefore ought to be as " pure as it has been Criminal. 'Tis certain, this Cuſtom was derived from their Anceſtors, who caus'd the Proſelytes to change their Names, and they call'd them New Creatures. The Neophytes of the Chriſtians took alſo a New Name in Baptiſm; but the Jews think too highly of themſelves to ſtick there; they are not afraid of ſaying to God in their Publick Prayers, " Lord, let this change of Name ſerve for the " aboliſhing of all the hard and rigorous Decrees " which Thou haſt made, and cauſe Thee to revoke " that Sentence which thou haſt pronounced againſt " me. If Thou haſt pronounced it againſt the Name " of Iſaac which I bore, it ought not to be execu- " ted againſt the Name of Jacob which I now take " upon me. I am at this preſent time become ano- " ther Man; an Infant newly Born, to live a Holy " Life even to the end of my Days. At leaſt the Synagogues of * Italy make uſe of this Prayer.

XI. In fine, how ſlight ſoever theſe Satisfactions be, and how imperfect their good Works, yet they will aſcribe Merit to them; for not only do they expiate for Sin, as they ſay, but they give a Right to Eternal Life. Let us ſee how they explain the thing.

They * believe that there is not any good Work loſt; but it muſt of neceſſity have its Reward in the other Life. God doth not count Sins and good Works ſo as it is commonly imagined; but he always puniſhes the One, and always crowns the other. It would be a great trouble for him to determine within himſelf, if he found a Man that had as many Vertues as Vices; but he Chaſtiſes the Sins that That Man has committed; and after he has made him ſuffer in proportion to the number and enormity of them, he recompences him for what he has done that is good. God, ſay they, hath no reſpect to Perſons. He never receives a Righteous Man without Puniſhing him if he has ſinned; and He never Damns a Wicked Wretch, if he has done ſome good; but he puniſheth Sin alone in the Juſt Man, and after that Rewards him; and he makes the Wicked Happy after he hath puniſhed his Crimes. 'Tis thus it happens that there are no good Works loſt, and every Child of Iſrael has his Portion in the Life to come.

XII. However, there are ſome Doctors † that do acknowledge, "that God juſtifies a Sinner thro a "pure Mercy, without having any regard to his "Meanneſs, or Excellence, or to what he is. They "add, that he who fancies himſelf to be Juſt, either "that God ſends him Wealth as a Reward of his "Vertue, or who believes that Benedictions do not "flow from the Mercy of God, deceives himſelf; "ſeeing the Scripture ſays, that we don't preſent "our Prayers to God, relying upon our own Righ-"teouſneſs, but upon his Compaſſions; and that all "the Graces of God are not the Fruits of Mans Me-"rit; but they are the effects of Divine Mercy. They anſwer alſo in the Jewiſh Catechiſm, that One may hope for Salvation with Confidence, but he ought not to expect it from the Goodneſs of his Works, or the Perfection of his Righteouſneſs, becauſe 'tis Grace which gives it. Yet it muſt be confeſſed, that the generality of the Doctors think like the Phariſee, and make the compenſation of their Works with the recompence. Carret || the Phyſitian of Florence, who was converted about the middle of the XVIth Century, puts this difference between the Chriſtians and the Jews, that the One believe that Man is Saved by his Good Works, and that God renders to every Man a Reward according to his Merits; whereas the Chriſtians cry out and ſay, Enter not into Judgment with thy Servant, O Lord! and are perſuaded that they cannot be Saved but by J. CHRIST.

XIII. The Modern Rabbies are accuſed of teaching Semi-pelagianiſm thro' Polity, to make themſelves a conſiderable Party in certain † Places where they are numerous. In ſhort, Menaſſah, who wrote with great Reputation about the middle of the laſt Age, had embraced that Party; but it is eaſie to juſtifie him, for Policy would rather have engaged him on the other ſide, that ſo he might live under the covert of the Supreme Authority. Beſides, the Modern Jews are not ſatisfied with the Principles of Arminius; for they acknowledge but one Providence that directs Honeſt Actions. In ſhort, this is no new Sentiment among them. Victor à Carbè, who in the beginning of the XVIth Century embraced Chriſtianity, when he was Fifty Years of Age, confeſſed, that the difficulties that followed the Operation of Grace was the longeſt and moſt violent Obſtacle to his Converſion. We ought not to wonder at it, ſeeing St. Cyprian had long before him made the ſame Confeſſion; and the prejudice of the Jew was fortify'd by the Authority of his Fathers, who had almoſt all of them a contrary Sentiment.

XIV. 'Tis certain, Maimonides, being obliged to refute the fatality of the Aſtrologers, who cauſed Events to depend on the influences of the Planets, and made them neceſſary, gave leſs to Grace than the Heathen Philoſophers had done. At leaſt they made Pythagoras to ſay, that it is ridiculous to ſearch elſewhere for Vertue, and that we muſt expect it from the Gods. And Plato maintain'd that this Vertue, which neither came from Nature, nor Study, was given by the Deity; and Seneca *, ſpeaking ſtill more boldly, taught that there is not an upright Soul without God, that a Celeſtial Power agitates a wiſe and prudent Soul, and that it could not ſuſtain it ſelf without ſuch a Succour; whereas Maimonides makes all to depend upon Temper. As God, ſays he, † hath created Man of an upright Stature with Feet and Hands, ſo he hath alſo given him a Will to move himſelf, and to act as he ſhall think fit; and it is the goodneſs of the Temper that makes things eaſie or difficult. He explains thoſe words of Solomon, Who can find a Vertuous Woman? As if it was a Parable by which that Prince deſigned to teach us, that all the Happineſs of Man depended on the Matter whereof he is compoſed. He is Happy when he finds a Matter eaſie, whereof he is Maſter, and which does not over rule him; that is to ſay, that God gives him a happy Temper. He mainly relies upon the Teſtimony of Philoſophers, and upon the Maxim which is laid down, that the fear of God is not in the Hand of Heaven. It depends on Man to obſerve, or not obſerve Laws and Precepts. The Fear of God is of this Order: It does not depend on God, but on the Will of Man.

XV. Other Rabbies pretend † that Adam bored the Ears of Eve to be a ſign of eternal Servitude; but if Sin had carried its Influences and Effects only outwardly, or upon the Woman, they affirm that the will had remained perfectly free. This Liberty is ſo much one of the Appanages belonging unto Man, that he would ceaſe, ſay they, to be a Man, if he ſhould loſe that Power. He would at the ſame time likewiſe ceaſe to be reaſonable, if he loved the good and followed the bad without knowing it, or thro' an inſtinct of Nature; juſt as a Stone that falls from on high, and the Sheep that fly from the Wolf which they * ſmell, and are afraid of: What would become of Puniſhments and Rewards; Threatnings and Promiſes; in a word, of all the Precepts of the Law, if it did not depend on Man to fulfil them, or to violate them? 'Tis certain, the Jews are ſo jealous of this Liberty of indifference, that they imagine it impoſſible for any one to think of this Matter otherwiſe than they do. They are perſuaded that People diſſemble their Opinion every time they take away from free Will any part of its Liberty, and that they are obliged to reſtore it to her ſooner or later, becauſe if there be a Predeſtination, by vertue whereof all Events would become neceſſary, Man would neglect his endeavours to prevent Evils, and to ſeek for what may contribute towards the Defence or Preſervation of his Life; and if it be ſaid, as ſome Chriſtians have done, that God, who hath determined the End, hath at the ſame time determined the Means by which to obtain that End; They hereby ſet up free Will again after they had pulled it down, ſince the choice of thoſe Means depends on the Will of him who either neglects, or makes uſe of them.

XVI. But at leaſt don't they acknowledge Grace? Philo, who lived in the time of J. CHRIST, ſaid that as Darkneſs is diſperſed when the Sun gets up to the Horizon, and that the Earth is filled with its Light; ſo when the divine Sun enlightens a Soul, his Ignorance is diſſipated, and Knowledge comes and ſupplies its room. But theſe are general terms that ſo much the leſs decide the Queſtion, as it does not appear by the Goſpel that regenerating Grace was known; ſince Nicodemus had not any Notion of it, and that others knew not, nor ſo much as heard whether there was any Holy-Ghoſt, Acts 19. 2. the operations whereof are ſo neceſſary for Converſion.

XVII. The Jews have ſaid, that Grace anticipates the Merits of the Juſt. Behold! here is a preventing grace acknowledged by the Rabbies; but however, it muſt not be thought that this was a Sentiment generally received. Menaſſah || has refuted thoſe Doctors that left Tradition, becauſe if Grace anticipated the Will, it would ceaſe to be free, and he has eſtabliſhed but two ſorts of Succours on God's part; One by which he imparts the favourable Opportunities for executing a good deſign that has been formed; and the Other by which he gives Man his Aſſiſtance, when he has begun to live well.

XVIII. It ſeems that by rejecting preventing grace, they acknowledge a Succour from the Deity which follows the will of Man, and influences his Actions. Menaſſah ſays, that one has need of the concurrence of Providence for all honeſt Actions. He makes uſe of the Compariſon of a Man, who willing to load his Shoulders with a Burden, calls ſome body to his ſuccour to eaſe him. The Deity is that ſtrange Arm which comes to help the Juſt, when he has uſed his firſt Endeavours to perform the Law; and that is the Explication of what Joſephus ſaid of the Phariſees, that God's Providence helped them in the practice of good Works. They not only ſay, that God gives his Succour towards the finiſhing a good work which Man has begun; but they cite * the Doctors of greateſt Antiquity, who have proved, that it was impoſſible for the thing to be otherwiſe without deſtroying all the Merit of Works. "They ask whether God, "who would prevent Man, ſhould give a Grace "common to all, or particular to ſome few. If "this efficatious grace were common, why then "are not all Men juſt and ſaved? and if it be "particular, how then can God without injuſtice "ſave ſome, and ſuffer others to periſh? Ought God "to have any reſpect to perſons? It is much more true "to ſay, that God herein imitates Men, who afford "their help to thoſe who they ſee have formed "good Deſigns, and taken ſome Steps towards ma-"king themſelves Vertuous. If Man was ſo wick-"ed as not to be able to do good without Grace, "then God would be the Author of Sin and Cor-"ruption; and tho' that Corruption could not be "abſolutely overcome without help, yet there muſt "be a beginning of the Combat and of the Vi-"ctory.

XIX. They have not explained themſelves fully upon the Nature of that help which ſupports and comforts the Will under all its Neceſſities; but I am perſuaded they limit themſelves to the influences of Providence, and do not diſtinguiſh betwixt That Providence which directs human Events, and that Salutary grace which converts Sinners. R. Eliezer † confirms this Conjecture; for he introduces God opening to Man the Way of Life and Death, and gives him the choice of either. He places ſeven Angels in the Way of Death, whereof four that are full of Mercy ſtand without at each Gate, to keep Sinners from entering therein. What would you have? cryes the firſt Angel to the Sinner that was going in; there is no life here; go, throw your ſelf into the fire; and repent. If he paſſes the firſt Gate, the ſecond Angel ſtops him, and cries, that God will hate him, and caſt him away from him. The third tells him, that his Name ſhall be blotted out of the Book of Life. The fourth conjures him to attend there till God comes to look for Penitents; and if he perſeveres in his Wickedneſs, there is no turning back. The cruel Angels lay hold of, and ſeize him. Thus they give no other ſuccour to Man than the Advertiſement of Angels, who are the Miniſters of Providence.

CHAP. XV.

Concerning the Precepts of the Noachides.

Satyrical Sayings of the Rabbies againſt Noah and Abraham.

I. Precepts of the Noachides. II. Imagined by the Jews. III. Their Excellence. IV. The odd and humerſome Contradiction of the Rabbies. V. The Sin of Nonconformity imputed to Noah. VI. Conformity of Noah with Saturn. VII. The Merits of Abraham. VIII. Hainous Crimes of that Patriarch.

I. THE Jews are perſuaded that the Seven Precepts of the Noachides were ſufficient till Abraham's time; whom God commanded that he ſhould circumciſe himſelf, and pray to him every Morning. Adam had already received Six of thoſe Precepts; but as before the Deluge Men lived on Milk, Fruit and Herbs, and there was no need of forbidding them to eat the Fleſh of any living Creature; therefore the Seventh was not added till the time of Noah. R. Judas believes, that God was pleas'd to lay on the firſt Man a ſtrict Charge not to commit Idolatry; and until Noah every Man lived according to his own Laws; but another maintains the quite contrary, that the Seven Precepts were given to Adam, and they are intimated in thoſe words of Geneſis, the Lord God commanded the Man, ſaying, of every tree of the Garden thou mayeſt freely eat; (Ch. 2. v. 16.) for every word in that Verſe contains a Myſtery. The Lord, that includes the forbidding of Blaſphemy. God, that of Idolatry. The word commanded betokens Judgments; Adam, Homicide; for it is ſpoken of Man. Saying, ſignifies Inceſt. Thou mayeſt eat, denotes the manducation of the fleſh of living Creatures. And laſtly, thoſe words of every fruit, imply Thievery, for there are ſome certain things we cannot enjoy without leave of the Owner.

II. Adam and Noah tranſmitted thoſe Laws to their Poſterity, without writing them down; and therefore they are moſt an end diſtinguiſhed from Ordinances dinances which would not have bound the Conſcience if they had not been written. This Diſtinction we find in Leviticus *, where God promiſes Life to thoſe who ſhall keep his Statutes and his Ordinances. The firſt Word ſignifies the antient Precepts which had been given to the Patriarchs. And by the Second is underſtood the new Laws which God ſet the People of Iſrael when he ent'red into Covenant with them. Moſt of their Divines imagine that thoſe Precepts of the Noachides were common to all Nations. 'Tis what they call the Law of Nature; but I believe they are miſtaken. This is certain, that there is in the Soul a beam of Light to diſcern between Good and Evil, between Vertue and Vice. This Knowledge is much darkened in ſome Countries by the continued Cuſtom of Vice, but it is never abſolutely rooted out and extinguiſhed. 'Tis every where known without being taught it, that we muſt not kill, nor ſteal from our Neighbour; and if the Perſians have thought that Inceſt was allowable, and that the Prince ought to be born from the Union of a Son with his Mother, other Nations have had the laſt deteſtation for ſuch Inceſts. It may be therefore ſaid, that the Precepts of the Noachides make the Natural Law common to all Nations. It ſeems however, that the Precept, which condemns Idolatry, is not a Law of Nature, ſeeing that on the other hand all Men's inclination is to have Gods to go before them, eſpecially if we interpret it in the ſence of the Jews, who maintain, that not only it is not permitted to think of other Gods; but to make to themſelves Subaltern Deities, which hold a kind of Middle between the Creator and Man; for there has ſcarce been a Nation that has not worſhip'd inferiour Intelligences more ſenſible to their Neceſſities, and that has not fallen down before the Images and Statues of Gods. There never was, nor ever will be a Man ſo great a fool, ſays Maimonides †, as to believe that a figure made of Wood, or Braſs, ſhould be the Creator of Heaven and Earth; but they pay adoration to it, becauſe they look upon it as the Image of ſome Power which is intermediate between us and God. This Worſhip is forbidden in one of the Precepts of the Noachides, yet how many Nations have trampled it under their feet? This difficulty, which cannot be removed, convinces me that the Precepts of the Noachides were not diſperſed and publiſhed thro' all Nations, as the Jews own. 'Tis they who have fancied them conformable to the Principles of their Religion, by which Idolatry is ſo ſeverely condemned. In ſhort, 'tis from their Writings that thoſe Seven Precepts given to Noah have been collected, which were little known by the Chriſtians, before they applied themſelves to the reading and tranſlating of their Rabinical Works; the forbidding the fleſh of living Creatures to be eaten, which was given to Noah, is alſo derived from the general Prejudice they have, that the Men of the firſt World lived on Acorns and Pulſe.

'Tis certain, the Jews || cut off from the Number of the Precepts given to Noah, that of honouring Parents, and affirm, that it was given to the Iſraelites on Mount Sinai. However that Precept is dictated by Nature, and all Nations have obſerved it. The Heathen called Piety that Reſpect which was paid to Parents, becauſe they looked on it as a part of the Service which was owing to the Gods. So far was that Law particular to the Jews, as they boaſt of, that there is no Nation whatſoever has more openly corrupted it than they have done. JESUS CHRIST has condemned them already for having rejected and made void that Commandment, by acquitting thoſe who ſaid * to their Father or Mother, it is Corban, that is to ſay a gift, by whatſoever thou mighteſt be profited by me, he ſhall be free, and ye ſuffer him no more to do ought for his Father or his Mother; and the Sages were ſo far from benefiting by ſo juſt a Reproach, that they make the Explication of it eaſy, by teaching us how that they made a Vow, that ſo the Father ſhould not eat what † the Son had prepared. What I do, ſay they, be it to you as a conſecrated thing, and a gift made at the Altar, whereof it is no longer permitted to eat. It ſeems by that, that the Jews have curtailed or enlarged the Precepts of the Noachides according to their own Caprice and Fancy, rather than according to the Rules which Nature has dictated.

III. God began to ſeparate his People by the Circumciſion which he laid upon the Patriarch Abraham. They were obliged to obſerve it in all ſucceeding Ages, and thoſe who violated it by falling into Idolatry, were puniſhed with Death. At leaſt whileſt they continued at Jeruſalem, or in Judea, the worſhipping of falſe Gods, Sacrifices, and the Incenſe that was preſented to them, were reckoned as ſo many Crimes deſerving the laſt Puniſhment; and whether the Idolater worſhipped his falſe Gods conformably to the Rites of his own Nation, or whether he borrowed from the Jews the Worſhip of the true God to pay it to the Idol, he was equally puniſhed. They pretend likewiſe, that Death was inflicted on all thoſe who violated any one of the Seven Precepts without any diſtinction; and not only Murther, but a box of the Ear, given by the Gentiles to a Jew, deſerved the ſame Penalty; becauſe to ſtrike a Jew, is to ſtrike the Cheek-bone of God Almighty. The degree of Puniſhment was not regulated by the Law of the Noachides, but the Sanhedrim decided it according as they ſaw good, or rather the Talmudiſts, who are riſen ſince, have attributed to the Sanhedrim Laws which they never made. In ſhort, they affirm, that thoſe Precepts of the Noachides are ſo holy, that the Heathen who obſerves them, becomes thereby a Saint of the Nations of the World, and will receive the reward of it in the Life to come.

IV. But notwithſtanding the high and invaluable Idea they have of thoſe Precepts, they have but a very ſmall regard for the Patriarch, whoſe Name they bear; or rather they fall into two Exceſſes, for they cry him up to the Skies, and praiſe him hyperbolically, but they degrade him afterwards from that high degree of Sanctity. They carry things too far, and charge him with divers Crimes that he was never guilty of. Noah is not alone expoſed to the inſults of the Rabbies. They are neither more exact, nor more judicious for the other Saints; neither for Abraham, that main Stock of the Nation, whoſe Merits they magnify at ſuch a rate; nor for Moſes, their Legiſlator and Chief of their Prophets; nor for David, the Holieſt of all their Kings; neither did they any more ſpare the Prophets. At the ſame time that they erected ſtately Monuments to their Memories in their Writings, as their Anceſtors did in Judea; ſo no leſs did they attribute to them very great Sins and enormous Faults. This humour and conduct has ſeem'd to us ſo extravagantly odd, that we could not poſſibly paſs it over in ſilence. We ſhall therefore obſerve it proportionably as the different Laws given to that People, will oblige us to ſpeak of the Perſons that have brought 'em.

V. Firſt, they will not derive their Original from Noah, and it is from a ſort of deſpight and reproach that they call all thoſe Nations ſeparated from the Covenant of God, Noachides. It ſeems they are aſhamed to be accounted the Poſterity of that Patriarch, tho' they own it was he who repeopled the Univerſe after the Deluge. Secondly, Some Fathers of the Chriſtian Church have undertaken to juſtify the Drunkenneſs of Noah, becauſe he knew not the Fruit of the Vine. It can't be ſaid he gave himſelf up to Intemperance and Debauchery; he was only ſurpriſed by the Power of a Liquor that he had never drank of before. The Rabbies are more rigid; they condemn the Sin of Noah, and that very juſtly too; for Noah had lived long enough in the firſt World to have underſtood what Wine was. His Co-temporaries, who were ſo corrupted, did not drink always pure Element. But they ſtop not there; thoſe Doctors are divided about the Conſequences of this Adventure. They aſſure us *, that he fell into the Sin of Non-conformity. That was not altogether his fault; for he was (as we ſay) dead aſleep, and Cham took the Advantage of that deep Sleep, to diſhonour his Father. This is all proved by Scripture: For the Hiſtory tells us, that Cham ſaw the nakedneſs of his Father, and the ſame Expreſſion is found in Moſes ſpeaking of Shechem the Son of Hamor the Hivite, Prince of the Country, Gen. 34. 2. who ſaw Dinah, took her, and lay with her, and defiled her. They don't mind that Moſes, relating the laſt Event, expreſſes the act of Concubinage which diſhonoured Dinah, and that he does not charge Cham with an enormous Crime. But this matters not, it is ſufficient that there is in thoſe two Paſſages a like ſort of Expreſſion to draw a diſmal Conſequence from it, and is very injurious to Noah.

VI. Another maintains that Cham deprived his Father of his genitals, that ſo he might have no more Children. This Conjecture would have compleatly finiſhed the Conformity which the Learned have found between Saturn and Noah. The former devoured all his Children, and all the Inhabitants of the firſt World were ſwallowed up by the Deluge, perſuant to the threatnings of Noah.

There are but three Children given to Saturn, Maſter of the whole Univerſe; as Noah, who remained alone in the World, had but three likewiſe. There was no dividing of Stakes among them, their holding all things in common made up that Golden Age ſo much boaſted of under the reign of Saturn. Jupiter, the youngeſt of that Prince's Children, worſhipped in ſo many places under the Name of Hammon, or Ham, was Cham the third Son of Noah. The Saturnalia, or Feſtivals celebrated to Saturn, were a Monument of Noah's Drunkenneſs. In a word, as the antient Painims maintained that Jupiter had gelt his Father, the Rabbies ſay the ſame of Cham; but they do it expreſly againſt Holy Scripture, and meerly thro' vain Conjectures.

VII. The Talmudiſts are ſtill more unjuſt to Abraham their Patriarch, than to Noah, whoſe Original they reject. They make him to march between Shame and Glory; for on one ſide they beſtow mighty Encomiums upon him, and on the other they revile him as cruelly. They affirm that this Patriarch, born of an Idolatrous Father, accuſtomed to worſhip the Fire, or rather the Sun with the Chaldeans; yet however made a ſhift to diſcover an infinite Creator, and to own a Supreme God by the Light of Nature. Some will have it that he went to School to Noah, who was not then dead; but others give him a Strength of Genius ſufficient to diſcover the Truth in the midſt of the groſſeſt Idolatry: No body traced him out the way in this obſcure road; but he alone raiſed himſelf above the Prejudices of Nature, to oppoſe and fight againſt the Religion of his Nation, of his Father, and of his Anceſtors. Abraham did it without the help of any Revelation, purely by his natural ſtrength. But it ought not to be wond'red at, ſeeing at the ſame time they exempt him from Original Sin, and make him the firſt Man, whoſe Conception was immaculate.

God entring into Covenant with this Patriarch, conferred Circumciſion upon him. That holy Myſtery cauſed him to undergo violent Torments; The News of it being carried up to God, he deſcended with his Angels to viſit the Sick Man; but was ſurpriſed to find him ſtanding at the Tent-door. From thence God took occaſion to prove the excellency of Circumciſion to the Angels, telling them that Abraham, who fell proſtrate on the Ground when ever God deſcended, now had the Strength and Courage to bear his preſence ſince he was circumciſed. God moreover deſigning to tempt Abraham, bored a hole in the Earth ſo deep that it went down to Hell; from whence there iſſued ſuch a thick black vapour and terrible heat, that it almoſt ſtifled and burnt up Abraham. This was advantageous to the Patriarch, becauſe it occaſioned God to come down, and make him a viſit; becauſe he ſaw the Lord without being affrighted; and becauſe he ſuffered Pains like to thoſe of the Damned, either in his Conſcience, or in his Body, and came out of that Temptation victorious and triumphant.

In ſhort, the Talmudiſts ſay, that as the Vine is ſupported by Poles and dead Branches, ſo the Children of Iſrael have for their ſupport, the Dead, Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob. They count alſo, that the Merits and remembrance of thoſe Patriarchs make the Prayers of the Saints acceptable and well pleaſing to God. Elijah Prayed unſucceſsfully upon Mount Carmel, until he had called to his remembrance the Lord God of Abraham, Iſaac and of Iſrael. Neither did Moſes know how to drive away the five Angels whom God had let looſe againſt the People of Iſrael for their Sin about the Molten Calf; but when he repreſented to God the Merits of Abraham, three of thoſe Angels took wing and away they went; the fourth was not to be ſeen long after, and Moſes threw the laſt, called Miccharon, or the Boyling of Choler, into a deep Pit where he remained a Priſoner, and as a Man enchained. Yet he roſe up again every time that Iſrael Sinned, to gnaw and torment them. Moſes being Dead, God Buryed that Prophet near to Miccharon, who failed not to riſe from time to time as they tranſgreſſed, to puniſh the Sins of the People; but he trembles whenever he beholds Moſes his Tomb, and retires. However it be, the Merits of Abraham are ſufficient to appeaſe the Anger and Wrath of God, when it is never ſo violently incenſed, and to remove the Puniſhments that he had prepared for them. There can nothing be ſaid ſtronger, and therefore Bartolocci † concludes from it, that the Synagogue has all along invoked the Saints which confer ſo great Benefits and Bleſſings.

VIII. Now, after having ſo much extolled this Patriarch, they cover him again with as much confuſion and ſhame. We will not count as any thing that they make Abraham impotent. They not only ſay that Sarah was Barren; that ſhe was deprived of the Parts neceſſary for Generation; but they affirm the ſame thing of her Husband. They make him alſo Jealous even to ridiculouſneſs; for Jarchi reports, upon the Credit of the Fathers, that when he went into Egypt, he ſhut up his Wife in a Cheſt to conceal her; but ſhe was diſcovered at the Cuſtom-Houſe, for even in thoſe Days the Officers ſearched very narrowly into the Merchandizes imported. Pharaoh, who was there preſent, charmed with her Beauty, took her away from her Husband, who to preſerve his Life, affirmed conſtantly that ſhe was his Siſter.

Siſter. All this is but a ſmall Matter. This laſt Action has alſo found Panegyriſts among the Fathers of the Chriſtian Church. But they make Abraham a Tyrant; for he had three Hundred and eighteen Rabbies in his Houſe; and inſtead of permitting them to Study || the Law, he uſed violence towards 'em, to oblige them to take up Arms, to follow him to the Battle againſt Chedorlaomer, King of Elam. He became too ſo inſolent as to preſume to demand of God his moſt hidden Secrets. Shew me now thy way that I may know thee. This Inſolence ſo full of Blaſphemy is grounded upon what Abraham asked God, how he ſhould know that the Land of Canaan ſhould belong to him. Inſtead of ſerving God, that had made ſo advantageous a Promiſe, he forced his own Domeſticks to quit the true Religion, to fall back and plunge themſelves again into Idolatry. He met with ſome Reſiſtance among them at firſt; but the more eaſily to ſubdue and conquer them, he diſtributed his Treaſures to them, and remitted them into the Hands of the King of Sodom who demanded them with earneſtneſs.

He exalted himſelf above the Properties of God; he kept Slaves from marching under the Wings of the Almighty, and evacuated all the Knowledge they had of the Law, as one draws Water out of a Veſſel, into which it had been poured before. Theſe are the Enormous Crimes that are built upon what the King of Sodom ſaid to Abraham, † give me the Perſons or Souls, and take the Goods to thy ſelf: for they ſuppoſe that Abraham accepted the offer of that Prince, who made this demand for no other end than to keep Men from walking under the Wings of Gods Protection, that is to ſay, from Obeying his Laws, and to plunge themſelves over Head and Ears into Idolatry again. Yet Moſes ſays in expreſs Terms, that the Patriarch refuſed the King of Sodom's Demands. Thus do they outrage him, when the Calumny is plain and evident, and refuted by the very words of Moſes. However after all, 'tis from this Patriarch that the Jewiſh People do themſelves the Honour to derive their Original, 'tis from him they have received Circumciſion; which after it had been laid aſide in Egypt, was re-eſtabliſhed by Moſes.

I. MAN being obliged to live in Society, ſtood in need of Laws to regulate the chief Actions of his Life. As the Tempers are different, it is impoſſible that all ſhould concur to the publick Weal, and live with uprightneſs and ſincerity. God therefore bound his People by Ordinances which he charged Moſes to deliver to them. The Veneration they have preſerved for the Name of that Legiſlator, is very great. They exalt him beyond all the Prophets, and give him three advantages which they ſay the others had not.

II. Firſt, God was pleaſed to reveal his Will by the Miniſtry of the Angels that ſpoke, or that made themſelves viſible to other Prophets, but he ſpake * immediately to Moſes, Face to Face as a Man ſpeaketh to his Friend, Exod. 33. 11. and therefore the People cryed out, ſaying, † We have ſeen this Day that God doth talk with Man, and he liveth. 'Tis true, Iſaiah and Micah aſſure us, that God ſpoke to them, but it was in a Dream, and the Objects were lively ſet out to their Imaginations; whereas || God communed with Moſes from above the Mercy-Seat, from between the two Cherubims, and the Imagination bore no part there. God adverti ſed his People that That ſhould not laſt always, but that he would ſend an Angel to lead 'em into the Land of Canaan: ſays God †, Behold, I ſend an Angel before thee, to keep thee in the way, and to bring thee into the place which I have prepared. God never ſent an Angel to an entire Nation or People. It would be then to no purpoſe to command the People of Iſrael to reſpect the Angel: But God ſays to that People, You ſhall not always have the Viſion to dazle you at the bottom of Mount Sinai: The Cloud and the Fire ſhall not always reſt upon the Tabernacle; but the Angel that I ſhall ſend to the Prophets, which ſhall conduct you, ſhall take the Cities of Canaan, &c. and ſhall teach you what you are to do, therefore do not deſpiſe him. In ſhort, God who had communed with Moſes on Mount Sinai, was pleaſed to reveal his Will by an Angel whom he commonly ſent to the Prophets.

III. The ſecond advantage of Moſes conſiſted in the degrees of Knowledge which God had given him; for not being contented to ſhew himſelf to him as he did to Abraham, he made himſelf be known † by his Name of Jehovah There aroſe not a Prophet ſince in Iſrael like unto Moſes, whom the Lord knew Face to Face.

To conclude, the other Prophets wrought Miracles but ſeldom, and to private Perſons only; whereas thoſe of Moſes were frequent, publick, and done in the ſight of a whole Nation. Moſes † was therefore diſtinguiſhed from the reſt of Men by his Miſſion, by his Knowledge, and by his Miracles.

IV. Thus

IV. Thus the exact and judicious Divines argue; but there are others of them who ſeem to be no leſs Famous and Celebrated, that put another gloſs upon the Hiſtory of their Legiſlator. The Miſchief is Antient, ſince that Joſephus, being convinced that Moſes had himſelf prepared the Memoirs of his own Life, was obliged to Copy from them, but yet for all that has gone quite from it, and patched together ſeveral Romances to his Hiſtory. Joſephus is ſo little known to the Jews, who value nothing but what is wrote in their own Tongue, that I dare not decide whether it be from him the Doctors have borrowed what they ſay concerning this Antient Legiſlator. There is agreement enough in their Writings to perſuade a Reader that they have been ravaging from one and the ſame Source; but perhaps that Source may be more Antient than Joſephus; that there was a Book of the Life of Moſes where Fables might be intermixed with Truth. Joſephus and the Talmudiſts, having read the ſame Book, may agree in ſome Circumſtances, and differ in others. This ſeems to me to be more probable, than to ſay that they have Copied Joſephus, whoſe Hiſtory does not appear ever to have been Read, or cited by the Talmudiſts: We will abridge their recital as much as is poſſible.

V. Amram the Father of Moſes, being vexed at Pharaoh's Edict, that would not permit him to bring up his Male Children, put away his Wife, becauſe he was perſuaded that Daughters would not countervail the trouble he gave himſelf about them, Fruſtra laborabat cum ea. All the World perceived he was in the right of it, and followed his Example: But Mary the Daughter of Amram, and a Propheteſs, made him change his Opinion, becauſe one was not ſure that the Edict of that Prince would continue for ever; and that he himſelf was more obdurate than Pharaoh, who only cauſed the Male Children to be put to Death, whereas he ſet himſelf againſt the Generation of both Sexes, So he took his Wife again, and had Moſes by her, who was ſaved from the Hands of the Commiſſioners. Moſes came into the World circumciſed, and filled with a Miraculous Vertue; and therefore † Bathia, the Daughter of Pharaoh, loved him moſt tenderly. She was Leprous, which made her often go to Waſh her ſelf in the River Nile, where ſhe found the Child, and ſhe had no ſooner touch'd the Ark, which was among the Flags by the Rivers brink, wherein the Child was laid, but ſhe was healed. He would never ſuck an Egyptian Woman, for fear leaſt ſhe ſhould one day or other boaſt ſhe had given the Breaſt to him who had ſpoke to God Mouth to Mouth; wherefore Mary his Siſter cauſed a Nurſe of the Hebrew-Women to come and Suckle it, who was his own Mother.

VI. Moſes, thus ſaved by a Miracle, was brought by Bathia into the Arms of her Father. The Child, who was then but Three Years Old, took the Crown from the King's, and put it on his own Head. Joſephus makes him to trample it under his Feet. Balaam, who lived then at the Court of Egypt, and was a bitter Enemy of the Jews, thought this ſo bad a Preſage that he adviſed to put the Child to Death; but an Angel, coming in the interim from God, inſpired the Magicians with a deſign to try, whether Moſes had done this Inſult knowingly, or only by accident. They ſate before him ſome Diamonds and ſome hot Coals. The Angel pulled out his Hand, and made him to take the Coals and prefer them to Diamonds. He lifted them up to his Mouth, and burnt his little Tongue, which cauſed an imperfection in his Speech all his Life after. His Simplicity was known by that, and he eſcaped Death at Twenty Eight Years of Age, or as others ſay at Twenty Nine. The Story thus, Dathan being rudely treated by an Egyptian that made him a Cuckold, complained heavily to Moſes of both the Cuckoldom and Inſult, which was ſo much the more barbarous, as that he had ſurpriſed the Egyptian violating his Bed the Night before. Moſes revenged the Affront by killing the Egyptian. Dathan reſolved after this to put away his Wife thus guilty of Adultery, but Abiram his Brother would not ſuffer him to do it; whereupon the two Brothers quarrelled, and had much ado to reſtrain themſelves from falling to Fiſty-cuffs. Moſes interpoſing to make them Friends, they reproached him for his late Murther, and threatned to have him before Pharaoh; and make him loſe his Head: but his Neck became Marble, and was ſo hard, that when the Executioner went about to cut it off, the Sword could not make any impreſſion in the Neck, but in the reverberating, it cut off the Neck of the Headſman.

Solomon ſung of this Miracle, when he ſaid to the Spouſe, thy Neck is as a Tower of Ivory; and Moſes returns thanks to God for his protecting him from Pharaoh's Sword. Thoſe who were the Witneſſes of this great Event, became either Deaf, or Dumb, or Blind, ſo that they did not perceive when Moſes fled: Pharaoh too loſt the uſe of his Speech for an Hour, which kept him from giving the neceſſary Orders for taking of him up.

VII. He retired to Korkon King of Ethiopia, who had then left his Kingdom to carry the War into Armenia. Whileſt he was abſent, Balaam, who had alſo left Egypt, cauſed the People to revolt againſt their Prince. Moſes took the Intereſt of the depoſed King, who Died before his Re-eſtabliſhment. They made him Captain General of the Army; and promiſed him in Marriage the Queen that remained a Widow. He prepared for the War, and beſieged the Capital, round about which Balaam had placed an infinite number of Serpents, to render the approach to it more difficult: But Moſes, a more ſubtle Magician than Balaam, called the Demons to his Succour, and made uſe of all that Idolatry could furniſh him with, took the City by his Enchantments which were much ſuperiour to thoſe of Balaam, and became King and Husband to the Queen Dowager. It may be eaſily perceived that there is here ſome relation to what Joſephus reports of Moſes his going into Ethiopia, where the Princeſs fell in Love with him; but Joſephus, more judicious than the Talmudiſts, has not made Moſes a Magician that made uſe of the Succour of the Demons, and of whatſoever Idolatry could furniſh him with, to vanquiſh Balaam. But thus we ſee that to make a Hero, they do not care if they make a kind of Devil of him.

VIII. His Reign in Ethiopia laſted Forty Years, but at laſt the Queen complained that Moſes did not carry it well towards her. He ſpake very ſeldom to her; and careſſed her yet leſs. She ſaid alſo that he had not conſummated Marriage; ſhe complained very late, and a Woman that had been a Widow for Forty Years might be diſagreeable enough to diſguſt Moſes. But be it as it will, they roſe up againſt him, and he was obliged to take his flight to Jethro, in whoſe Garden he met with that Famous Rod, which God had created at firſt for Adam, which he had given to Abraham, which Joſeph had left in Succeſſion to the Kings of Egypt, whether Jethro had carried it when he quitted their Court, and planted in his Garden, from whence none had been able to pluck it up till Moſes. The Name of God was engraven upon that Rod, and it was a Source that abounded with Miracles. Jethro was forced to give his Daughter to Moſes, becauſe it was a Reward promiſed to him who had ſtrength to pluck up that Rod. She had a Son by him; Jethro would not ſuffer them to circumciſe him, becauſe he had ſtipulated that his firſt Born ſhould be an Idolater; and Moſes had promiſed he ſhould with an Oath which he durſt not break, God therefore ſent two Angels immediately to ſwallow up that Legiſlator, ſo that nothing of him ſhould remain but his Feet. Let us try now to get into the Senſe of theſe Hyperbolical and Figurative expreſſions, which inſinuate only that the Wrath of God was ſo great for the delay of this Circumciſion, that it had gone very near that that Prophet had been ſwallowed up; and it is thus alſo that we are to explain what they ſay, that Moſes was a Giant of ſix Cubits high, to teach us that we ought to look on him as a Hero very much exalted in Knowledge above the reſt of Mankind. In fine, when they aſſure us that Moſes, as faltering in his Speech as he was, however failed not to make his Voice to be heard even to the end of all Egypt, we are not to impute any Crime to them as if they told a Swinger, nor ſo to take it according to the expreſs Letter, ſince they only mean by it, that the noiſe of his Miracles reſounded into all places. But amidſt all theſe circumſtances we may ſtill ſee the mighty fondneſs of the Jews for the Name of JEHOVAH, as if it could produce wondrous Miracles. Moreover, they accuſe him for having Sacrificed his Son to Idols.

IX. When the time came that Moſes was to leave Egypt, he cauſed his Wife and Children to be ſet upon that Aſs, which had carried Iſaac into the Land of Moriah † to be offered there for a Burnt Offering to the Lord upon One of the Mountains, and upon which the Meſſiah will one day come. Great numbers of the Iſraelites being bewitched to the Pleaſures of Egypt, refuſed to go out with the reſt of the Nation, therefore God ſlew them; but there was Darkneſs and Obſcurity in Egypt for three days together, for fear leſt the Egyptians ſhould be hardened, in ſaying, that the Iſraelites had been ſmitten as well as themſelves. They were ſorely put to it, when they found themſelves on the brink of the Red-Sea perſued by Pharaoh and his Army. The Angels themſelves were ſo afflicted at it, that they had not the Courage to ſing one ſingle Song all that Night; yet however God had put a Wall of Fire between his People and the Egyptian Army, ſo that there was no reaſon for them to be afraid. He alſo commanded Moſes to divide the Red-Sea, but he could not compaſs it; he ſtretched out his Hand and his Rod over the Sea, but it was to little purpoſe; he cauſed Joſeph's Coffin to be brought but with no better Succeſs; not knowing what to do, at laſt he diſcovered the place where he had been Circumciſed, Berith Mila. They bluſh not to cauſe the moſt indecent Actions to be done to Moſes, before the Face of a whole People, to ſhew that there was nothing too Holy to effect this Miracle, and that God was neceſſitated to come down to make the Waters of the Sea to go back by a ſtrong Eaſt Wind, and be divided, which is another Story.

X. The Deſign and End of Moſes in getting the People out of Egypt; was to ſettle the Empire in his own Houſe; it was but upon that Condition that he yielded to carry the Orders of God to Pharaoh; and when he knew that his Ambition would not be ſatisfied, becauſe the Authority would not go to his Children, he ſaid to God plainly, * Send, I pray thee to Pharaoh; by the hand of him whom thou wilt ſend, that is to ſay, ſome body elſe, and not me. In ſhort, he did not care for the People of Iſrael; and when the Lord † ſaid unto him, what is that in thine hand? Moſes anſwered, It was a Rod; God intimated thereby, that he deſerv'd to be ſcourged with that Rod, becauſe he Slandered the good People to God, and as the Devil did by Job, he calumniated the Iſraelites before his Throne. That appeared alſo by the change that happened to his Hand, which when at God's Command he put it into his Boſom, and took it out, was become Leprous white as Snow; for as Mary, his Siſter, was ſtruck with Leproſy for ſeditiouſly ſpeaking againſt her Brother; ſo Moſes received the ſame Chaſtiſement becauſe of the Reproaches he every day ſpread before the Tribunal of God againſt his Brethren. Moſes therefore was ambitious, a Tyrant, and an Enemy of the People ſubjected to his Laws.

XI. There is ſcarce a Crime wherewith the Talmudiſts do not charge this their Legiſlator. He cannot be more ruggedly treated than by putting him into Parallel with Balaam, and yet they own there never was in Iſrael a Prophet like unto Moſes. One cannot more groſsly abuſe him, than to ſee him upon the ſame Level with Balaam; for at the ſame time they tell us, that there never was a Prophet in Iſrael like unto Moſes, they own that there was one among the Gentiles no ways inferior to him. Moſes had three conſiderable Excellencies above Balaam; He ſpoke to God, ſtanding Mouth to Mouth, † and Face to Face; whereas Balaam proſtrated himſelf before God, and underſtood his Will, but darkly, and by way of Symbols or Signs; but this very ſame Balaam had on the other hand three Excellencies above Moſes. He knew who ſpoke to him, which Moſes did not. He ſpoke to him at all times, and penetrated into the moſt private Deſigns of the Deity; and * therefore they compare him to an able Cook, who underſtood how to provide ſuch Victuals as he knew his Maſter would be pleas'd with. Beſides all this, they tell us, that Moſes was 1. An Ignoramus. He acknowledged it himſelf; for he ſaid to the People, I cannot go, nor come any farther; that is to ſay, I cannot enter into the Explanation of the Law, nor get out the Difficulties that I find therein; for the Sources of Wiſdom and Traditions were concealed from him. I confeſs there are ſome Chriſtians that make the ſame clamour againſt Moſes; but are they well grounded? 2. He owns himſelf to be as great a Sinner as thoſe who brought the Deluge upon the Earth; abandoning himſelf to Women, and plunging into the moſt dreadful Debaucheries; for he ſays, that Corah, Dathan and Abiram will riſe up in Judgment againſt him with thoſe famous, or puiſſant People. The Rabbies affirm, that thoſe famous People † ſignifie Moſes; and as the Wicked of the Deluge bear the ſame Name of famous People; it is aſſured us, that he had committed the ſame Crimes as they had, and that his Sins cheer'd up their Spirits. The Proof is ridiculous; but the Accuſation of it is no leſs real. Beſides, we produce it, that we may the better judge of the Genius of the Rabbies, and of the manner how they play with the Scripture, to find that in it which is not there: for all their Accuſations are grounded upon ſuch like Interpretations. 3. Moſes being of a revengeful temper, reſolved to have ſatisfaction for the Inſult had been made upon him; and therefore he put a deadly Poiſon into the Cenſers. Nadab and Abihu were conſumed by the ſame Artifice. Thus we ſee Moſes became a Poiſoner, for the ſake of deſtroying his Enemies.

XII. He wrought divers and ſundry Miracles, to confirm thereby his Authority, and among others, the Bread failing in the Wilderneſs, he cauſed it to rain Manna; and tho' that Shower of Bread which fell down from Heaven was in a prodigious quantity, yet the Rabbies fail not to embroider and imbelliſh it with ſo many Circumſtances as render it incredible. The Manna fell round about the Tents of the Righteous who gathered it without any trouble; The middle ſort were obliged to go out of their Houſes to gather it a great way off; but the wicked ran from ſide to ſide, and from one place to another, and quite tyred themſelves with finding it. It was true Bread for the Righteous, who did eat it juſt as it fell from Heaven: And it was a Cake to the middling ſort, who were therefore neceſſitated to light a Fire, and to knead and bake it; but the trouble was much greater to the Wicked, for they were forced to get it ground at the Mill, and do I know not what to it. With the Manna fell pretious Stones which enriched the Children of Iſrael. It was higher on the Earth than the Waters at the Deluge. The Sun one day having ſhone hot upon it, it reſolved like Snow; which produc'd Brooks and Torrents of Manna. The Goats and Stags that drank of thoſe Waters, were fed and nouriſhed by it. The Infidel Nations took thoſe Beaſts in Hunting, and having eaten of them, found their Fleſh ſo ſucculent and juicy, and of ſo particular a pleaſing taſte, that they every where magnified the Felicity of the Jewiſh People, who were ſo deliciouſly nouriſhed. The Scripture calls it the Corn of Heaven, and Angels food, Pſalm 78. 24, 25. becauſe they lived after the manner of Angels, without being obliged to any Evacuations. Moſes made the Sun to ſtand ſtill. If he had not wrought that Miracle, they would have gone near to have placed Joſhua above him. It was he likewiſe that built the Ark of the Covenant; there were two of them: The One made by Bezaleel of Shittim-wood, which was taken in the time of Eli; the Other that Moſes had made to carry up to the top of Mount Sinai, when he went thither to receive the Law; for if he had received the Tables without having firſt prepared an Ark, he would not have known where to have put them. They pretend to have ſeen this Ark at Rome, where they keep it moſt charily and ſumptuouſly, and where the People pay a kind of Adoration to it. Marlian||, who could never find the Golden Table and Candleſtick in the triumphal Arch of Titus, tho' Joſephus aſſures us, that thoſe two Monuments were carried to Rome with the Law deſpoiled, new, and unknown, yet has there moſt ſenſibly obſerved the Ark of the Covenant; from whence he concludes it remains there ſtill; that is to ſay, he has ſeen in the triumphal Arch of Titus what was not to be ſeen there. That which is made to paſs at Rome for the Ark, is nothing but a huge worm-eaten Cheſt. The Ark was loſt from the Ruin of the firſt Temple, and n'er found afterwards. They may tell what Stories they pleaſe of the Honours that are paid to it at Rome, and ſtrengthen its worſhip upon the Authority of the Council of Trent; but for all that it is true, that they throw their Adorations at Random, or rather are deceived about the Object they think they adore. However it be, Moſes, that miraculous Man, ſtill led the People on with much harſhneſs and ſeverity; and Jethro could not endure that the People ſhould ſtand in the preſence of Moſes, who was Sitting as on a Chair of State, and cenſured him for that Pride and Haughtineſs which was a diſhonour to the Nation.

XIII. In fine, he received the Law, and that was a new matter to Miracles. Moſes only went to Mount Sinah, where he found a Cloud that took him away, and carried him into Heaven. In his way he met with an Angel, named Kemmuel, Chief of twelve thouſand Angels, who would needs join with him; but in pronouncing the twelve Letters which God had taught him, when he ſpake to him out of the burning Buſh, the Angel flew away a thouſand Stadia, or Paces off. Moſes continuing on his Way, met with another Angel, named Hadarniel, who put him into a pannick fear, for that Angel had a moſt terrible Voice. He cauſed it to be reſounded forth into two hundred thouſand Spheres environed with a lambent fire, and he had under his Command a mighty number of Angels. Moſes his fright was ſo great that he would have got out of the Cloud, if God had not repreſented to him that it was a Scandalous Shame for him to tremble at the ſight of an Angel, a Miniſter of the Deity; after he had had the courage to bear the Preſence of God in the Buſh, and the curioſity to ask of him his Name. This Remonſtrance had its Effect: Moſes took heart upon it, and in ſaying over the Seventy two Letters, he in his turn made the Angel to quake with fear, who cryed out to him, all trembling and flying, O Moſes! how happy are You that know what the Angels are ignorant of. Thus it ſeems the Angels know not in Heaven the ineffable Name of God. In ſhort, Moſes being arrived, continued forty Days without Eating, that ſo he might not trouble the Order of Heaven, where there is no need of Suſtinence.

XIV. God gave the Laws to Moſes Engraven on two very thick and pretious Stones. The Letters carried themſelves, and Moſes along with them; but when they drew near the Camp, and heard the Sound of the Trumpets, and ſaw the Idolatry of the People, thoſe Letters graven with the Finger of God, flew away, and the two Tables deſtitute of the Spirit that ſuſtained them, became ſo heavy in Moſes his hand, that he was forced to let them fall, and by that fall they broke in pieces. Thus the Rabbies chooſe rather to animate Letters, and give 'em an imaginary vertue, than to confeſs Moſes his Zeal, that was provoked to ſee the Sin of the People; and who being concern'd for the Glory of his God, broke the Tables with Grief to ſee how they did violate them.

XV. We muſt not charge the whole Nation with theſe Puerilities. For there are * Divines found in it that do literally explain what Moſes ſays of the Law which God gave upon Mount Sinai. 'Tis certain, they obſerve that the Tables upon which the Law was written, are called † the work of God, to teach us that they were Tables of natural Stone; as the Cedars of Lebanon, and the Mountains of the Earth are the Work of God. O Lord! how || manifold are thy works? in wiſdom haſt Thou made them all, ſays the Royal Prophet in the ſame ſence. Moſes ſays alſo that the Law, the two Tables of Teſtimony, was * written with the finger of God; as the Pſalmiſt aſſures us, that the Heavens are the work of his hands. And Maimonides cenſures Onkelos for having tranſlated that the Law was graven by the finger of God, as if the finger had been an Inſtrument, which the Deity had made uſe of to write the ten Commandments. This ſhews the delicacy and good ſence of that Divine, who would not have any thing material imagined of God, but who aſcribes the Scripture of God to the Word, or rather to that ſame Will that had created the Heavens. But his Cenſure is not juſt, for Onkelos has remitted in his Paraphraſe the very ſame word that Moſes had made uſe of. Moreover *, they lend him a Conceit which is no longer found in the Targum, that remains with us. Onkelos does not ſay that the finger was an Inſtrument God made uſe of to write withal. If they did read ſo in the antient Paraphraſe in the time of Maimonides, the Copyiſts have left it out ſince.

XVI. God had ſpoke, and the noiſe of his Voice reſounded thro' all the Camp. Some Doctors believe however, that God was pleaſed to make the two firſt Commandments to be heard, and that the Others ſhould be delivered in a lower tone. The reaſon alledged for this difference is a very bad One; for they'll needs have it that the other Precepts were to be learnt by a particular Revelation, and by the Cabala. But Maimonides † thinks that the confuſed ſound of the Voice of God came to all the People, and that Moſes only could diſtinguiſh the words which he pronounced; and he encourages himſelf upon the Authority of Onkelos, who always makes God ſpeak to Moſes, and he had derived that Tradition from Eleazer and Joſhua, which proves it to be very Antient.

XVII. The Jews lay the Shame and Scandal of the Golden-Calf upon the Heathens who had followed the People into the Wilderneſs, and being accuſtomed to their antient Idolatry, fell into it again; not contented to clear themſelves at the expence of the Idolatrous Nations, they go up as high as Moſes, and even charge him with being the firſt Cauſe of this Revolt, that was the occaſion of ſo many Tears and ſo much Bloodſhed. Moſes had had the Complaiſance to ſuffer the Iſraelites to pillage the Egyptians of their Jewels of Silver and Jewels of Gold and Raiment, and to grant them whatſoever they demanded for the gratifying of their Senſes, and how could they but offend under a Maſter ſo indulgent to the Paſſions of the Multitude. " The Prince who brings up his Son " in a Criminal Softneſs and Effeminacy, who fur- " niſhes him with Money to laviſh away in Riot- " ings and Exceſſes, and who leads him to the " very Threſhold of Uncleanneſs and Incontinency, " is he not guilty of all the Sins he commits? Why may not the ſame be ſaid of Moſes, who gave full liberty to the Paſſions of the People, that marched under his Government. God, who knew this fault of his Miniſter, ſaid unto him, go || get thee down; that is to ſay, he diſcharged him of his office. I have not, ſaid God to Moſes, entruſted thee with this dignity but for the ſake of my people; take notice then that this day thou art fallen from it; and the very ſame moment Moſes was excommunicated by a Decree from the Sovereign Tribunal. He ſeverely puniſhed the worſhipping of the Golden-Calf, he burnt it in the fire, and ground it to powder, and made the Children of Iſrael drink of it; and thoſe who had kiſſed that Idol moſt heartily, were ſurpriſed to ſee their Lips turned to Gold. The Levites who knew them by that Token, killed above Three thouſand of them.

XVIII. Moſes added to the Law the Traditions he had received vivâ voce in his Commerce with God, and he repeated them to Aaron. He afterwards acquainted his Children with them; then the Chiefs of the People had them; And laſtly, the People heard the repetition of this Oral Law. I imagine to my ſelf, that they deſigned to diſtinguiſh the different degrees of Knowledge which are neceſſary to Mankind. Thoſe degrees of Light and Study, much inferiour in the common People, ought to riſe proportionably in thoſe who are to exerciſe the important Offices in the Church, and who ought to be the Head of them. And therefore it is ſuppoſed, that Aaron heard the repetition of the Oral Law even five times over, and the People heard it but once. It appears alſo by that, that Moſes is accuſed of having equall'd Traditions to the Law which God had entruſted him with.

XIX. The Divine Law was received with ſo much the more reſpect as it revived the Precepts of the Noachides, common to moſt Nations, and which could not, without belying our Senſes, be denied but that God had given them, ſince he had appeared upon Mount Sinai with a Glory becoming his Omnipotence, and which made all the Nation to tremble. Some are perſuaded that the Modern Jews have degenerated; and that they are ſo far from keeping that awful reverence for the Law which their Anceſtors had paid to it, that they reject the Obſervation of it, and declare themſelves Enemies to good Works. This is an exaggeration. We muſt do them Juſtice, and confeſs, that they have more Inclination and byaſs for certain leſs matters of Devotion, than for the more eſſential Duties of Religion; but this fault too is common with devout Chriſtians as well as with them. It muſt be acknowleged alſo, that they have buried the Law under a great many Traditions and Caſes of Conſcience which are very Childiſh. In advancing the Authority of the Doctors, they have much weakened that of God. In a word, they have a wonderful affection for Ceremonies, which infects their Devotion; but in the main they do believe that Holineſs is the only way to pleaſe God, and that it is the exact Obſervation of his Laws that obtains the Recompences of this preſent Life, and will do of that which is to come. This Article deſerves to be a little inſiſted on by us, and therefore to clear up their true Sentiments about this matter, we will divide this Chapter.

A Proſecution of the ſame Matter.

I. THE Jews look upon the Law of Moſes as a Divine Revelation. Ceremonies were inſtituted by God, that there might be an Order in the Church, and that the People who ſhould practiſe it, might by that means become capable of more ſtrictly uniting themſelves to the Deity. There was beſides that a more admirable and excellent end; " but " * That is not for us to ſearch too curiouſly " into, nor to penetrate into the Reaſons which " made God to cauſe Himſelf to be adored by Sa" crifices,

" crifices, and to prefer the Ceremonial Law to " all Others.

The Obſervation * of the Moral Law, and the execution of all its Precepts is Neceſſary. They make it alſo the moſt important Article of their Religion, next to that of the Meſſiah. The Love of God, and that of one's Neighbour, are placed at the Head of all the Precepts that are to be obeyed: But they reckon up 613 of them which are all obligatory, and cannot be violated without Sin; and they are ſo far from rejecting the Neceſſity of good Works, that they teach and multiply them. They maintain alſo that the Law is without defect, and may be accompliſhed without trouble. They oppoſe the Worſhip which requires and enjoins tireſome Travellings that are a wearineſs to the Fleſh; which however ſome Chriſtians give themſelves by making long Pilgrimages, and retiring into Deſerts, there to mortify their Bodies by Auſterities for I know not how many Years together; they teach their Diſciples that the Moſaical Law hath nothing ſo hard in it, and yet there wants no degree to arrive at its Perfection. It little matters, ſaid Sangarus to the King of Cozar, whether a Man be lean, or fat, rich, or poor, provided he does but obſerve the Law. Faſting contributes but indirectly to the worſhip of God: As the Joy which one has on the Sabbath day, is but a very indirect Adoration; ſo the ſame thing may be ſaid of Sorrow and Abatement occaſioned by Faſts. One † may be Rich, provided that he employs his Riches to the Glory of God, and the Education of his Family. God, who took care to enrich Abraham and the Patriarchs, ſufficiently inſtructed us that it was no Crime for us to labour to be ſo too; but we muſt fix our Hearts and intention in Prayers; and the keeping of the Sabbath unites us more cloſely to God than Phariſaiſm or Nazaritiſm; than Retirements and Auſterities. " Faith || does not conſiſt " only in profeſſing a Truth that is known, but we " muſt believe it; to carry it with Gravity in the " Heart; to flee from every thing that may be like " to warp and turn it aſide, or weaken it; to drive " away all manner of Luſts, that may ſully and de- " file it; and to fulfil the Commandments that are " juſt, that is to ſay, proportioned to our human Capacity.

II. We are not only able to fulfil the Law; but we may do alſo Works of Supererogation, which that has not commanded, and 'tis for that end the Doctors have made ſo many Additions to the Precepts of the Sabbath. The Judgment of the Antient Jews as to this reſpect was different from that of the Modern; for they ſay in the Goſpel, that the Law was a Yoke, which neither they, nor their Fathers were able to bear.

They complain of the Injury done to the Patriarchs, by ſaying that they propoſed no other end in their Obedience, but the Enjoyment of ſome temporal Rewards. They prove the falſity of that Accuſation by the Example of Abraham who would have ſacrificed his Son, that he might make him rather a partaker of Eternal Life; and beſides, their * Catechiſm declares, that God will not refuſe to any One the Reward he deſerves; that he will puniſh the Rebellious, either in this World, or in that which is to come; either in the One or in the Other, according as the Enormity of the Caſe ſhall require, and that he will recompence thoſe that ſerve him; and this is one of the Grounds of their Faith.

III. If on one hand they boaſt of the excellency of the Moral Law, the neceſſity of obſerving it, and the Rewards that God promiſes to them that do ſo; ſo likewiſe do they run into ſuch Exceſſes as can never be approved of, for they have corrupted one part of the Moral Law. This Evil is very Antient in the Synagogue; for our B. Saviour † not only condemns it in the Phariſees, who were his Cotemporaries, but in the Antients that had been before him; and the Depravation was ſo great, that he was even forced to re-eſtabliſh the Integrity of the Law in that moſt admirable Sermon he preached on the Mount. The Children have not benefited by the Fault of their Anceſtors, nor by the Correction that had been given them: and being much more lax as to caſes of Conſcience, they continue to alter the Law by their gloſſes, which quite deſtroy the Perfection and Severity of it.

IV. Tho' they brag never ſo much of their Charity and Love for the Poor of their Nation; yet it is undeniably true beyond all diſpute, that they hate other Nations even to down-right Fury; and it is a poor excuſe to lay that blame upon the deplorable condition in which that People are. Miſery does indeed render them moroſe and peeviſh; and I am not ſurpriſed at thoſe tranſports of Impatience, which the violence offered them by Chriſtians drew from them; but they cannot clear themſelves of having made this damnable Hatred againſt all the Nations of the Univerſe, a Tenet of their Religion; tho' ſome Chriſtians have adopted the ſame Principles in reſpect to them. Thoſe Authors make a breach on Charity, and as well as they, do violate the Precept of God, which maketh his Sun to || riſe on the Evil and on the Good; and neither bad Examples, nor Recriminations avail any one.

They have an Axiom that is enough to ſtrike horrour into a Man, which is, that He who does not nouriſh and feed his hatred, and does not revenge himſelf on his Enemies, is unworthy the name of a Rabbi. Let them be the Enemies of the Church, it matters not. 'Tis a ſtrange Employment for a Divine * to hate, and to be revengeful; and to have his Sweetneſs of Temper puniſhed, and his Charity become a Crime.

V. Sometimes they are ſo rigid againſt themſelves, that they'll condemn Doctors to the fire, who going a Journey together, do not entertain one another with the Law, becauſe it is written in the Second of the Kings †, that as Elijah, and his diſciple Eliſha, went from Gilgal, they diſcourſed together, and behold there appeared a Chariot of fire, and Horſes of fire. The Fire ought to burn and conſume thoſe who do not talk of God. They are too raſh and adventurous in enquiring after the Sins and Puniſhments which God inflicts upon them. And there is nothing more abominable than what they declare about the begetting of Children that are afterwards born Blind, or Lame, whereof they caſt all the Fault on the beaſtly manner how the Man knew his Wife. I know not whether this temerity could be forgiven them, but becauſe it is Antient, and we find one ſuch like inſtance in the Goſpel among the Diſciples, who ſeeing among them a Man that was born Blind, asked of him, ſaying, Maſter ||, who did ſin, this Man, or his Parents, that he was born blind? There are ſome Rabbies who do aſſure us, that Eliſchiàa Ben Avuiàh was guilty of an actual Sin before ever he was Born, and that he fell into Apoſtacy by reaſon of the Sin of his Mother, who being big with Child, as ſhe paſſed thro' an Idolatrous Temple, had eaten ſome portion of the Sacrifice, the ſmell of which had ſtruck her: And it ſeems ever ſince our Saviour J. ther's ther's Womb, as well as that of the Sin of their Mother's, whoſe Children bear the Puniſhment, was commonly received; but our Bleſſed Saviour does alike refute both theſe Errours, by ſaying, that neither hath this Man ſinned, nor his Parents: but that the Works of God ſhould be made manifeſt in him. The Antiquity of an Errour does not free it ſelf from being One.

VI. They make ſlight of the Liberty Children take in Curſing their Parents, or indeed rather they give occaſion to it, by maintaining, that a Childs Execration of his Father is neither Criminal nor Puniſhable, but only when thereby the Name of God is prophaned. Whatſoever reſpect they ſeem to have for the Name of God, they do however infringe and violate Treaties wherein his Name is called upon to Witneſs them. Thus, for example, they tell us that Zedekiah was diſpenſed with by the Sanhedrim from the Oath he had taken to Nebuchadnezzor, that he would never diſcover what he had ſeen him do, in Eating a live Hare. Nebuchadnezzor was hugely incenſed at it, becauſe it rendred him odious, and contemptible to all Nations.

VII. The violent Inclination they have for the Ceremonies of the Law, makes another general defect in their Devotion. They multiply the Precepts of them, and crumble them into ſuch minute particulars as makes one aſhamed of them: they * maintain, for example, that he who does not waſh his Hands, ſhall be tore out of the World; and not ſatisfied with that general Precept, they have in their Body of Laws a Title of Hands, where they treat of this matter in particular; and not yet contented with that Treatiſe, there is found in their Gemara a great number of Laws upon the ſame Subject. A Man ought to waſh his Hands three times at a Meal. The firſt waſhing is neceſſary before one Eats to purifie the Hands; and he is not ſuffered to touch that Water any more which becomes unclean, and defiles all the parts whereon it falls. And there muſt alſo be a third waſhing after the Repaſt, which is looked on to be more neceſſary than the firſt. It would be to no purpoſe to obſerve the different diſpoſitions of Hands in thoſe divers Waſhings, ſeeing that it would be to follow thoſe Doctors in their needleſs reſearches. Leo † de Modena has related a little part of their Scruples about the preparation of their Victuals. It cannot be denyed but that they believe the Obſervation of the Ceremonial Law to be as neceſſary as that of the Moral Law; and that they don't make any great ſcruple of Conſcience in violating any one Precept, whether given by Moſes, or by the Doctors; for he who deſpiſes the words of the Wiſe deſerves Death. They maintain that this Law Eternal could never be either aboliſhed or changed by the Meſſiah; and they do this either for proving this pretenſion more eaſily, or for depriving the Chriſtians of the Proofs that they draw from the Antient Ceremonies and Sacrifices for the Death of J. CHRIST. They ſteadily affirm, that it never has been the Shadow of things to come. But Orobio in his Conference demanded || of Mr. Limborch a paſſage out of the Old Teſtament, which proved that God had eſtabliſhed the Ceremonial Law to be a Type, a Figure, and Shadow of things which were to come to paſs under the Reign of the Meſſiah. But he was preſently ſatisfied without being convinced.

VIII. The Commandment of the Law which they have the moſt exactly obſerved, is, that which relates to Images. The exactneſs of the Jews is ſo much the more Surpriſing, as their Inclination for Idolatry was moſt evident. Never did People run with more eagerneſs and vehemency after Idols than thoſe in the Wilderneſs, or in Judea, till the time that they were carried Captives into Babilon: But ſince then they have rejected with the utmoſt averſion all manner of Worſhipping the Creatures. The Heathen Emperors could never force them to it, nor to Worſhip them. They lived in the midſt of Idolatrous Nations without ſuffering themſelves to be corrupted; they ſee ſome Chriſtians, who after they had owned the ſame Law with them, elude the Sence thereof, and perſecute them to make them bow their Knees to Images, without ever being able to compel them to it. Notwithſtanding they paint Beaſts, they except againſt Serpents, becauſe they have been too often the Symbols of the Deity among the Heathen; they have likewiſe the ſame ſcruple to the Lyon, the Eagle and the Oxe, becauſe thoſe are ſpoken of in the Viſion of Ezekiel.

IX. There are alſo produced ſome Antient Images which are attributed to the Jews, becauſe Hebrew Characters are found on them; as likewiſe ſome pieces of Money which the Jews pretend to have been Coined to the Honour of Abraham, Iſaac, and their Wives, Sarah and Rebecca.

There's no occaſion to anſwer with || Selden, that thoſe Antient Coins may be looked upon as violations of the Law, which was not given till a long while after; but there was no Money in the time of the Patriarchs, upon which any Figures were graved. Beſides, tho they ſhould have Coined Money in Abraham's Days, yet it would be almoſt impoſſible to have preſerved it, ſince there is not any found of Antienter Date than the time of Darius and Alexander the Great. The deviſe of thoſe Medals is impertinent; for Abraham and Sarah there have the Title of Old Man and Old Woman, according to the conceit of ſome Rabbies, who affirm that Old Age was not known before Abraham; that it was that Patriarch who asked it of God, and who introduced it into the World. Rebecca there is called the Virgin; yet Abraham did not know her, nor ſent her to deſire a Son until after Sarah was dead.

They ſhew another whereon is ſtamp'd a Tower with theſe words, Jeruſalem the Holy, and on the Reverſe are read the Names of King David, and King Solomon. Now to diſcover the falſhood of theſe Medals, they have recourſe to the Maxim of the Talmudiſts, who ſay, that one Reign never incroacheth upon the other, and that the Son is not † Anointed without the Father; But the Maxim is falſe. Beſides the Scripture tells us with much more certainty, that Solomon, who was Anointed before the Death of his Father, becauſe of the competition between him and Adonijah, yet never Reigned with him.

They produce likewiſe a Shekel of King David, found in the Treaſure of the Temple, in the Houſe of Holineſs, on which is diſcovered the Royal and Sacerdotal Power lively repreſented; for on one ſide is ſeen a Crown'd Bonnet; a * Letter that ſignifies the Name of David; and a Veſſel of Oyl, the Symbol of his Coronation; and on the Reverſe is the Rod of Aaron flouriſhing; the Tiara of the Chief Prieſt; a Horn, which contains the Oyl of Unction, with theſe words, God preſerve Iſrael, the Powerful King in Jeruſalem. But the Cheat is viſible and apparent; for what ſignifie thoſe words, God preſerve Iſrael, the Powerful King in Jeruſalem? Jacob, who only bore the Name of Iſrael, was he ever a King? Is it for him that they Pray? There is another Medal, on which is the Head of Anthony, with theſe words, King Solomon; and on the Reverſe is an Old Temple, which they call the Temple of Solomon. Urſinus fancies that this Medal was Coined by Herod, who to do Mark-Anthony the greater Honour, had given him the Name of Solomon; but they cannot draw any conſequence from thence againſt the Jews, becauſe Herod was a Wicked Prince that often violated the Laws of the Nation. This Conjecture too is a very vain one. Why to bring in Herod, and to ſuppoſe that he gave the Title of Solomon to Mark-Anthony? What is the Temple, which they call the Temple of Solomon, and which Mark-Anthony ſhould Coin? Without digging Herod out of the Earth, it is more likely that ſome Jewiſh Impoſtor, having found a Head of Mark-Anthony, and not knowing whoſe it might be, added the Name of Solomon to it, that ſo he might ſell it tothoſe of his own Nation, that would give moſt for the figure of the Wiſeſt of their Kings. They not only aſcribe Horns to Moſes * in the Medals and Types that bear his Name; but there is obſerved there a little Croſs, which diſcovers the Hand and Religion of the Chriſtian that had wrought it. Theſe are the Chriſtians that have ſtruck thoſe Medals. They have made thoſe Images in the Holy-Land ſince the Eleventh Century. They deſigned to relate ſomewhat of that Country that had an Air of Antiquity, and the Artiſts have been hugely pleaſed in ſelling to them Works of this ſort, which they have Fabricated and illuſtrated with Hebrew Characters, the more eaſily to impoſe upon the ſimple. Thus they who go to Loretto, and to St. James of Compoſtella, bring back little Images and Statues from thence, which they look upon as great Monuments of their Devotion, tho' the Artificers have in their Heads no other deſign but to enrich themſelves, and to gull them; like thoſe Silver-Smiths that got great Gains by making little Shrines for Diana of the Epheſians. They have Counterfeited thoſe Pieces in Germany, to deceive the Devots and Bigots. Charles the Fifth was deluded by them, and they poſitively affirm, that he kept very Religiouſly in the Eſcurial one of thoſe Hebrew Medals, which ſome Merchant had ſold him as a rare piece of Antiquity: but whether the falſity of that Medal has been ſince diſcovered, or whether it be loſt, is uncertain; but they do not now ſhew it to Travellers.

X. They likewiſe accuſe the Jews for having abandoned the Law, to Study Judicial Aſtrologie and Magick, which Moſes had ſo ſeverely condemn'd. Leo of Modena † maintains. on the contrary, that every thing that may be called Witchcraft, or ſearching into future Events by the aſſiſtance of the Stars, appears to them a very great Sin. They will not allow the Dead to be conſulted, nor that any ſhould wait for Anſwers from them; in a word, they would have the 18th Chapter of Deuteronomy, where all kinds of Magick are forbid, to be Religiouſly obſerved; and Manaſſah takes notice that God placed two Cherubims upon the Ark, to refute the Opinion of one Zaba, who then Reigned. That Zaba taught, that the Stars and the Celeſtial Spheres had been from all Eternity; that by their vertue they foretold things to come; and 'twere they that pour'd out Good and Evil on this lower World. Now, I ſay, to refute this Errour God repreſented Heaven in the Ark; above the Ark he placed the Cherubims, thereby to ſignifie to us that there were ſome Intelligences above Celeſtial Spheres. He had placed two of them, for fear leaſt if there had been but One, they would have thought that That had been the firſt Cauſe and Principle of all things; and from thence have eaſily concluded, that the Angels being above the Heaven, God made uſe of thoſe Miniſtring Spirits to communicate his Will to Men, and that they ſhould expect nothing from the Stars nor from the Celeſtial Spheres. If the proof is not Subſtantial, at leaſt the Fact is true and permanent, that Manaſſah ||, who exactly treads in the ſteps of Moſes Maimonides, thought that Judicial Aſtrologie was condemned by the Law. However, it cannot be diſſembled that ſeveral of the Talmudiſts have had a mighty Genius and Affection for this ſort of Study. They count alſo that Judah ſeeing a great drowth, unlooſed one of his Shoes, and it Rained immediately: All would have been Ruined, if he had unlooſed the other; for a new Deluge would have overwhelmed the Earth; but Elijah ſtop'd him as he was going to do it. Will any one ſay that God had affixed a Raining Quality or Vertue to the Shoes of Judah? That might be as good as the Shrine of a Saint which is taken down from its uſual place and carried about in the Streets, according to the need there is either of Heat or Rain. There are alſo ſome Perſons among the Jews who ſhut themſelves up in a Circle, from whence they come not out till it has rained. There are others likewiſe who by the placing of certain Words, or Figures, flatter themſelves that they produce mighty Miracles. In ſhort, Sangarus, who converted King Cozar, treated in truth the Aſtrologers and Magicians as Rebels and Infidels; but he forbore not to maintain, that as the LXX. Perſons who compoſed the Sanhedrim, had need of knowing all the Aſtronomy to be skilful in the New Moons, and the Muſick for the Song; ſo they ought alſo to have fathomed the Secrets * of Magick; but it is enough that the Enchantments be not Authorized publickly, to adhere to the Teſtimony of Manaſſah, and Leo of Modena, who have thought that it concerned the Honour of the Synagogue to repel that Accuſation, which he had forgot in the firſt Edition of his Work.

XI. In treating of the Rites, we ſhall ſpeak of the reſpect that they ſtill preſerve for Circumciſion given by Abraham; for the Paſchal-Lamb; and the Sabbath ordained by Moſes. We will come back to that Legiſlator, after we have ſpoken of his Laws. As to that point they fall into a moſt fearful contradiction; for they make of Joſhua a perfect Slave that went up and down every Morning rubbing his Shoes, cleaning his Head-piece, and preſenting to him a Baſin and Water to waſh himſelf before ever he appeared in publick. Can the great Moſes be reduced to a condition more vile and deſpicable? On the other ſide the People were ſo afflicted with his Death, that by the powerful number of the Tears they ſhed for him, they forgat three Thouſand of his Precepts. Joſhua conſulted with God about ſo unhappy an Accident; but no Remedy was to be found for it; becauſe Moſes being Dead, and the Law bearing his Name, they could not make more new Precepts, nor aſcribe to him thoſe they had forgotten. There is none till Joſephus who had changed the Death of that Legiſlator; for he maintains that he was wrapt up in a Cloud, and carried away the very moment he took his laſt farewel of Joſhua and Eleazar, who had followed him till then. He had poſſibly met with that in a Book which was called the Aſſumption of Moſes, as they have met with One ſince upon the Aſſumption of the Virgin; but is an Apocryphal Book to be prefer'd to Writings Divinely inſpired? And ſhall any one ſuffer himſelf to be deluded by the Shadow of a Miracle? There are very few Hiſtorians ſecure themſelves from this Weakneſs.

XII. The Rabbies aſſure us that Samael, enraged that Moſes ſhould carry away from him ſuch a number of Worſhippers, follow'd him upon the Mountain of Nebo to fight him, and tear out his Soul; but Moſes put him to his heels, and made him run for it. He rallied and came back to the Charge; but being ſtruck with the miraculous Wand, and driven away by the Name of Jehovah, he never appeared more. God was obliged then to come and kiſs Moſes, and to take away his Soul from him. The Demon, who thought he had gained all, inſulted the Angel of Moſes, whom he ſaw at his Feet without Motion and without Life; but that Angel cried: Do not you triumph, O my Enemy; for if I am fallen, I ſhall be raiſed up again by Joſhua. This relation perhaps is figurative, and they would teach us by it that Moſes, who was terrible to the Demons, could not die but by an order and ſingular act of Providence. Shall one ſay this relation was antient, and that St. Jude either did not underſtand it, or elſe he carried the Metaphor too far, in making the Demon to fight with the Archangel Michael for the Body of Moſes even after he was dead? 'Tis not made out that St. Jude had read the Narration of the Talmudiſts much more Modern than himſelf, nor that it was known in the time of that Apoſtle. They have ſaid that the Body of Moſes ſignified Religion, and the Republick which that Legiſlator had eſtabliſhed, which Tatnai, Governour for the Aſſyrians on this Side the River Euphrates, reſolved to deſtroy by Violence and Craft. But was it ever known that a Kingdom or Common-wealth was called the Body of its Founder? 'Tis much more probable that St. Jude, in that very obſcure Paſſage, alludes to the manner how Moſes died and was buried. God called him † up from the Plains of Moab, unto the mountain of Nebo, to the top of Piſgah, that there ſhould not be any witneſs of his Death, and that no man ſhould know of his Sepulchre, for fear leſt the Iſraelites ſhould make of it an Object of Idolatry, in preſerving it as a moſt Sacred and pretious Relique. Some Iſraelites however ſearched for the Place where God had buried him, but without any poſſibility of finding it, for God withſtood them. The Devil acted by the miniſtry of thoſe that deſigned to have taken up the Body of Moſes, and God hindered it by the Miniſtry of his Angels, in keeping him ſecret and concealed from them. They have been therefore ignorant what became of Moſes, that miraculous Man, even as to his Death.

XIII. But notwithſtanding the Orders of God, and the Care of the Angels, the Chriſtians boaſt that they have diſcovered this Sepulchre which has been kept ſecret for ſo many Ages. They ſay in the Year 1655. Some Goats that were ſeparated from the reſt of the Flock, went to feed in a certain place of the Mountain of Nebo, and returned from thence ſo wonderfully odoriferous and perfumed, that the Shepherds, aſtoniſhed at ſo unheard of a Prodigy, ran preſently to conſult with Mataxat Patriarch of the Maronites. He ſent thither two Monks || from Mount Lebanon, who diſcovered a Monument, on which they read theſe words, Moſes the Servant of the Lord. The Jews pretend that this Tomb belonged to them. Tne Mahometans challenge it from them, that ſo they might have in their Poſſeſſion the three famous Tombs of Moſes at Mount Nebo, of J. CHRIST on Mount Calvarie, and of Mahomet at Meccha. The Chriſtians, and particularly the Jeſuits, after I know not how many Journeys forwards and backwards, opened this Monument to get to themſelves the Reliques of it; but to their great diſappointment they found it empty. I know not upon what Evidence Hornius has related this Fact which appeared to him well averred; nor whether the Jew Jecomas, the Son of Gad, an Inhabitant of Saphetta, who wrote to ſhew, that That was not the Sepulchre of Moſes the Legiſlator; but of another * who bore the ſame Name, and lived a long while after, is an imaginary Man who never exiſted any more than his Book; but ſeveral Circumſtances of this Hiſtory are found falſe; for, beſides the groundleſs conceits to make the Maronites as Antient as St. Peter, and to look upon them always Orthodox, who have not ſuffered the leaſt Alteration in their Worſhip and in the Law; and examining whether the Maronites led their Flocks to feed upon Nebo, which is 240 Miles from Mount Lebanon, ſince it is not a neceſſary Conſequence that they were particularly the Shepherds of Mount Lebanon that did go there; Bartolocci obſerves, that the Patriarch of the Maronites, who lived in the Year 1655. did not call himſelf Mataxat, as Hornius ſuppoſes; but it was John, to whom ſucceeded George Besbehel, elected the Firſt of January, 1657. and who was concerned in this Diſcovery; and the Baſſa of Damas, on whom that Province depended, was not called Morat, but Beſchir, who was afterwards Grand Viſier, Strangled forty Days after his Elevation, and who left Maimed his Son in his Place at Damas.

They may poſſibly have boaſted that they had found out the Tomb of Moſes; but thoſe who deſigned to get Honour by a falſe Relique, did not ſufficiently know the Hiſtory of that Country; or did not put themſelves to the trouble about the Truth in weighing all the Circumſtances of their Relation, and to make them juſt. Thus we have the Life and Death of Moſes, the great Legiſlator of the Jews, whom they honour as the greateſt of Prophets, and whom at the ſame time they load with the moſt enormous Crimes.

phets. XVIII. Of immediate Inſpiration. XIX. Of the Voice that is underſtood. XX. Objects that are painted in the Imagination. The Emotion of the Prophets. XXI. Apparitions of Angels, real.

I. THE gift of Propheſy is mightily deſpiſed among the Jews, by the Character they beſtow on thoſe whom God hath favoured with it. They ought to advance the glory of thoſe holy Men who have raiſed that of their Nation; but they often make their Inſpiration to depend upon Conſtitution, Study, Melancholineſs, and even upon Baniſhment, in which the Spirit of God never acted. There are ſome alſo that believe God made choice of the Prophets without having any reſpect to their Age, or Birth, or Parts. On the contrary, he takes them from the dregs of the People, as Amos who was one of the Herdſmen of Tekoa. He regarded only Purity of Life: But that firſt Sentiment, which makes Propheſy to depend on the good pleaſure of God, is that of the ignorant Vulgar, and of the Multitude who have not penetrated into this Matter.

II. A Second * Party maintains that Prophecy is a natural Faculty; for, to be a Prophet, a Man ought to have a ſtrong and vigorous Conſtitution; to poliſh himſelf by Study, to prepare, and bring on himſelf to a certain degree of Perfection: But then as it is impoſſible for an ignorant Man and a Fool, who goes to bed without this natural Perfection, to Propheſy when he riſes; ſo likewiſe is it equally as impoſſible that thoſe ſhould not Propheſy who have made a good Improvement of their natural Talents. This is the Opinion of the Philoſophers.

III. Maimonides takes a Third and middle way. He agrees with the Philoſophers and Rabbies in this Maxim, that Propheſy does never reſide but with a Man that is wiſe, and rich and powerful: But he is perſuaded that notwithſtanding all the natural or acquired talents and diſpoſitions for Propheſying, yet God ſometimes reſtrains a Man from making uſe of 'em. 'Tis thus the Scripture ſays of Baruch †, the Son of Neriah, Jeremiah's Secretary, Woe is me now, for the Lord hath added grief to my ſorrow, becauſe he could not Propheſy as his Maſter did, tho' he had ſtudied and managed his Talents with Art: Thus God might hinder from Propheſying; but Men had Talents neceſſary for it, and might likewiſe acquire them by Study.

The Example of Jeremiah, to whom the Lord ſaid, || before I formed thee in the Belly, I knew thee; and before thou cameſt forth out of the Womb, I ſanctified thee, and I ordained thee a Prophet unto the Nations, ſeems to overthrow this Hypotheſis: But we are miſtaken; for it is God that forms (as Iſaiah has it) in the Mothers bowels the Temper neceſſary for Propheſying; and Jeremiah ſays himſelf that he was but a Child when he began to Propheſy. But the Scriptures give that Name to Perſons who are advanced in Age, and Joſuah bore it alſo when he was Sixty years old. They further affirm, that Propheſy is an influence of the Deity upon the reaſonable part of the Soul, and conſequently upon the Imagination. This is what ought to be explained; for the matter is curious and delicate.

IV. There were three Qualities requiſite to the forming of Prophets. Firſt, a lively Imagination; Secondly, a ſolid Reaſon, cleared up by Study: And laſtly, a great Purity of Manners; for none ever ſaid * that the Spirit of God reſted upon a wicked Man. "He ought not only to debar himſelf of the plea- "ſures of Venus, of Eating and Drinking intempe- "rately; but the touch alone cauſes a very great "hindrance; for of all the Sences That alone is the "moſt Shameful and Undecent, as Ariſtotle ſays. "Theſe three things may be enjoyed after a diffe- "rent manner; and it is alſo that which makes the "different degrees of Propheſying.

V. 'Tis certain, that Melancholy, Grief, Anger, produce ſtrange Alterations; and therefore there have been Prophets that have ceaſed from foreſeeing and predicting future Events, becauſe their Imaginations have grown cool, and as it were benumm'd by ſome accident. From thence alſo comes the Maxim of the Maſters, that Propheſying is never to be met with where Grief and Slothfulneſs predominate; nor even in Baniſhment which is always attended with Sorrow: from thence in ſhort comes it to paſs, that the Prophets were uſed to have Inſtruments of Muſick play'd before them, to make them pleaſant and cheerful, that they might be able to Propheſy afterwards.

VI. Purity of † Manners was ſo neceſſary a Qualification for the Prophets, that they were diſtinguiſhed by that Character. Eliſha is called Saint, becauſe he had never felt the leaſt motion of Impurity: And on the contrary Zedekiah and Ahab ||, who had made ſuch lying Propheſies, were at laſt diſcovered, becauſe they committed Adultery with their Neighbours Wives, and were condemned to be roſted in the Fire by the King of Babilon. Jerem. 29. 21, 22.

VII. To thoſe natural Qualities is added ſome influence of the Deity, which acts differently upon Men to render them more perfect. Firſt, this Influence ſometimes is only poured out upon the Underſtanding, without ever reaching the Imagination, which is too weak and too much ſtinted. This is what makes Speculative Divines who reaſon much and fine; but know nothing of what is Future. Secondly, The Influence acts only upon the Imagination. This is what cauſes Extaſies, and Tranſports, which perſuade thoſe that feel them that they are Prophets, tho' they are not ſo. Laſtly, God acts upon the Intellect, or rational Faculty, and this Influence paſſes by that into an Imagination well diſpoſed. This is what really makes Prophets. This Influence makes them bold and undaunted, not to be ſhaken or moved, and puſhes them on to go and declare the Truth to the People, even with the hazard of their Lives.

VIII. Spinoſa is complain'd of, becauſe he gave of Prophets and Propheſies ſuch ſlender Ideas that he almoſt made nothing of them. Yet this much muſt be ſincerely acknowledged, that he had learned moſt of his Opinions from the boſom of the Synagogue, in which he had been bred. Let us ſee what he thought on Propheſy.

Firſt, the good frame of Temper * was neceſſary, and God had great regard to it. 'Tis not true, what Maimonides has ſaid, that Perſons over-preſſed with Melancholy, or thoſe under Baniſhment, have ceaſed from being Prophets; for God revealed himſelf to Moſes, when he was very much provoked; to Jonah, whoſe Anger was ſo violent that he offer'd to kill himſelf. Jacob baniſh'd from his Father's Houſe. Ezekiel and Daniel in Chaldea, had their Viſions; and Jeremiah, tho' moſt grievouſly afflicted, did not for all that forbear to Propheſy. However, God had much reſpect to the Conſtitution of thoſe whom He choſe to be the Interpreters of his Laws and Decrees; for he promiſed Victories by thoſe who were gay and cheerful. A ſowre, heavy Man was only charged with denouncing Menaces, Wars, woful Judgments and Deſolations. "He made uſe of Sooth- "ſaying to find out the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem in "the lives of Victims; and he inform'd the Wiſe- "men of the birth of CHRIST by the Viſion of a Star, " becauſe they were fond of the vain Speculations " of Aſtronomy. " Secondly, a quick fancy was ab- " ſolutely requiſite *; For there was no need of a per- fect Intellect, but of a ſtrong Imagination. Piety † was alſo neceſſary. For when the Scripture ſays, that the Spirit of God was upon the Prophets, and that they were fill'd with it; it means, that their Godlineſs and Virtue rais'd them above the level of other Men. Laſtly, they had ſome Signs, whereby they aſſur'd themſelves, and others too, that God had taught them what they deliver'd.

IX. The Spring from whence Spinoſa drew his Principles is eaſily found; ſince they are like thoſe of the Rabbies. But he extended his own Inferences farther, than thoſe he had plundered from others. For as he aſcrib'd more fancy than reaſon to the Prophets; ſo he aſſerts, that they were ignorant of abundance of things, and that they ought not to be conſulted, but upon ſome very plain, and obvious Subjects, and chiefly upon Morality, which it was their buſineſs to teach. As there is no certainty in what is produc'd by the Fancy, he ſays that they were often miſtaken about the ſecret Springs of Nature. Thus Joſhua and his Army believ'd, that the Sun ſtood ſtill, becauſe he did not know, that the Hail, wherewith the Air was clog'd, might have made a greater refraction of the Rays of the Sun, than uſual. Thus Iſaiah without taking notice of the Parelia affirm'd to Hezekiah, that the Sun had retrograded at the Dial of Ahaz. As the natural Signs, which they produc'd to confirm the Truths they preach'd, were unknown, or uncertain, ſo we can have but a Moral certainty of what was deliver'd by the Prophets. It is eſpecially a great piece of Extravagancy to imagine that they knew ev'ry thing, and were ignorant of nothing. Before this can be thought, both the Mind and ſeveral places of Scripture muſt be ſtrain'd and wrack'd; nay, and Experience too muſt be contradicted. Adam did not know that God was every where; ſince he hid himſelf among the Trees of the Garden. He knew but one thing, which was, that God had fram'd the Univerſe. Abraham had not a more ſublime Notion of the Deity; ſince he beg'd of God to ſtop his Vengeance againſt Sodom, till he knew whether there were fifty righteous within that City. What the Prophets learn't of God, and were oblig'd to reveal to Men, were Maxims of ſound Morality.

X. The Rabbies make Propheſy more extenſive and certain, than Spinoſa ||. However they own, that Conſtitution made the Prophets, and that Fancy had a great ſhare in it. They will have it, that all things were perform'd in the Fancy, even the Sacrifice of Iſaac by Abraham. Hence it is, that we find ſome very obſcure Metaphors in their Writings. The Sages ſay, that the Scripture is ſome times loaded with hyperbolies. Tho' the Hiſtory of Og King of Baſan, who was only twelve Cubits high, and twice as tall as Men generally are, was excepted from this rule; yet there are a great many others in Scripture. As for inſtance, we muſt not take * literally, what the Scripture ſays of the lives of the Anti-diluvians. For ſo long a life, was only a Privilege granted to certain Men, whom God rais'd above the level of the reſt. In a word, they make divine Influence depend upon Conſtitution; but this divine Influence was of no great uſe.

XI. They diſtinguiſh Eleven degrees of Propheſy. They reckon among inſpir'd Men, thoſe who felt ſome inward Emotions, urging them to perform extraordinary Actions, as Samſon. Thoſe, who compos'd Hymns and Pſalms, becauſe they believ'd themſelves inſpir'd with God's Spirit, were accounted ſo many Prophets. However theſe Prophets are diſtinguiſh'd from the following Orders. 1. When Zechariah ſays, the word of the Lord came unto me. 2. Samuel heard a Voice, but did not ſee, who ſpoke. 3. When a Man ſpeaks in a Dream with a Prophet, as it happen'd to Ezekiel, to whom a Man cry'd, Son of Man. 4. Angels ſpoke often in Dreams. 5. It was ſometimes thought that God himſelf ſpoke in a Dream. 6. Some Myſtical Objects were diſcover'd. 7. An Audible Voice was heard from the midſt of theſe Objects. 8. A Man is ſeen Speaking, as it happen'd to Abraham under the Oak of Mamre, which however was a Viſion. 9. Laſtly, an Angel † is perceiv'd Speaking. Thus Abraham heard one, when he was binding Iſaac upon the Altar to Sacrifice him; But that was alſo a Viſion.

XII. None of theſe Syſtems give us a true Notion of the Prophets. Spinoſa repreſents them as People, who utter'd whatever their heated Fancy ſuggeſted to them. He only acknowledges, that their Morality was ſound and pure; and that they may be conſulted for the regulation of our Lives: But is this enough, to give a full Character of the antient Prophets? I own, that they were not ſo learned as people generally think. As they were no Philoſophers, and that God did not ſend them to reveal the Secrets of Nature, ſo they knew nothing of Philoſophy; and therefore it is abſurd to attempt to draw from their Writings either ſome Proofs for, or Objections againſt, the different Syſtems of Phyſicks, which are from time to time invented. But Spinoſa hath taken no notice of the Predictions of the Prophets, as if theſe were not the very Characters, which diſtinguiſhed them from other Men, and which alone prove that they were inſpir'd by God. No matter, whether the word Nabi ſignifies ſome times an Orator, an Interpreter, it is enough that ſome Men explaining God's commands have foretold future Events, and that their Oracles have been accompliſh'd. Theſe Men, and theſe Predictions, which characterize them, are things that muſt be examin'd, and whereof a reaſon muſt be given. For it is a matter of wonder and Aſtoniſhment, that Herdſmen and Ploughmen, ſuch as Amos and Eliſha were, have foretold the Downfal of neighbouring Monarchies, or of thoſe that were Enemies to Jeruſalem, or that they propheſy'd the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem it ſelf; or laſtly, that they extended their Oracles even to the Meſſiah, who was not to be born till many Ages after. So that Spinoſa ought to have taught us, how the old Prophets foretold future Events, and how they came by that Sublime Knowledge. However, he doth not ſo much as attempt to unravel the main Difficulty. When a Man deſigns bonâ fide to dive into the bottom of this matter, and explain it throughly, he doth not only faſten upon ſome particular Heads, which may afford a great many plauſible and deluding Arguments againſt the common Syſtem; He doth not, for inſtance, ſpeaking of the Sun, which ſtood ſtill upon Gibeon proudly ſay, that Hail perhaps made a refraction of the Rays of the Sun, and that he will not give himſelf the trouble to enquire into the cauſe of it; He doth not think it enough to weigh the particular actions of certain Prophets, who declam'd againſt Sin; But he will examine the whole Syſtem, and conſider it by its ſhining as well as by it's dark Side. And this Spinoſa hath not done. For he hath not examin'd the Propheſies, even when he ſpoke of the Prophets; nor hath he explain'd how they cou'd be ſo ſure in their Predictions of ſuch remote Events. This is leaving the Knot untouch'd, even when he boaſts that he hath unty'd it; and leaping over the Abyſs, which he brags he hath fill'd up.

XIII. If

XIII. If the Rabbies had alſo fix'd their attention to the Propheſies of their Accompliſhment, they had never made Propheſy depend upon the Conſtitution, or temper of the Mind rectify'd by Study and Godlineſs. The gift of Propheſy doth not depend upon our Endeavours and a right application of our natural Faculties. And it is a Riddle for any to teach, that the human Will is abſolutely Free, which makes Events uncertain and contingent; and yet at the ſame time affirm, that a Soul, of the ſame Nature with that of other Men, can have a certain knowledge of theſe Events, and be able to foretel them. Was Man capable of this Knowledge by the ſtrength of his Genius, or by Study, he wou'd alſo be able to foreſee, what ſhare eſpecially he is to have in the Calamities, which threaten others. And yet the Prophets knew not their own doom, however they foretold what was to happen to foreign Monarchies and Kings. How cou'd they know this; ſince That depended upon the Will, and a vaſt many free and contingent Actions, which thoſe Kings, Nations and Men, that were not as yet in Being, were to perform?

It is ſomewhat difficult to aſſert the Freedom of the Will, without depriving God of the Knowledge of Events, which this Freedom makes contingent. Nevertheleſs the Rabbies aſcribe this Knowledge to the Soul, which is infinitely more circumſcrib'd than that of the Deity. I confeſs, that they add a divine Influence to Man's Temper. But this Influence ought to perform the whole operation, and Man's Temper is of no uſe in a thing, which is ſo infinitely far above his reach. If the Knowledge of futurity doth not depend on Man, but on the Divine Influence, no mention ought to be made of a temper rectify'd by Study; becauſe 'tis this Influence doth all. To ſay, that this Influence ſtrengthens a Man, whoſe temper is good, is to own that there is a capacity and diſpoſition in Man to know futurity, which is falſe. Farther, Maimonides affirms, that Men wou'd foretell what is to come, did not God ſometimes hinder it by his Influence. So that this power, according to him, proceeds from us, and this Influence only hinders, or ſtrengthens a diſpoſition, which is naturally in the Soul.

XIV. But it is ſo true, that the Soul is not capable of knowing Futurity, that this Knowledge may be attain'd without any previous purity of Life, and ſound diſpoſition of the Heart. It is a miſtake to ſay, that the gift of Propheſy is not found in a Soul unhing'd by Grief, Anger, or ſubject to Paſſions, or that it was never beſtow'd upon a wicked Man. For without alledging the Examples of Moſes, Jonas, and even of Jeremiah, who notwithſtanding his Lamentations, was prevail'd upon to go into Egypt, where he had propheſy'd that the People, ſhou'd periſh, becauſe they diſobey'd God; Balaam was a Prophet, but yet a wicked Man. The Dreams of Abimelec, of Pharaoh, and of the chief Butler and chief Baker to a Prince, of that name, were ſo many Revelations of what was to happen. So that notwithſtanding, a purity of Life, was one of thoſe Marks whereby the Prophets were known; yet ſome wicked Men have been commanded to deliver God's Orders to Men, and to foretell them what was to come: as he, who predicted to Jeroboam, that his Altar ſhou'd be broken to pieces, and who was in his return devour'd by a Lion; and this is a plain Argument, that the gift of Propheſy depends wholly on the Will of God.

XV. As the Prophets were exact obſervers of the Law, and that it was an honourable Character to be intruſted with God's Commands, we need not wonder, that the Prophets were intruſted with the Education of Youth; and that thoſe who had a mind to diſtinguiſh themſelves by an exemplary Piety, ſubmitted to their Diſcipline. But it is a wrong concluſion, that becauſe there were Schools, and Sons of the Prophets, therefore Prophecy was a kind of Science, which was Learn'd by Study; and that this Study contributed to make Prophets. For no mention is made of thoſe Schools before Samuel: and yet there were a great many Prophets before his Days. Beſides, God did not always take the Prophets out of the Schools. Eliſha a Plough-man had never Study'd, when Elijah left him a double Portion of his Spirit; and Amos the Herdſman was not Learned, as appears by his Writings. It was not Study that made Prophets, but a Divine Calling, wherein God had no regard to the Temper or Diſpoſition of Men. The term of Nabi, or Prophet, being capable of various ſignifications, it was given to thoſe who Studied the Law with exactneſs, and ſometimes compoſed Sacred Hymns to the Glory of God, by the Direction, and in the Company of the Prophets. Some Hymns have been inſerted among the Pſalms of David, which were compoſed in the Schools, and by the Sons of the Prophets, whoſe Names only are known.

XVI. The Jewiſh vulgar think more correctly than their Maſters; for they confeſs, that God chuſes and inſpires his Prophets by a meer act of his good Pleaſure, without having any regard to the Birth, Age, Temper, or Study of thoſe, he ſends. And therefore he choſe an Herdſman as Amos; and a Plough man, as Eliſha, who did not dream of becoming a Prophet, and got up without Prophecying, and went to bed endow'd with a Prophetick Spirit.

XVII. True and falſe Prophets were only diſtinguiſh'd by theſe two Characters. One was the accompliſhment of their Oracles. True Prophets were known by this accompliſhment; becauſe God alone can foreſee and reveal Events, which depend on his Providence. The other was Idolatry. For whoever eſtabliſhed a Worſhip contrary to the Worſhip of God, was to be Ston'd as a falſe Prophet.

XVIII. God made uſe of five means to reveal his Will to the Prophets. 1. He immediately acted upon the Mind, and by a ſecret Operation convey'd into it thoſe Ideas, which neceſſarily conduc'd to his Deſign. Man, as he was Awake, or Meditating, or Praying to God, might be inſtructed of him what was to happen to Jeruſalem, the People of Iſrael, and to the Neighbouring Nations. True it is, that this Secret Inſtruction of God to the Prophets is conteſted; but I dare ſay, that I more eaſily conceive how God, who is a Spirit, acts upon a Spiritual Soul, than I can conceive, how a Man, who ſpeaks, and makes the ſound of his Voice reach my Ear, gives me to underſtand what he thinks, and what he deſires me to do. If it be deny'd, that there is a God, or that the Deity is a Spiritual Being; or laſtly, if it be aſſerted, that Souls are Material, recourſe muſt be had to other Principles, and the exiſtence of God muſt be prov'd to the Atheiſtical Perſon, who aſſerts this. But whoever owns a God, and a Spiritual Soul, cannot find any impoſſibility in a Communion between theſe two Spiritual Beings, the Soul and God, whereof One is the Creator of the other. It is more eaſie to conceive this Commerce, than that between Men who ſpeak and communicate their Thoughts to one another. And indeed what doth a Man, who ſpeaks, do? He agitates the Air by the motion of his Tongue; he frames a ſound; this ſound ſtrikes the Ear, which is a corporeal Object; and thence if you pleaſe, is convey'd to the Brain, whoſe Fibres it moves. But how do theſe corporeal and ſenſible motions convey my Thoughts into the Soul of him that heareth me? Does the ſound I make when I ſpeak contain the Image of my Thoughts, and carry it to my Neighbour? How can this ſound, which ſtrikes his Ear, give notice to his Soul which is Spiritual, awake her Attention, and make him apprehend what I requite of him? But let us ingenuouſly confeſs, it is eaſier to conceive, that a Spiritual God immediately acts upon a Soul, and communicates his Thoughts to her, than to imagine how we communicate our Notions to thoſe who hear us. God immediately acted upon the Mind of the Prophets; and therefore altho they were Plough-Men and Herdsmen, yet they foreſaw, and ſaid things that were infinitely beyond their Knowledge. This is the firſt Means, which God made uſe of to reveal himſelf, and notwithſtanding this Inſpiration was ſecret, yet it was real and true.

XIX. Secondly, God ſometimes ſpake to the Prophets in the Night; and from this Voice the Rabbies have borrowed their Bath-col, or the Daughter of the Voice, which in the ſecond Temple ſupply'd the ſecret and internal Inſpiration of the Prophets. There is reaſon to doubt, whether a Voice was really heard, or whether the Fancy was only affected; but the Hiſtory of Samuel † I think, proves that the Voice was real. For we perceive in it a Boy Sleeping who awakes at a Noiſe which ſtrikes his Ears. The ſame thing is repeated three times. Eli, to whom he applies, does not examine, whether there was any Body that could call Samuel; For he perceived that it was God that ſpake. So that thoſe ſorts of Voices muſt have been common; ſince Eli diſtinguiſh'd them by uſe and experience. Laſtly, Can it be imagin'd, that Samuel, whoſe Curioſity ought to have been awaken'd by ſo unuſual an accident, and who was inform'd by his Maſter, that it was God that ſpake, fell three times in a ſound Sleep, even when he had ſaid to God, Speak, Lord, for thy Servant heareth? Did Samuel fall aſleep after he had promiſed to God, that he would hear him? That is not ſo very likely. It might be ſaid, that all that was tranſacted in his Fancy, had not he awak'd and riſen three times. But this was more than a Dream, and the ſame God who had inſpired a Prophet to foretel to Eli the fall of his Houſe, and the deſolation of the Republick, had the ſame thing declared to him by the Mouth of a Youth, whoſe Simplicity ſecured him from any ſuſpition of Fraud or Intereſt.

XX. Thirdly, What do the Prophets mean, when they cry, that the Hand of the Lord was upon them? Hath God any Hands? Can it be conceived, that it was ſome Weight, or heavy Burden that made them yield? No, they only deſign'd to expreſs thereby the lively Operation of the Deity, which was ſo powerful, that they found themſelves unable to underſtand it. It cannot be determin'd how far this impreſſion, which wrought on the Imagination of the Prophet, proceeded. For it depended upon the Nature of the Objects, which were more or leſs terrible; or upon the duration of their Dreams. But it is evident, that their Senſes were in a violent agitation, and that this agitation laſted even after they were awake, and perhaps till the Prophet had diſcharged his Commiſſion, by revealing what he was order'd. Hence it was, that the Falſe Prophets, who endeavour'd to imitate the true ones, affected thoſe Tranſports, which made them Extravagant, as if their violent Frenzies had been a Character of their being Genuine. St. Paul oppoſes to that this Maxim; that the Spirit of the Prophets ought to be ſubject to the Prophets. It is true, a Chriſtian Doctor has laid down this Principle; but he cannot be ſuſpected by the Jews. For according to all appearances, it was an antient Maxim, receiv'd in that Nation, ſince the time that Prophets had been among them, and was a Characteriſtick to diſtinguiſh the Prophets of God from the Soothſayers of Baal, or the other Idols. Theſe laſt were ſo Extravagantly violent in their Agitations, that they were taken for Mad Men; whereas the Prophets of God, notwithſtanding the Emotion of the Animal Spirits, and heat of Fancy, had a Power to keep their Temper, and wait for a proper time to ſpeak.

XXI. Fourthly, God reveal'd his Will by the Miniſtry of Angels; but then thoſe Apparitions were real, and were not confin'd to the Fancy of the Patriarchs. For we are inform'd in Sacred Hiſtory, that thoſe Angels did Eat, and were ſeen to aſcend with the ſmoke of the Sacrifice. To conclude, God manifeſted himſelf and ſpoke to Moſes. But if that Priviledge was not peculiar to this Prophet; thus much at leaſt is certain, that God never manifeſted himſelf to any in ſo ſhining and ſenſible a manner as he did to him.

Of the Contempt which ſome have for certain Prophets. Particularly for David.

XV. His Tragical Death. XVI. Some ſtrain'd Cenſures againſt Solomon. XVII. Againſt Daniel.

I. THE Synagogue makes the Prophets much inferiour to Moſes, who excell'd them in Knowledge and Miracles. Nay, the Jews do not value ſome of them, as Ezekiel and Daniel, ſo much as they do the reſt of the Prophets. They ſay, that Ezekiel was Son or Servant to Jeremiah, and have given to this laſt Prophet the Name of Buzi, that is, deſpiſed; becauſe he was the Object of the People's Contempt. This Conjecture is not better grounded, than that of ſome Chriſtians, who believed that Pythagoras had been a Diſciple of this Prophet. It was long in Debate, whether this Book, ſhould be thrown out of the Canon of Scripture.

II. It is not the greateſt Wrong that is done to Ezekiel, to deprive him of his Birth; but his Orthodoxy is alſo call'd in Queſtion. And to ſtrengthen this, they maintain, that he taught ſeveral things repugnant to the Law of Moſes, which ought to be the Rule of Faith. He deviated from this Law-giver concerning Sacrifices; and beſides he doth not make the Guilt of the Fathers to be puniſhed upon the Children, whereas Moſes teaches, that God viſits the Sins of the Fathers upon the Children unto the third and fourth Generation. This was the reaſon that the Sanhedrim once deliberated to deprive Ezekiel of his Character, and to take away his Book from the Canon of

of Scripture. But notwithſtanding the vaſt number of Myſteries contain'd in the Chariot, or the Mercava of this Prophet, if Ananias, or Chenaniah, who was then living, had not offered to ſolve all the Difficulties which puzzled the Judges, he had loſt his Cauſe. His propoſal was accepted, and in order to help him in his attempt, he was preſented with three Hundred Tuns of Oyl for his Lamps to light him while he was upon that Work. This Work they thought would be very hard and long; ſince he was ſupply'd with ſo plentiful a Proviſion of Oyl. It is no matter whether this Story be true or falſe. But we learn from it, what Notion the Thalmudiſts who relate it, had of the Book of Ezekiel, whereof ſome Chapters are not allow'd to be read before Thirty Years of Age. However we have reaſon to wonder, that Bartolocci || who rejects this as Romantick, adopts what is added, that Chenaniah lived before the Deſtruction of the ſecond Temple; that his Houſe at Jeruſalem was as an Academy, where all the Learned came to conſult him; and it was there that the Diſciples of Hillel and Scammay agreed upon eighteen Articles. It is yet more ſtrange, that this Chriſtian Doctor ſhould believe, that it was upon the Score of the Diſputes, which aroſe at that time between the Schools of Hillel and Schammay in the preſence of Chenaniah, that J. CHRIST at the Age of 11 Years ſpake in the Temple; for the Evangeliſts ſay nothing like it. The Doctors ask'd Queſtions of CHRIST, but they did not Diſpute among themſelves. This Chenaniah, who is ſaid to have reconciled them, is unknown to the Writers of that time; and is perhaps one of thoſe Fabulous Doctors, which the Talmudiſts ſo often trump up. Spinoſa * who accuſes him for having diſguis'd, or audaciouſly falſify'd the Propheſies of Ezekiel, inſtead of explaining them, knew him no better than the reſt.

III. It is certain, Opinions have often vary'd concerning Ezekiel. For Benjamin of Tudela affirms, that he ſaw ſome Leagues diſtant from Bagdad a ſtately Tomb, upon which a Famous Library was erected, where the Original of the Book of Ezekiel was kept. It matters little whether this Fact be true or falſe; ſeeing what he adds, that People went in Pilgrimage to his Tomb, is an undoubted Argument of the veneration that they had for him. So that this Prophet is ſurrounded both with Shame and Glory.

IV. Daniel hath alſo had both his Admirers and Enemies. In the time of St. Jerome ſome Jews plac'd him among Eunuchs, and aſſerted, that the Propheſie of Iſaiah to Hezekiah; || and of thy Sons that ſhall iſſue from thee, which thou ſhalt beget, ſhall they take away and they ſhall be Eunuchs in the Palace of the King of Babylon: † found its accompliſhment in him: and as this is an Ignominious Title; ſince Eunuchs are caſt out of the Synagogues, it was concluded, that Daniel could not be rank'd among the Prophets. However, Aben Ezra hath reſtored him to his Honour by denying the Fact. The Crowd of Doctors have followed him. But two other defects have excluded him from the Order of Prophets. 1. He did not write in the Holy-Land, wherein alone the Gift of Propheſie reſided. 2. He lived in an effeminate Court, and took his ſhare of the Pleaſures of it: And for that reaſon Maimonides * and ſome others place him only among Agiographers.

V. But the violence of the Storm falls upon David, who, tho a Holy Prophet and King, beloved of God, and the Glory of the Nation, is often ill uſed by the Doctors, who ſpeak of him with a ſurpriſing contempt. I ſhall only here ſelect ſome few of their Invectives againſt him.

This Prince affirms, † that he was ſhapen in Wickedneſs, and that in Sin his Mother conceived him; becauſe the Servant-Maid of Jeſſe the Bethlehemite, being ſollicited by her Maſter, gave his Wife notice of it, who took her Servant's place, and was afterwards delivered of David. Jeſſe, who believed that this Child was born of a Slave, ſent him to keep his Sheep, 1 Sam. 16. 11. and was aſhamed to ſhew him to Samuel; but this Prophet revealed to him that this Stone rejected by the Architect, that is, by his Father, was ſhortly to become the Head of the Corner.

VI. David was Circumciſed when he came into the World. He ſays it in the Title of the ſixteenth Pſalm, at the Head of which the word Michtam is ſeen, which being divided into two, denotes a Man who hath been perfectly ſtruck, that is, Circumciſed by the Hand of God. However the ſame Prophet aſſures us, that God ſays to him. ||. Thou art my Son, this Day have I begotten thee. He became the Son of God, but at the Age of Fourteen *. Till that time he was without a Soul, and could not be called the Child of God, ſeeing that he lived in Uncircumciſion. Nay, he had Dy'd as ſoon as he was Born, if Adam, to whom he was foretold by God, had not lent him ſeventy of his Years.

VII. It was ſoon perceiv'd, that he would be Bloody and Cruel. For he was red Hair'd like Eſau. He had a cloudy Aſpect; and whenever he look'd Frowningly upon any one, he made him a Leper, or by one of his Glances infected him with ſome filthy Diſeaſe. Thus when he beheld Goliah, the Forehead of that Giant was immediately covered all over with Leproſie. Jacob underwent the ſame Fate, nay, and a worſe too, He became himſelf a Leper; and therefore he begs of God to purge him with Hyſſop, and to make him white as Snow. The Deity departed from him, and all the Sanhedrim forſook him for the Six Months that his Diſeaſe laſted.

VIII. Samuel had once a mind to reject him by reaſon of his unlucky Phyſiognomy, and reſemblance with Eſau, who was Red Hair'd; But God inform'd him, that whereas Eſau kill'd Men without conſulting any Body, and by vertue of his own Authority, David would always take the advice of the Sanhedrim.

IX. When he went to fight the Giant, Saul was ſurpriſed to ſee, that his Armour fitted David, notwithſtanding they were of a different ſize and ſhape. He concluded from thence, that he would be King; but David obſerving Saul's thoughts, would not take his Armour. He was but ſhort; but Unction had a virtue to lengthen Kings, and to make them Great.

He ſaw one day a Waſp that was ſwallowing a Spider, and a Fool who ſtruck them both. This gave him occaſion to laugh, that God had created ſo many uſeleſs Creatures. For the Waſp eats Honey, but does not make it; the Spider Spins all the Day and is never Cloathed; and Fools do not know God. God complained that David affronted him, and anſwer'd, that he would take care to convince him, that all things had their uſe. When David hid himſelf afterwards in a Cave, a Spider ſpun her Web at the entrance of it, whence Saul, who was looking out for him, took it for granted, that no Body was there, and ſo went away. When this Prince found Saul aſleep, he put his Legs between thoſe of Abner, which became as ſtiff as Columns: So that David in a diſmal tone, cryed out, My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me? But a Waſp, which at that very time ſtung Abner's Legs, oblig'd him to open them, ſo that he had a free paſſage out. Laſtly, Achiſh fell in a Paſſion, becauſe David, who pretended to be a Natural, was brought before him, for it ſeems he had a Daughter that was a Fool. Have I need of more Fools, ſaid he to his Officers, have not I one already in my Family? Thus David knew how a Waſp, a Spider and a Fool, might be uſeful, and bleſſed God.

X. Abſalom his Son was Damn'd, and had already paſſed five of the ſeven Gates of Hell; but David cryed out five times, Abſalom my Son, and at every Cry Abſalom repaſſed one Gate; and then David ſung the Eighty Sixth Pſalm, and cryed out, as in the laſt Verſe, Lord ſhew me a Token for Good, that they which hate me may ſee it, and be aſhamed.

XI. Yet notwithſtanding all theſe Priviledges which are granted to David, he is ſometimes made to be ſo Ignorant, that he hardly knew, what little Children, that go firſt to School, learn; ſometimes again his Knowledge is ſo exalted, that he is ſaid to have been too cunning for God; and that he obtained the Remiſſion of his Sins by Art and Addreſs. He ſlyly begs the Remiſſion of Sins committed through Ignorance, and God grants it to him; and ſoon after he confeſſes the Sins, which he had wilfully committed, and obtains Pardon for them too; Laſtly, he by degrees Wheedles God to Pardon his Rebellion. What a vaſt reach is this!

XII. They make him a proud and inſolent Hypocrite, For he acknowledg'd, as he ſaid, his Faults: and yet at every turn he boaſts to God of his Righteouſneſs and Virtue. It is ſaid, that the vaſt Opinion which is had of his Devotion, cannot be reconciled with ſo many Crimes that he hath committed, but by ſaying, that ſome Sins offend God; and that others only reſpect Men; as Adultery and Murder, whereof David was ſo often Guilty, were Crimes of the latter ſort. He Sinn'd againſt Men, and bragged of his Love to God. He could not forbear miſtruſting God himſelf; for he cryed out, All Men are Liars; and the Perſon, which he thereby charg'd with being an Impoſtor, was Samuel, who had, ſaid he, deceived him by appointing him King over Iſrael. But God ſometimes did puniſh his Pride; for when David had the preſumption to beg of him to try him, he felt his weakneſs, and could not ſtand the Tryal, whereto God had put him. Laſtly, he would glory in his awaking the Morning; whereas the Morning awaked other Kings; This impertinence, which is father'd upon David, is grounded upon another, namely, that he had a Harp, which ſounded in the Night, when a certain Wind blew. And that David who had oftenbeen awaken'd bythis ſound, took thence occaſion to Glory, and ſaid in his Pſalms, Awake me.

XIII. He Married two Siſters both living at the ſame time, and both Daughters of Saul. This Inceſt, which is laid to his Charge, is grounded upon the Promiſe, which Saul made him, to give him his eldeſt Daughter, which he beſtowed on Adriel. It is ſuppoſed, that this Promiſe bound David, as well as Saul, altho it was never performed; or that Saul took his Daughter again after the Marriage was Conſummated. If they ſometimes † try to palliate his Adultery with Bath-ſheba, they accuſe him of another. For they maintain that Abigail proſtituted her ſelf to that Prince to redeem the Life of her Husband, againſt whom he was deſperately exaſperated; and upon Abiſhag's refuſing to Marry him by reaſon of his extreme Old Age, they give him then a Supernatural Strength; whereas Concupiſence ought to have been at that time extinct in him.

XIV. He had not only Studied Judicial Aſtrology, but he alſo kept at his Court a great many Aſtrologers, who foretold him what Events wou'd happen: And according to their Anſwers he reſolved upon Battles, being ſure to overcome, whenever they had promiſed him Victory. He became a Magician; and it is pretended, that he is the firſt, who brought down Fire from Heaven, Hail and Snow. He became an Idolater too. For the Hiſtory teaches, that he went up to the top of the Hill. The Term in the Original is the ſame, which is made uſe of by Daniel to expreſs the Head of the Statue of Nabucadnozzar, that was an Idol. David went to the head of the Mountain, and then ador'd the Idol. It muſt not be thought ſtrange, if after this he is made to deſpair of his own Salvation. For this Inference drawn from his ſuppos'd Life and Actions, is right. However, at other times he had a great Power in Heaven, rather in Hell ſince he releas'd his Son Abſalom from thence, tho' he had already paſſed thro' five of the ſeven Gates.

XV. To conclude, the Hiſtory of his Death anſwers, that of his Life. David had deſir'd of God, that he wou'd make him to know his End; and God did ſo, and inform'd him, that he was to die upon a Saturday. David did not like that Day; becauſe his people cou'd not then think on his Funeral Solemnity, nor ſhed tears for him. He only beg'd, that it might be referr'd till the next Day, and not able to obtain ſo ſhort a Reprieve, he pray'd that he might die the Saturday Night. This is what the Devil waited for; but he cou'd not over-reach David, who was all that Day too intent upon the reading of the Law, and always repeating ſome words of it, to give Satan any hold. It came in the Devil's Mind to go to the King's Orchard, and beat down ſome Apples. This unexpected noiſe oblig'd him to leave his Appartment, and to go down a woodden Ladder the more ſpeedily to ſurpriſe the Thief. The Devil being more cunning than he, took away the Ladder, and the King falling kill'd himſelf, and his dead Corps remain'd expos'd to the Dogs: Solomon ſent to conſult the Academy what was to be done on ſo diſmal a Juncture. They durſt not move the Corps for fear of breaking the Sabbath. And it was an inhuman thing for him to let Dogs, which already ſurrounded his Father's Body, tear it to pieces. * The Doctors * remov'd the difficulty, by ordering that ſome pieces of Bread ſhou'd be cut, and laid near the Carcaſs, till it was taken away. The Dogs preferr'd the Bread to the King's Body, and David was Bury'd. Thus The Rabbies love to falſify the moſt certain Hiſtories, tho' they thereby unmercifully Stain the Memory of the Saints, whom they honour to exceſs in other places of their Works. Now that we have ſpoken of the Father, let us examine what they ſay of the Son, who was the moſt powerful and glorious of their Kings.

XVI. Nothing more incoherent and whimſical can be ſaid of Solomon †, than what they ſay of him. for they extoll him to the Skies, and degrade him as low as Hell. They ſay, that he reign'd over Angels, becauſe the Scripture || ſays, that Solomon ſate on the Throne of the Lord; but afterwards his Empire was only over Hell. " All the Earth was Vaſ-
" ſal to him. For * he had dominion from Tiphſah
" even to Azzah, and theſe two Cities are ſituate at
" the two Extremities of the Univerſe. One Doctor
" hath corrected his Maſters, who were guilty of " ſo groſs a blunder in Geography; but he makes
" uſe of another Method to give the ſame extent " to Solomon's Kingdom. For owning, that theſe
" two Towns were near one another, he makes the " Sacred Hiſtorian to ſay, the whole World was ſubject
" to Solomon as well as thoſe two Cities. This Prince's " Empire was always decaying; From Heaven to " Hell, and from Hell to the Earth. This great

" King-

" Kingdom was afterwards confin'd within Judæa
" and Jeruſalem. For † the Preacher ſays, that he " was King over Iſrael in Jeruſalem. Laſtly, he had " not at laſt a Bed of his own, and nothing was " left him but a Stick, or a Cloak. It was the Fiend
" Aſmodeus, who thus drove him out of his Domi" nions, and reduc'd him ſo low.

Thoſe, who are aware of the Extravagancies of theſe Encomiums explain them with reference to the prodigious Knowledge of that Prince. For he knew all Plants, and their Phyſical Vertues. He had attain'd to the Art of expelling Devils ſo effectually, that they did not return; and other Kings admiring his Wiſdom paid him Homage. It is in this || ſenſe, ſay they, that Solomon * ruled over Heaven, Hell, and all the Univerſe. To go on with this Notion, a myſtical Senſe muſt be given to the indigence of this Prince, who had nothing left but a Cloak to cover him. But can it be ſaid, that the Fiend Aſmodeus drove him out of his Kingdom? It is falſe, that Solomon by his Sin forfeited his Knowledge of Plants, or his Scepter, or his Crown. Foreign Kings were ſo far from withdrawing their Homages by reaſon of his Idolatry, that they had thereby a greater Veneration for him. Iſrael and Judah were always ſubject to his Laws; and it is abſurd to quote his own words taken from the Eccleſiaſtes to confine him to Jeruſalem.

Laſtly, the Jews have along while ago made him a Chief of the Magicians, who left behind him ſome Precepts of his Art. Joſephus † relates, that one, whoſe Name was Ezekiel, drove out Devils in the Preſence of Veſpaſian, by uſing a Root preſcrib'd by Solomon. He afterwards repeated the Enchantments invented by that Prince, and the Devil did not return any more. They have continued to look upon Solomon as a very great Sorcerer; and ſome Chriſtians, carry'd away by this old Prejudice, aſcribed the Clavicula to him, which contains the Secrets of that grand Caballiſtick Art.

XVII. In a word, what do they not ſay of * Daniel, whoſe Propheſies are ſo clear? They have not only endeavour'd to deprive him of his Character of Prophet, upon the Score of his Luxury, and irregular Life in a King's Court; but they alſo make him go to Egypt to buy Hogs, whil'ſt his three Companions were thrown into the fiery Furnace: And becauſe he was not allow'd to carry any Fruits out of that Country, they ſay, that he made uſe of Fraud and Colluſion to cheat the Egyptians, and carry away by ſtealth the Pigs of that Country. A pretty Employment for a Prophet! And yet the ſame Doctors ſpeak very reſpectfully of themſelves, and define an Epicure, to be One || who does neither reſpect the Sages, nor their Diſciples.

CHAP. XX.

The firſt Notion of the Meſſiah taken from the Prophets.

I. The Deſign of this and the following Chapters. II. A general Reflection upon the Oracles for the Meſſiah. III. The different Opinions of the Jews concerning the Time of the Meſſiah. IV. An Explanation of Haggai. V. The Glory of the Second Houſe. VI. The time wherein it was to happen.

I. THE Jews ſtill expect the Meſſiah as the Deliverer of their Nation, which hath ſo long groan'd under the Yoke of either the Chriſtians, or Idolaters. They did not receive him, when he appear'd, altho' the Prophets, who were inſpir'd by God, had given a full deſcription of him. Intoxicated with a temporal Proſperity, which J. CHRIST had not, they wou'd not attend to his Miracles, and Doctrine, and to the Accompliſhment of the Antient Oracles. It is one of the moſt ſurpriſing things in the World, that a Nation ſhou'd expect a Deliverer, and that this Deliverer ſhou'd appear with all the Marks whereby he ſhou'd be known; that he ſhou'd be Born in the time and place foretold by the Prophets; that he ſhou'd redeem Iſrael and reconcile Heaven with Earth, as God had promis'd; and yet that inſtead of acknowledging him, this very Nation ſhou'd crucify him. It wou'd be yet a more ſurpriſing thing, if an infinite number of Chriſtians ſhou'd for the ſpace of near Two Thouſand Years adore One crucify'd. For the Notion, which theſe have of the Meſſiah is not dazling. They are told of a Man, who died upon the Croſs; that this Puniſhment was inflicted upon him in a judicial way; that almoſt all his firſt Diſciples dy'd the ſame Death. He promiſes neither earthly Goods, nor temporal Felicity: On the contrary, he requires, that his Croſs ſhou'd firſt be taken up, and then that we ſhould follow him. A Chriſtian is enjoyn'd to put his whole truſt on this Man crucify'd; that he ſhou'd humble himſelf before him, and pay him the higheſt Adoration, as being a God. But notwithſtanding all theſe ſhocking Prejudices, Chriſtianity triumphs over all Religions. Philoſophers embrace and follow it as well as the Vulgar. It hath been profeſſed for near 2000 Years. Both the Unbelief of the Jews, and the Credulity of the Chriſtians are Riddles equally incomprehenſible. If it be true that JESUS is the Meſſiah, the blindneſs of the Jews, to whom the mean and miſerable condition of this Meſſiah was foretold, and who have ſeen his Miracles, is arriv'd to the higheſt pitch: And if this ſame JESUS is not God, the Chriſtians are guilty of an unaccountable Credulity: We will not haſtily declare againſt the Jews; For we write here a Hiſtory rather than a Controverſy. And therefore I will only obſerve, that People have had five different Notions of the Meſſiah according to the different times, they liv'd in. We will begin to ſpeak of, 1. That of the Patriarchs and Prophets, who have given us the true Marks, whereby this Deliverer was to be known. 2. That of the Jews, who liv'd whilſt the ſecond Temple ſtood, and when J. CHRIST came into the World. 3. We ſhall examine that of the Talmudiſts and Doctors, who came after this Manifeſtation, and ſince the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem. 4. We ſhall add, what they ſay of J. CHRIST. They have wrote ſeveral Books, and vended ſeveral fabulous Stories to make him odious to the Chriſtians. Theſe Books have been look'd upon as very dangerous. They were conceal'd, leſt the weak ſhould be ſtartl'd by them; but ſince they are come to light, we ſhall not ſcruple to take notice of them, both to be inform'd of what the moſt inveterate Enemies of our Religion can ſay againſt it, and of the weakneſs and abſurdity of their Cavils. 5. We ſhall conclude all with the People and Doctors, who have follow'd falſe Meſſiahs. We exceed the bounds, which we had ſet to our ſelves by by aſcending to the Patriarchs and Prophets. But we thought it not fit to omit any thing on ſo important a Subject.

II. The Characters, which the Prophets aſcribe to the Meſſiah, ought to be the Rules of our Faith. The Jews own as well as we, that they were Divinely inſpir'd. Their Oracles were deliver'd many Ages before our Controverſy began with the Jews. We receiv'd theſe Oracles from the hands of our Adverſaries. They have been the Librarians of God, and ours too. They cannot accuſe us of having corrupted them; ſince they have been ſo long the only Depoſitaries of thoſe Oracles. The places wherein their Copies and ours differ, do not concern the moſt clear and moſt eſſential Proofs of our Meſſiah. They are rather the Faults of Copyiſts, than Deſigns and colluſive Alterations. They fall more properly under the cognizance of Criticks, than of Divines. The Jews have not been ſo far carried away by their ſtrong deſire to prejudice our Cauſe, as to lay aſide their reſpect for Holy Writ; And at the ſame time, that we do Juſtice to their fair dealing in that Matter, they are oblig'd to do Juſtice to ours too. All therefore that we have to do, is, to take notice of the Marks, and the time, wherein the Meſſiah was to appear; which the Prophets ſet down. And they ſay three things upon this Head, which decide the Queſtion. One that he was to appear, whilſt the ſecond Temple ſtood. The Second, that at that time the Scepter ſhou'd be taken away from Judah. The third, Daniel, ſpeaking more clearly and poſitively than the reſt of the Prophets, ſays, that the Meſſiah was to appear Seventy Weeks after his Propheſy. It was not in the power either of J. CHRIST, or of any other to be born at that time. A Man, who can come into the World, when ever he pleaſes, and take advantage of ſome Circumſtances foretold a long time before, muſt be above the Laws of Nature. If J. CHRIST had done it, it muſt of neceſſity have been a favourable preſumption in his behalf: So that there can be no ſurer Mark, than that of the Time wherein the Meſſiah was to be Born; and ſince the Prophets have fix'd that Time, we ought chiefly to ſtick to it.

III. The Rabbies, who have for ſo many Ages ſtudy'd that Matter, find themſelves gravell'd by this Objection. It makes them ſtagger; and fly before a Chriſtian, who draws Arguments from ſo long a delay, which overthrows the faithfulneſs of God, and the truth of the Propheſies. They curſe him, who reckons the years of the Meſſiah, and pray to God that he may burſt. Abravanel was oblig'd to diſtinguiſh a time of Poſſibility, and a time of Neceſſity. He ſays, that the Meſſiah might come, if Iſrael had repented of their Sins, becauſe Iſaiah ſays, I will haſten this in his time, that is, if my People deſerve it. But the time of neceſſity ſhall not happen till the Sabbath be religiouſly obſerv'd. But when ſhall they obſerve it, ſince ſo many Ages have not been enough to make the Manifeſtation of the Meſſiah neceſſary? Others, who perceive that the Oracles fix a preciſe time for the coming of the Deliverer, and that they do not depend upon the Holineſs, or Impenitency of the People, are reduc'd to one of theſe three Extremes.

They are forc'd to acknowledge, that it is wrong to expect the coming of a Meſſiah, who hath already appear'd, ſince this Deliverer promis'd by the Prophets, was Hezechiah. Thus the famous Hillel * hath long ſince decided this Queſtion. But the Jews at this time follow but part of his Opinion, for they are contented to apply to Hezechiah ſome of the Oracles that relate to the Meſſiah. In ſhort, according to other Rabbies, Hezechiah wanted one of the eſſential qualities of the Deliverer, ſince he was no Poet; and David, who compos'd ſeveral Hymns, deſerv'd that Honour better than Hezechiah, who never prais'd God in Verſe. They alſo doubt whether there ever ſhall be a Meſſiah; ſince he is known but by a Tradition, that may be uncertain and deceitful. Joſeph Albo, one of the Diſputants for the Nation at the Conference held in Spain before Pope Benedict XIII; maintain'd, that this Tenet is at leaſt indifferent; and that he, who denies it makes but a ſmall breach in the Law, becauſe he only lops off a branch of the tree without touching the root. And therefore he cou'd not endure, that Maimonides ſhou'd have extended the fundamental Articles of Religion to Thirteen, that he might introduce that of the Meſſiah, which is but the Twelfth. He was not ſatisfy'd that this important Tenet was plac'd at the lower end; nothing wou'd ſerve him but its being entirely blotted out. Laſtly, they aſſert, that he is not to come till Six Thouſand Years after the Creation. A celebrated Enemy † of the Chriſtian Religion, who liv'd in the XIVth Century, quotes a Treatiſe, wherein God creating the Soul of the Meſſiah asketh him, whether he will redeem his Children after Six thouſand Years, and whether he will ſuffer the Puniſhments neceſſary to purify them from their Sins; and the Meſſiah agrees to it. The Jews argue here according to their Principles. For they believe, that all Souls were created at the beginning of the World. It alſo appears, that they look'd upon Pain as a neceſſary conſequent of Sin, and that the Meſſiah was to undergo it to expiate their Crimes. But they refer this Deliverance to the term of Six thouſand Years. The Interpreter endeavours to explain this Oracle from one of his Maſters, in ſaying, that their Slavery ſhall happen the Sixth Millenary. But this Subterfuge doth not relieve him. For at what time ſoever this Calamity begins, the Six thouſand Years muſt be fulfill'd before they can obtain this Deliverance; and according to their reckoning they muſt ſuffer and hope ſtill above five Hundred Years longer ||. Theſe are the moſt tolerable Opinions, which they have concerning the Coming of the Meſſiah.

IV. Haggai affirms * that God wou'd yet once, it is a little while (ſays he) and I will ſhake the Heavens, and the Earth, and the Sea and the dry Land, and I will ſhake all Nations; and then the deſire of all Nations ſhould come, and the Glory of the latter houſe ſhou'd be greater than that of the former. The Prophet deſign'd thereby to comfort thoſe, who wept, in ſeeing the ſecond Temple to want all the Ornaments, and Advantages, which they enjoy'd during the Firſt: And this he doth by theſe three Conſiderations. 1. That whilſt it was yet ſtanding, God wou'd yet once ſhake the Heavens, and the Earth, as he had done when he made his Covenant with the People upon Mount Sinai; that is, he wou'd work great and mighty Miracles. 2. That the deſire of all Nations ſhould come at that time. From whence he concluded, 3. That the Glory of the Second Houſe ſhou'd be greater than that of the Firſt.

V. Chriſtians have here very great Advantages. One that J. CHRIST the deſire of all Nations, hath appear'd under the ſecond Temple. He hath perform'd a great many Miracles, which have made this Temple more glorious than the other; this is another Advantage. And laſtly, the Jews have now no reaſon to expect the Meſſiah; for ſince the Second Houſe was demoliſh'd a great many Ages ago, it is impoſſible that the Meſſiah ſhou'd come into it, and excel its Glory above that of the Firſt.

To

To pretend, that the Second Temple laſted ten Years longer than the Firſt; that Herod * had made it a Stately Edifice; that Joſephus † makes a noble Deſcription of it, is to blind one's ſelf. For the Duration of ten Years doth not enhance the Glory of a Houſe, or compenſate for the loſs of five Pretious Things, which were wanting in it. Joſeph the Hebrew, who is quoted as a Witneſs of the Magnificence of the Temple of Herod, is an Impoſtor who had never ſeen it, and liv'd in France. Abravanel anſwers, that there ſhall be a third Houſe, wherein that profound Peace ſhall reign which hath never been ſeen ſince at Jeruſalem, J. CHRIST, and which ſhall then begin; becauſe all manner of Differences concerning Religion being then extinct, War ſhall ceaſe. But Haggai ſpeaks poſitively of the Second Temple, that was built in his Time, and drew tears from thoſe, who had ſeen the Magnificence of the former. The Peace, that was to reign under the Meſſiah was Spiritual, and only reſpected Souls: And altho' difference of Religion hath been the Cauſe of cruel Wars, it is not the only Motive. The Ambition of Uſurping Princes do oft'ner excite them, than Religion. Pagans, who did not fight for the plurality of Gods and Altars, have yet often worry'd one another. So that ſuppoſing there was no difference of Religion, yet there wou'd be no juſtifiable Grounds to believe that Peace wou'd be Univerſal, and that it ſhould always reign in the World.

VI. The only Difficulty that can be rais'd concerning this Oracle of Haggai, is with reference to the time wherein it was to be fulfilled. The Prophet affirms, that it was to be in a little while, and yet 400 Years run out from his Propheſy till J. CHRIST. But it is to be obſerv'd, that we have no controverſy with the Jews about this; ſince they can ſet no time from Haggai to CHRIST, wherein this Emotion of the Earth happen'd, or wherein the Glory of the Second Houſe hath been greater than that of the Firſt. Let them turn over the Hiſtory of the Maccabees, and conſult Tradition, and they ſhall never find the leaſt Shadow, that this Oracle was accompliſh'd. If they refer this Emotion to the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem, they place it 40 Years later than we, and have no more any right to diſpute about the Duration of the time. If they refer it to a new Meſſiah, who hath not as yet appear'd, the term is infinitely longer. It is the uſual Stile of the Prophets to repreſent diſtant Objects as near at hand. They ſpeak in the preſent Tenſe of a very remote Event. A thouſand years before God are as one day, and the ſpace of 400 Years was inconſiderable in compariſon of ſo many Ages that have paſs'd ſince the Creation. Akiba; who appear'd under Adrian, made uſe of theſe words of Haggai, to prove that the Meſſiah was to come at that time.

Some Remarks upon the Oracle of Jacob, and upon the manner of the Scepter's departing from Judah.

XVII. Three Periods of the Accompliſhment of the Oracle of Jacob. XVIII. The Anſwer of a Jew. XIX. Confuted by Rittangelius.

I. THIS Oracle doth not now admit of any Difficulty. It might be ambiguous in the time of J. CHRIST, when the Jews flatter'd themſelves, that the Scepter which was in the Hands of a Foreigner, ſhou'd return to the Houſe of David; that the Yoke of the Romans ſhou'd neither be harder, nor longer than that of the Kings of Syria, who made Judæa Tributary to them; and that if Jeruſalem and its Temple were deſtroy'd, God could glorioufly raiſe them up again from their Ruins at the end of 70 Years, after an Age of Puniſhments and Calamities: But a Nation which groans under a Captivity of 1700 Years, and is diſpers'd, without a City, without a Temple, without Victims, without a King, and without a Chief; and without a Supreme Authority in any Part of the World, cannot fondly imagine, that this is only an interruption of its Liberty, or deny that God hath wreſted from Judah the Scepter, which that Tribe had ſo long wielded.

II. I own, that this is only a general Reflection; but if the Jews wou'd duly weigh it, it wou'd be ſufficient to take away their Prejudices. For if they perceiv'd that the Meſſiah was come, they wou'd have already gone above half way to meet the Truth. Let us ſet aſide the Meſſiah of the Chriſtians, whether true or falſe, is not the queſtion; but the main Point is at what time he was to come. Jacob teaches, that then the Scepter ſhou'd depart from Judah. This Scepter ſubſiſts no where now. The preſent Captivity of the Jews is not a Captivity of 70 Years; for Sixteen whole Centuries are paſt and gone ſince the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem; neither is it only a dependance on the Neighbouring Kings, to whom they pay Homage, whilſt Judah hath its Council and Chiefs at Jeruſalem. The Tribe of Judah fugitive and ſcattered over all the Earth, doth not now make one Body, or Society. It appears no where, and its very Genealogies are confounded and out of order. So that it cannot be ſaid, that it rules at this time.

III. However, to prevent Complaints, to paſs over this Oracle, and build this Remark upon a falſe or dubious Suppoſition; let us make a ſhort Diſquiſition of theſe Four Things. 1. The Shiloh which was to come. 2. The Nature of the Authority that Jacob promiſes to Judah till the coming of the Shiloh. 3. How that Tribe hath preſerv'd this Authority. 4. Laſtly, at what time ſhe utterly loſt it.

IV. I ſhall firſt obſerve one thing, which doth not very much redound to the honour of the Chriſtians; and that is, They upbraid the Jews with their far fetch'd Explications of this Oracle, and are often guilty of the ſame Fault themſelves. After a due Examination of both, People are oblig'd to return to the Jews, who have underſtood the Shiloh better than many others.

It is true, ſome Rabbies have not hit the true Senſe of this word, when they ſaid that Shiloh ſignify'd the City which bore that Name; and that Jacob brought it into the Oracle, becauſe Saul and Jeroboam were Crown'd there; and that then the Scepter departed, becauſe the Kingdom was divided. They ſay, that the Oracle affirms, that the Scepter ſhall be taken from Judah, when a King ſhall be crown'd in Shiloh, and that this happen'd to Saul and Jeroboam. But the Fact is falſe. For the Ark was not at Shiloh when Saul was choſen King; and he was not anointed King in that Town but in Miſpat. Neither do we find that Jeroboam was Crown'd there. There is no more Grounds to affirm, that the Rod ſignifies the wainſcotted Chamber * where the Sanhedrim met, than to make ſuch a Town as Shiloh move.

V. But do the Chriſtians ſpeak more coherently? The Greek Fathers † have been wretchedly miſtaken. Becauſe they did not underſtand Hebrew, they have follow'd the || Septuagint, and have all read it without perceiving that there was a palpable Fault in it. For what is the meaning of theſe words, Till the things, which are ſubjected to him, happen? In vain do the Fathers wrack their Brains to find Senſe there, or to give it a Grammatical Conſtruction. For they have not been able to do it. What incongruous ſtuff have they not wrote upon this Topick? A Modern * Author, who ſees our Meſſiah who was to be the end of Sacrifices, more clearly in the Greek Tranſlation, than in the Hebrew Original, is not leſs fond than they of this Verſion. That ſo we may be able to make a true Senſe of theſe words, we muſt fill up the hiatus, the empty place, and put in again the term of Shiloh, or of CHRIST, which perhaps has been left out. Jacob Promiſes to Judah, that the Scepter ſhou'd not depart, till the Shiloh, or the CHRIST, to whom all things are ſubjected, come. By the favour of this natural and neceſſary Correction, the Senſe we ſhall find to be juſt. We add nothing of our own; but we take from the Hebrew, to put in the Greek Verſion what it wants. It hath been thought, that the Septuagint intended to point at the Shiloh by thoſe words, the things that are ſubjected to him. But they wou'd have given their Expreſſion another turn; and why is it pretended, that they have ſo groſsly violated the firſt Rules of Grammar? Inſtead of making the Oracle obſcure, they deſign'd to explain it, and preſerve to us an antient Tradition, ſtill found in the Chaldee Pharaphraſts. For they have tranſlated the Meſſiah King. To ſay, as the Paraphraſts do, that the Meſſiah ſhall be a King, or, as the Septuagint, that the things ſhall be ſubjected to him, is one and the ſame thing:

I leave it to the Criticks to examine, whether the word CHRIST hath been expung'd in the Septuagint, or whether a Chaſm was left there; becauſe the Tranſlators did not underſtand the Signification of Shiloh. For the Talmudiſts, who own that Shiloh ſhall be the Name of the Meſſiah, yet ſay, that they do not know that Name, and that they cannot gueſs at the Reaſon why it is given to him. The Author of the Vulgar, which the Council of Trent hath declar'd Canonical, hath tranſlated it who was to be ſent †. One || of our Divines, who thinks to go farther than Buxtorf and Cocceius, derives this Word from another which ſignifies, to fatigue, and finds there the Sufferings and Death of CHRIST. Thoſe, who ſay, that this Word ſignifies * the Skin, which contains the Fœtus, and from thence conclude, that Jacob means a Child, who was to be Born of a Virgin, are as egregiouſly miſtaken as the Rabbies whom we have already mention'd.

VI. But laying aſide ſtrain'd Interpretations; the Chaldee Paraphraſts liv'd before the Controverſy about this Oracle aroſe: And tho' they ſhould not be of ſo old a Standing, as is commonly thought, however the Argument we draw from them wou'd be but the ſtroner; ſeeing they wou'd have been forc'd to tranſlate as we do, the words of Jacob † even when they knew that the Chriſtians apply'd them to J. CHRIST. No doubt but they wou'd have depriv'd their Adverſaries of this Proof, had it been in their Power to do it. Nevertheleſs, they have explain'd the term Shiloh ß by that of Meſſiah, to whom the Kingdom belongeth, and whom the Nations ſhall obey. Onkelos is not the only one; for in the Targum γ of Jonathan, the Shiloh is alſo call'd the Meſſiah King. There is another pretty antient Commentary upon Geneſis, called Bereſchit Rabba, wherein we alſo read, that Shiloh is the King * Meſſiah. So that we have the conſent of the old Commentators. The Talmudiſts †, whoſe intereſt it was too to deny this Truth, have acknowledg'd it. The Caraites || tho' they are their Enemies, follow them in this. One of theſe prefers the Explanation of the City of Shiloh where the Ark was; But he confeſſes, that many of his Brethren are for that of the Meſſiah. The Cabaliſts themſelves find the ſame number of 358. in thoſe words, Shiloh † ſhall come, and in the Name of the Meſſiah. So that according to their Principles, the Shiloh, and the Meſſiah are one and the ſame Perſon. Aben Ezra, who doth all he can to elude the Objection of the Chriſtians, agrees, that a great many Interpreters have been of that Opinion: And indeed, Jarchi, Nachmanides, and Araman, tho' obſtinately bent to defend this Oracle againſt the Chriſtians, have kept the ſame Senſe. Theſe Interpreters ought to be preferr'd to the others; becauſe they are not blinded by Prejudices, nor hurry'd away by Paſſions. They embrace this Opinion meerly becauſe they love, and know the Truth; ſince they act contrary to their own Intereſt. They are Men of reach, open Enemies to the Chriſtian Religion, and who have very warmly impugn'd it: So that they cannot be ſuſpected. Whereas the reſt either invent, or follow ſome very remote Explications; becauſe they find themſelves gravell'd with the proof drawn from this Oracle againſt them in the behalf of J. CHRIST; the Jews have no reaſon to complain, ſince we condemn them out of the Writings of their greateſt Maſters, and of our moſt virulent Enemies. Shiloh is therefore the Meſſiah.

VII. Since Jacob gave his Bleſſing to every one of his Children; no Doubt but he Promiſed there ſome particular Advantage to the Tribe of Judah; and notwithſtanding that Opinion hath not appeared favourable to the Chriſtians, Truth muſt always be preferr'd to Intereſt. But thoſe who are dazl'd by the word Scepter, and aſcribe a Royal Authority to it, throw themſelves into an inextricable Labyrinth. For there have been no Kings in Judah from Moſes to David, nor from the return out of the Captivity of Babylon, till the Deſtruction of the Second Temple. The Regal Authority began but 600 Years after the Oracle of Jacob, and ended 500 Years before J. CHRIST. So that notwithſtanding this Propheſy, they ſaw 1100 Years ſlip away without a King. And therefore an Annaliſt *, little inferior to Baronius tranſlates it, the Scepter ſhall not fail for ever, becauſe Shiloh ſhall come. The Scepter, ſays he, ſhall fail during their Captivity, and at their return; but it ſhall not be for ever, becauſe the Meſſiah ſhall reſtore it. This Interpretation removes the Difficulty, but it changes the common uſe of the terms. For Jacob ſpeaks of a Temporal Scepter, which was re-eſtabliſh'd by the Meſſiah but in a Spiritual and Myſtical manner. Another † relies upon the Catholick Faith, which aſſures us that Kings have never been wanting in the Tribe of Judah to the time of the Meſſiah. This is to impoſe firſt upon one's ſelf, be able to do ſo afterwards upon others; for this Catholick Faith is directly contrary to Sacred Hiſtory.

VIII. There is therefore a Neceſſity to embrace a more natural Explication, and which is better grounded upon Hiſtory. By the Scepter we muſt underſtand a degree of Preheminence, which diſtinguiſh'd the Tribe of Judah, as Kings are diſtinguiſh'd in their own Dominions. Conſonant hereunto, David || alluding to this Oracle of Jacob, gives oftentimes the Title of Law-giver to Judah; and yet that Tribe preſcrib'd no Laws to the reſt. As the Title of Law-giver is not here taken in a ſtrict Senſe; neither muſt it be imagin'd, that the Tribe of Judah had always given Kings, becauſe Jacob promiſes a Scepter to it. How ſhall a Law-giver be found in Judah; ſeeing Moſes was not of that Tribe? It is ſaid * that the Tribe of Levi muſt thereby be underſtood, becauſe it lived under the Protection of the Kings of Judah, and it was the cuſtom of Kings, to put their Chief Miniſters, and thoſe they protected, under their Feet. As at the Council of Lyons, the Pope placing the Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury between his Legs, ſaid, Includemus hunc in orbe noſtro tanquàm alterius orbis Pontificem. But that is a Thread ſpun too fine; and the Cuſtom of making Chancellors to ſit at the Feet of their Kings, was not known in Jacob's time. Judah is the Law-giver in an improper Senſe; becauſe it was always the Centre of Religion, and Habitation of the Church. For there it was that the Ark reſted, the Temple was built, and the only place where Sacrifices might be offer'd, and Salvation was of the Jews. In the ſame ſenſe Judah carried the Scepter, becauſe it had a great Preheminence above the reſt of the Tribes. There is no neceſſity, that it ſhou'd always have ſupply'd the Nation with Kings; It is enough that this Tribe was the Head of it; and was preferr'd to the others.

IX. It might be tranſlated, the Tribe ſhall † not fail; For a great many Jews explain it thus. Beſides, || none is a better Interpreter of Moſes, than Moſes himſelf. And yet he often makes uſe of the word * Schevet to ſignify a Tribe. It doth not matter much, whether this term is borrow'd from each Tribe's having its peculiar Rod. It is enough, that this word was known in the time of Moſes, and that he hath often ſo us'd this Expreſſion, to ſignify a Tribe. David too affirms, that God hath not choſen the Tribe of Ephraim; and a great many Examples of this are to be found in the Hiſtory of the Kings. Farther, Jacob's Expreſſion is exact and full of Energy. For that Patriarch promiſes to Judah a particular preſervation of his Tribe, which ſhall not be diſpers'd and confounded like the reſt; but ſhall always remain till the coming of the Meſſiah. And again, he ſhews what ſhall happen to this Tribe after the Manifeſtation of the Meſſiah. For the Hebrew term ſhall fail, is borrowed from Arithmeticians, and ſignifies a Number that is wanting, or a Subſtraction. The Tribe of Judah hath failed ſince the coming of J. CHRIST. God hath taken it out of the Sight of Men. It is not now as formerly, a Tribe ſeparated from the reſt; For it forms no diſtinct Body or Society; but its Genealogies are confounded, and its Children are no more known. This Tranſlation wou'd thus be exact and natural.

X. In the main, it is no great matter whether Scepter or Tribe is tranſlated; ſince we are equally oblig'd to prove that the Tribe of Judah enjoy'd ſome peculiar Privilege till the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem. Sacred Hiſtory muſt be conſulted to learn from thence the Nature of this Privilege; and this is what we are going to do; becauſe the Event is the ſureſt Interpreter of an Oracle.

The Privilege which Jacob promis'd to Judah lay in three things. 1. His Number was always to be conſiderable, and his Portion too. For Judah was to waſh his Garments in Wine, and his Clothes in the blood of Grapes; and to bind his Fole unto the Vine; which Expreſſions denote the fertil and fruitful Soil, which he was to poſſeſs in the Land of Canaan. His Number and Proſperity gave him a Preheminence above the reſt of the Tribes, and were advantageous marks of diſtinction. And indeed this Tribe went at the Head of the Nation, and alone maintain'd its ground againſt the Kings and attempts of Neighbouring Nations, or of Schiſmaticks, and Rebels. 2. God was always to preſerve this Tribe, without diſperſing, and confounding it as the ten others in the Plains of Aſſyria. And therefore Jacob ſays, that the Tribe of Judah ſhall not fail; and his Oracle was exactly fulfill'd. 3. Laſtly, it was to be the Habitation of the Church, and the Seat of Religion. For Jacob had foretold, that the Law-giver ſhould not depart from between his feet. Let us examine as we run over the Hiſtory of this Tribe, whether it hath enjoy'd theſe three Advantages, or whether it can be ſaid, that it hath always carried the Scepter, taking this term in a preciſe and literal ſenſe for a Royal Authority: Which leads us to the third Enquiry propos'd.

XI. When the Children of Iſrael went out of Egypt to march towards the Holy Land, no King came out of Judah to be the Deliverer and Leader of the People. Moſes, who had put himſelf at their Head, was of the Tribe of Levi. All that is obſerv'd, is only, that the Tribe of Judah, which was the moſt numerous, had the moſt honourable Poſt in the Camp; and that Na-aſſon, Chief of that Tribe offered before all the reſt his Preſents and Sacrifices at the Tabernacle, when Moſes had built it. After they had entered into Canaan, a great many Heroes aroſe, whoſe noble Actions promoted them to the Helm of the Government; but there were but few of them of the Tribe of Judah. It only furniſh'd a greater Quota of Souldiers for the War; and Saul their firſt King was deſcended from Little Benjamin.

David afterwards introduc'd the Supreme Authority into his Family and Tribe. But how many Ages had pass'd from the Promise of Jacob, or the Israelites coming out of Egypt to the time of David? They reckon'd 440 Years since this last Event. Did Jacob promise a Kingdom, that was to begin so late, and to end so soon? When Jeroboam withdrew the ten Tribes, Judah rais'd 180 thousand chosen Men to reduce the Rebels. Judah more numerous than any of them always kept its ground against those ten Tribes, and held out longest against the Kings of Assyria. So that it is easy to perceive by the History, that this Patriarch foretold Judah, that his Posterity shou'd be numerous, and that it wou'd have a peculiar Privilege in the Nation; but this Preheminence vary'd according to the times. Under an Aristocratical Government it had the First Post, and march'd at the head of the other Tribes. When Monarchy was preferr'd to a Republican State, the Kings were chiefly taken out of it. When the Administration of important Affairs was intrusted to a Council, the Tribe of Judah composed, or at least made up the greatest part of the Sanhedrim. Lastly, this Tribe was always the Depositary of their Religion, and the Law-giver did not depart from between his Feet, since it always had its Temple, its Altars, and Sacrifices there.

XII. It seem'd to lose all its Privileges during the Captivity; For it was carried away as well as the others into Assyria. Cyrus, who sent it back, and his Successors, who favour'd it, kept it subject to them, and made it pay them Tribute The Kings of Syria, who, after the Conquests and Death of Alexander the Great, became Masters of it, did the same thing. The Maccabees were Levites. To conclude, Herod an Idumæan, was King in Judæa, when J. CHRIST came into the World. And here the greatest difficulty lyes.

XIII. Some pretend to clear it by saying, that the Tribe of Judah was free during the Captivity; because it preserv'd * a Liberty of Conscience; and even those Princes, who attempted to violate it were exemplarily punish'd by God, and he rewarded other Princes, who left it entire. Nebuchadnezzar became a Proselyte, and inherited Heaven by his Conversion. Josadac, the High Priest was set at liberty † to celebrate the Service of his Nation. His Son came at the Head of a great Number of Levites, who had the Care of the Worship || that was to be paid to God. The Prophet Ezekiel preach'd often to the People, who grew loose and deprav'd. Nay, Circumcision was strictly conferr'd, since all those that return'd from Babylon, bore that Seal of the Covenant. 'Tis true, Sacrifices were wanting, because it was not lawful to offer any out of the Temple; but this defect was supply'd with Fastings, and purifying Water, wherewith they cleans'd themselves, by being very exact to offer their Prayers by the Side of a River: From thence it is, that a Prophet represents them, *hanging their * harps upon the willows of* Euphrates. They wou'd no longer make use of their Musical Instruments in so deplorable a Condition as they then were; but however they ceased not to gather together upon the Banks of that River to Wash, and Fast, and Pray. Tertullian affirms, that they retain'd that Custom after the second Destruction of Jerusalem, and makes them † there to address some Prayers interrupted by Sighs and Tears:

Eliquat, & tenero supplantat verba palato.

The Jews preserv'd too some sort of Authority in the Government. For they had their Sanhedrim in Babylon as well as in Judæa. Cyrus order'd the Vessels of the Temple to be || return'd to Scebatsar Prince of the Jews. There was then at that time a Chief of the Nation; and that Prince was Zerubbabel who brought them back out of the Captivity. They had also Judges, if we may believe the History of Susanna, whose Author, tho Apocryphal, yet doubtless knew the Government of that time. *As * the* Christian Priests preserve their Authority in the Turkish Empire, so the Jews had the same Advantage at Babilon. Lastly, the People had such good Settlements in Chaldea, that part of them refus'd to quit them to return to Judea.

XIV. Notwithstanding the Subtlety and Plausibleness of these Reasons, I cannot agree that a Captive Nation, which yielded to the Yoke of Idolatrous Princes, and by an exemplary Judgment of God was expell'd the Land of Promise, did Reign; and that the Oracle of Jacob which promis'd them a Scepter, can be apply'd to their Slavish condition. It would be more fair to confess ingenuously, that there was an interruption of Authority at Babilon, than to insist on subtle Remarks, which betray their weakness. A Calamity of Seventy Years would not hinder the Accomplishment of this Propheſie. But that is not enough. For it is plainly demonstrated that there was not one King in the Tribe of Judah, since the return from the Captivity. And indeed Zerubbabel, who brought it back Dy'd without Children; And it is to no purpose, that St. Cyril, Writing against Julian the Apostate, gives him a long Posterity to succeed him in the Government, down till the time of the Maccabees; for we find neither the Names nor the Actions of his Descendants, who are said to have Ruled so long in Judea. But then we see a Succession of Fourteen † High-Priests, all Children of Joshua, who were at the Helm both of Church and State, till Antiochus Epiphanes, who was Master of Judea, gave the High Priesthood to Alcimus, who was of the Race of Aaron, and from whom it was Transfer'd to the Maccabees.

The Maccabees who became Kings and High-Priests were of the Tribe of Levi. It cannot then be said, that the Tribe of Judah held the Government: For it had no share in it, since the return from the Captivity. A great deal of Pains is taken to introduce the Maccabees into the Tribe of Judah, but to little purpose. Baronius *, who denies what hath hitherto been believed, that they were descended from Levi, grounded his Conjecture upon a Fault of the Vulgar. For whereas we Read in the Original † that Judas was greatly Renown'd in the sight of all Israel, the Author of the Vulgar makes the Historian to say, that the Men of Judah, that is, the Maccabees were greatly Renown'd. Since the Historian calls these Heroes the Men of Judah, it is reasonable to believe, that they sprung from the Tribe of Judah. But this only teaches us, that we ought not to have a blind Confidence in Interpreters ||; but that the safest way is to consult the Originals. It is also said, that the Maccabees having Marry'd some of the Daughters of the House of Judah, it might be affirmed, that this Tribe reign'd by the Females according to the Maxim of the Civilians, Ventrem partus Sequitur, the Condition of the Mother over-rules that of Children. But this is too fine Spun. Besides, the Children of the Slave rul'd in the Second Temple: and if the Tribe of Judah preserv'd its Authority after their return from Babilon, it may be said, that it always enjoy'd the same advantages; for the Jews affirm, that they have still some Masters of the Tribe of Judah, who teach the Law. God, say they, was pleased that the Ten Tribes should remain upon the Banks of the River Chabor, that those of Benjamin and Judah, who fled into the West, might not be confounded with them. Thus Isaac argues * Strengthning the Faith of his Brethren; and Lipman, † in that Famous Abridgment of Controversies, which he wrote in Verse, that the Jews might more easily learn it, and answer the Objections of the Christians.

XV. I can't be charg'd with having enervated the difficulty; since I have collected whatever might strengthen it, and refuted whatever might seem to weaken it. However, it is no hard matter to remove it by recurring to the Principle which we have laid down, in that Jacob did not promise to Judah an Authority that should always be Supreme and Regal; but a preheminence above the rest of the Tribes, whereby it made a considerable Body, preserved Religion, the Temple, Altars and Sacrifices. And it enjoy'd this preheminence much more sensibly after its return from the Captivity, than it did before. In truth, the Tribe of Judah did not absolutely disappear during the Captivity; it was all found entire at their return. It ought not to be thought more strange to see, that after this return, the High-Priests governed the People, or that the Authority was in the Hands of the Maccabees, than it was to see Moses who was descended from the Tribe of Levi, to put himself at the Head of the Nation to bring them out of Egypt; or Eli, the Sovereign High-Priest, a long time after, to hold the Government for a great many Years. Of Ten Tribes, that of Judah returned alone out of Chaldea with Little Benjamin, which is often confounded with Judah. It came to settle again at Jerusalem, and to possess the Capital of the Country, whilest there were in the other parts of Judea, but some few Families of the other Tribes: And then it was that it gave its Name to the Nation, and to all the Holy Land. All the other parts of that Nation came every Year to pay a kind of Homage to it; and as it were to beg of Judah the exercise of their Religion, they came to Worship in the Temple, and to Sacrifice upon its Altars. The Centre of Religion and of the Nation was in that Tribe; there the Sanhedrim or Great Council met, that had the Direction of the most important Affairs. From thence came the necessary Advices to the remote Synagogues, and the Indiction of the Passe-over; Lastly, it was there that Strangers of the same Religion came from Egypt and Chaldea to acknowledge to the very last period of its Destruction, the Greatness and Superiority of Judah over the other Tribes. Can any other single Tribe be produced with all these Advantages?

XVI. So that we have now demonstrated three things. 1. That the Tribe of Judah had a preheminence above the rest. 2. That it preserved it after their return from the Captivity. 3. And indeed, that it had enjoyed it till the Shiloh, or Messiah came. What now remains to be proved by us, is the easiest of all; which is, that this Tribe confounded with the others, and dispersed throughout the World in so many Places, hath not at this Day the least shadow of Preheminence, nor doth it now make a numerous, or distinct Body.

XVII. We must here distinguish three different Periods of the loss of this Authority. 1. That which happen'd in the time of CHRIST. For Herod, who was neither of the Family of David, nor of the Tribe of Judah, nor of any of the other Tribes, was then King of Jerusalem, which was already Tributary to the Romans. Besides, these Masters did not only keep this King so much under, that he had not Power to judge his own Children, who had then Conspir'd against him; but also reduc'd into a Province part of the Tribes, and among them that of Judah. For whilest Herod the Tetrarch Ruled in Galilee, and his Brother Philip had another Government, Archelaus was expell'd out of Jerusalem, and the Romans sent a Governour, who took an Inventory of all his Estate, as of the Estate of a Vassel: Jerusalem and the Neighbouring Country were joyn'd to Syria, and became a Roman Province. The Sanhedrim lost the Power of Life and Death, which they had preserv'd even under the Kings of Egypt and Syria; and when they were Crucifying the Messiah, they acknowledged that the Scepter was departed from Judah, since || the Jews said unto Pilate, it is not lawful for us to put any Man to Death. This is the first Period of the Accomplishment of the Oracle. 2. Their Condition grew worse and worse. For Jerusalem was destroy'd; all the advantages that we have ascribed to the Tribe of Judah vanish'd; and it was involved in the same Calamity with the rest of the Tribes. All the Inhabitants of Judea were dispers'd, and sold like Cattel in Markets, and we do not at this Day see the least shadow of this Tribe's being come together again. 3. They might at first flatter themselves that this Calamity would have an end; but on the contrary they find they are yet dispers'd, and the Captivity still continues; and there is no Country now where the Tribe of Judah makes any Figure, and even where it can be known. Their Genealogies are so confounded, that they can't be unravelled. Some brag that they came from this Tribe, and from the House of David; but they only prove their Descent by a Tradition, which is too dubious to be believ'd. Not one single Family among them can shew its Genealogy, and they have already for these Four or Five Hundred Years, complain'd that they do not know that of David. It is said that the Tribes of Benjamin, and Judah are in the West, and that the other Ten inhabit the Banks of the Chabor. Among the Western Jews, those of Spain, pretend that they are the remains of that shatter,d Tribe. But it is a common thing for every Nation and Family to boaſt of their Anceſtors and Original; and were People as Credulous as they are Vain upon this Head, the meaneſt City would claim its having been founded by the earlieſt Heroes of Antiquity. But bare Pretenſions will not ſatisfie us. For we require good Proofs, and the Jews only offer ſome uncertain or falſe Preſumptions to make good what they pretend to. Moreover, three things may be obſerv'd. Firſt, That at the taking of Jeruſalem, there was a prodigious number of Strangers come from the Eaſt to the Paſſe-over; And when this City was Razed to the Ground, no diſtinction was made of Families. Some retired into Egypt, where they had ſome Friends; others were ſold and diſpers'd as Slaves in the Empire; and a very ſmall number of them remain'd in their deſolate Country. How could they then, being ſo miſerably ſcatter'd, have preſerv'd their Genealogies and diſtinguiſh'd the Tribe of Judah from the reſt? Can we certainly depend upon a Tradition, which for almoſt Seventeen Hundred Years hath been handed down from Father to Son? Let it be as it will, no conſiderable Body of them remain'd. And the Tribe of Judah's going into Spain, is one of thoſe Fictions, which the Jews have invented either to tickle their Pride, or to comfort themſelves in their Calamity. Secondly, Moſt of the Jews that are now in the Weſt, came from the Eaſt. For when their Academies were deſtroy'd at Babilon, that Perſecution drove them into Spain and France, where till that time they had made very little Figure, but afterwards they appeared with ſome ſhew of Pomp there. Theſe Eaſtern Jews muſt of neceſſity have been mingled with thoſe who were diſpers'd there before; and how can they be diſtinguiſh'd at this time? Laſtly, Tho' it ſhould be true, that ſome Families of Judah remain'd, yet they have no advantage over the reſt of the Tribes; ſince they make no ſeparate Body, and there is no diſtinction of Authority between them. This is the third and laſt period of the Accompliſhment of the Oracle of Jacob; which leaves no room to doubt, whether the Scepter was departed from Judah, at the time when our Saviour appear'd. This is not a ſhort interruption of the Reign of this Tribe, but ſo full and compleat an extinction of its Authority and Preheminence, that not the leaſt ſhadow thereof now remains. So that this Oracle was fully accompliſhed in J. CHRIST. Pray, whoſe Birth was ever foretold ſo many Ages before? A great many Heroes have been Deify'd by the Heathens after their Deaths, upon the Account of their Conqueſts and other brave Atchievements. But was there any one of them, whoſe Birth with all its Circumſtances has been predicted, and who was expected for many Ages before he appear'd? Has the Birth of Impoſtors, who have either broached new Religions, or changed what had been eſtabliſhed, been foretold? Was it in the Power of J. CHRIST to live at the time when the Tribe of Judah was loſing its Authority and dependant on a Roman Governour, whilſt the reſt of Judea had the good Fortune to be under the direction of the Herods? Was it in the power of J. CHRIST after he was Crucify'd, to take away the Scepter from the Tribe of Judah, to make it vaniſh, and for the ſpace of Sixteen or Seventeen hundred Years to diſperſe it as well as the reſt of the Tribes, as Jacob foretold it here? But ſince he hath done it, he muſt be not only the Meſſiah foretold by the Oracle; but muſt alſo have been inveſted with a Divine Power to ſcatter the Unbelievers; and reduce the Nations to his Obedience?

XVIII. A Jew of Amſterdam pretended * to elude this Oracle by an Interpretation, which he had learn'd from his Father. He maintain'd, that by the word Scepter, which properly ſignifyed a Rod, Jacob foretold to Judah a long Train of Afflictions till the coming of the Meſſiah, and that this Oracle is now fulfill'd by the diſmal diſperſion of all his Poſterity. Thus this Propheſie is ſo far from demonſtrating that the Meſſiah is come, that it proves that we ought ſtill to expect him. But if you will follow the Interpreters, who underſtand by the Scepter a Supreme and Regal Dignity; you need but alter the Punctuation to overſet all the Notions of the Chriſtians. For putting a point after Gnad, we muſt not underſtand, that Judah ſhall Reign till the coming of the Meſſiah; but that he ſhall always Reign, Eternally, after the coming of the Meſſiah.

XIX. Rittangelius repreſented to this Jew, that his Explication was not new; and that he had no reaſon to honour his Father with the firſt Invention of it; ſince † he had ſeen it in a Book wrote to explain to Women and Children the difficult words of Scripture; wherein it is aſſerted, that the Scepter ſignifies the Rod, or Afflictions of the Jewiſh People. Jacob the Son of Amram doth alſo produce this Explication in his Gate of Truth. || But the LXX Interpreters have overthrown it, in tranſlating this term by that of Prince. Beſides, Jacob deſigning to raiſe his Tribe above the reſt, had acted very ridiculouſly in having foretold nothing but Calamity to it. And in truth Judah did not undergo any misfortunes that were peculier to it. Farther, this Explication is contrary to the Tradition of the Jewiſh Fathers, who have all explain'd this Oracle of the Scepter, and at the ſame time have overturn'd the Second Explanation; ſince they ſay * that this Scepter ſhall not be broken, till the time that the Meſſiah be come. The Paraphraſes of Onkelos and of Jonathan prove this. So that by taking the Old Jewiſh Interpreters for Judges, we learn two things; One that the Shiloh ſignifies the Meſſiah; The other, that Judah was to Reign till his Advent. The fulfilling of the Oracle is palpable. For Judah hath not Reigned for theſe many Ages, and he is now in the greateſt Calamity and Affliction. So that it muſt be confeſſed that the Meſſiah is come.

I. IT ought not to be wonder'd at, that we inſiſt on the Circumſtance of the Time, wherein the Meſſiah was to be Born. For there is none more ſure. And indeed it did not lye in J. CHRIST's Power to be Born, and to die in the time, appointed by the Prophets. He cou'd not divine, without being a God, what wou'd happen after him. Whether the Scepter ſhou'd depart from Judah, and the Tribe be diſpers'd, confounded, and ſubſtracted from the ſight of Men. It was not in his choice to come at the end of the Sixty nine Weeks, to die the Seventieth, and afterwards, by the Deſtruction of the Temple of Jeruſalem and of its Altars, to aboliſh Sacrifices. We cannot then take a ſurer Method to find out the Meſſiah, than by examining the time, wherein, according to the Patriarchs and Prophets, he was to be Born.

II. Daniel hath foretold *, that there are Seven, and Sixty two Weeks from the word, or Commandment to reſtore and to build Jeruſalem, unto Meſſiah the Prince. And after theſe Threeſcore and two Weeks ſhall Meſſiah be cut off, but not for himſelf. And he ſhall confirm the Covenant with many for one Week: and in the midſt of the Week he ſhall cauſe the Sacrifice and the Oblation to ceaſe; and by means of the abominable wings, he ſhall make it deſolate even until the Conſummation, and that determin'd ſhall be pour'd upon the deſolate The Meſſiah is here ſpoken of; the time of his Coming fix'd at the end of Sixty nine Weeks, with that of his Miniſtery and Death. He ſhall be cut off in the midſt of the 70th Week. The Deſign of his Death is ſet down, it is not for himſelf. And laſtly, Jeruſalem is threaten'd with an entire Deſolation, which ſhall happen by the abominable Eagles that is, by the Romans, who ſo aboliſh'd the Oblations and Sacrifice that none have been offer'd ever ſince.

III. It is ſtrange that ſo clear a Propheſy ſhou'd be ſo variouſly explain'd. An Evangelical Demonſtration † hath been lately publiſh'd, wherein Daniel's Weeks begin at the Edict of Cyrus, and end at the 37th Year of the Chriſtian Æra. The Author believes he can diſintangle himſelf from the Difficulties, this falſe Calculation is liable to, by obſerving, that Diodorus Siculus found ſome Difference in the Lives of the Kings of the Medes; as if theſe Kings of the Medes had any relation to the Oracle of Daniel. He ſhou'd have reckon'd the Years of the Kings of Perſia, inſtead of thoſe of the Kings of the Medes. But he jumps nimbly over the Abyſs; and without any further Ceremony, makes Alexander dye 130 Years after the Edict of Cyrus, altho' he differs from the Truth above 150 Years. Theſe Evangelical Demonſtrations are only good to deliver Religion bound hand and foot to the Jews, and Irreligious and Prophane Perſons; For they betray it by the Falſhoods, which are advanced on it; and give the Cauſe up to the Jews, who have ſhorten'd the Perſian Monarchy, only to hinder the time wherein the Meſſiah was to appear, from being known.

IV. A Critick ||, who is far more Learned, and more exact in Chronology, aſſerts, that in the Explanation of Daniel, the Vulgate muſt be preferr'd to the Hebrew Original. He maintains and extolls the Rights of his Church, which hath declar'd this Tranſlation authentick; as if the Jews, who are to be convinc'd by this Oracle, were oblig'd to have a greater deference for the Romiſh Church; and to prefer a Latin Verſion to the Original, out of reſpect to the Council of Trent. He affirms, that God was ſo far from deſigning to reveal to the Jews the time of the Death of his Son, that on the contrary he intended to conceal it. He had ſpread ſuch a dark Cloud over the Oracle, that it cou'd not be underſtood till Titus and Veſpaſian had deſtroy'd the Temple and City. He maintains, that after LXII. Weeks the Meſſiah ſhall be killed, that is, he that ſhall make appear that the Meſſiah is one day to be kill'd, the Temple being prophan'd after his Death, how it ſhall be deſtroy'd after that of the Meſſiah. The Death inflicted after Sixty two Weeks upon a Saint and Sovereign High Prieſt, ſhall teach you, that the Meſſiah ſhall truly be one day put to Death; he who is by way of Excellency the CHRIST. The Veil is thick; and we can hardly ſee through the Cloud wherein God wraps himſelf up. However, inſtead of one Meſſiah, we diſcover three in it. One is a Meſſiah, a Captain-General, (viz.) Cyrus, who appear'd 51 Years after Jehoiakim was carried away into Babylon, and after the Propheſy, which Jeremiah declared the ſame Year; from whence we muſt begin the Seven Weeks, as well as the Sixty two. There is a ſecond Meſſiah, who is Onias the High Prieſt, who was Kill'd at Daphné before Antiochus prophan'd the Temple, and put the Abomination in it. It is affirmed, that this Oracle ſpeaks of Onias; becauſe his Death teaches us, that the true Meſſiah ſhall be kill'd. Onias was the Type of J. CHRIST plainly noted in Holy Writ, which was to direct us to the Original. So that Daniel's deſign here was to deſcribe Onias, and to call him the Meſſiah.

If you ask, whence is it known that Onias was the Type of the true Meſſiah promis'd by Daniel, tho' he doth not ſay one word of it, you'll be referr'd to the Second Book of the Maccabees, which ſpeaks of Onias as of a Saint. You muſt not anſwer, that all Saints are not Types of the Meſſiah, and that the Jews do not admit the Books of the Maccabees into their Canon. For it will be reply'd, that the Romiſh Church hath declar'd this Book Canonical, and if Others do not think ſo, it is their fault.

If you Object, "That the Title of Meſſiah, when "found in the Scripture in an abſolute Senſe can "only be apply'd to the true Meſſiah; and this is "the place that puzzles the Jews, ſince they can't "ſhew any one Man to whom this Title is given; "as in the Oracle of Daniel, where it is ſaid, that "the Meſſiah ſhall be put to Death; I can't tell what Anſwer you'l receive. For if Daniel means J. CHRIST in this Oracle, and if the Title of Meſſiah cannot be apply'd to any Body elſe, Father Harduin's typical Meſſiah muſt fall; and Onias be turn'd out of this Oracle of Daniel; or if the Prophet ſpeaks of Onias, that Soverein High Prieſt is expreſly call'd Meſſiah; and the Jews are thereby rid of the only Argument which lay hard upon them. To ſay, that the Sixty two Weeks end in the time of Onias, is to beg the Queſtion. For why muſt we begin the Seven Weeks, and the Sixty two in Jeremiah's time, a great many Years before Daniel publiſh'd his Oracle, in order to make them end at Onias?

V. The reſemblance found between Onias and J. CHRIST conſiſts in Two things. 1. That Onias was murder'd by the Treachery of Andronicus. 2. That the Temple was afterwards prophan'd by Antiochus, as it was deſtroy'd by Titus. But notwithſtanding all this, yet ſome very great Scruples ſtill remain. For the Prophanation of a Temple is a mighty different thing from the entire Deſolation of the City of Jeruſalem, and of the whole Nation. The Temple was purify'd not long after the Death of Onias; whereas that of Herod cou'd never be rais'd, ſeeing it was reduced to Aſhes. The Death of Onias had no relation to the Crime of Antiochus. But the Jews have loſt their Temple becauſe of J. CHRIST. The Jews as well as the Heathen demanded that Andronicus (who kill'd Onias) might be puniſh'd; whereas they cried with a loud Voice, that JESUS ſhou'd be Crucify'd. Onias did not die for the People, but for himſelf; and he had not confirm'd the Covenant during half of one Week, as Daniel had foretold of the Meſſiah. Laſtly, Onias died without any Legal Proceedings, by the treachery of a Profligate Fellow, out of Jeruſalem, at Daphnè, whether he had fled into the Temple of Apollo, which ſerved him for a Sanctuary. Let them exclaim as much as they pleaſe againſt thoſe, who by this Objection ſtrike at the Author of the Maccabees, that doth not concern us. Let them complain, that a celebrated * Author makes Onias to be killed in the Temple; whereas they had drag'd him out of the Sanctuary. Laſtly, Let them produce ſome examples of Towns, which have been as places of Refuge for the oppreſs'd; yet it is ſtill true, that Strabo is a good Commentator of the Author of the Maccabees. One ſays, that Onias was retir'd to Daphné in an Aſylum, or place of Refuge. The other deſcribes this Aſylum of Daphné to be ſituated in a Wood, where the Temple of Apollo ſtood. The truth is, Temples and Altars were places of Refuge. But granting that Onias remain'd in the Grove conſecrated to Apollo, Wou'd the Scandal be a jot the leſs to ſee a Sovereign High Prieſt, for the Preſervation of his life, to ſhelter himſelf under the Protection of Idols? Ought he after this to be made a Saint of, and a Type of the Meſſiah? 'Twas Religion which made thoſe Aſylums ſacred and inviolable; So that Onias under the ſhelter of the Pagan Religion and Idolatry, ſecur'd himſelf from Death. This is an unqueſtionable matter of Fact; which muſt be prov'd falſe, before an Enquiry can be made, whether it was right or wrong to place this Daſtardly High Prieſt in Heaven. If our Meſſiah, when he fled from the Sovereign Pontiff of Jeruſalem, had retired into ſome Grove conſecrated to falſe Gods, and that a Heathen treacherouſly getting him out from thence, had knock'd him on the Head; had his Death been look'd upon as worthy of a God, that was to make Satisfaction for the Sins of Mankind? And yet it is ſaid, that Onias in his Death was the lively Image and Type of the Meſſiah.

VI. Marſham † is the firſt, that trod this Path; and his Syſtem is only diſguis'd by altering ſome Circumſtances; as the late Interpreters of the Revelations of St. John diſguiſe that, which Grotius had invented upon that Sacred Book. For Marſham ſeparates the Seven Weeks, and terminates them to Cyrus, whom he alſo calls the Meſſiah General of an Army. Beſides, he makes the Sixty two Weeks to end at the Purification of the Temple by Judas Maccabeus. This is what is eſſential in this Explication; and what Alterations have been made, are but either Embelliſhments, or Buttreſſes to ſupport this tottering Edifice. It is certain, that Onias is made a Martyr, and a Type of J. CHRIST, which Marſham had not done. But I queſtion whether the Invention of this new Type is ſo honourable to the Church, that People ſhou'd brag of it; and whether it doth not open an eaſier way to refute the Explication of the Engliſh Critick. One wou'd think, that Chriſtians finding, that the Jews have not reach and ſubtilty enough to elude the force of Oracles, endeavour to wrack their own Fancies to help them out.

VII. New Syſtems do oft-times make People ſuſpect, that there are ſome inſuperable Difficulties in thoſe Propheſies. which ſeem the moſt expreſs and particular. Inſtead of inventing any, we ſhall clearly ſet down, what may diſcover the Truth to thoſe, who honeſtly Search after it.

Firſt, the Prophet ſpeaks plainly of the Meſſiah, the Leader of the People, the everlaſting Righteouſneſs, and the Holy of Holies. The Jews, and the generality of Criticks, who are often harder to be pleas'd than the Jews, confeſs, that the Meſſiah muſt be underſtood by him, who is to appear at the end of the Sixty nine Weeks. Daniel doth not only give him the Name of Meſſiah; but alſo heaps up magnificent Titles, which denote his perfect Holineſs and Authority. Beſides, he expreſly fixes the time, wherein the term of the Meſſiah ought to be reckoned, namely, that of the Publication of the Edict for the Rebuilding of Jeruſalem. This Edict is that which Artaxerxes ſirnamed Longimanus granted to Nehemiah in the 20th Year of his Reign, and by virtue of which Jeruſalem was entirely reſtor'd. Cyrus had publiſh'd one a long time before; but it only reſpected the Temple; and that of Artaxerxes ought to be call'd the Edict, by way of Excellency; becauſe it was the laſt, the moſt authentick, and the moſt advantageous to the Nation: which was no longer oblig'd to go to the Court of Perſia to beg any new Declarations; and that notwithſtanding the Jealouſy and Malice of their Neighbours compleated the Re-eſtabliſhment.

The Seventy Weeks of Years make 490 Years. The Meſſiah was to appear 483 Years after the Prediction of Daniel, and to be cut off in the midſt of the laſt Week; that is, Three Years and a half after he had begun his Miniſtry. So that we muſt find 486 Years from the 20th Year of the Reign of Artaxerxes to the Death of J. CHRIST; which many Divines think to be a hard Task.

* Lamy Apparatus Chronologicus. † Marſh. Can. Chron. Ægypt. Sec. VIII. p. 612.

VIII. Ptolomy gave a Rule of times, which cannot be ſuſpected; becauſe this || Author compos'd it upon antient Monuments, and never embrac'd Chriſtianity. As he reckons but 477 Years from the Edict of Artaxerxes to the 19th of the Reign of Tiberius, Daniel has been reconciled to him, by obſerving that that Prophet follow'd the manner of reckoning uſed by the Caldeans, whoſe Year conſiſted only of 360 Days. By cutting off 5 Days * from every Year, we find the 477 Years of Ptolomy at the Death of J. CHRIST. And it is not Strange, that Daniel follow'd the Method of the Caldeans; ſince he wrote among them for the ſake of a Nation, that was to remain there till the coming of the Meſſiah; and that Ezekiel hath done the ſame thing.

This Obſervation is new; but I can't tell whether it ought to be receiv'd; becauſe if the Year of the Caldeans was commonly 5 Days ſhorter, what was loſt they retriev'd by intercalating from time to time one Month.

But, 1. The Rule of times ſet down by Ptolomy is enough to confute the Jews, and all thoſe, who ſhorten ſo much the Monarchy of the Perſians, by allowing but four Kings to them. 2. The Number of Years conteſted in Five hundred Years is very inconſiderable. The difference is only of Nine Years found in the Reign of Artaxerxes, when you give it its full length. It cannot be deny'd, but that Ptolomy hath made ſome conſiderable Omiſſions in the Monarchy of the Perſians; ſince he hath taken no notice at all of the Uſurpers; Artabanus, who got Artaxerxes the Kingdom; Xerxes, and Sogdianus. Theſe Uſurpers reign'd almoſt three Years. 4. Laſtly, altho' Ptolomy was a Learned and Able Man, he doth not agree with Porphyry, who ought no more to be ſuſpected than he concerning the Reign of Ptolomeus Lagus, which this laſt makes to be three Years longer. It appears by a Letter wrote to Cicero, that Dionyſius Auletes did not dye till the 703 Year of Rome; from whence it may eaſily be concluded, that he reign'd 30 Years, and not 29, as Ptolomy affirms. However, we may follow Ptolomy, and ſupply out of other Hiſtories what he wants; and his Teſtimony is ſtill of great weight.

IX. If you won't enter into the detail of the Reign of every Prince, it will be enough to obſerve theſe three General Epocha's, which are certain.

1. That of the Edict put out by Artaxerxes in the 20th Year of his Reign in the LXXXI Olympiad.

2. The Death of Alexander the Great, which is controverted by no body.

3. And the time from the Death of Alexander to the 19th Year of Tiberius, which was that of the Death of J. CHRIST, which likewiſe is not conteſted.

X. Artaxerxes † Longimanus began his Reign, when Themiſtocles fled into Perſia. Thucydides || ſays ſo in expreſs terms. He retir'd thither the Second Year of the 77th Olympiad. This Prince who then began to reign, was upon the Throne the Year before, eſpecially if we include in his Reign, the time in which Artabanus, omitted by Ptolomy, was Maſter of the Empire.

This Prince gave the Edict for the Rebuilding of Jeruſalem in the Twentieth Year of his Reign towards the end of the Eighty firſt Olympiad.

He lived Twenty Eight or Twenty Nine Years after this Edict; for he ſent an Ambaſſy into Lacedemon in the ſixth Year of the Peloponeſian War, which was the laſt of the Eighty Eighth Olympiad, and the three Hundred and twenty ninth Year from the building of Rome.

The beginning and end of the Reign of this Prince are known by the Pagan Hiſtorians; and the time is pretty well fixed by theſe two Facts; Themiſtocles's Retirement to the Court of Perſia; and the Ambaſſy, which this Prince ſent the ſixth Year of the Peloponeſian War. Theſe two Remarks remove all the difficulty.

XI. Artaxerxes Died in the Eighty Eighth Olympiad. One Hundred and three Years paſs'd from this Prince's Death to that of Alexander the Great, which happen'd in the Hundred and fourteenth Olympiad: Add to this the twenty eight or twenty nine Years that Artaxerxes Reigned ſince the Publication of his Edict granted in the Eighty firſt Olympiad, and you find exactly One Hundred thirty two Years.

XII. The Heathen Chronologers reckon three Hundred fifty four, from the Death of Alexander to the nineteenth Year of the Reign of Tiberius, adding One Hundred thirty two Years to three Hundred fifty four Years, you find four Hundred eighty ſix; which makes the Term fixed by Daniel for the Deſtruction of the Meſſiah; and the four Hundred eighty ſix Years fall in the nineteenth Year of Tiberius, and the ſeven Hundred eighty fourth of the City of Rome, when J. CHRIST was ſomething above thirty three Years of Age, beng Born in the ſeven Hundred and fiftieth Year of Rome. He had begun three Years and ſome Months before to preach; that is, when he enter'd into the ſeventieth Week mentioned by Daniel. So that this Calculation is exact. It is ſo too by the Olympiads. For Artaxerxes granted the Edict in the third or fourth Year of the Eighty firſt Olympiad; and J. CHRIST Died in the two Hundred and ſecond Olympiad. So that one Hundred twenty one Olympiads paſt, which make four Hundred eighty and ſix Years and ſome Months, after which J. CHRIST was Crucify'd; and theſe one Hundred twenty one Olympiads, and two Hundred and two Olympiads, fall in the ſeven Hundred and Eighty fourth Year of Rome.

XIII. The greateſt Difficulty of all is about the end of the laſt Week; becauſe Daniel foretells, that the Deſolation ſhall happen by ſome abominable Wings. Thoſe Wings naturally repreſent the Roman Eagles, which deſtroy'd Jeruſalem under the Empire of Titus. Yet this great Event did not happen till three Years and a half after the Death of J. CHRIST. It is for that reaſon, that ſome Criticks divide this Week from the reſt, and maintain that the Alliance which was to be made, was that contracted with Antiochus King of Comagena, Agrippa King of the Jews, and ſeveral other Sovereign Princes, to deſtroy that Nation; Nero having ſent Veſpaſian into Judæa to negotiate thoſe Alliances; and as they begin this Week in the 67th Year of the Chriſtian Æra, ſo they end it at the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem.

XIV. But the Difficulty is not for all this entirely remov'd. For Daniel ſpeaks of a Covenant which the Meſſiah ſhall confirm for the ſpace of half a Week; which concerns the Covenant, that God had made with us through the Meſſiah, either by his Preaching, which laſted three Years and a half, or by his Death; and which cannot agree with the Alliance of the Romans with the Kings of Comagena, Judæa, or Iturea. Beſides, the Meſſiah entred into the 70th Week; ſince he dy'd in that Week. How then can it be ſever'd from the other 69, and an Interval of 30. or 36 Years be put between them?

XV. But the Prophet reckon'd 70 Weeks, only becauſe it was an even Number. He ſpoke of the 70th Week, becauſe the Meſſiah was really to enter into that Week, to exerciſe his Miniſtry, and to die in it. But what relates to the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem is referr'd to a more diſtant time, which differs from the 70 Weeks. And indeed the 70 Weeks relate only to the Meſſiah, his Covenant, and Death. After which the Deſolation was to happen, as it really happen'd ſome time after. The Prophet diſtinguiſhes the time, and ſays, that this was only to happen after the Death of the Meſſiah, without mentioning the ſame Week. So that we may refer the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem to ſome time after.

XVI. Let the Jews begin where they will to count the 70 Weeks of Daniel. It is impoſſible for them to produce a Meſſiah, who appear'd before the abominable Wings had compleated the Deſolation of Jeruſalem. And how many Ages have paſs'd ſince the 70 Weeks without the leaſt appearance of a Meſſiah? So that either Daniel muſt be an Impoſtor, and a falſe Prophet, or the Meſſiah hath a long time ago manifeſted himſelf.

XVII. The Arguments of the ableſt Jews *, who have endeavour'd to elude this Oracle, tend to ſhorten the Monarchy of the Perſians, which according to their Account, laſted but 52 Years after Cyrus. They ground themſelves upon their great, and ſmall Chronicles, where they reckon but Four Kings inſtead of Ten. Daniel and Ezra did not promiſe any more, and by following this Chronology it is impoſſible to find 486 Years to the Death of J. CHRIST; and as for them they begin to reckon the Weeks from the Deſtruction of the firſt Temple, and reckon 490 Years from that firſt Calamity to the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem by Titus. They imagine two Anointed, whereof One was Cyrus, who appear'd at the Seventh Week, and the Other Agrippa II, who was kill'd at the laſt Siege of Jeruſalem: After which the Commander, that is, Titus deſtroy'd Jeruſalem; and the Deſolation of that City was to laſt till the War of Gog and Magog, wherein all the Enemies of the Nation ſhall be exterminated by the Meſſiah. Thus Solomon Jarchi, and Abravanel, back'd by the moſt conſiderable Doctors of the Synagogue, argue.

XVIII. It is enough to obſerve, that we follow Prophane Hiſtorians concerning the Monarchy of the Perſians. Nay, we follow likewiſe Joſephus. This Hiſtorian, who is jealous to the laſt degree of the glory of his Nation, and all thoſe Authors, who ought not to be ſuſpected, are to be preferr'd to the Small Chronicle, whoſe Author owns that he liv'd but 453 Years after the Deſtruction of the Temple; that is, at the beginning of the VIth Century of the Chriſtian Æra; and the Author of the great Chronicle is guilty of too many Faults with reference to Barcochebas, to believe that he was Co-temporary with him; and that J was R. Joſes a celebrated Man at that time. It is very likely, that this Book was compos'd but in the XIIth Century, atd 1053 Years after the Deſtruction of the Temple. Their Authority cannot come in Competition with that which we produce concerning the Monarchy of the Perſians.

XIX. I own that the Authority of Daniel wou'd prevail over all the Teſtimonies of Infidels, That Prophet has ſaid †, That three Kings of Perſia ſhall yet ſtand up, and the fourth ſhall be far Richer than they all, and by his Strength through his Riches he ſhall ſtir up all againſt the Realm of Grecia; and Abravanel ‖ boldly concludes from thence, that there were to be but four Kings of Perſia, (viz.) Cyrus II. Cambyſes his Son, Ahaſuerus the Husband of Eſther, and Darius, otherwiſe call'd Artaxerxes. Here are almoſt as many Blunders as Words. 1. There was no Cyrus II. who reign'd in Aſia, and ſucceeded his Father Cyrus I. This is to palm fabulous Kings upon the Perſians. 2. Tho' there was one Cambyſes, yet the Scripture never gives him that Name: And if Abravanel goes to look for him among Prophane Hiſtorians, why will he not follow exactly the Succeſſion of the Kings of Perſia, that are found in thoſe very Authors whom he copies? He thereby Multiplies the Kings of that Monarchy, and then retrenches their Number out of a pure whim. 3. Darius is never call'd Artaxerxes; and the Scripture is ſo far from making of them one and the ſame Prince, that it diſtinguiſhes them as Father and Son, which is very right. 4. He denies, without alledging any Proofs, there ever was an Artaxerxes that was King. 5. He is yet more in the wrong, to diſpute all the Hiſtory of Xerxes, ſo well known by the Greeks. Why doth he deprive this Prince of the Name, Life and Being, which the whole current of Antiquity aſcribes to him? 6. He impertinently concludes from the words of Daniel, that the Monarchy was to be aboliſh'd, becauſe that Prophet ſpeaks only of Four Kings. It is true, he ſtops at the Fourth King; but it is to repreſent his Actions and Stirrings againſt the Greeks, denoted by the * Kingdom of Javan: And indeed Xerxes gather'd together a prodigious Army, wherewith he pretended to ſwallow up all Greece; but the Monarchy was not

Extinct

Extinct in his Perſon, and King Darius, who was Vanquiſh'd by Alexander, is very different from him whom the Rabbies call Artaxerxes. They therefore miſtake, either through Malice, or Ignorance; both in the Prophane and Sacred Hiſtory, or rather through Subtilty. For ſeeing that Daniel and Ezra ſpeak but of Four Perſian Kings ſince Cyrus, they take the Advantage of this ſilence of Scripture, as if the Holy Pen-men took upon them to write a connected and compleat Hiſtory of the Perſians.

XX. The Rabbies do not think it enough to ſhorten the Perſian Monarchy againſt the Teſtimony of Hiſtorians; but being puzzled to find a Meſſiah out, who was to be cut off, they are forc'd to make two, and thoſe to appear at very diſtant Times.

The Firſt, according to them, came at the end of Seven Weeks of Years, which make 49 Years. And the more eaſily to prove it, they aſſert, that the word Meſſiah ſignifying Anointed, may be apply'd to Kings, Prophets, and the High-Prieſt. But that only ſerves to make a new difference of Opinions among them: For one maintains that this Meſſiah was Cyrus, to whom the Scripture gave the Title of the Lord's Anointed. Thus the Rabbies are the firſt Inventors of this Opinion. Another will have him to be the Jehoſhuah, the High-Prieſt. A third ſubſtitutes Zerubbabel in his Place. Neither do they forget Nehemiah *; becauſe he ſays, that the King had appointed him to be Governor in the Land of Judah. However, the ſame Author † quits Nehemiah, and queſtions whether Artaxerxes, who was the Sovereign, ought not to be put in his room. How many different Opinions are here about this firſt Meſſiah? And yet this is not ſufficient, but another muſt be found out, who is to appear Seven Years before the Deſtruction of the Second Temple, and 480 Years after Cyrus.

This ſecond Meſſiah, is Agrippa, who, according to them, was to be killed by Veſpaſian at Rome, with his Son Monbaius; and Titus afterwards Beſieging Jeruſalem, aboliſh'd the Sacrifices, becauſe the Jews who were taken up with this Siege, which laſted three Years, cou'd not mind the Immolation of Victims. The Romans becoming Maſters of Judea, deſolated the Nation, and by that means || the Sin was conſumed, and the attonement for Iniquity was made, becauſe the Puniſhment was heavier than the Captivity of Babylon. God by this Captivity did only puniſh the Jews's contempt of the Sabbath and Feſtivals; but in the ſecond he puniſh'd Idolatry and Inceſt; and thus the Sin was conſum'd and expiated.

XXI. But the Fact is falſe: For Agrippa never had any Children; and thoſe who gave him One, do it without proofs. He was not kill'd by Veſpaſian: On the contrary, he liv'd peaceably at Rome, where Titus, who was in love with his Siſter Berenice, openly favour'd him: And this pacifick and mild Prince never gave the Romans any occaſion to doubt of his Loyalty. Let Joſephus be read, and Prophane Hiſtorians conſulted, and then from them this Murder of the laſt King of Judea will appear fabulous. Laſtly, His Medals make it plain, that he ſtill liv'd in the 14th Year of Domitian, a long while after the taking of Jeruſalem: So that it is not enough to advance chimerical Viſions, and fictitious Facts at random, to elude this Oracle of Daniel; but they ought alſo to ſhew at the end of the ſixty-nine Weeks a Meſſiah that had been cut off, which they do not. However, we have theſe Advantages from the needleſs attempts of the Rabbies; One, that they confeſs that Daniel denoted a Meſſiah, who was to appear before the deſtruction of the ſecond Temple; the Other, that the cutting off of that Meſſiah ſignify'd his Death; ſince it is for that reaſon they have pretended that Agrippa was kill'd. But we find thoſe two great and conſpicuous marks in J. CHRIST, who was cut off a little before the War of the ſecond Temple, and 436 Years after the Edict of Artaxerxes, as Daniel had foretold.

XXII. An Italian Author * who had a mind to introduce the Jews to the Faith, makes his Catechumen Object to him, that the Prophecy of Daniel is not well interpreted by making Weeks of Years; whereas they are Weeks of leſs Jubilees, whereof each contains ſeven Years: Thus the Prophet makes not the Meſſiah to be expected till 3430 Years after their Reſtoration. Lo Eſpongeno, ſays the Cathechumen, making the Jews ſo ſpeak, per ſettimane di Giubilei cioè per ogni ſettimana, ſette Giubiliei ci piccoli di ſette anni Luno che ſarebono 3430 anni. But as this ſingular opinion, tho' made in the Name of the Rabbies, is only perhaps read in one Chriſtian Author, it doth not deſerve to be inſiſted upon. Let us rather end with the confeſſion of the famous † Manaſſa, who liv'd in the laſt Century, and honeſtly own'd, that the antient Jews, eſpecially thoſe who took up Arms againſt the Romans, expected the Meſſiah at that time, and hop'd that he wou'd ſpring up from the midſt of their Calamities.

Five Characters, which the Prophets gave to the Meſſiah.

I. The deſign of this Chapter. II. The Divinity of the Meſſiah ſcandaliz'd. III. The Union of the Deity with the Body in the Apparitions to the Patriarchs. IV. Divine Perfections aſcrib'd to the Meſſiah. VIII. A new Intepretation concerning the City of Damaſcus, refuted by the Hiſtory of that City. IX. An Objection againſt his Birth from a Virgin ſolv'd. X. Bethlehem fix'd for the Place of the Meſſiah's Nativity. XI. The Confeſſion of the Jews. Their Objections. XII. A new Reconciliation of St. Matthew with Micah. XIII. The Sufferings of the Meſſiah. XIV. Abravanel's Objection againſt the Satisfaction. XV. Whether the Gentils ſpeak in the 53 of Iſaiah. XV. This Opinion refuted. XVII. The Application of the Oracle to Joſiah. XVIII. Refuted. XIX. Characters of the Meſſiah. XX. His Miracles.

I. WE have ſhew'd at what time the Meſſiah was to appear: and that is enough to diſtinguiſh him from the many Impoſtors that have taken up that Title long after him. Yet we ought to look into the Prophets for ſome Characters, which may inform us, what notion they had of him: And we ſhall find in them his Divinity, his being Born of a Virgin at Bethlehem, his Sufferings and Exaltation. We ſhall not inſiſt on all theſe Characters, becauſe we do not here handle this Controverſie; but we ſhall unravel in few words, what the Prophets have ſaid of theſe.

II. The Jews are not leſs ſcandaliz'd at the Divinity of the Meſſiah, than at his Ignominious Death upon a Croſs. They ſay, you might as well conceive an Hippocentaur *, as acknowledge a Man to be God; and that the Prophets are ſo far from Teaching any thing of this, that they diſtinguiſh between God and David; One is the Maſter, the Other the Servant. The Meſſiah is call'd David, and at the ſame time a Servant. So that he is not God.

III. The Union of the Deity with Human Nature, in the Perſon of the Meſſiah, is one of the moſt Incomprehenſible Myſteries of Chriſtianity. But we obſerve in the Writings of the Prophets Four things concerning this Matter.

Firſt, God prepar'd Men to the belief of this Incarnation by the frequent Apparitions of his Son to the Prophets. For Abraham † ſaw this Day and was glad. This Father of the Faithful, that is, Believers, ſaw Three Angels, but he ador'd but One of them. And why this difference? No Angel hath a particular Right to our Adorations; and Abraham was no Idolater. So that he whom he worſhip'd was God, that had for ſome time taken a Human Shape upon him. Jacob found the Lord God of Hoſts in Bethel ‖. He wreſtled with him for one whole Night; and therefore he ſaid that he had ſeen God Face to Face. Had he only ſtruggled with an Angel, Guardian to Eſau, he had not ask'd of him his Bleſſing with that confidence, which is only due to God. And * Hoſea relating this Combat, had not given him the Title of Jehovah, which only belongs to the Supremely perfect Being. If the Deity cou'd, for the ſake of the Patriarchs, be united to the nature of Angels, or Men, and put on a ſenſible Body to appear to them; it cannot be ſaid, that the Incarnation of a God is impoſſible, and contrary to Reaſon.

Secondly, He that is Born unto us, is call'd by † Iſaiah, The mighty God, The everlaſting Father, The Prince of Peace. The Lord of Hoſts is his Name. This Redeemer is the Holy One of Iſrael, and he ſhall be called the God of all the Earth. Can theſe Titles be given to a Creature? Can an Angel be call'd the Prince and Father of Eternity, the Lord and the Almighty God? Let them ſhew us any one Creature, that hath deſerv'd theſe Appellations, and to whom they were given. Micah, who fixes Bethlehem for the Place of his Birth, ſays at the ſame time, ‖ that his goings forth have been from of old, from everlaſting. How can they explain theſe words of the Prophets, but by the Eternal Generation of the Son of God, who is at the ſame time the Ruler and Lord of Kings? And David own'd it.

IV. * Jeremiah affirms, that the Meſſiah ſhall be called, THE LORD OUR RIGHTEOUSNESS. I do not pretend without good grounds, that the Meſſiah is to have that Title. For the Chaldee-Paraphraſts ſay ſo. Kimki owns this. Iſrael, ſays he, ſhall call the Meſſiah by that Name, JEHOVAH, or the LORD OUR RIGHTEOUSNESS. † Several of the Rabbies are oblig'd to follow him. The Meſſiah therefore is the Jehovah ſo well known among the Jews. He bears that Ineffable Name, which cannot be given but to the Supreme God. Moſes hath juſtify'd no Body. On the contrary, the Law which he has delivered, diſcovered both the Sin and the Puniſhment it deſerv'd; but did not extirpate it. The Meſſiah is he, who juſtifies Sinners, and is for that reaſon called THEIR RIGHTEOUSNESS. They try in vain to elude thoſe Words, by maintaining, that the Baniſhment and Miſery which happen'd after the Deſtruction of the Second Temple, expiate Crimes; that Iſrael ſhall Sin no more, and that the Righteouſneſs and the Law, which ceas'd in the Second Temple, ſhall again appear in the Third, which is the Houſe of Ages: For the Puniſhment of Sin doth not expiate it. It is not the People of Iſrael that look upon themſelves as their own Righteouſneſs; that relates to a particular Perſon, who is God, and is call'd Jehovah. It is He who attones for the Sins of the People, and juſtifies many of them; and indeed God alone can be our Righteouſneſs. J. CHRIST cannot be more lively and more naturally deſcrib'd; He who hath made a propitiation for Sin, and is the Righteouſneſs of all thoſe that believe in him; nor can it be more clearly expreſs'd, that the Meſſiah is God Bleſſed for evermore.

V. It is alſo for that reaſon, that the ‖ Prophets require that we ſhould put our alone Truſt and Confidence in him, Look unto me and be ye ſav'd, all the ends of the Earth; for I am God, and there is none elſe. The Prophet will have Men put their Truſt in the Meſſiah; and he ſhows the effect of this Hope and of theſe Looks; Men ſhall be ſav'd. In a word, he ſets down the Motive which ſhould engage us to it, viz. that he is God. The Meſſiah therefore is God; we ought to Truſt in him, and * look upon him whom they have pierc'd; and it is by that means that we ſhall be ſav'd. Can any thing be ſaid more expreſsly of the Deity, of that God who alone can ſave all thoſe that puut their Truſt in him?

VI. This God was to be Born of a Virgin. This is the ſecond peculiar Character which the Prophets give to the Meſſiah. I ſhall only upon this Article obſerve, that the Apoſtles might have omitted ſpeaking of J. CHRIST his being Born of a Virgin, had not they known that this was One of the Characters of the Meſſiah, mention'd by the Prophets; and that the Jews at that time were expecting this Miraculous Event. They might as well have overlook'd this, as a great many other Miracles wrought by the Meſſiah. This was a nice Matter; for it might have expos'd the Virgin and Religion too to the Suſpicions and Objections of Prophane Unbelievers. They might have eaſily conceal'd it, ſeeing Mary was Marry'd to Joſeph; ſo that the Apoſtles muſt have thought themſelves oblig'd to relate this Fact; becauſe the Jews of that time were perſuaded, that the Prophet Iſaiah had foretold, that the Meſſiah ſhould be Born of a Virgin. He wrought a great many other Miracles, which have been paſſed over in ſilence, but this could not be conceal'd, without betraying Truth, and doing Injury to the Meſſiah, whom they expected with that Character. It follows from hence therefore, that the Apoſtles and the Jews of that time did Interpret the Propheſie of Iſaiah as we do; and that they all agreed to believe, that the Meſſiah ſhould be Born of a Virgin. It was alſo for this Reaſon, that they always quoted the Prediction of Iſaiah, when they ſpoke of his Birth. So that we muſt not mind thoſe who diſtort the Text, to deprive us of the true meaning of the Prophet. And indeed the Word † in the Original is found in Seven Places of Scripture, and in every one of them it ſignifies a Virgin.

VII. The Jews laugh at a Miracle that was not to happen till many Ages after the Deliverance of Ahaz, and could not confirm his tottering Faith. And therefore ſome acute Intepreters, in order to remove this difficulty, joyn theſe Words of the Prophet, * The head of Syria is Damaſcus, and the head of Damaſcus is Rezin, with the Oracle which we are now explaining; as if God had promiſed, that Damaſcus ſhould be the Capital of Syria; but that it ſhould never Rule over Judea, till a Virgin ſhould bear a Son. They add, that this Propheſie was fulfilled, becauſe Judea was never Subject to the Kings of Damaſcus till the coming of the Meſſiah. But then Archelaus being expell'd out of Jeruſalem, and Judea reduc'd into a Province, the Romans joyn'd it to Syria; ſo that when the † Virgin had brought forth, Damaſcus became the Head of Judea, as it had been the Head of Syria. Ahaz ought to be comforted by this Prediction; and therefore ſeveral Interpreters, who endeavour only to get rid of a difficulty, have follow'd this Explication.

VIII. Nevertheleſs it is contradicted by the Hiſtory of Damaſcus. If Iſaiah did promiſe to Damaſcus a Superiority over Syria, he would alſo have foretold to Rezin, who was the Head of it, a Royalty that ſhould be intail'd upon his Poſterity, till the Manifeſtation of J. CHRIST. Samaria, and Remaliah's Son, would have had the ſame Fate: But this is palpably falſe, both with reference to the Kings and the Cities. For Damaſcus was ſo far from Ruling peaceably over Syria, that ſhe was taken. Tiglathpileſer Beſieg'd this great City at the requeſt of Ahaz, kill'd its King Rezin, and carried away its Inhabitants Priſoners. It was turned into Rubbiſh, and ceaſed from being a City, as Iſaiah had Propheſied. Therefore this Prophet was far from promiſing that it ſhould have a laſting and perpetual Government; and if he had promiſed it, the Event would have prov'd his Promiſe falſe. It was re-eſtabliſh'd under the Perſian Empire, and Darius had put there his Treaſure, which was taken by Alexander the Great. But then it was always Tributary. It became afterwards a Prey to the Ambition of the Seleucides, who conteſted together for this City. Then it fell into the hands of Ptolomy; but his Government was ſo odious, that they call'd in Aretas King of Arabia, to put themſelves under his Protection. Nothing could happen more thwarting to a Promiſe of a perpetual Dominion over Syria. After this City had been taken by Pompey, it was reſtor'd by Auguſtus to Aretas II. King of Arabia, who was Maſter of it in the time of J. CHRIST, and of St Paul; ſince this Apoſtle || affirms, that the Governor under King Aretas at Damaſcus, had poſted ſome Guards to apprehend him. It was not therefore then the Head of Syria. Thus Judea was not under the Dominion of Damaſcus after the Virgin had bore a Son. A King of Arabia had this City, and the Roman Governours of Syria reſided at Antioch. Nothing but a love for Truth hath obliged us to make this Remark, that ſo the Jews ſhould not imagine, that we play upon their Ignorance in Antient Hiſtory.

IX. The Jews are as much concern'd as the Chriſtians to remove this difficulty. For to ſave the honour of the Prophet, they muſt find a Prodigy in the time of Ahaz, as alſo an extraordinary Deliverer, that might ſecure Jeruſalem from being taken by the Kings of Samaria and Damaſcus, that were combin'd againſt it. It is no mighty thing for a * Virgin who Marries, to Conceive and bear a Child. Beſides, this Deliverer, Born of the Wife of a Prophet, can't be produc'd. The Chriſtians alone ſhew this wonderful Deliverer of the Nation, who is truly Born of a Virgin. This is a unheard of Miracle, and unknown to all Antiquity. We ſee then that the Chriſtians alone reach the Senſe and Meaning of the Prophet; and this Miracle, tho remote, was yet an aſſurance of the love that God had for Jeruſalem; ſince he promiſed to that City a future Deliverence, which ſhould be greater than that which was then deſired. It is the method of the Holy Ghoſt, to promiſe Spiritual Bleſſings, inſtead of Temporal Deliverances, which are earneſtly deſir'd. And indeed Abravanel confeſſes, that the Predictions of the Prophets do not always hang together; and that to a preſent Deliverance, they often add the promiſe of a Spiritual Grace, which may very juſtly be apply'd to the Oracle of Iſaiah.

X. The Prophet † Micah fixes the Place of the Nativity of the Meſſiah. It was in Bethlehem Ephrata, a ſmall City among the thouſands of Judah, that the Ruler in Iſrael, or Meſſiah, was to come. For thus the Chaldee-Paraphraſt || hath Tranſlated it. Beſides, the Prophet ſpeaks of a Two-fold Birth; one at Bethlehem, the other from all Eternity. For his goings forth have been from everlaſting. The Jews of the V. Century were charg'd * with having cut off theſe laſt Words of the Oracle; but if they were guilty of it at that time, they have ſince been aſham'd of it. For they have put † again in the Text the everlaſting goings forth of the Meſſiah. We can't then longer doubt of the Senſe of the Oracle, ſince the Sanhedrim, aſſembled by Herod's Order, determin'd, that the promiſed Deliverer was to be Born in Bethlehem. Neither can any one fairly queſtion, whether J. CHRIST was Born there; ſeeing Herod, that he might be ſure to take away his Life with the reſt, had Commanded all the Children of that ſmall City to be Murder'd, which was executed accordingly. It did not lie in JESUS's Power to be Born there. On the contrary, his Paternal Houſe was very far from thence, and the Virgin was brought thither by an accident, that could not be foreſeen. To conclude, no other Meſſiah can be Born in this Place; ſince it has been deſtroy'd a great many Ages ago. A Town Rebuilt after it is wholly ruin'd, can't be the ſame, which ſubſiſted in the time of the Prophet, and whereof he ſpeaks.

XI. The modern Jews do not deny || that the Meſſiah is to be Born at Bethlehem. But they deny, that he, who is foretold by the Prophet, is God. What Deity is that which Reigns only over the People of Iſrael? Hath God any Brethren? However, the reſt of his Brethren are to remain with him. Nahum alſo ſays, * There is one come out of thee, that imagineth Evil againſt the Lord. And what notion can we have of your JESUS, to whom theſe Words are as applicable as thoſe of Micah.

Theſe Objections ſcarce deſerve our notice; For is the God, whom the Jews worſhip, the leſs a God, becauſe he hath ſaid to the Children of Iſrael, I am the Lord thy God? The particular Protection which he grants to this Nation, doth not deſtroy his Empire over other Nations. Men may be called the Brethren of J. CHRIST, ſince he hath put on their Nature; and there is a vaſt difference between Nineveh, from whence came that One, who imagined Evil againſt the Lord, and Bethlehem, where the Head of Iſrael was to be Born. One was the Oppreſſor of the People of God, and the Other their Deliverer. Why ſhould theſe two things be confounded?

XII. The difficulty rather turns upon † St. Matthew's giving another Senſe to Micah's words; and this difference is so great, that St. Jerom † did acknowledge, that either the Evangelist's Memory fail'd him, or else that he too scrupulously related the words of the Doctors assembled at Jerusalem, who had not exactly quoted this Prophesy. It hath since been said, that there is an Interrogation in Micah. Bethlehem, art thou the least among the thousands of Judah? Pocock maintain'd, that That word in Micah signifies great as well as little. And indeed it is taken for a Young Man, as well as for a Child. By a Verbal translating it is read in the Prophet: Bethlehem, Ephraim, little to be among the thousands of Judah. This Construction is not just. Something must be supply'd, or this place otherwise translated. The Prophet's intention is to set the then present Smallness of Bethlehem in Opposition to its future Grandeur, and to make the Advantage which he promises it more sensible by its contemptible Condition. The same Micah says in the same Verse, Out of thee shall come forth the Ruler in Israel; that is, that Man whose Birth he promises shall be the Ruler of the People. Can't the same thing be said of Bethlehem? That little City to be, that is, that it is to be among the Princes and Heads of the Jews, where it is to become famous among the Thousands of Judah. St. Matthew hath follow'd this meaning; and common sense directed him to it. The Writings of the Prophets are full of interrupted Periods, where something must often be supply'd ||. 'Tis the very Genius of the Hebrew Language. It is evident likewise that something is wanting in the Verse we are now examining; and nothing is more natural than to fill it up by the Event, and to say Little Bethlehem thou art to be among the Princes of Judah, or famous among its Thousands. But what way soever St. Matthew hath quoted the Oracle, there is no difficulty between the Jews and us. For it doth not signify much whether Bethlehem be call'd little, or great. It is sufficient to find out the Messiah, that this City is appointed for the place of the Birth of the Ruler of Israel, of the Messiah, of Him whose goings forth are from Everlasting, and who shall with Magnificence govern in the Name of the Lord his God. It is agreed, that this is the Sense of the Oracle, and the meaning of the Prophet; So that the Evangelist hath related what is Essential to us.

Besides the Eternity, which this Oracle ascribes to the Messiah, we draw from it these two Advantages; One that J. CHRIST is Born at Bethlehem, as Micah had foretold; and the Other, that the Messiah cannot be Born in that City, which hath now neither Name, nor Being. So that we have already four Characters of the Messiah set down by the antient Prophets. For CHRIST appear'd exactly at the time, in which the Messiah was to come with the Perfections and Attributes of God. He was Born at Bethlehem, of a Virgin; and it was not in his choice to have these four Characters fulfill'd in him. Let us proceed to the Fifth.

XIII. They are the Sufferings of the Messiah. For he hath born our Griefs, and carried our * Sorrows; he was wounded for our Transgressions; the Chastisement of our Peace was upon him, and with his Stripes we are heal'd. I will not set down all that the Prophet adds concerning these Sufferings of the Messiah, which he hath so emphatically describ'd, that the Christians look upon him as a fifth Evangelist; and the Jews have been forc'd to invent a double Messiah, whereof One, the Son of David, shou'd undergo all the Evils foretold by Isaiah.

XIV. The Jews say three Things in their own Vindication; The One is general: For Abravanel †, who hath been the most accurate in his Attempts to destroy the Prophesies of Isaiah, makes the common Objections against the Sin of the first Man, and the fatal Consequences of it, under which Mankind labours. He asketh, whether God cou'd not Pardon without a Satisfaction; He condemns that Satisfaction which we put upon a God, as if it was either unjust or impossible. However, he is obliged to contradict himself, and to own ||, that Josiah did not die for himself, but for the Sins of the Age wherein he liv'd; and indeed it is impossible to explain those words of Isaiah, he was wounded for our transgressions, &c. without admitting a foreign Satisfaction. The R. Alschech *, who hath wrote upon the same Prophets with a design to oppose the Christians, is forc'd to admire the Goodness of God, because all having sinned, and having made an Accuser of them before God, they all deserved each a particular Punishment; but God having re-united them all into one Body, hath charg'd the Righteous with all the Punishment. In a word, let us now hear what the croud of Doctors assert, viz. That the Jewish Nation expiates the Sins of the Gentils by that Calamity, they have undergone for so many Ages. They ought not then to draw any Objection against Christianity in that J. CHRIST died for our Sins; since not only Isaiah teaches it, but their Doctors † are forc'd in spite of their Teeth to admit of Satisfactions, which the Saints pay to God for the Sins of others by their Sufferings and by their death.

XV. The antient Rabbies did apply the 53d Chapter of Isaiah to the Messiah. But the Modern complain of their Ancestors, who expounding this Prophet, have preferr'd the Mystical to a Literal Sense. I confess, says Lipman || in that Book, wherein he vainly pretends to conquer and insult the Christians, that the words of Isaiah are applied to the Messiah; but for my part, I have given a more natural sense to his Prophesy. They * almost all agree to say, that the Prophet introduces the Nations, who seeing the Jews get rid of their Misery, will acknowledge, that the Jewish Nation have been severely punish'd without deserving it, "Whil'st they enjoy'd a profound Peace, it was at first thought that this Nation was "punished for its Iniquities; but it suffer'd the Pain "which was due to others, and by that means re-"conciled Idolaters with God. And, in short, God "wou'd have annihilated the World for the Sins of "the Gentils, if the Merits of the Suffering Jews "had not procur'd Peace and Pardon for them. Nay, "the World wou'd still Perish, if the Righteous did "not satisfie for it: But the Sufferings of the Jews "are a kind of Satisfaction, which appeases God. "They bring in the Heathen admiring the patience "of the Jews, and crying out, we rais'd Taxes on "that Nation, which had the Misfortune to bend "under our Yoke: We exacted † Money of them "by Calumnies and false Accusations, but they did "not even open their Mouths to complain. They "did not kick as the Ram does, which strikes his "Leader with his Horns and Feet; but were as "the Sheep, which are shear'd, and brought to the "Slaughter.

XVI. Thus their great Maſters expreſs themſelves to elude the Oracle of Iſaiah, that ſpeaks of Sufferings. The different Opinions of the Antient and Modern Rabbies upon this Subject, is a Preſumption againſt the latter, who not being able to anſwer the Objections of the Chriſtians, have run into an Extreme, which cannot be maintain'd. The diſtinction of two Meſſiahs, whereof one ſhall ſuffer, and the other triumph, is another Preſumption againſt them. For they have thereby ſeparated what God had join'd together; and imagin'd Two Meſſiahs inſtead of One, only becauſe they were forc'd to it by the Oracles of the Prophet, who ſpeaks expreſly of the Sufferings of the Meſſiah. In a word, they acknowledge ſome foreign Satisfactions. But can it be ſaid after this, that the Jews ſuffer for the Sins of Idolatrous Nations? and that the Intention of the Prophet was to introduce thoſe Idolaters, who were to publiſh the Truth, after Iſrael ſhould be reſtored? Kimki, who was aware of the weight of this unavoidable difficulty, owns, that it is not true, that the Jews bear the Iniquity of Idolaters, but that upon meer appearances the Nations ſhall think ſo. They ſhall one day ask, why has that Choſen Nation ſuffer'd ſo long? And they ſhall anſwer, that ſuch laſting Calamities have been the expiation, and price of the expiation for them. It is certain, that they will be miſtaken in this Deciſion; but the Prophet was pleas'd to relate it, and it is not for us to enquire into the Reaſons of it. However, it is not likely that the Holy Ghoſt dictated to the Prophets all the falſe Reaſonings, which the Heathen ſhall one day make upon the paſt Misfortunes of the Jews: And he doth not ſo much as mention Idolaters. If it ſignifies little to the Church, whether the Heathen ſhall hereafter ſpeak impertinently, and argue falſely, the Prophet ought at leaſt to have corrected their Miſtakes, that none might be miſled: But on the contrary, according to Kimki, he authenticates them, and puts them down before hand in his Writings, as ſo many Truths, which were to be known long before their Accompliſhment.

Abravanel foreſaw another Objection which would ariſe from this pretended Patience, that the Heathens aſcribe to the Jews during their long Sufferings. For the Event proves this to be falſe; and Hiſtory ſpeaks ſo often of their Revolts, that their Patience can't be admitted. And therefore he applies this Oracle only to the Righteous of his Nation, who have often ſuffer'd without opening their Mouths. But that is not ſatisfying; becauſe the Prophet does not ſpeak of many, but of one perſon who hath ſuffer'd. And therefore he is forc'd to broach a third Opinion.

XVII. In ſhort, this Propheſy || is apply'd to King Joſiah. It is believ'd, that Iſaiah promiſing the People, that the Uncircumciſed ſhall no more paſs into their Cities, we muſt thereby underſtand Necho King of Egypt, who was at War with Joſiah, and that Prince was to be exalted over Iſrael: Proſper, that is, walk as David, in the Law of God. Iſrael complains of Incredulity, ſaying, who hath believ'd our report, Iſai. 53. 1. that is, none wou'd believe the report of his Death, by reaſon of his celebrated Piety. He grew as a tender Plant, becauſe he lov'd Devotion in his Youth, wherein he made a good progreſs. He was deſpis'd, becauſe he was kill'd by Necho; a contemptible Man, and a Man of Sorrows; becauſe he was often Sick and troubled with the Gout. He bore the Griefs of the People, ſince the Sins of the Nation cauſed his Death. Let it not be pretended, that the People were very much addicted to the Law in Joſiah's Reign. For he acknowledges his Crimes; all we like ſheep have gone aſtray, Iſai. 53. 6. Laſtly, God threatens, to make his blood ſpurt upon many Nations to revenge the Death of this good Prince.

XVIII. This Explanation is more natural than the former: For it doth not overthrow all Iſaiah's Expreſſions, who only ſpeaks of one Perſon. However, a great many Miſtakes are obſervable herein. And indeed One part of the Oracle is apply'd to Necho King of Egypt, tho' the Prophet makes no mention of him. From whence is it known that Joſiah had the Gout, and that it was for that reaſon, he was call'd a Man of Sorrows? Why will they have that Prince to be deſpiſed, when his conqueſts had made him ſo formidable? With what face can it be ſaid, that God revenged the Death of Joſiah upon many Nations? It had been more natural for God to have hinder'd Joſiah's Death, and Necho's Victory. Beſides, the War of the Egyptian was juſt. He went to perſue his Pretenſions, and directed his March towards the Euphrates. Why did Joſiah offer to ſtop the carreer of a Prince, who had no diſpute with him, and offer'd him Peace? He applies the Other part of the Oracle to Joſiah. It is falſe, that Joſiah dy'd for the Sins of the People; He was a Martyr to his own Ambition. Moreover, Abravanel contradicts Sacred Hiſtory, when he makes him to be carried away, and to die at Jeruſalem, that he might ſay, that That City looks upon his Wounds and Blood. Iſaiah ſpeaks there neither of that Prince, nor of his Death, nor of the Sins of the People that were the cauſe of it. We muſt therefore look out for another, who hath ſuffered for the Tranſgreſſions of the People, and been afterwards taken away from the violence of his Condemnation and Grief. Can it be pretended of Joſiah that he rais'd himſelf from the Tomb of his Condemnation? May it not be ſaid with aſtoniſhment, who ſhall declare his Generation? He ſhall prolong his days, and the pleaſure of the Lord ſhall proſper in his hand? Iſai. 53. 10.

XIX. It is now eaſy to follow the Notion, which the Prophets have given of the Meſſiah. They chiefly ſay theſe Five things of him. 1. He was to be Born at Bethlehem of a Virgin. 2. Whilſt the ſecond Temple ſtood; Four hundred and ſeventy Years after it was reſtor'd, at the time that the Scepter ſhou'd be departed from Judah. 3. The Calamities of his Life were to make him Contemptible. 4. He was to die for the Sins of the People, and to make his Soul an Offering for Sins. 5. And after he had undergone that Sacrifice he was to be rais'd up into Glory, and to reign for ever.

XX. Let us add a ſixth Character to theſe, which conſiſted in the Miracles the Meſſiah was to work. Maimonides deprives him of that Character; and that he may not be ſuſpected to ſpeak out of intereſt, he blaſts the luſtre of Moſes's Miracles by his undervaluing them. But in explaining a place of the Prophet Habakkuk, he is oblig'd to acknowledge, that God will perform ſome miraculous Signs by the Meſſiah. Jonathan aſſures us, that none ſhall be able to reckon the Miracles, that ſhall then be wrought. In a word, the Jews juſtify their Anceſtors for having follow'd Barcochebas, becauſe he caſt fire out of his Mouth; and for his working a great many other Miracles, it was a hard matter for their Nation not to be deluded by him. To conclude, how ſhou'd the Meſſiah without Miracles make ſo many Conqueſts, and eſtabliſh the Glory of the Nation? It is certain then, that Intereſt made them ſpeak and judge; and perceiving that the Chriſtians drew from the Miracles of J. CHRIST a ſtrong Argument for their Religion, the Rabbies began to enervate the Neceſſity of them for the Meſſiah. Abravanel, who reckons as the ſixth Character of the Meſſiah the Power of working Miracles, of making Fire come down from Heaven, and of ſending Lions and Bears againſt Unbelievers and Impenitent wretches, raiſes another Difficulty againſt thoſe of J. CHRIST; becauſe the Deliverance of the Church being like to that procured by Moſes, the ſame Miracles ought to have been wrought over again. Some Chriſtians ſtrengthen this Objection, by obſerving, that this Preſumption of Abravanel's is as antient as the Goſpel; and that the Nation, which ask'd for ſome Signs from Heaven * of a Man, whoſe Life was full of Miracles, underſtood thereby ſome Signs like thoſe of Moſes, that ſhou'd ſhake Heaven and Earth. The Air muſt have been ſet in a flame, Fire muſt have fallen down from Heaven, and the Earth quak'd. I queſtion whether this Objection is ſolid. But from whatſoever Source this Preſumption ſprings, whether it be old or new, it is no great matter. For the Jews were oblig'd to examine the Truth of the Miracles of the Meſſiah, which were ſo publick and ſo evident, that he accuſed the Unbelieving Phariſees of ſinning againſt the Holy Ghoſt, that is, againſt a Self-evident Light, and againſt their Knowledge and Conviction. If the Miracles of JESUS were true, they ought to have acknowledg'd in his Perſon a Divine Power, like to that of Moſes. If they were falſe, they ought to have prov'd the Reaſons that made them to oppoſe thoſe Miracles; and inſtead of diſputing about the reſemblance, or little proportion, which they had with thoſe of Moſes, they ought to be entirely rejected. But without coming to this Enquiry, it is confeſs'd that the Meſſiah ought to have wrought Miracles.

The Jews cannot find any Perſon to whom all theſe Characters have ever belong'd. Neither can they for the future expect any to whom they can belong, ſince that depended on certain Events, which have already happen'd 1700 Years ago. But the Chriſtians ſhew them plainly in the Perſon of J. CHRIST. So that he muſt be own'd to be the Meſſiah foretold by the Prophets. But how came the Jewiſh Church to be ſo groſly miſtaken in this? It is what we ſhall now examine in the next Chapter.

I. ONE wou'd think, that the Doctors who were Co-tempory with J. CHRIST believ'd that the Meſſiah was to be Immortal. For they ſaid, that the Law had taught them, that the CHRIST ſhou'd remain for ever; and they murmur'd becauſe this Son of Man was to be taken from them. But the Modern Jews deprive them of that Privilege, and limit his Reign to Seventy Years. Theſe two Opinions are not perhaps very claſhing and oppoſite. For the Holy Writers call that Everlaſting, which was to continue a long time; and the Jews flatter'd themſelves, that the Meſſiah coming to reſtore again the Houſe of David, and the Kingdom to Iſrael by a great many Conqueſts, was to live long. They cou'd not without griet and aſtoniſhment hear J. CHRIST, at the Flower of his Age to threaten them with his approaching Death, and yet had done nothing of that which they expected from him. As they cou'd not reconcile their Notions with his ſudden and violent Death, they oppos'd to it the eternal Duration promis'd by the Law and the Prophets. Farther, as they did apply to the Meſſiah the Pſalms wherein David ſpeaks of his Aſcenſion into Heaven, and of his ſitting * at the right hand of God; they believ'd, that he was to be glorioufly taken up, and Sit at the right hand of the living God. How cou'd this Aſcenſion and Empire then be reconcil'd to an approaching and violent Death.

II. But whether they look'd upon the Meſſiah as a Man, who was to Die after a long Life, or whether they aſcrib'd † Immortality to him, by being taken up as Elijah was, it doth not appear that they made a God of him. On the contrary, his Empire ſhall end with the World, becauſe there will be no need of him after the Day of Judgment. However this Queſtion deſerves to be examin'd, not only becauſe it is of weight; but alſo || becauſe it hath been lately handled with a great deal of Learning. We ſhall ſee the Proofs that are alledg'd.

III. The Fathers of the Chriſtian Church have often quoted the Apocrypha, and drawn from thence ſome

ſome Proofs of the Divinity of J. CHRIST; And indeed it is no great matter whether thoſe Books were written by ordinary Men, or by ſuch as were Divinely inſpir'd. For without allowing them the ſame Authority with thoſe of the Prophets; yet however they may be look'd on as Witneſſes of the Faith of the Church. Thoſe Witneſſes can't be ſuſpected, ſeeing they wrote long before it cou'd be conjectur'd that J. CHRIST wou'd profeſs himſelf to be God, and that his Diſciples wou'd teach a Trinity of Perſons in One ſingle Eſſence. The Author of Eccleſiaſticus liv'd under Ptolomy Philodelphus, 280 Years before J. CHRIST. That of Wiſdom is Elder: And theſe Authors have ſpoken ſo clearly of the Divinity of the Meſſiah, that the Chriſtians have been ſuſpected of inſerting their Tenets into thoſe Books, or at leaſt that the Tranſlator of the Book of Wiſdom was a Chriſtian, who hath foiſted into his Verſion, what he thought might moſt favour the Belief of his Church. But theſe Suſpicions are Scandalous, and ill grounded. The Jews have had more Juſtice than ſome Chriſtians; For they never complain'd of this adulteration of their Books. If ſome Doctors have ſaid, ſpeaking of Eccleſiaſticus, that the Books of Foreigners and Hereticks ought not to be read||, "their Authority hath not prevail'd. "For this Book is quoted in the Gemara, and by a "great many famous Rabbies. There is ſome Rea- "ſon to ſuſpect that the Book, whoſe reading is ſo "ſeverely forbid, was the Work of another Son of "Sirach, wherein ſome Magical Precepts were found, "whil ſt this is reckoned among the Agiographa.

IV. There are in theſe Books ſome plain Proofs to be found of the Divinity of the Meſſiah. Who, ſays Eccleſiaſticus, * can find out the Wiſdom of God, which precedes all things? Wiſdom hath been created before all things, and the Underſtanding of Prudence from everlaſting. The Word of God moſt High is the fountain of Wiſdom. Thus Wiſdom ſpeaks in the 8th of the Proverbs, I was ſet up from everlaſting, from the beginning, or ever the Earth was. Theſe words have ſome thing very dazling; yet the Wiſdom of Eccleſiaſticus is not that of Solomon. The Wiſdom of one ought to be the Holy Ghoſt, who proceeds from the Father, and the Wiſdom of Solomon is the Son. Beſides, the Arians made it a matter of Triumph, when it was ſaid, that Wiſdom had been created before all things; and the Fathers, who only knew the Septuagint Verſion, were gravell'd by this Objection. How then con'd an Anti-trinitarian be anſwer'd at this Day, who ſhou'd quote theſe words of Eccleſiaſticus, viz. Wiſdom was created before all things. A Learned Critick † maintains, that Solomon hath clearly expreſs'd the Eternal Generation of the Son, becauſe it muſt be tranſlated the Lord hath begot me before all things. For as Eve, after ſhe bare Cain, cry'd out, I have gotten, or rather I have brought forth a Son from the Lord, Geneſ. 4. 1. Wiſdom, which makes uſe of the ſame term, denotes too his Generation from the Father. Without deviating from the common Signification of the terms, and applying to the Meſſiah what Solomon ſays of Wiſdom, notwithſtanding I believe that that Prince had another aim, the Anti-trinitarian may ſtill be repell'd by following the Original and not the Septuagint. For Wiſdom only ſays, that the Lord poſſeſs'd her before all his Works, whereas in Eccleſiaſticus ſhe ſays, that ſhe was made or created ||.

V. The Author of the Wiſdom of Solomon * hath been more expreſs and plain, when he makes God ſay, that his Almighty Word leapt down from Heaven out of his Royal Throne, as a fierce Man of War into the midſt of the Land. What is this Almighty Word? The reaſon of God? But how ſhall this reaſon leap from a Throne, and that by that Throne Angels ſhou'd be underſtood? Let it fairly be acknowledg'd that this Interpretation is too much forced and ſtrained. Add further, it cannot be ſaid, that the reaſon of God doth appear in the midſt of a Land, as an able and valiant man of War. Laſtly, an Angel cannot be ſubſtituted in the room of the Almighty Word. For the Power of Angels is circumſcrib'd. They are but the Miniſters of a Superiour God. The Author of the Apocryphal Books doth alſo aſcribe to this ſame Word the Apparitions ſhewn to the Patriarchs; the Paſſage of the Red-Sea; the Conferences with Moſes, which the Scripture aſcribes to God; and that proves that they have look'd upon this Word as upon a diſtinct and divine Perſon.

VI. Onkelos, who is wrongfully confounded with Aquila, altho' in truth it is the ſame Name, believ'd that he did a great Service to his Nation in tranſlating the Scripture into Chaldaick, which they underſtood better than Hebrew: His Tranſlation was not ſo literal, but he explain'd ſome places, which ſeem'd obſcure to him, as the Seventy have alſo done. That Verſion was ſo applauded, that it was inſerted Verſe by Verſe into the Original; inſomuch that it was read with the Hebrew, and it is at this day ſo ſhort and plain, that it cannot be ſuſpected to have been adulterated, nor reaſonably affirm'd as ſome have done, that it is an Abridgment of the Targum of Jonathan.

This Jonathan was a little older. For he liv'd under Herod the Great, 30 Years before J. CHRIST. He compos'd ſome Paraphraſes upon the Prophets. The Jews value him extremely, and ſay, that God wrought a great many Miracles for his ſake, whilſt he was compoſing that Work. The Flies, ſay they, which diſturb'd him in the Summer were burnt upon the Spot. It is even pretended likewiſe, that it was his Paraphraſe J. CHRIST made uſe of, when he read Iſaiah in the Temple: But this is but a Conjecture. Beſides, we can't depend ſo much upon this Performance, as upon that of Onkelos; becauſe the Doctors †, who liv'd above 700 Years after him, have not ſcrupled to add many things to it. Theſe Chaldee Paraphraſes are call'd Targums. They are quoted in the Miſnah, which is very antient. For tho' that Collection of Traditions had been wrote but under Juſtinian, however it wou'd ſtill be true, that all the Parts, out of which it was taken were more antient; As the Canons, which are in the Decretals of Gratian, are more antient than that Compiler. And it is from thoſe old Targums that the Proofs of the Divinity of the Meſſiah are drawn.

VII. It is very obſervable, that in moſt places of Scripture, where we find the Name of Jehovah; 1. The Paraphraſts put in its room the Word ||, or the Memra. 2. They diſtinguiſh it from the Pitgama, which ſignifies a Diſcourſe. 3. They aſcribe to it all the actions of a Supreme Deity.

And indeed it is the Memra, or the Word, that created the World. This Agent ought then to be a perſon cloth'd with an infinite Power. Grotius, who in order to elude the Authority of the Targums, believ'd that God, according to the Jews, produc'd a Subaltern Being, which he made uſe of as his Inſtrument in the Creation of the Univerſe, did not conſider what he ſaid. For nothing but an infinite Being can command Nothing, and extract the Univerſe from thence. The Jews do not aſcribe this Power to the Angels. Their Anceſtors therefore muſt have look'd upon the Word, as a Divine Perſon that had diſplay'd a Divine Power.

It was * the ſame Word that appear'd upon Mount Sinai, and call'd Moſes up thither to give him the Law. He ſpoke face to face to that Deliverer; and aſſur'd him that it was He who brought his People out of the Land of Egypt. It was the ſame Word that walk'd at the Head of the Children of Iſrael, that made them overcome the Nations, that were their Enemies; and that wrought that vaſt number of Miracles wherewith their Hiſtory is full.

It was the Word, that appear'd to Abraham in the Plains of Mamre. It was to Him, that Jacob made a Vow †, and whom he own'd to be God, ſaying, If the Word will be with me, and will keep me in this way that I go, ſo that I come again to my father's houſe in peace, then ſhall the Lord be my God. It was the || Word, that he took for a Witneſs and Judge in his diſpute with Laban. The Word judge between us. We ſhou'd ſet down almoſt all the places of the Old Teſtament that ſpeak of God, if we would quote all that relates to the Word. For the Chaldee Paraphraſt aſcribes to him almoſt all the great Events of the antient Oeconomy, and the Word is found in the places where the Name of Jehovah was. It is this Word, that puniſhes thoſe who tranſgreſs * the Laws, that becomes a conſuming Fire; and in fine, which performs all that is attributed to the Deity.

VIII. An Anti-trinitarian † objected to Rittangelius, that in all the places where the Scripture attributes to God a Mouth, Arms, and Hands, the Paraphraſts have always ſubſtituted the Word. But this is a weak Objection; For having reſerv'd this Word for God, who hath neither Hands, nor Mouth, and never making uſe of it, when it is ſpoken of the Members of Moſes and Aaron, it is reaſonable to conclude, that this term was conſecrated to expreſs the Deity, and was never given to Men. He beſides objected, that the Word was often taken for the Glory of God; But this we deny, and maintain, that notwithſtanding all the diligent Searches of the Anti-trinitarians, they cannot produce one Example of it.

They ſay, that as the Miraculous Cloud, which lighten d by Night the Camp of Iſrael; the Ark before which they ador'd; and the Angels themſelves; are call'd Lord; this Title too they have given to a Creature. But theſe Facts cannot be honeſtly advanc'd. For the Title of God was given to the Ark, and the Cloud, becauſe they were perſuaded that God reſided in them; and the Angel, who in the Hiſtory of the Judges bears the name of Lord, was this ſame Word whereof we are Speaking. And therefore Philo gave him that Title. Farther, the Proof drawn from the Paraphraſts doth not turn upon a ſingle Paſſage, wherein the term Word might have ſlipt by chance; but upon a great many Verſes; and they do not aſcribe to this Word ſome particular Miracles, but all the great things which the Deity hath done under the Old Teſtament, and what the Deity alone cou'd perform.

IX. They ſay again, that the Paraphraſts, writing at a time when the Jews made a Scruple to pronounce the Name of Jehovah, the Memra was put in its place wherever the ineffable Name was found; and that they underſtood thereby the Supreme and only God; the Jehovah. The Word being only ſubſtituted in the room of the Name of Jehovah, that the Reader might not be ſtopped by a Chaſm, and that the Attention of the Hearer might not be interrupted. But this doth not ſolve the Difficulty. For the Pharaphraſts often ſpeak of the Word of Jehovah; the Word of the Lord hath made himſelf King over you, ſay they in Deuteronomy. Without diving into the meaning of thoſe Paraphraſts which appear intricate to me, it is however certain, 1. That theſe Paraphraſts find the Meſſiah, where he is not, and aſcribe to him ſome Actions, which do not at all belong to him. Shall it be ſaid, that they knew him better than the Chriſtians, altho' he had not as yet manifeſted himſelf; and that they have better unravell'd what he hath done in the Old Teſtament, than thoſe, whoſe intereſt it is to find him ev'ry where? Beſides, by ſubſtituting the Memrah, or Word, the Father diſappears. He is ſo bury'd in the Perſon and Actions of his Son, that we ſcarce have any Knowledge of him. And yet the Jews know the Father better than the Son; and what proves too much, we ſay, proves nothing. 2. Jonathan ſays, that the Meſſiah and Moſes ſhall appear at the End of the World; One in the Deſert, and the Other at Rome; and that the Word ſhall walk between them ||. They in vain look there for the two Meſſiahs, the One in an abject and wretched Condition, and the Other in great Splendour, Dignity and Power. For ſince Jonathan rais'd his Meſſiah upon a Cloud, we muſt thereby underſtand God, who is to walk between Moſes and the Meſſiah, and he hath call'd God the Word. To conclude, they may explain the Memra, as they do commonly the Dibber or Devar. Thoſe two terms ſignify the Word; and they maintain, that when Moſes relates in the Hiſtory of the Creation, that God ſpoke, we muſt underſtand the efficacious Will of God. which produces all things. So that the Word * is the Will of God; God himſelf who creates the Univerſe, being no longer able to pronounce the Name of Jehovah, they cou'd not better expreſs God, than by the term, which denoted his Will, and an efficacious Will, that had perform'd ſo many things with ſo much facility, that they ſeem to have coſt but one Word. It wou'd be a hard Matter to give in ſhort a more noble and greater Idea of God.

X. Philo opens a third Spring of Proofs for the Divinity of the Meſſiah: And it deſerves ſo much the more our Reflection, becauſe ſome are perſuaded, that St. John borrow'd from him the Word, whereby he begins his Goſpel. But before they enter into particulars, they make three Remarks † upon this Writer. This famous Jew of Alexandria was Cotemporary with our Saviour; but as it was in his Youth that he apply'd himſelf to Study, he had put out his Work before J. CHRIST taught. He proceeded afterward to Politicks, and apply'd himſelf to the Affairs of his Nation, which took him up ſo much, that he had not time to meditate and write as he had done before. Thoſe that queſtion his Works, do it only, becauſe they find in them ſome ſtrong Proofs againſt them. For it is paſt all peradventure that he is the Author of thoſe Books which are now to be quoted, and that thoſe Books were publiſh'd before J. CHRIST taught, or before the Chriſtians ſpoke of the Word. So that he hath not borrow'd his Notion and Expreſſions from them.

Neither muſt he be accuſed of having taken them from Plato. " For the Philoſophy that obtain'd in " Egypt in the time of Philo, was that of Polemon, " who taught his Diſciples to chuſe among the O" pinions

" pinions which his Predeceſſors had left in the " World. Philo was of that Sect. He had ſo " little knowledge of Plato, that he * aſcribes to " Ariſtotle ſome Opinions of that old Maſter. His " Syſtem is very different from that of Plato; ſince " he believ'd that Matter was Eternal. He did " not borrow the three Hypoſtaſies from Plato; " he himſelf had borrow'd them from Pythagoras, " whoſe Maſter was Pherecydes a Syrian; and having " afterwards run over Arabia, Chaldæa, and Egypt, " he became very well inſtructed by his Correſpon- " dence with the Jews. Plotinus ingenuouſly acknow- " ledges, that Plato had not invented thoſe three " Hypoſtaſies. There 'was then no neceſſity that " Philo ſhould Copy his Writings, to ſpeak often of " the Word. He had derived that Notion from thoſe " very Jews in Egypt, from whence it Originally " came, and where it had been current among Phi- " loſophers.

In ſhort, thoſe who pretend that Philo had in his latter Days a long Conference with St. Peter, who ſaw him at Rome during his Ambaſſy there, and alſo that he became a Chriſtian, are groſsly miſtaken; For he liv'd and dy'd a Jew. He ſpoke of the Word a long time before his Travelling to Rome. So that neither the Chriſtians nor the Philoſophers did ſupply him with that Notion. He drew it from himſelf, or rather from the Religion of his Fathers, who throughly underſtood it. Theſe Obſervations were neceſſary to raiſe Philo upon a Tribunal, and to give him the Title of Judge of the preſent Controverſy: No wonder then that they were made uſe of. Let us now ſee what Inferences may be deducible from them.

XI. Philo ſpeaks plainly, ſince he aſcribes to the Word † the moſt excellent Operations of the Deity. He looks upon it as upon a Perſon that acts, and is different from the Father. Laſtly, As he wrote in Greek, ſo he makes uſe of the very ſame Expreſſions as St. John does to eſtabliſh the Divinity of the Son in a more peculiar and exact manner.

Firſt, He maintains ||, that God hath begotten the Word. Tho' he had not known the Myſtery of the Eternal Generation, which is only to be known by Evangelical Revelation; we are ſtill in the right to conclude, that he doth not thereby underſtand either the Wiſdom, or Reaſon of God, ſince Generation doth not belong to them.

Secondly, He aſcribes the Creation of the World to the Word, which ſuppoſes that he did not look upon him as an Angel, or as a Principle Inferior to the Deity, which cannot Create unleſs it be Infinite Thirdly, He makes the Word preſide over all the Empires of the World: And is not this to look upon him as God, to make him the Director of all Events, and to intruſt him with the Government of the Univerſe.

Fourthly, He makes him ſpeak to the Patriarchs, in all the Apparitions of the Old Teſtament. In a word, He conſiders him as a Mediator between God and Man.

This Word begotten of God, who Creates and Governs the World, who, as it were, leaves the Deity, to come down from Heaven and dwell here on Earth to ſpeak to the Saints, and who carries up their Prayers to God, muſt of neceſſity be a Divine Perſon.

XII. Altho' this ſeems a convincing Argument, yet a Critick * aſſerts, that Philo doth not look upon the Word as a diſtinct Perſon; but that he makes of him an Angel, and a Principle inferior to the Deity. And therefore St. John, who wrote the beginning of his Goſpel, to rectifie the Expreſſions of this Jew, that was ſo famous in Alexandria, was pleas'd to borrow this term from him, and call the Son the Word; but at the ſame time he corrected Philo's Error, by ſaying, that that Word was with God, and was God. It was not a Principle Inferior to the Deity, as Philo taught his Diſciples; but it was the Reaſon of God, which really was God; and he made uſe of the ſame Expreſſions againſt Cerinthus, becauſe he maintain'd, that the World had been produc'd by a ſubaltern Principle.

This Argument is ſeemingly ſupported by two Pillars. The One is that Philo calls Angels, the Words; and that it may not be thought he gave them this Title in the Plural Number, as the Scripture calls Magiſtrates, Gods, he hath reſerv'd the Title of Word by way of Eminence to the Son; and ſome Paſſages of Philo are produc'd, wherein an Angel is by him call'd the Word.

Beſides, this Jew, writing the Hiſtory of the Creation, affirms, that God is † the cauſe, and the four Elements make the Matter; the Word is the Inſtrument, and his Goodneſs the final Cauſe of it. So that he conſider'd the Word as an Organ inferior to God in the production of the Univerſe. In ſhort, he maintains, that there is but one God, with whom are Goodneſs and Power. Goodneſs hath produced all things, Power Governs them; and the third Principle, which reconciles and unites them, is the Word.

XIII. Laſtly, Philo's Apology is made by ſaying, that he did ſpeak plain upon an intricate Subject, and it is enough that he ſpoke once of the Word after ſuch a manner, as cannot ſuit either to the Reaſon of God, or to Providence, or to an Angel, or even to a Principle inferior to the Deity, to make us conclude, that he had a ſublime and exalted Notion of the Word; and that the Jews, whoſe Opinions he only Copy'd, had the ſame Sentiments with him. If ſome ſuch Contradictions are found in the Fathers, who preceded the Council of Nice, it is not ſtrange that the Jewiſh Doctors ſhould be guilty of them. If ſome Chriſtians have ſpoken of the Son as of a ſubaltern Deity, Philo may be allowed to do the ſame thing, without deſtroying the Faith, upon a Subject that was not before ſufficiently clear'd. His Diſcourſe is plain enough upon ſo obſcure and profound a Myſtery, and which had not as then been fully reveal'd.

But without ſtrictly examining into what Philo ſaid upon this Head, becauſe his Expreſſions are very obſcure; I cannot imagine that St. John undertook to correct the notions of this Author, and begun his Goſpel in ſo ſublime a manner, only to refute a private Perſon. Add further to this, that Philo's Writings perhaps had never reach'd Judea or Epheſus: For then the beſt Books were ſcarce, and the Commerce of the Republick of Learning very difficult. But ſuppoſing the Works of that Jewiſh Philoſopher had been better known, can it be imagin'd, that St. John, who was Born a Fiſher-man, wholly unacquainted with Literature; and beſides, altogether taken up with preaching of the Goſpel, and the care of all the Churches; ſhould give himſelf the trouble to ſtudy Philo, to correct his Stile and Expreſſions? Was this worth the Toil and Application of an Evangeliſt and Apoſtle of J. CHRIST? If it be lawful to make Conjectures upon a thing, whereof Proofs are wanting; it may rather be ſaid that the Word was known to the Jews. For the Chaldee-Paraphraſts ſpeak often of him St. John either had read them, or heard them read every Saturday in the Synagogues. The Authors of thoſe Paraphraſes had followed the Stile which was received in the Church, and the manner of denoting the Name of Jehovah, by that of the Word. It is a great deal more likely, that St. John alluded to that term which was ſo well known in Judea, than to that of Philo, who wrote in Egypt. The Paraphraſts made the Word a Supreme Deity, and the only God they ador'd; and St. John might have made uſe of that ſame term, to prove, that the Son was God, and at the ſame time has diſtinguiſh'd him from the Father, and Cloth'd him with a Human Nature; of which the Paraphraſts and Jews were wholly ignorant. St. John took hold of a good Advantage which a known uſage in his Nation preſented to him; but he hath grafted upon that uſage, and that Name of Word, a Doctrine which J. CHRIST had reveal'd.

XV. No doubt but the Antiquity of the Paraphraſts will be diſputed, which will appear ſo much the more uncertain, becauſe the Miſnah is quoted in them, and they find there the Name of Conſtantinople. But I ſhall here obſerve Three things. 1. One is, that thoſe Paraphraſes could not have been wrote ſince Chriſtianity was acknowledg'd, becauſe it wou'd be impoſſible that the Authors, who knew that the Chriſtians ſo often call'd their Meſſiah the Word, ſhould prefer this very term to all others, to expreſs the Deity by. I cannot conceive, that the Enemies of the Chriſtian Religion would have taken up their Shibboleth, and that People, who oppos'd the Divinity of the Meſſiah, wou'd have affected to have ſo often inſerted a Name, which gave occaſion to ſay, that they believed a Son of God, and a Second Perſon in the Trinity, as we do. 2. Nay, altho' Onkelos and Jonathan, the Authors of the Paraphraſes, had liv'd ſince J. CHRIST's time, yet they would not have ſo often made uſe of the term Word, but only becauſe the uſe of that term had for ſo long a time prevail'd in their Church. It is impoſſible for them to have borrow'd it from the Chriſtians; and therefore they muſt have taken it from the Antient Jews. It is impoſſible that they would have Copy'd St. John, and therefore they muſt have borrow'd this term from the Doctors, that flouriſh'd before them: Thus our Argument hath ſtill its full weight, altho' the Paraphraſts ſhould be robb'd of their Antiquity. 3. It is very poſſible that thoſe Paraphraſes have been alter'd by the Doctors of the ſucceeding Ages: But no conſequences can be deduc'd againſt us, from the alterations that may have been made in thoſe Books. For there is no likelihood, that the Word ſhould have been foiſted in, and in ſo many Places too, purely to favour the Chriſtians. It was left there, becauſe it was Originally there; and it could not be taken out from ſo many Places without leaving a palpable Chaſm; and weakening the Authority of the Paraphraſes. So that we ſtill derive from theſe Books the ſame Arguments for the Goſpel of St. John, whether their Authors preceded J. CHRIST, or came after him; and whether ſome alterations have been made in them, or they have been preſerv'd entire in their Primitive Purity.

XVI. To conclude, Joſephus is often quoted, * as an unexceptionable Witneſs: For he ſays, that whilſt Pilate was Governour of Judea, JESUS appear'd, a very Wiſe Man, if it may be lawful to call him a Man. For he wrought a great many Miracles, and taught thoſe that delighted in the Truth. A great number of Jews and Greeks were his Diſciples. He was the CHRIST whom the Chief of our Nation oblig'd Pilate to Crucify: But thoſe who lov'd him before, continued to love him ſtill. And he appear'd before them the Third Day Alive, as the Prophets had foretold.

Now to argue againſt ſo formal a Teſtimony for J. CHRIST, as this is, ſeems to ſtrike at the very Root of the Chriſtian Religion itſelf. However, I cannot imagine, that a Man who was ſo Zealous, who had defended his Religion even with his Blood, and was both a Prieſt and a Phariſee, could ſpeak in this manner of CHRIST, and load his Nation with the crime of having Crucify'd him. It is true, he look'd on Veſpaſian as the Meſſiah, but he had a mind to flatter that Prince, on whom both his Life and Fortune depended; whereas he could neither hope for, nor fear any thing from JESUS. One was upon the Throne of the Empire, and the Other nail'd to a Croſs. It is alſo true, that he ſpoke honourably of John the Baptiſt. But there was a great deal of difference between that Precurſor and the Meſſiah: For John the Baptiſt was eſteem'd by the Nation as a Prophet. He only preach'd a Baptiſm of Repentance, whereof Joſephus was ſo fond, as to retire into the Deſart, to undergo there a Three Years Pennance of a Novici.at in Auſterities and Mortification. St. John did no ways ſtrike at the Law, and the Jews might follow him without forſaking the Synagogue and Temple. Whereas J. CHRIST was come to aboliſh the Ceremonies, and he preach'd, that they ought to be cancell'd. St. John was a Martyr to Chaſtity by the Cruelty of Herod; but J. CHRIST was Crucify'd at the Sollicitations of the Grand Council and the Prieſts. Joſephus owns it. After that therefore he ſhould either have look'd upon the Chiefs of his Religion with Abhorrence, or elſe have denied that JESUS was the Meſſiah.

XVII. The truth is, he ſays too much. For he doubts whether it be lawful to ſay that he was a Man. He then believed him either an Angel or a God. He poſitively ſays, that he was the CHRIST; and if he was of that Perſuaſion, why did he not follow that Meſſiah, Angel, or God? This is ſo puzzling a Difficulty, that the Criticks are forced to thruſt a Word into the Text, to ſoften that Expreſſion which appears too ſtrong for them. He was called † the CHRIST: But they make Joſephus to fall back a little: For after he had doubted whether he was to be called a Man, he was oblig'd to ſay downright he was the CHRIST. Beſides, we ſhould never find out Impoſtors, if it be allow'd to correct thus thoſe Places, that betray a Cheat, and to inſert new terms, without the Authority of any one Manuſcript. The falſe Joſephus tells a palpable Lye, when he makes CHRIST to convert many Greeks. To alledge, that he wrought to that Converſion by his Apoſtles, is to acknowledge not only that J. CHRIST was riſen from the Dead, as the Prophets had foretold; but that the Diſciples who ſurviv'd him, did likewiſe act by his Spirit. And how could Joſephus avoid believing in him, whom he own'd to be the Meſſiah; raiſed above Men, and fulfilling the Oracles of the Prophets, riſing the third Day from the Dead, and converting the Nations after his Death, tho' it was ignominious to the laſt degree.

XVIII. It muſt be confeſs'd, that the Impoſtor hath betray'd himſelf, by not keeping up the Character which a Jewiſh Prieſt ſhould have, who dy'd in Unbelief, and a Zealous Aſſerter of the Incredulity of his Nation. Origen was ſurpriz'd that Joſephus had praiſed St. James, ſince he did not acknowledge JESUS for the Meſſiah; which proves, that in Origen's time, the Words we have quoted, were not found in the Copies of Joſephus. For he had not wonder'd at the Encomiums which that Hiſtorian had beſtowed upon St. James, if he had ſeen that the ſame Writer had wrote a larger Panegyrick upon JESUS, whom he called the CHRIST. It is pretended, that the Jews lopt off the Teſtimony of this Enemy, in favour of CHRIST, as they have cut off another, wherein he attributed all the Calamities that befel his Nation to the Death of St. James. For the Fathers have often quoted those Words of Josephus, which are not now to be found in his History. But this is a double mistake: For 1st, who had again inserted into all the Copies of Josephus, the Testimony he had given to J. CHRIST, if it were true, that the Jews had expung'd it long before Origen, and as soon as the Book was publish'd? Had they the Original written under his own Hand to re-establish that Passage notwithstanding the opposition of the Jews, who then shew'd their Copies where it was not? 2. The words that relate to St. James, or at least which the Fathers have quoted upon his account are found in Josephus, and were never cut off; But they have not been well understood, in order to extol thereby the Christian Religion. For Josephus having spoken of St. James, goes on with the History of Ananus, in whose Pontificat the Robbers committed great Disorders; and he adds this Reflection to it, that That was the beginning of the great Calamities. The Fathers of the Church, who were very much pleas'd, that the Death of St. James shou d be look'd upon as the cause of the Destruction of Jerusalem by the very Confession of the Jews, have apply'd to St. James, what Josephus said of Robbers, and Cut-throats.

XIX. In short, we must go down as low as the IVth Century of the Christian Church to find in Josephus the place that we impugn; and is not that a strong Presumption, that some Christian hand hath inserted those words, which are not of a piece with the rest, but so much for the interest of his Religion? It must also be observ'd, that Eusebius *, is the first that hath quoted them. We do not charge that Historian with the Imposture, as it is sometimes done. It is enough for us that he hath taken many other Quotations out of Josephus which are not exactly faithful, not to depend upon his Authority. He makes that Historian to say, that the taxing mention'd by St. Luke, was made under Quirinius. However the Quotation is false, For Josephus only places it under Archelaus. He relates the Massacre of the Children of Bethlehem upon the Authority of Josephus, and yet the Historian willing to spare Herod's Memory upon that Article, hath never mention'd it.

XX. It signifies little to know whether St John drew his Word from the Chaldee Paraphrases, or from Philo; and whether Josephus hath spoken of the Messiah. It is of more weight to examine whether the Jewish Church expected a Messiah, that was above Mankind; and whether it had any Notion of this Divinity.

One wou'd think, that it cannot now reasonably be deny'd; since we have produc'd several Oracles of the Prophets, which have foretold it; and that a crowd of Testimonies taken from Authors that have succeeded them, and spoken more clearly than they, are added to those Prophesies.

However, since we must do Justice to the Jew as well as to the Greek, I own, that when we consult the Gospel, part of the Proofs we have alledg'd are invalidated. For neither the Pharisees, nor the Apostles, seem to have any Idea of the Divinity of the Messiah.

It is true, the Prophets had spoken of it; but there is always a great deal of Obscurity in Oracles before their Accomplishment; and if the Jewish Doctors cou'd blind themselves concerning the Sufferings of the Messiah, which were so clearly foretold by the Prophets, they were much more likely to be mistaken about his Glory, and Divinity. What is become clear to us, was obscure to them. The Union of the Divine Nature with the Human, was one of those Mysteries which required an evident Revelation. When ever you cannot solve Mens Doubts upon this matter with Authority, they presently consult Reason, weigh the Difficulties which arise from that Union, and will not hearken to a Revelation, which doth not decide it. I even Question whether the Jew's in our Saviour's time div'd far enough into the Views of the Prophets about this Divinity, to make it the Subject matter of their Reflections and Doubts. At least this doth not appear by the Gospel.

XXI. And indeed had the Divinity of the Messiah been known in the Jewish Church, and clearly taught in the Chaldee Paraphrases which were read every Saturday in the Temple and the Synagogues, and every Day in Private Houses; J. CHRIST wou'd have drawn some considerable Advantages from that disposition, to believe the most incredible of all the Gospel-Mysteries. However, if you will read the Gospel, you'l easily observe that our Lord J. CHRIST is very circumspect about his Divinity. Let us also confess the Fact, that all this circumspection of the Son of God had been ill manag'd, if the People had been prepar'd by their Masters, and their own private reading, to receive the Messiah as God. His Circumspection was so great, that the *Heretick*s said, that he spoke but seldom of his Divinity, for fear lest it should be denied that he was a Man. But St. Chrysostom hath hit it better, in saying, that J. CHRIST design'd insensibly to accustom Mankind to a Mystery exalted far beyond the reach of their reason. This supposes, that he found the Church ignorant of it; and foresaw that she wou'd rise up against this Mystery.

XXII. J. CHRIST did prove that he was God; and that Truth, instead of establishing his Empire, and gaining upon the Minds of the People, was an occasion of Scandal. When this Divine Redeemer alledg'd to the Pharisees the Prophesy of David, who had own'd him for God, by calling him his Lord, his Enemies cou'd not answer this powerful Argument. They were Silent, but still their Prejudice was not dispell'd, but remained. They did not acknowledge a Divinity, which at the same time they durst not deny. And how came that to pass, if they were persuaded that the Messiah was to be God; and if that Truth was clearly set down in the holy Writings, which they had in their Hands?

J. CHRIST takes upon him the Authority of God by forgiving Sins; and that Usurpation, which seem'd a Sacrilege, made them only to murmur. He exercises the Power of God, by commanding the Winds and the Sea, and even Death it self, which all obey him; Incredulity, one would think, shou'd have yeilded to this Proof, and the Notions of the Word, representing it self to the Minds of all the Jews, who had read this term in the Synagogues, shou'd have made the Obstinacy of the most stubborn to be flexible; yet they cou'd by no means whatsoever, endure that J. CHRIST shou'd make himself God. He bore his Pretensions even before the High-Priest, who had read the Targums, and ought to have known the Memra, or that Word, which had often been heard in the Temple; Whereas, on the contrary, the High-Priest rent his Clothes when he heard as he thought so horrible a Blaspemy. So long a Stubbornes in the Jews plainly proves, that they were wholly ignorant of the Divinity of the Messiah. Let us dismis now the Enemies of J. CHRIST; and speak of his Disciples, who shou'd at least have discover'd in the Deliverer whom they follow'd, that Word, that had been so often preach'd to them in the Synagogues. However, they were confounded, and knew no more of him than the Unbelieving Multitude, and said with them, that CHRIST was Moses, or Elias; and St. Peter stood in need of a

Divine

Divine Revelation to know, that he was the Son of God. This ignorance of the Apoſtles appears every where in the Goſpel, before the Deſcent of the Holy Ghoſt. It was not voluntary, as that of the Phariſees might be ſuſpected: Neither did the Leſſons nor Miracles of their Maſter diſpel it; and from whence happened all this?

XXIII. The immediate Succeſſors of the Apoſtles, the Biſhops, and Doctors that came out of the boſom of the Jewiſh Church, ought to have prov'd that they own'd a Memra, or the Word, and a Sheckinah, which is the Holy Ghoſt. Why have not they done it? It is ſaid, that few of the Fathers underſtood Hebrew, and fewer that underſtood the Chaldee Paraphraſes, and cou'd read the Targums. It is added too, that Origen hath ſpoken of the Diſpute of Jaſon with Papiſcus, wherein the Jews were oppos'd with their own Weapons, and it was prov'd to them, that the Oracles, that ſpoke of the Meſſiah, belong'd to J. CHRIST. In a word, Juſtin Martyr perceiving that the Enemies of the Goſpel deſign'd to deprive the Chriſtians of the Advantage which they drew from the Word, labours very hard to prove, that the Word is neither an Angel, nor an Attribute of the Deity; but a Perſon, and an active Principle.

XXIV. All this may be true, and yet not ſufficient to ſolve the Difficulty. For it was not neceſſary to underſtand the Hebrew or the Chaldaick Tongues to know the Principles of the Jews. Philo had explain'd them in Egypt in the Greek Tongue. So that there was no Neceſſity to recur to the Spring-head. All Egypt, which produc'd ſo many Learned Men, cou'd not be ignorant of this: wherefore then did they not make uſe of this Advantage, if it was ſo well grounded?

Farther, the firſt Chriſtians were almoſt all Jews They had read the Law in their Synagogues before ever they entred into the Chriſtian Church. They ought to have ſupplied the Learned and the Paſtors, who were Jews like themſelves, with Arms ſufficient to oppoſe their Brethren, and by ſo Salutary a Conflict to draw them to the Faith. From whence then proceeds ſo long and ſo obſtinate a Silence, when it is ſo eaſy to be overcome by only Speaking, and to overthrow the moſt virulent Enemies with their own Weapons?

XXV. The Paſſage of Origen, which is quoted, is very ambiguous and uncertain. By the Books of the Jews may be underſtood thoſe of the Old Teſtament in oppoſition to the New. The Old Books contain'd the Oracles, which were apply'd to J. CHRIST; but ſuppoſing it was plainly prov'd that the other Writings of the Jews were thereby meant, doth it follow that thoſe were the Targums, or places of thoſe Paraphraſes, that ſpeak of the Word?

Juſtin Martyr endeavoured to prove, that the Word was God with reference to St. John, who had ſpoken of it at the beginning of his Goſpel. But had this Father, who had been at Samaria, and ought to have known the Language of that Country, and the Principles of the Jews againſt whom he diſputed; I ſay, had he forgot the Word ſo well known by the Jewiſh Doctors, when he diſcours'd upon the queſtion of the Word? He hath never quoted either Philo, or the Paraphraſts; from whence it may be concluded, that he ſaw nothing in them that made for his cauſe.

XXVI. Notwithſtanding the Ignorance of the firſt Doctors of the Chriſtian Church in the Hebrew and Chaldee Tongues, it was impoſſible but that they ſhould have inform'd themſelves of the Principles of an Enemy with whom they had continual Diſputes, and whoſe Converſion in all Ages has been ſtrenuouſly endeavour'd. There were ſome Jews in Syria, and in the Neighbourhood of Jeruſalem; Theodoret ought to have known them. And there were ſome alſo in Egypt, who ſpoke Greek as well as the Chriſtians. The Works of Philo were not loſt; why then have the Fathers been ſo generally ſilent about the Word, which the Targums have ſo frequently ſpoken of? There were ſome Jews at Conſtantinople; The Paraphraſes which were read in the Synagogues, made a noiſe likewiſe in the Reign of Juſtinian. They ought not therefore to have been condemn'd ſo as they were by that Prince, if they had contain'd the Grounds of the Chriſtian Religion, and a convincing Argument againſt Judaiſm.

The Jews went early into Spain; Alphonſo *, who had been a Jew, and liv'd in the XIIth Century, oppos'd his Nation with their own Principles. It appear'd that he had read the Doctors, and was improv'd by reading them. He proves the Trinity, becauſe there is in God a Subſtance, a Wiſdom, and a Will. A Wiſdom to conceive and digeſt the Plan of his Work; and a Will to execute it; but he ſpeaks neither of the Word, nor of the Sheckinah: He proves the ſame tenet of the Trinity by the Name of Jehovah, which by a different Combination can make three Names, and makes of them but one Trinity of Perſons, and an † Unity of Eſſence. He was skill'd in the Cabala; and yet he did not know that there was a Word, God, and a Sheckinah, that was God. He is not more lucky when he particularly proves, that the Meſſiah took Human Nature upon him. He makes uſe of thoſe words of God, Let us make man in our Image; and as it is impoſſible that there ſhou'd be an Image of the Deity, he muſt of neceſſity have ſpoken to his Son of the Human Nature which he was one day to aſſume, and which was already compleat in his Idea. Raimond Martin || went farther, He ſpoke to the Jews of the Word, as we do at this Day. But then we muſt come down as low as the 13th Century to find an Author, who ſometimes ſpeaks of that Word which had been taught by the Jews. This indeed is a very long time of ſilence; and this procedure of the Chriſtians confirms what we have ſaid of that of the Jews againſt J. CHRIST.

XXVII. A great and Reverend Man * whoſe Works have lately been publiſh'd, maintains, that the Divinity of the Meſſiah was ſo evident among the Jews, that it paſs'd from them to the Heathens; and that not only to the Philoſophers, but even alſo to the Poets, who had ſuch clear Notions of the Word, as to ſay as Orpheus,

* Alphonſi Dialog. Tit. 7. Bibl. Max. P. 1. 21. pag. 198. † Join the Jod with the He ה it is one Name. Join the He ה with the Vau, and it is another Name. Join the Vau with the He, and they are three Names. Put them all into one Circle, and you make Three and One. || Raimond. Martin. Pugio Fidei. * Bullus Primitiva Tradit. de Divin. Chriſti, c. 4. Vocem

Vocem juro patris primùm quam condidit ore;
Conſilio ipſe ſuo mundum cùm conderet omnem.

The Sibyls have Paraphras'd Iſaiah and Daniel; Nay, Virgil himſelf being inſtructed in that School, cry'd out:

Jam venit & virgo; veniunt Saturnia regna;
Jam nova progenies cœlo demittitur alto.
Tu modò naſcenti puero, quo ferrea primùm
Deſtinet, ac toto ſurget gens aurea mundo,
Caſta fave Lucina.

It is pretended to be an affront to the Fathers to imagine, that they ſuppoſed thoſe Sibylline Verſes related to the Meſſiah. Juſtin Martyr is accus'd of it but upon too ſlender Conjectures. It is true, the Sibylline Verſes cou'd not be eaſily alter'd, becauſe they were kept in the Capitol. But we muſt diſtinguiſh the antient Oracles of the Sibyls from a Collection of Verſes, that was done a little before J. CHRIST by the Order of Auguſtus, and the Senate. They gather'd together again thoſe Verſes, which ('twas thought) were burn'd with the Capitol from ſeveral places, where there were any Jews; and thoſe Jews ſpeaking continually of the Meſſiah as of a King, who was to make them happy, and appear in a ſhort time. The Heathens who believ'd it, put him into the Sibylline Verſes, and the Knowledge of the Meſſiah was by that means ſpread from the Jews to the Gentils.

Let People ſay what they pleaſe, Thoſe Oracles of the Sibyls are too particular not to be thought the Suppoſititious Works of the Chriſtians. The Acroſtick of the Name of JESUS cannot belong either to a Jew, or to a Pagan. Cou'd the number of the Baskets of the Loaves which were gather'd, after JESUS had miraculouſly fed the Multitude, be ſet down before the Event? If it be undeniable that ſome Verſes have been father'd upon the Sibyls, ought not the number of them to be queſtioned? The Work is of too baſe an alloy to paſs for current. The Jews had not ſo clear a Notion of the Meſſiah, as to communicate it to the Heathens, nor to make thoſe Sibylline Verſes, as Voſſius hath pretended. The Gentils were wholly ignorant of that Myſtery, which can only be known by Revelation. Thus the Chriſtians remain charg'd with this pious Fraud.

CHAP. XXV.

Of the Helps which the Jewiſh Church had in the time of CHRIST to know the Meſſiah. Of the Diſpoſitions of the Jews, and the falſe Characters they did aſcribe to him.

VII. The Character of a Conqueror given to the Meſſiah. VIII. This Character refuted. IX. This Prejudice is ſtill receiv'd. X. The Spiritual Reign of the Meſſiah prov'd. XI. The everlaſting Law aboliſh'd by CHRIST, or by the Chriſtians. XII. The Strength of this Prejudice. XIII. An exceſſive Fondneſs for Traditions. XIV. Two other Prejudices about the Meſſiah. A Contempt of the Church; and the calling of the Gentils. XV. A Reflection upon theſe Prejudices.

I. THO' the Knowledge of the Jewiſh Church was not ſo extenſive, as to apprehend that the Meſſiah was to be a Man-God; yet it did not want helps to diſcover this Deliverer. It the more impatiently expected him, becauſe it groan'd under the Roman Yoke, and the Authority of the Slaves. For thus they have all along Spoken of the Herods. Thoſe, that reckon'd the Weeks of Daniel, as Daniel had reckoned the Years of the Captivity, cou'd not doubt but his Manifeſtation was near: And from this longing, back'd by the Oracles of the Prophets, ſprung thoſe confus'd Reports, which were ſpread in the Eaſt, that the King of the whole World was to be born. From thence proceeded thoſe anxious and cruel Thoughts of Herod, which coſt the Lives of a great many innocent Children. But this Church, beſides theſe general Aſſiſtances, had ſome particular ones, which are wanting at this time.

II. When an Oracle * was not fulfill'd, this Church expected its Accompliſhment at the coming of the Meſſiah. For it did not ſuppoſe, that God ever deſign'd to impoſe upon his People by vain and glittering hopes; or that the Prophets were miſtaken, when they ſpoke of a very remote Futurity. Thus they perceiv'd that the Promiſe made to Abraham, that in his Seed all the Nations ſhou'd be bleſs'd; had not been fulfill'd in Iſaac, or in Jacob, ſince but one Nation came from them. They therefore referr'd this great Event to the time of the Meſſiah, and flatter'd themſelves that then the Nations ſhou'd be converted. This Method of interpreting the Scripture ſupply'd this Church with a great many Oracles concerning the Meſſiah, whereof both the Jews, and ſome Modern Chriſtians endeavour to deprive it.

III. They as yet admitted the Maxim of St. Paul, that all things had happened to the Fathers in Types and Figures of the Meſſiah. And therefore they apply'd to him part of the Hiſtories, and Events of the Old Teſtament. They did not think David was that Deliverer long before promis'd, ſince he beg'd of God † to ſend him his Light and Truth; that is, the Meſſiah as a famous Rabbi || hath explain'd it. They look'd upon David as the Image of the Deliverer; And they had the ſame Notion of Solomon. And therefore they believ'd that the Book of Canticles was chiefly compos'd for the Meſſiah. The Brazen Serpent was not only look'd upon as a Type of the Meſſiah; but the Chaldee Paraphraſts * do even give it the Name of Word. It is for that reaſon that the Apoſtles have not ſcrupled to apply to him that Type which hath diſguſted ſome of the Fathers. St. Paul comply'd with this Method which was receiv'd in his time, in applying to Chriſt ſeveral Types, that ſeem'd at firſt far fetch'd. He had never attempted it, had not this Method been common both to him and the Jews, whom he either taught, or diſputed with.

not

This Method alſo made the Knowledge of the Meſſiah much more eaſy, ſince J. CHRIST was found in thoſe Types. In the time of St. Paul, the Jews being us'd to apply certain Hiſtories of the Old Teſtament to the Meſſiah, did agree with the Chriſtians in ſeveral things, which time hath even worn out of Knowledge.

IV. Beſide the Types, they had certain Interpretations of the antient Oracles, which were then, but are not now, receiv'd in the Synagogues. I do not examine, whether theſe Interpretations flow'd from any antient Tradition; or whether they were the receiv'd Opinions back'd by ſome Doctors, who in the laſt times had apply'd themſelves to find out the coming of the Meſſiah. It is of little moment to diſcover their Original, provided this Fact be certain. But I can't conceive, that CHRIST had undertook to prove the Immortality of the Soul, and the Reſurrection of the Body to the Sadduces by theſe words, I am the God of Abraham, and by this Inference God is not the God of the Dead, unleſs this Interpretation of the words of Moſes, and the concluſion from it, had not been univerſally receiv'd at that time. J. CHRIST thereby did not prove either his Miſſion or Divinity. His preſent concern, which was common to the Phariſees, was to demonſtrate a fundamental Tenet of Religion, which a particular Sect diſputed. So that a Proof ſo far fetch'd as this muſt have been admitted as Lawful by the Jews, and perhaps too by the Sadduces, who made no Reply to it. But to ſay nothing more of CHRIST, the Sanhedrim being conſulted by Herod about the place where the Meſſiah was to be Born, anſwer'd that it was at Bethlehem. The Oracle of the Prophet is expreſſed in ſuch general terms, that it wou'd be no eaſy matter at this time to make an exact Application of it, and yet it was done then. The Phariſees being conſulted about the Family from whence the Meſſiah was to come, anſwer'd clearly, the Houſe of David, and own'd that the CX Pſalm, which was wrote by that Prophet ſpeaks of him; and yet it is now conteſted. Laſtly, the Oracle of Iſaiah concerning the Virgin was very clear to Akiba, who explain'd it as we do. His Explanation is ſeen in the Gemara. We have not father'd it upon him; and the Teſtimony of this Doctor, who liv'd not long after CHRIST, ſhews the Opinion of his Church at that time.

V. But to ſhew * that this is not built upon bare Conjectures, there are many of theſe Interpretations, which are of weight, tho' they be not of ſo long ſtanding. As for inſtance, God is introduc'd ſaying, Adam is become as one of Us, and it is obſerv'd, that he doth not ſay as one of you, becauſe there were thouſands of Angels, and that Plurality doth not agree with that Unity which is eſſential to God: But God ſpeaks of a Celeſtial Adam, different from the Terreſtrial, Criminal, and wretched Adam. If this explication be antient, as Reuchlin ſuppoſes, St. Paul hath taken it from the Jews, when he ſo clearly ſpeaks of a Celeſtial Adam, in oppoſition to him who ſinn'd upon Earth. It is added, that God ſeeing Adam very much dejected, order'd an Angel to tell him, that he ſhould alienate his Sorrow, becauſe a Righteous Man ſhould deſcend from his Poſterity, who ſhould deſtroy Original Sin, by making an Oblation, and he ſhould take of the Fruit of Life, which ſhall be the Salvation of all thoſe who would truſt in him. This is the Bread of Life, whereof whoever Eats ſhall not Dye. And Eve full of this Promiſe, believ'd that Cain ſhould be her Deliverer. She gave him that Name: But ſhe was undeceiv'd, when ſhe diſcover'd his Evil Inclinations; and therefore ſhe caſt her Eyes upon Abel, and afterwards upon Seth. Abraham being inſtructed by his Angel, bravely offer'd his Son Iſaac. He would have ſooner hearkened to the ſuggeſtions of Nature, than to God's Command, had not he believed that this Sacrifice was to expiate Sin, as God had promiſed. If ſo many things are found in the Tradition of the Modern, it is no ſtrange thing if the Antient Jews had yet clearer Notions of the Meſſiah, and that they found in the Traditions of their Anceſtors greater helps to explain the Oracles that ſpoke of him.

VI. Laſtly, the Septuagint Verſion afforded yet greater helps; For they had there many Propheſies more clearly expreſſed than in the Original; and therefore many Proſelite Jews, by means of this Verſion, came to increaſe the Chriſtian Church: And it is for that reaſon, that St. Paul makes ſo frequent uſe of it. Theſe Words, Let all the Angels worſhip him, which eſtabliſh his Divinity, are in vain look'd for in a Pſalm, for they are not found there, but were taken from the Song of Moſes. They are not read in the Hebrew, or even in the Samaritan Copies; but are in the Septuagint without any alteration: And as the Authority of that Tranſlation was not diſputed at that time, St Paul was in the right to make the beſt of it; and the Church might rejoyce for that very information. But notwithſtanding all theſe helps, the Jews deceived themſelves, and aſcribed falſe Characters to the Meſſiah.

VII. For the firſt Character which was given to him in CHRIST's time, was that of a Conqueror; and this firſt Prejudice, which ſeems an innocent One, was one of the chief Springs of the Blindneſs of the Synagogue. Two things did mightily contribute to ſtrengthen this Error. 1. Certain Places of the Prophets, which promiſed to the Meſſiah a ſhining Proſperity, and an Empire that ſhould reach from Sea to Sea. And as Men are more concern'd for Temporal Goods, than for the progreſs of Religion, eſpecially when Proſperity and Religion ſeem link'd together; this Notion made them the more ardently ſigh for the Meſſiah. The Prophets borrowed their Ideas from the Kingdoms of this World, to repreſent the happineſs of the Reign of the Meſſiah, as the Evangeliſts ſpeak to us of a Scepter, a Crown, and of being ſeated upon Thrones, to give us a more lively deſcription of Heavenly Joys, becauſe theſe Notions affected the Mind; and the moſt effectual way to captivate the Heart, is to propoſe a ſenſible felicity. 2. The ſtate the Jewiſh Nation was in at the Birth of the Son of God, confirm'd their longing. That Nation, that was ſo exceſſively jealous of their Liberty, was under the Roman Yoke. They looked on every ſide for a Deliverer, and found none. They were perſuaded that the time of their Deliverance was come, and they were impatient that no Body fulfilled their antient hopes. Hence it happened, that when theſe hopes were daſh'd by too long a delay, they revolted, and that compleated the ruin of their Republick. It was Natural for People that looked for a Deliverer, to caſt their Eyes upon the Meſſiah, who had been ſo long promiſed to them, and whoſe manifeſtation ſeemed to be fixed at that time. Nay, it was almoſt unavoidable that they ſhould not acknowledge any, unleſs he was inveſted with a Power able to anſwer all theſe Notions of a Temporal Deliverance and Felicity.

This Prejudice was ſo general, and deeply rooted, that the Apoſtles, tho' brought up in CHRIST's School, could not ſhake it off. Even after his Reſurrection, they ſaid in a kind of deſpair † We truſted, that it had had been he which ſhould have redeem'd Iſrael: And beſides all this, to Day is the third Day ſince theſe things were done.

VIII. Had J.CHRIST come with Sword in Hand, he had been fear'd, but not lov'd, and the progreſs of the Goſpel had not been admired: And the Converſion of ſo many Idolatrous Nations performed by twelve Fiſher-men, would not have been one of the ſhining proofs of the Truth of the Chriſtian Religion. R. Manaſſe had judiciouſly ſaid, that it is no wonder to ſee a Conquering Meſſiah, ſince there have been many Heroes, who from a mean Extraction have aſcended the Throne, and acquired a great and vaſt Empire. It is not therefore known what God was to do on this occaſion. Thoſe that love grandeur, would prefer the Conqueſts which the Meſſiah would have made at the Head of an Army always attended with Victory. The Religion of Moſes is not the leſs Divine for having been maintained with Fire and Sword, and by an horrible Slaughter. The Proſperity of the Meſſiah had dazled the People; being uſed to Promiſes, that only ſpoke of a Land flowing with Milk and Honey; they could hardly raiſe their thoughts to the Bleſſings of Grace. It is the bent of Mankind to love famous and celebrated Leaders. Some Chriſtians have ſtruck upon that Rock, ſince to comfort themſelves of the misfortunes that attended the firſt coming of the Meſſiah, they have imagin'd a Reign of a thouſand Years, during which the Saints ſhall riſe again, and reap Joy upon Earth, inſtead of the Tears which they have ſow'd in it. It is thought that there is no harm to ſtick to the Proſperity of the Church. But God, who will have us harbour more ſublime thoughts, puniſhes this inclination, which betrays Vain-glory, and too great an Adherence to the Earth, that is therein preferr'd to Heaven.

IX. The modern Jews have not retriev'd themſelves from this prejudice of their Anceſtors. They often inſult Chriſtians who adore a God, that inſtead of Reigning over all the World, was ſurpriz'd by a contemptible Mob arm'd with Clubs, and who dy'd upon a Croſs. They alledge the Prophets, who give ſo great an extent to time and places to the Reign of the true Meſſiah; and from thence conclude, that Ours hath not anſwer'd the Character engrav'd in Holy Writ. " The Prophets, ſay they, " * have promiſed an univerſal Peace on Earth at the " time of the Meſſiah. There was to be but one " Religion upon Earth. They cry'd out at Jeruſa- " lem, Riſe thou Daughter of Sion. Yet ſince J. " CHRIST, Jeruſalem hath been ras'd, a deplo- " rable difference of Religions hath been ſeen, and " Wars in all Places and Ages. They laugh at the Spiritual Reign, which the Chriſtian Religion puts in the room of that promiſed by the Scripture: And as it would be abſurd to make Roman Emperors, whoſe Throne ſhould be in the Moon, ſince Rome is the Capital where they ought to be plac'd; they believe, that Jeruſalem being appointed as the Seat of the Eternal Empire of the Meſſiah, it is abſurd to give him a Throne in Heaven where no Body ſees him, and to make him rule over Hearts which are wholly unknown; ſince it is a white Stone, wherein a new Name is written, which no Man knoweth, ſaving he that receives it.

X. I am not ſurpriz'd, that ſo ſelfiſh a prejudice hath kept its ſtrength from the time of CHRIST to Ours. Nevertheleſs the Prophets have ſpoken ſo plainly of the vile Condition and Sufferings of the Meſſiah, that the Rabbies are oblig'd to imagine three things. 1. To fancy a Meſſiah Son of Joſeph, who is to be Miſerable. 2. To own, that the Meſſiah ſhall undergo a third of the Evils that are in the World. 3. That he ſhall ſuffer much before he becomes Maſter of the Univerſe: but that his Sufferings far from tarniſhing and eclipſing his Glory, as thoſe of J. CHRIST have done his, ſhall rather make it ſhine with a brighter luſtre.

Beſides, they own, that it is the ſtile of the Prophets to make uſe of Metaphors, and of Terms borrow'd from Terreſtrial Happineſs, to deſcribe a Spiritual Bliſs, and the Bleſſings of Grace. They are themſelves oblig'd to explain ſome Expreſſions of the Talmud in that ſenſe, which otherwiſe would be very ridiculous. When we read in the Talmud, that the Meſſiah ſhall give a ſplendid Entertainment to thoſe who have led a good Life; and that the Leviathan ſpoken of by Job, ſhall be ſerv'd in the firſt Diſh; They maintain, that this Entertainment ſhall be the Knowledge which the Meſſiah ſhall infuſe into the Soul, and that this Knowledge ſhall be her Aliment; as we ſay that CHRIST Reigns by his Word, and that he is the Bread of Life, whereof whoever hath eaten ſhall never dye, but have eternal Life.

When you wonder at what they ſay, that all Dead Bodies ſhall at the Reſurrection go through ſubterraneous Paſſages into Judea to be reunited to their Souls; they aſſert, that this ſubterraneous Journey, which is plainly impoſſible, ought to be underſtood in a Metaphorical ſenſe. They only uſe theſe Metaphors, becauſe it hath been the conſtant ſtile of that Nation for many Ages. The Prophets who preceded the Rabbies have wrote in the ſame ſtile; and tho they have not uſed ſuch hard and ſtrain'd Metaphors; yet they have almoſt made a conſtant uſe of Metaphors. The Jews cannot then complain of our Intrepretations, when we reduce their Figurative, to a more ſimple and natural ſenſe. If the Jews have a right to explain their Talmudiſts, why ſhould they deprive us of that of explaining the Prophets? Laſtly, if the Chriſtians themſelves ſpeak of the Kingdom of Heaven, and the felicity enjoy'd therein, under the notion of a white Stone, white Raiment, and Palms thrown at the Feet of the Lamb, tho' they believe that every thing in that Kingdom ſhall be Spiritual; it is much more evident, that the Prophets might have uſed the ſame expreſſions, or the ſame figures to expreſs the Spiritual Reign of the Meſſiah, and that we are in the right to explain their expreſſions in that ſenſe.

XI. The Second Character aſcrib'd to the Meſſiah, when CHRIST came into the World, was that far from aboliſhing the Law, he would heighten its Glory. The Jews intoxicated with this prejudice, conſtantly objected to J CHRIST, that he heal'd the Sick, and ſuffer'd his Diſciples to pluck the ears of Corn on the Sabbath-day. It was often repreſented to him, that he had tranſgreſſed a Law which was to laſt for ever, ſince God had not only given it, but had alſo call'd it an everlaſting Covenant. It is certain, that the old Synagogue ſometimes ſpoke of the Law which the Meſſiah was to ſettle, as of a moſt compleat and excellent one; but we muſt not thereby imagine, that he would alter either the Religion or Law of Moſes. He was only to add a new luſtre and ſtrength to it.

This prejudice is at another time ſtrengthen'd quite another way. For † it is obſerv'd, " That J.CHRIST " was come to fulfil, and not to aboliſh the Law; " and that indeed he was Circumciſed; that his Diſ- " ciples obſerv'd the Sabbath; and that it was only " five Hundred Years after, that the Pope thought " of putting Sunday in the room of that Day which " had been ſo long obſerv'd. Beſides, whereas the " Laws are different in Poland and Portugal, becauſe " Legiſlators could not provide for all accidents;

* Reſponſio Judaica ad Queſt. Q. 8. p. 8. † R. Iſaac Munim. Fidei, P. 1. c. 19. p. 107, &c.

" that of the Jews, which was dictated by God, did pro" vide for all. Chriſtians are in the wrong to comp ain
" that it cannot be all obſerv'd, becauſe it is eaſy.
" If the Goſpel is more eaſy ||, it is becauſe the Fleſh
" is therein indulg'd, by allowing the uſe of certain
" Meats, and diſcharging Men of certain Ordinances, " which were the Barriers of the Law, and kept
" the Jews upon a conſtant Guard. The Chriſtians
" only ſticking to the Duties which Nature and
" Reaſon have dictated, do not carry Perfection ſo
" far as the Jews, who fulfil Commands that wholly " depend upon the will of God. By obſerving the Rites
" and Ceremonies preſcrib'd in the Law, God is O" bey d; whereas by obſerving the Moral Law, Peo" ple have other motives of their Obedience than " God himſelf, and the Reverence which is due to " him.

XII. So that this Prejudice hath two Faces. For the Antient Doctors upbraided CHRIST with having aboliſh'd the Law; whereas the Modern maintain'd, that he obſerv'd its Principal Ceremonies, and the Chriſtians only have chang'd them. The ſecond turn is more inveigling than the firſt: For CHRIST was Circumciſed, Eat the Paſchal Lamb, frequented the Temple upon the Sabbath, and taught there. However, it muſt be acknowledg'd, that CHRIST ſtruck hard at the Ceremonies. He preach'd that they were uſeleſs: He foretold that they ſhould be aboliſh'd after they were fulfilled; and that was to ſtrike at the Root of the Jewiſh Religion; for the People and Clergy made it to conſiſt more in external Ceremonies, than in the internal Acts of Devotion. The Jews had a double reaſon to do it; becauſe theſe Sacrifices were of Divine inſtitution, and that it is impoſſible that two Men inſpir'd by God ſhould contradict one another. Moſes, whoſe Inſpiration and Authority were own'd, had inſtituted thoſe which CHRIST came to aboliſh. What a ſtrong prejudice was this againſt him; by what Authority doſt thou theſe things?

XIII. The Jews alſo imagin'd, that the Meſſiah wou'd authorize all the Traditions approv'd by their Doctors, becauſe they believ'd them enjoyn'd by Moſes himſelf, and that they were recommended to them as being of equal Authority as the Law. People do not think that there is any harm in tacking their voluntary Devotions to Revelation. Every thought, that ſuperadds to Religion, ſeems innocent. They fancy, that it is ſubſervient to the Glory of God, mortifies the Fleſh, and is a more ſure Way to Salvation. They are miſlead by dazling Appearances; And theſe human Thoughts, and voluntary Devotions, are multiply'd in infinitum. When the Banks of Divine Authority are broken, the Flood ſwells and overflows: A monſtrous croud of new Fancies are gathered together and ſwallow up Religion. But the greateſt miſchief is, that theſe glittering Imaginations are preferr'd to the Law of God, which ſeems dry. People become jealous of thoſe Whims, and cannot endure that they ſhou'd be oppugn'd. For their Pride is ſtirred up, and takes up Arms to defend them. And therefore the moſt inveterate Enemies to Chriſt were the Traditioniſts.

XIV. There were beſides two other Prejudices concerning the Meſſiah, which hinder'd the Jews from acknowledging J. CHRIST. They believ'd, that as Moſes had inſtituted the LXX Elders to be as his Council, and deliberate with him upon important Affairs; ſo the Meſſiah wou'd make the ſame uſe of the Sanhedrim, which had ſucceeded the Elders; that he wou'd reſpect the High Prieſt as his firſt Aſſociate, and that the Church ſhou'd decide whether ſuch a one, or ſuch a one was the Meſſiah. For * he who ſhall be ſo preſumptuous as not to Obey the High Prieſt, that man ſhall dye, and the wicked ſhall be cut off from the midſt of Iſrael. Hence it is, that ſome Doctors, back'd by a great many Chriſtians, grant Infallibility to the High Prieſt, when he decides at the Sanhedrim. Nevertheleſs, J. CHRIST did not derive his Vocation from that Tribunal, but rejected the Pontifical Authority, that Council of the Elders, from whence came thoſe that demanded his Death, and pronounc'd that he was not the Meſſiah.

To conclude, the Jews in their Conferences with Chriſtians, ask, How it is poſſible that a Meſſiah † for ſo many Ages promiſed to their Nation, hath only been embraced by the Gentiles, who have been put into their room, whilſt they groan'd under the preſſure of Miſery? This is an old Prejudice. For in the time of CHRIST the Jews look'd upon the Heathens as Dogs unworthy of being taken notice of by God; and it was thought that it was his laſt Stake to go to them. Will he go to the Gentiles alſo? He foretold their Vocation, and the Apoſtles fulfill'd his Propheſy.

XV. Theſe Prejudices concerning the Meſſiah were like ſo many Clouds that hinder'd him from being perceiv'd. For if the Jews thought to ſee in JESUS the Characters ſet down by the Prophets, they fancied at the ſame time that he wanted Others, which they believ'd to be Eſſential to the Meſſiah. They had always their Eyes upon the laſt; and the Jewiſh Church thinking it ſelf deſpis'd, confirm'd them in the Minds of the Vulgar, and from thence their Incredulity proceeded.

It is certain, that CHRIST hath aboliſh'd the Ceremonial Law; but it is abſurd to think that it ſhou'd laſt for ever. For it is well known that this only ſignifies a long Duration; and Bath-ſheba did not believe that Solomon was to be Immortal, when ſhe cried out Let my Lord live for ever, that is, a long time. God did not pretend that it ſhou'd always be in force; ſince he hath deſtroy'd the Temple, where it was to be obſerv'd, and diſpers'd the Nation that was enjoyn'd that way of Worſhip. The Patriarchs, under whom the Church and Devotion flouriſh'd, did not know that Law: Which is a plain Argument that it is not eſſentially good, and that People may be ſav'd without the Practice of it. Its Ordinances muſt be put among the occaſional Precepts ſo often ſpoken of by the Jews, and which bind but at certain Times, and in certain Circumſtances. A Jew ||, that turn'd Chriſtian argued thus againſt thoſe, he had forſaken; " You cannot ſay that the " Law is eternal; becauſe, as you know, this term
" doth not imply an unbounded duration, ſince Mo-
" ſes will have a Slave to ſerve for ever; and yet
" his Slavery was to end at the Jubilee. You ſay,
" that two thouſand Years ſhall be empty, two thou" ſand under the Law; and two thouſand under the " Meſſiah. So that you own that the Law ſhall ceaſe
" under the Meſſiah, and that other Precepts ſhall
" be obſerv'd. Laſtly, moſt of the Ceremonies were " only inſtituted to keep up the Memory of the Bon" dage and coming out of Egypt; but this Delive" rance being abſorp'd by another greater, ought " to be no more celebrated. This Jew converted to Chriſtianity did a little ſubtilize.

Nevertheleſs the blood of Goats, and Bulls, that were offer'd, cou'd not expiate Sin, or juſtify a guilty Soul. A more excellent Victim was wanted. Sacrifices were but Shadows and Types, which promis'd that future Victim, and were to ceaſe as ſoon as it was found. J. CHRIST by the Abolition of Ceremonies, gave a new degree of Authorityto the Moral Law, which was eſſential to Man. When a Pope is accus'd of having chang'd the Saturday into Sunday, Five hundred Years after CHRIST; this Accuſation contradicts Hiſtory, and the Author of the Toldos Jeſchu who aſſerts, it was Elias, who immediately after the Death of J. CHRIST, went to Rome to make that alteration. Traditions were the Relaxations of the Moral Law, whoſe Severity our Saviour hath reſtor'd. The Prophets, depended neither upon the Church, nor the High Prieſt, ſince they upbraided him with his Idolatries and Abominations. The Meſſiah was to be the leſs dependant upon them; ſince he is above the Prophets. And indeed if the Meſſiah was now to appear, from whence wou'd he derive his Miſſion, and Authority; ſince there is at this day no Sanhedrim, nor High Prieſt? This is enough againſt the Prejudices of the Antient Jews; For we do not intend to write here a formal Controverſy.

CHAP. XXVI.

A Third Notion of the Meſſiah.

That of the Talmudiſts, Rabbies, &c. Concerning the Meſſiah they expect.

XVIII. Three Obſervations upon theſe Calculations.

I. RELIGION alters, as it goes from its Spring. Diſciples become bolder than their Maſters; and out-doing the Variations of their Predeceſſors, they diſguiſe Divinity to that degree that it is hardly known. The Prophets had given a very clear Idea of the Meſſiah. The Jews who liv'd in CHRIST's time had alter'd it; and that was the Reaſon why they did not know him when he appear'd: But the modern Doctors have yet chang'd it in a more ſurprizing manner. What they have ſaid upon this Matter ought to be known, becauſe we write here the Hiſtory of their Theology.

II. The firſt thing that we ought to obſerve, is, the Confuſion and Contradictions of the Sages. They ſtill agree at this day, that all the Oracles * of the Prophets relate to Meſſiah; but they pretend that † "the particular Oracles, that indicate his coming, "can't be diſtinguiſh'd, and that it is very difficult "to find them. Interpreters generally divide about "them. Some affirm, that they were fulfill'd in the "Perſon of Hezekiah, and Others, that the Predi"ction of Iſaiah, all fleſh ſhall come to worſhip before "me, is not to be explain'd of the Gentiles, but of "the whole Nation of Iſrael, that came to ſacrifice "in the Second Temple. The Fathers || have no "Tradition about this; and what they take from "Scripture is groundleſs. Nay, it is of no uſe to exa"mine all theſe Explications. For they lead nei"ther to the Love, nor Fear of God. But above "all we muſt not reckon the times. Nevertheleſs to have the Characters of the Meſſiah ſo engraven in the Oracles, that he cou'd not thereby be known, is to reflect upon God. Maimonides * who ſets down this Rule, is immediately forc'd to break it, when he gives for the true Character of the Meſſiah, that he ſhall overcome all Nations, and not dye: But this is only the leaſt of their Contradictions.

III. The Jewiſh Maſters determine, that the Scepter ſhall not depart from Judah until Shiloh come, that is to ſay, that there † ſhall always be ſome Chiefs of the Captivity at Babylon, and that the Poſterity of Hillel ſhall publickly teach the Law. However, it is a long while ſince the Offspring of Hillel has been extinct; and that theſe Law givers have diſappear'd, as well as the Heads of the Captivity in the Eaſt. But not to mind now any thing but their Contradictions; We find a very palpable one in the ſame Chapter of the Gemara, which ſays, that the Son of David ſhall not come, till the meaneſt of all the Magiſtrates of Iſrael be deſtroy'd; that none ſhall remain of the Manifeſtation of the Meſſiah. For God deſcribing that time ſays ||, He ſhall both cut off the ſprigs with Pruning-hooks; and take away and cut down the branches. There is an entire abolition of the Judges, which ſhall be follow'd by a compleat Reſtoration by the Meſſiah. For, I will reſtore thy Judges as at the firſt, and thy Counſellors as at the beginning.

The Jews acknowledge that all the terms fix'd for the coming of the Meſſiah are over and paſt *. Even Hillel cry'd out in his time, There † is no more a Meſſiah for Iſrael; for they had a full fruition of him in the reign of Hezekiah. And yet they maintain that he ſhall come, and confidently expect him. It is one of the Articles of their Faith. At the very ſame time that they own that the time is paſt, they ſhorten the Monarchy of the Perſians to deprive us of the Oracle of Daniel, which clearly demonſtrates his coming. It is a common Error among them, that God hath put off the days of the Meſſiah for the Sins of the People; but whenever they will repent and live uprightly, then the Meſſiah ſhall certainly appear. Jeruſalem ſhall not be deliver'd in Righteouſneſs till || the Proud, the Scornful, and Magicians be expell'd. God ſhall bring his † Plagues upon the Nation, and inflict exemplary Puniſhments upon them to bring this Repentance to paſs. It is for that reaſon, that he will make one as cruel as Haman λ their King, who ſhall convert them. And yet they alſo ſay, that the Sages ſhall dye, that thoſe that learn the Law ſhall forget it. " Since * the Temple is ras'd, the " Sages have been but Scribes; the Scribes but as " Schollars; the Diſciples but as the Vulgar, that " do not know the Law. The People are become " ſordid and vile, becauſe no body takes care of " them: Upon whom ſhall we look, but upon our hea- " venly Father? Men's impudence ſhall augment at " the time of the Meſſiah; Bread and Wine ſhall be " very dear (becauſe of gluttony) ſays the Com- " ment; the Kingdom ſhall become full of Here- " ticks, and they ſhall not be oppos'd, and the Houſe " ſhall be turn'd into Stews. How can theſe Notions of the moſt exceſſive corruption be reconcil'd with that voluntary Repentance, which ſhall oblige the Meſſiah to come? If the Sins of the People hinder his Manifeſtation; is he likely to come, when they ſhall be at the heighth, and deſerve all the weight of the angry hand of God.

They ſay farther, that when the Meſſiah † ſhall appear, the Condition of Mankind ſhall not alter. Nay, ſuch great Calamities ſhall happen at that time, that R. Ula crys out, Ah! Let him come, but may I never ſee him. For flyiug from a Lion, a Man falls into the Paws of a Bear, or is ſtung by a Serpent. Others buy his Preſence, and are ſatisfy'd to reſt under the ſhaddow of his Aſs; becauſe the pains of the Meſſiah, may be avoided by an exact obſervation of the Law. Beſides, there ſhall be ſome Victories, a ſhining Proſperity, and a perfect Felicity. He is call'd the Son of the fallen, becauſe he ſhall raiſe up the Tabernacle of David, that is fallen. The Wine, which God created with the World ſhall be drunk. I can't tell how Genebrard finds there the Wine of the Euchariſt; But the Sages explain themſelves, and ſay, that as he who eats the Grape, believes that nothing is better, yet prefers Wine to Grapes when he hath taſted of it; ſo Men fancy that the conveniencies of the Body are the beſt reward of Piety, till they have taſted the ſweetneſs of Spiritual Bleſſings, which are far more excellent. But how do the Pains of the Meſſiah agree with his Conqueſts and the Proſperity of his Reign? None but the Chriſtians can unravel this Myſtery.

Neither can the Doctors be reconciled about the manner of his Manifeſtation. For ſometimes they allow him a magnificent Equipage, ſince he is to come down upon || the Clouds. He ſhall have eight glorious Names; The Lord, our Righteouſneſs, the Shoot, the Brightneſs, the Comforter, Elias, Shiloh; but he is ſet up at the ſame time upon an Aſs. They ſay, that * he ſhall be a Leper; becauſe Iſaiah aſſures us, that he hath born our griefs, and that God hath ſmitten him. Some ſay, that he ſhall not dye, and this Prejudice is of a very old ſtanding; ſince they told J. CHRIST how ſayeſt thou, that the Son of Man ſhall be taken up, For CHRIST abideth || for ever. " Jacob believ'd that Sampſon was the Meſ- " ſiah; but ſeeing him cruſh'd under the Ruins " of a Temple, he alter'd his Opinion, becauſe the " Meſſiah is not to dye. And yet he ſays, † that the Days of the Meſſiah are forty Years; but Others give him as many Years as there are Days in one Year. Nay, they are multiply'd to 7000, or at leaſt there ſhall be as many from the Meſſiah, as from the Creation of the World to his coming. How unſteady they are! All theſe Contradictions are to be found together in one * Chapter of the Gemara. It is true, that different Doctors ſpeak there, but that is ſufficient to let us know that the Talmudiſts have no preciſe notion of their Deliverer; and that they cannot agree about what concerns him.

IV. Simeon † Jochaides deſcrib'd the Meſſiah in metaphorical terms; " For he repreſents a Serpent " who hath ſwallow'd up the firſt Man, and ſtill " wages War with the Saints. He that ſhall kill " him is promis'd the Daughter of a King that flies " in the Air upon a high Tower: A great many " Heroes ventur'd the Fight, and periſh'd; but the " Shiloh Moſes is expected; he of whom it is writ- " ten, he look'd this way, and that way and ſlew the " Egyptian: He it is that ſhall kill the Serpent. " Many Saints ſhall join with him. Ships ſhall happily " Sail upon the Sea; He ſhall caſt into it the Rider and " his Horſe; that is, the Serpent and his Female. " The Iſraelites ſhall paſs through upon dry Ground. " They paſs'd the firſt time through a ſenſible and " material Sea; but the ſecond ſhall be the Sea of " the Law, where they ſhall paſs by the way of Re- " demption. Alas, how many Ships have been loſt " till he, to whom belongs the Inheritance, or is its " Lord, be come. Theſe Ships are the Eyes of thoſe " who wou'd pierce through the Myſteries of the " Law; But hereafter Navigation ſhall be ſecure; " the Reptils, and the Leviathan ſhall be there in " Peace. The Leviathan is the Righteous, who " ſwims as a little Fiſh in the Sea.

Notwithſtanding this Myſtical Language, you may perceive that the Meſſiah is the ſame Shiloh ſpoke of by Jacob, and who is to kill the Old Serpent, which hath ruin'd Mandkind. Men have in vain ſtrugled againſt him: Nothing leſs than a Meſſiah could overcome him. The Law was not ſufficient to redeem Mankind, ſince the Ships, that is, thoſe that penetrated its Myſteries, were loſt. That Law muſt be paſſed through, as the Red Sea was by the People. That ſhall be done Spiritually, and it ſhall be a Redemption, wherein the Righteous ſhall alſo be fed with a Spiritual Manna. Laſtly, it is thence concluded, that People muſt put their confidence in the Meſſiah, who is to redeem Iſrael from their Sins.

V. Other Rabbies ſet down the Preſages that ſhall precede his coming. They diſtinguiſh his principal Actions, and deſcribe, in a pathetical manner, what advantageous Effects he ſhall produce.

The coming of the Meſſiah ſhall be preceded by horrible Preſages. Three † Apoſtate Kings, under pretence of worſhipping God, ſhall throw Men headlong into Error. Truth || ſhall fail upon Earth. Iſrael, according to the Prediction of Hoſea, * ſhall be without a King, without a Sacrifice, without an Image. He ſhall be over-burthen'd with Taxes, and whoever ſhall not be able to pay ſhall dye. " From the " extremities of the Earth ſhall come Men with two " Heads, and ſeven Eyes burning as Fire, and whoſe " Feet ſhall be ſwifter than thoſe of Goats, and all " thoſe that ſhall ſee them ſhall cry, Ah! Ah! The Plague and Ptyſick ſhall ravage the Earth. A Dew of Blood ſhall fall down from Heaven, and be taken for Water, but ſhall kill thoſe that drink of it. However, there ſhall be another Dew, which ſhall be a healing Remedy to many, according to the ſaying of Hoſea †, I will be as the Dew unto Iſrael; he ſhall grow as the Lilly. The || Sun ſhall be turned into darkneſs, and the Moon into Blood, as Joel Propheſies, but after thirty Days God will reſtore it to its priſtine Brightneſs.

VI. Then * a potent King ſhall ſubject the Univerſe to his Laws, and place his Throne in Rome, and Reign nine Months; at the end of which the Meſſiah Son of Joſeph, called Nehemiah ſhall appear. The Tribes of Manaſſah, of Ephraim and Benjamin following him in ſmall numbers, ſhall declare War againſt this King of the Romans, kill him in a Fight, make a horrible ſlaughter, and find again part of the Veſſels of the Sanctuary in the Palace of the Emperor Julian, where they had been hid for many Ages. The Son of Joſeph ſhall go from thence to Damaſcus. Aſcalon, and Jeruſalem, kill the Inhabitants thereof, and all Iſrael ſhall gather together at the noiſe of his Victories.

and

VII. There is at Rome the Statue of a very handſome Virgin. Some profligate Fellows of all Nations ſhall come into that great City, ſhall cloſe in with this Statue, and from ſome drops of Blood the famous Armillus ſhall ſpring, whom the Nations ſhall call Anti-chriſt. His Stature ſhall be prodigious. He will give out that he is the Meſſiah, and the God who ought to be ador'd. All the Poſterity of Eſau ſhall ſubmit to his Laws; but Nehemiah the Son of Joſeph at the Head of Thirty thouſand Jews, a Defender of the Unity of God, ſhall wage War againſt him. Armillus ſhall be beaten, and Two hundred thouſand Men ſhall be Slain in the firſt Battel. But he will rally to a ſecond Charge, where after he has loſt a vaſt number of Souldiers, he ſhall unknowingly kill the Meſſiah Nehemiah the Son of Joſeph. The Jews ſhall then loſe Courage, and run away. They ſhall be driven from place to place. The Nations ſhall no longer tolerate them, and this laſt blow of God's Anger ſhall be the moſt terrible.

VIII. We do not intend to inſiſt upon every particular; and therefore ſhall not obſerve what they ſo boldly advance, that the Veſſels of the Sanctuary are hid in the Palace of Julian, where they ſhall be found at the Birth of the Meſſiah, the Son of Joſeph; nor concerning the Statue of a Virgin, which is at Rome, from which Armillus is to be born; but it is requiſite to expoſe the variation of the Rabbies, who have explain'd the Wars of the Meſſiah according to the times wherein they liv'd. Jonathan has ſpoken of this Armillus, and therefore it is ſaid, either that his Paraphraſe is adulterated, or that he was not Co-temporary with J. CHRIST, ſeeing this Armillus is borrow'd from the Chriſtians, who did not till a long time after begin to make him the Anti chriſt. Kimki, who liv'd in the XIIth Century, and then ſaw the Chriſtians Maſters of Jeruſalem under Baldwin, the laſt King of it, fancy'd, that his Meſſiah, whoſe coming he expected in a ſhort time, wou'd ſtill find the Chriſtians in Judæa, from whence he would drive them out with open force. And for that reaſon he fixed there the Seat of the War. But he was miſtaken. For the XIIth Century was not compleated, before the Chriſtians vanquiſh'd by Saladin, abandon'd the Holy-Land. Abravanel *, who ſaw the Turks powerful and formidable, imagin'd that thoſe were they that were to wage War againſt the Chriſtians, and to deſtroy the Nations. He ſuppoſes that the Chriſtians would make new Cruzadoes for the regaining of Jeruſalem; that the Turks, whom he calls Gog and Magog, being gathered together from all the Provinces of the Eaſt, to defend not only their Empire, but their Religion, would give Battel to, and defeat the Chriſtians. This is the Judgment, which God was to execute in the Valley of Jehoſhaphat; For Jeruſalem was to be a place of Horror. The Nations were to tremble, and even the Jews to quake thro' Amazement; but Peace and Deliverance were at laſt to ſpring from the Womb of this War. For God was then to break the Yoke of Iſrael, and no Stranger was ever after to rule over them. They ſhall ſerve David their King, that is to ſay, the Meſſiah, who is of the houſe of David. The Lying fraud is palpable; and beſides it appears, that thoſe who publiſh'd thoſe Propheſies, have taken them from the Circumſtances of the time they lived in, and from the Events, which they thought near at hand. Our Author has a different Syſtem. For he brings into the World a Nehemiah, the Son of Joſeph, and makes him the firſt Meſſiah; he allots him for his Province the Deſtruction of the Gentiles, loads him with the Odium of a cruel Expedition, and makes him to dye in a Battel. Let us go on with his Notion.

IX. Michael the Arch-Angel ſhall Sound † the Trumpet three times; at the firſt, the Meſſiah the Son of David ſhall appear with the Prophet Elijah. The diſpers'd Nation ſhall gather together; Armillus in a fright ſhall complain of the great trouble that a wretched Nation gives him. The Son of David ſhall kill him in the Battel; The Chriſtians and Infidels ſhall be exterminated perſuant to the Oracle, which ſays ||, that the houſe of Jacob ſhall be a Fire, and the Nations as Stubble and Tow. At the ſecond Sound of the Trumpet, the Meſſiah ſhall raiſe the Saints from the Dead; and even the Meſſiah, the Son of Joſeph, who was buried under the Gate of Jeruſalem. They ſhall go from place to place to gather together the diſpers'd. The Earth ſhall be to them a Garden of Eden. God ſhall go before them. Jeruſalem, and its Temple ſhall be reſtor'd. as Jeremiah * hath foretold. The City ſhall be built with ten pretious Stones. God ſhall put again into his Temple the ten things that had been loſt, and were miſſing in that of Herod. The Ark, with its Cherubims, the Urim and Thummim, and in fine, there ſhall be ten Conſolations for the People. For his Redeemer ſhall come †; the Priſoners ſhall gather together; the Dead ſhall riſe again; the Temple ſhall be rebuilt; the Kingdom of Judah ſhall extend from one Sea to the other, and his Enemies ſhall be deſtroy'd. No Sickneſs, no Plague ſhall any more moleſt them. Their life ſhall be prolong'd as that of a Tree. God ſhall make himſelf viſible to the Eye, and ſhall take away the wicked thought from the heart; and laſt of all, War ſhall come to a final End.

X. This Rabbi hath forgot one of the great Advantages, which the Jews are to reap at the Manifeſtation of the Son of David; for he is to prepare them a Table, and give them a magnificent Banquet. The Leviathan ſhall make the firſt Courſe. This Fiſh would have filled the Sea with Monſters, if he had liv'd long enough to have finiſhed his Productions; but the Rabbies affirm that God kill'd him, and ſalted him for the Banquet of the Meſſiah. He alſo kill'd the Behemoth but did not ſalt him, becauſe ſalt Meat is not nice enough for ſo elegant a Feaſt. Wild fowl were as yet wanting; But though ſome Doctors have over-look'd them, Others have taken care to mention a Bird call'd Bariuchne, which when he diſplays his Wings, covers the Sun with them; and one of his rotten Eggs once falling from his Neſt drown'd ſixty Cities. He is alſo reſerv'd for the Meſſiah and all his Nations. Wine ſhall no more be wanting there, than at the Marriage in Cana; For it has been preſs'd from the beginning of the World, when the Earth had not as yet loſt its vigour, and it is kept in Adam's Cellar. Its age ſhall not diminiſh its ſtrength; it ſhall only make it clearer and finer.

ties. However, thus much is certain, that this Banquet is the formulary of an Oath among * many of the Jews, as that of a Share in Paradice is among the Chriſtian Vulgar: If I lye, let me never eat of the wild Ox; that is to ſay, of the Behemoth. Thoſe that are for refining, maintain, that we muſt underſtand thereby Carnal Pleaſures which ſhall be lively and in great abundance; and Poligamy ſhall be ſo far then from being a Fault, tolerated for the hardneſs of their Hearts, that it ſhall become a thing Praiſe-worthy. In ſhort, if ſome find Spiritual Pleaſures under carnal Expreſſions, they are refuted as People that go out of the common Road, and do not agree with Holy Writ.

XII. However, ſome of the Jewiſh Divines expreſs themſelves with more Warineſs and Judgment. Abravanel is one of theſe. For he gives his Meſſiah ten Characters. 1. "The firſt relates to his Birth; "for he is to be of the Houſe of David, and come "from the Stock of Jeſſe. 2. Propheſy having ceas'd "ſince the Conflagration of the Second Houſe, for "there are Prophets wanting, the Meſſiah is to reſtore "that Advantage, and to raiſe it to ſo eminent a de-"gree, that it ſhall exalt him above Moſes, and "above Angels. 3. He is to be the wiſeſt of all "Men. 4. And Maſter of his Paſſions. 5. As a "Juſt and Righteous King, he is to draw the admi-"ration and love of his Subjects by the equity of "his Judgments. 6. His Miracles ſhall be frequent, "for he ſhall Kill by the Spirit of his Mouth. It ſhall "be no longer neceſſary to gather an Army againſt "the Rebels, nor to inflict Puniſhments upon the "Guilty, as the Sanhedrim did. Serpents, Lions, "Fire from Heaven, ſhall kill all thoſe that ſhall "commit any Act of Diſobedience. 7. There ſhall "be then ſuch a perfect Peace upon Earth, that every "Day ſhall appear as one Sabbath. 8. That this "Reign may be the more Glorious, the Unbelieving "Nations and Kings ſhall ſubmit to his Empire. "9. The ten Tribes ſhall return from their Diſper-"ſion, and gather again together about the Meſſiah. "10. And to facilitate their Return, he ſhall ſepa-"rate the Waters of Euphrates, as Moſes did thoſe "of the Red-Sea.

This Divine is much more Judicious, than all whom we have quoted; but it may at the ſame time be obſerv'd, that he comes much nearer to the Chriſtians, ſince there are few of his Characters, but what belong to J. CHRIST.

XIII. The Jews ſtill hope †, that the Miracles of the Meſſiah will happen in a very little time; but after they have been thus long and ſo often miſtaken, they do not now dare to fix it. They only cautiouſly ſay, that the People muſt firſt repent; becauſe as the Captivity of Egypt did not end till the repentance of Iſrael, ſo they are not to be deliver'd from their wretched State, till after a general Converſion. A thouſand Evils are prepar'd againſt this Nation. A King more cruel than Haman ſhall rule over them; and in the main their Affliction ſhall be a Furnace, and a Fire, to purge & purify them. Thus the Prophets have compar'd this Nation to an Olive, which doth not yield its Oyl till it be throughly preſs'd; and it muſt be from this their Affliction that they ſhall paſs into a State of Tranquillity and Happineſs. But this is ſaying nothing, to fix the coming of the Son of David at the Repentance of the People, which ſhall never be compleat enough. And therefore we muſt look out ſome where elſe for what is ſaid, that is more particular, and ſpoke with a greater air of Cautiouſneſs.

XIV. David, Maimonides's Grandſon, being conſulted by the Chiefs of his Nation about the time of the coming of the Meſſiah, reveal'd ſeveral Secrets, which he forbid ſhould be publiſh'd to Strangers under the greateſt Curſe. Tell it not in Gath, publiſh it not in the ſtreets of Ascalon.

He reported, that one Phineas, who liv'd || about the Year 475. had had in his old Age, a Son that Spoke as ſoon as ever he was Born. He liv'd to be twelve Years old, and at the point of Death, reveal'd ſome great Myſteries concerning the Deliverance of the Nation; but as he wrote them in ſeveral Languages, and under Symbolical Expreſſions, his Revelation is very obſcure. It was at laſt found in the Ruins of a Town of Galilee; and it is there obſerv'd that God had anſwer'd, * That the Fig-tree putteth forth her green Figs. That did promiſe a very near Manifeſtation of the Meſſiah. However, he is not as yet come. R. Abraham †, who was at Jeruſalem in the Year 1516, and had found this Propheſy engrav'd upon a Wall, ſaid, that the ſame Conſtellation that was ſeen when Joſhua conquer'd the Land of Canaan, and when Ezra brought back the People from Babylon, was to be found again in the Year || 1529, and that then the Meſſiah ſhould appear; but the Event hath not anſwer'd his Propheſy.

XV. "They pray to * God, that thoſe who rec-"kon the Years of the Meſſiah, may burſt †; that "their Bones may ſwell; and break, ſays Gemara. "For when a time is fix'd, and the thing expected "doth not happen; People are apt to ſay with a "criminal miſtruſtfulneſs, that it ſhall never come "to paſs. Happy are thoſe who expect him, who de-"layeth his coming! For God doth not expect. "He is the ſtrength of Judgment; It is his Juſtice, "Why then do we ſtill expect him? And indeed many "perceiving that the times are elaps'd, believe that "the Meſſiah will not come; and that there ſhall "be no Deliverance, ſince it is not already effected: "But others will have us truſt in God, becauſe he "that ſhall come, will come, and will not tarry. Elias "hath reckon'd 2000 empty Years, during which "time there ſhall be no Law, and 2000 Years under "the Law, and 2000 Years for the Reign of the "Meſſiah; according to this Calculation he was to "come in the Year 4000.* But a delay is ſtill put "to his coming, becauſe of the Sins of the People. "The ſame Elias told R. Juda, that there ſhould "be but Forty five Jubilees, and that the Meſſiah "was to appear in the laſt, that is, in the Year "4250. But another Rabbi maintains, (without know-"ing any thing of the Matter) that Elias only ſaid, "that the Meſſiah ought not to be expected till after "the Forty fifth Jubilee.

XVI. "R. Chanan met with a Man, who held "a Book in his Hand which he had found at Rome, and "wherein it was taught, that all Wars wou'd be "at an end in the Year of the World 4291. that is "to ſay, the 531 Year of J. CHRIST; and that "afterwards the Meſſiah ſhou'd reign till the end "of the Seventh Millenary, in which the World "was to be deſtroyed. Others aſſert, that Daniel "having ſpoken of a time, and of times, and the half "of a time, the Captivity of Egypt muſt be doubled, "and that inſtead of * 400 Years, times muſt be "reckon'd, that is the double of the number of "Years; and afterwards the half of a time which "amounts to 200 Years; thus you have 1400 Years. "Others believe that you muſt treble the Years of "the Captivity, becauſe David has ſaid †, that God " will give them Tears to drink in great measure. The " term in the Original signifies a Measure which is " call'd Triennal. Thus they reckon 1600 Years.

XVII. Maimonides pretended, that he had receiv'd some Prophesies from his Ancestors, from whence he concluded, that Balaam had foretold the time in which the Gift of Phrophesying shou'd be restor'd to the Jews; and that as he did Prophesy in the 31th Year after the going out of the Land of Egypt, and the Year 2486. from the Creation of the World; by doubling this Number, the re-establishment of the Prophets, that were to go before the Messiah was found to be in the Year 4976. By following this Oracle, which hath no relation to that, and the Calculation of Maimonides, the Messiah shou'd have come in the XIIIth Century, in the Year 1316. But as that has not yet happen'd, others refer the end of their Misfortunes to the Year 1492. others to the Year 1598, others to the Year 1600, and others again to the Year 1940.

XVIII. We should never have done, did we set down all the different Calculations of the Rabbies; but we shall only speak of a Whim which exceeds all the rest; namely, That the Messiah hath been a long time Born, and remains conceal'd at Rome till Elias come to Crown him. This fooliish caprice of a Conjecture is back'd by the example of Moses, who was hid for several years in Arabia in his Father-in-law's House, and even in the Palace of Pharaoh, before he put himself at the head of the People, to procure them their liberty. David anointed by Samuel, lived also several Years as a private Man, before he mounted the Throne; and was not the Messiah of the Christians thirty Years hid at Nazereth, without exercising the Functions of his Office? Tho' the Rabbies feed the hopes of the Vulgar, and fix'd times remote from those wherein they liv'd, to avoid the shame of being mistaken, yet the Messiah dot not come; and after all their Calculation they are forc'd to say with Maimonides ‖, that the time of the Messiah must not be enquir'd after, that the time of the Nation consists in the observation of the Law, and a trust in the Promises that are link'd with it. It may also be observ'd, that there is not a more convincing Argument against the Jews, than that taken from the time wherein the Messiah was to come and appear. They all bend under the weight of this objection, and cannot stand before those Christians that urge it. As for the rest, the Modern Jews frame a more Carnal Notion of their Messiah than the Antient: For these last think only of glutting themselves in the Blood of the Nations, and to plunge themselves in Carnal Pleasures.

CHAP. XXVII.

A Fourth Notion of the Messiah.

That which the Jews form of J. CHRIST.

I. The design of the following Chapter. II. The History of J. CHRIST; an extract of the first Toldos Jeschu. III. His Miracles. IV. His Death. V. The Progress of the Gospel. VI. Some Christians, who have adopted Panthera for the Father of J. CHRIST.

I. I Can't tell whether the Jews were afraid, lest some among them might at last get the better of the Prejudices which have hinder'd their Nation from acknowledging the Messiah in the Person of J. CHRIST; and lest ascending to the Essential Characters which the Prophets give to that Deliverer, they might easily perceive, that it was he whom they had promised and characteriz'd many Ages before; but it is certain, that they endeavour'd to make J. CHRIST odious both to the Jews and Christians. After they have read our Gospels, they disguise the Actions and Miracles of that Messiah whom we adore.

They have * for many Ages past labour'd to perfect this disguise; and have compleated it in these last times: For a new Book of the Generation of † JESUS is lately come out, wherein the Author goes farther than that which appear'd some time before. We must do this justice to our Adversaries, to represent fairly their reason; for otherwise we should not do the part of a faithful Historian. They often redouble the dread of the People, by concealing some Monsters behind the Curtain; and the opprobrious Character they give of some certain Books, are good Preservatives for the Weak and Simple; but those who are curious, or by chance get these Books into their hands, open them with a Mind scar'd, prepossess'd, and already half overcome. The great Art of Religion is in not having any. If *Heretick*s are subtle and dangerous, People must work so much the harder, that they may be successfully opposed, and leave the event to God, whose Cause they defend. The Books which we quote are not so dangerous as has been believ'd. The Ignorance of the Jews betrays them: Because they wholly neglect Prophane History, they cannot make the Events which they relate to agree with it, and therefore that lays their Impostures open. The last of the Authors we are now to examine, hath assum'd the Name of Jonathan, who was Cotemporary with J. CHRIST, a Scribe at Jerusalem. And yet he speaks of the Jews settled at Worms, who were called to Herod's Council. They blunder also about the time when J. CHRIST was born, and about divers Customs in so gross a manner, that some Doctors have been forced to disown those Books, tho' they were composed for the service of their own Nation.

tions of JESUS; but inſtead of writing his Genealogy, they begin with his Birth, and ſo draw the Hiſtory of his Life and Death. The Author relates that one Named Pandera living at Bethlehem, fell in Love with a young Attire-Woman, who had been married to Jochanan. He debauch'd her, and had a Son by her: Then fled into Babylon, and the Mother had the Child left upon her Hands, whom ſhe call'd Jehoſcua. He was ſent to School, but this Diſciple, tho a ſtripling, had the inſolence to lift up his Head, and ſhew his bare Face before the Prieſts, whereas it was the Cuſtom to be veil'd in their Preſence. This his Boldneſs gave occaſion to enquire into his Birth, which was judg'd impure. " After * he had remain'd ſome time " in Galilee, he went to Jeruſalem, and reſolv'd to " ſteal away the Name of God. But to prevent this " Theft, two Lions were made by Magick, and plac'd " One on the right, the Other on the left ſide of the " Holy of Holies. Theſe two Lions roar'd every time " that any one went out; and their Roaring was ſo " frightful, that it ſcar'd and made thoſe who heard " them looſe their Memories. JESUS the Son of " Pandera eſcap'd the ſnare by cutting his Skin, and " ſlipping under it the Name of Jehovah, which he " had ſtoln. He went from thence immediately to " Bethlehem, the Place of his Birth, where he raiſed " One from the Dead, and cured a Leper. The noiſe " of theſe Miracles drew a vaſt multitude after him, " who led him to Jeruſalem in Triumph upon an " Aſs.

III. " The Prieſts being met together, petitioned " Helena, or Oleina, who at that time Reigned with " her Son Mombas, or Hircanus, and demanded that " JESUS might be puniſhed. He appear'd before " her, and by ſome new Miracles won her over to " his Party. The Prieſts being amaz'd, conſulted " how they might entrap him; and One of them " whoſe Name was Juda, offer'd to learn the " Name of Jehovah, provided they would take upon " themſelves the Sin which he thereby committed: " ſo he went to try his Skill of working Miracles with " JESUS. Both the One and the Other by pro- " nouncing that Name, raiſed themſelves into the " Air; Juda attempted to make his Enemy fall, but " in vain till he had piſs'd upon him; for then the vir- " tue of the Name was over, and they fell both to " the Ground, becauſe they were both defil'd. " JESUS immediately waſh'd himſelf in Jordan, and " wrought new Miracles. Juda, who wou'd not " be baulk'd put himſelf among his Diſciples, ob- " ſerv'd all his Proceedings, and reveal'd them to the " Sages. And as he was to come into the Temple, he " was ſtopt with many of his Diſciples, whilſt the " reſt fled to the Mountains. JESUS was faſten'd " to the Marble-Pillar which was in the City, and " there Whipp'd. He was afterwards Crown'd " with Thorns: And laſt of all they gave him " ſome Vinegar and Water to drink, becauſe he was " thirſty. Matt. 27. 34.

IV. " The Sanhedrim having condemn'd him to " Death, he was Stoned. They after that attempt- " ed to hang him upon Wood, but the Wood broke, " becauſe JESUS foreſaw the manner of his Death, " and had enchanted it by the Name of Jehovah. But " Juda diſappointed that precaution of his, by ta- " king a great Cabbage out of his Garden, and " hang'd JESUS thereon. Juda fearing leſt his Diſ- " ciples ſhould proclaim that he was riſen from the " Dead, took away his Corps from the Grave, and " having diverted a running Stream, bury'd it " in a Ditch. However, it was reported that " he was riſen from the Dead, becauſe his Bo- " dy was not found in his Sepulchre. Queen He- " lena believed it, and declared, that he was the Son " of God, but Juda diſcovered the Cheat by pro- " ducing the Dead Corps. It was then faſtened to " the Tail of a Horſe. and dragged before the Pa- " lace of the Queen, who was confounded, becauſe " ſhe had ſaid that he was the Son of God. His " Hair was pluck'd off, and therefore the Monks are " ſhaved. The Nazarites were ſo provoked at this, " that they made a Schiſm upon it with the Jews.

V. " Notwithſtanding this, their Religion was " ſpread abroad every where by the Miniſtry of " twelve Perſons, who preached it thro' all Coun- " tries. The Wiſe-men being mightily concerned at " their Progreſs, deputed one Simon Kepha to ſtop it. " He took the Name of Jehovah upon him and tranſ- " ported himſelf into the Metropolis of the Nazarites, " where after he had wrought ſeveral Miracles, he en- " gaged them to promiſe him that they would do what- " ever he ordered them. He forbid them to uſe the " Jews ill, and commanded them to celebrate the Fe- " ſtival of the Stoning of JESUS, and the Fortieth Day " after his Death inſtead of the Pentecoſt. They " promiſed they would do it, provided he ſtayed " with them. And in order to this, they built him " a Tower, where he ſhut himſelf up, living upon " Bread and Water for the ſpace of Six Years, and " then dy'd. This Tower is as yet to be ſeen at " Rome, which is call'd Peter; or at leaſt a Stone " whereon he ſate. Elias came afterwards to Rome, " and declared that Simon had deceiv'd them; that " he was the Perſon, whom JESUS had intruſted " with his Orders, that he commanded them to be " circumcis'd upon the Penalty of being drown'd, and " to obſerve † the Firſt day of the Week inſtead of " the Sabbath; but at the very inſtant that he was " Preaching this Doctrine, a Stone fell upon his " Head, and cruſh'd him to pieces. May this be " the end of all God's Enemies. This is an Extract of that famous Book.

VI. It is a Romance, wherein part of the Life of J. CHRIST is inſerted. Yet there are ſome learned Chriſtians, who notwithſtanding their conviction of the falſhood of ſo fabulous a Piece, do for all that take part of it to ground their Conjectures upon. Celſus is excuſable, in having upbraided the Chriſtians with the Virgin's being forc'd by a Souldier called Pandera; but how can St. Epiphanius be excus'd, who aſſures us, that Joſeph was the Son of Jacob ſirnam'd Panther? or how can John of Damaſcus be juſtified, who is indeed of another Opinion, but for all that makes him come into the Genealogy of J. CHRIST: For he maintains, that Panther was great Grand-father to Mary, and Barpanther her Grand father. Raban Maur doth alſo ſpeak of theſe two Men; and the Learned Grotius ‖ made an Advantage of this Tradition, as if it had been well grounded, that ſo the Romance invented about the Virgin might appear more probable. And indeed * the Name given here to the Souldier, Panther, is a Greek one; how then can it be introduc'd into the Genealogy of J. CHRIST as a Sirname of a Family? There is good reaſon to believe that it was invented only to make the Birth of the Meſſiah more odious. The † Panther, or the Male of the Panther, is a Savage and cruel Beaſt, that couples with a Lioneſs, and from thence proceeds a Leopard.

Hi ‖ maculis patrem referent, & robore matrem.

The Manuſcript of a Rabbie is alſo quoted, wherein it is ſaid, that as the Leopard is produc'd by the mixture of different ſpecies;

XIII. What uſe may be made of the Toldos Jeſcu. XIV. Of the fifth Notion of the Meſſiah.

I. THE firſt thing that we are to examine, is, the Birth of J. CHRIST. It happen'd according * to the Jews in the Year 3671. in the Reign of Alexander Jannæus; but he wrought his Miracles whilſt Helena and her Son Mombas Reign'd in Judæa. It is a general, tho' erroneous Opinion of the Jews, that J. CHRIST liv'd above a Century before the Chriſtian Æra, and they do not trouble themſelves to reconcile their Opinion with Foreign Hiſtorians, becauſe a hundred and fifty Years difference is but a ſmall matter with them. But here is one Circumſtance which ought to be animadverted upon, viz. The Reign of Helena and of her Son. Joſephus ſpeaks of Helena Queen of Adiabeni, who came to Jeruſalem during the Famine foretold by Agabus, and ſhe was ſo charitable as to relieve the People, by ordering a great quantity of Corn to be bought at Alexandria. She liv'd a long time in Judæa with her Son Izates, who had given her an inſight into the Jewiſh Religion; and no doubt but it is this Foreign and Proſelyte Princeſs, who is inſerted into this Romance, which we are now examining.

II. A famous † Critick pretends, that the Author alludes to Helena the Mother of Conſtantine the Great, becauſe ſhe is called Queen of the Univerſe, which belongs to none but to the Conſort of ſuch an Emperor as Conſtantius was. Beſides, Helena favour'd the Jews before ſhe embrac'd Chriſtianity; and the Acts of Pope Sylveſter import, that Iambres the Jew crow'd very much over the Chriſtians in her preſence, becauſe by pronouncing the Name of Jehovah to an Oxe's Ear, he made him fall down Dead on the Ground; and he maintain'd, that this Miracle was done frequently in the Antient Temple, wherein the Prieſts by the help of that ineffable Name tam'd thoſe Animals, which were often very furious. If we believe that Critick, this Hiſtory hath been the ground-work whereon the Jews have built their Romance concerning J. CHRIST.

III. But the Foundation of this Conjecture || falls immediately: For I do not ſee that Helena was called Queen of the Univerſe. They make her to have been the Wife of Jannæus, and to have rul'd in Judæa after the Death of her Husband, which is falſe. But do they not puſh this falſhood too far in giving her the Empire of the whole World? Helena Queen of the Adiabeni, who liv'd ſo long at Jeruſalem, ought to be better known by the Jews, than Helena the Wife of Conſtantius was. Can it be imagined that they have ſeen, and taken the pains to Copy a ſpurious Piece, ſuch as the Acts of Sylveſter, ſince they hardly read the beſt Performances of the Chriſtians. Why are Jambres, and the tryal of Skill upon the Oxe kill'd by the Name of Jehovah, brought in, ſince they have no relation to what is ſaid here of J. CHRIST, where this Dying Oxe doth not appear upon the Scene? This Conjecture is not better grounded than that of the Lions or Dogs who bark'd at thoſe that went out of the Holy Place. For * it is ſuppoſed that this is borrow'd from the Cover of the Ark, the Name of which had ſome relation with that of the Lion, or of that Lion of God that was ſaid to reſide under the Altar: As if this Fable could not have have been invented at once without alluding to ſome Antient Rite, or to ſome falſe or true Event, relating to the Jewiſh Church.

IV. Oroſius † will not allow that the Synagogue made this Conqueſt of Helena. For he affirms, that ſhe embrac'd the Goſpel during that Famine at Jeruſalem; but her long ſtay in that City, where ſhe had leſs liberty of Conſcience than at home; thoſe Pyramids which ſhe erected near the City; the number of her Son's Wives, who perſever'd in Polygamy; the ſilence of Euſebius, and other Hiſtorians, upon a thing ſo advantageous to the Church; all make us believe, that this Queen and her Children were only Jewiſh Proſelytes. However, it is certain, 1. That this Queen never Reigned in Judea, nor had ſhe any Authority there: It is then ridiculous to drag JESUS before her, and to demand both of her and her Son his Condemnation and Death. A Queen of Adiabene had nothing to do with Judæa; for that was in ſubjection to the Romans. 2. Her Son's Name was Monobaſus; but he is confounded || with Hircanus, and this Name is ridiculouſly aſcribed to him. He did not Reign in Judæa, and never had there any ſupreme Authority to Condemn to Death; and his Children who were taken at Jeruſalem, only reſided there out of a kind of Curioſity to be inſtructed in the Law.

3. Lastly, after they had set up some chimerical Kings in Judæa, Chronology must be broken into, and infring'd: For the Queen of Adiabene did not come to Jerusalem till the Reign of Claudius, after the Death of J. CHRIST, which happen'd in the 19th Year of Tiberius. Her Son Reigned but in the Year 61. and was still Alive at the Destruction of Jerusalem; so that they give him the Power to interrogate and condemn a Man, who had been Dead above thirty Years before. This is so known a Truth, that some Jewish * Historians own that the Queen of Adiabene liv'd but under Claudius; and that she was neither of the Race of the Ptolomy's, nor Queen of Judæa, but a Proselyte, as we also acknowledge.

V. The second Author † who hath wrote the History of J. CHRIST, and followed the Gospel closer, hath corrected this fault, and without speaking of Helena, he makes J. CHRIST to be Born in the Reign of Herod the Great. Nay, he pretends that the Complaints against the Adultery of Pandera were carried before this Prince; and that being exasperated against the Guilty, who had fled into Egypt, he went to Bethlehem and Massacred the Children of that Place.

This Relation is much more Judicious than the former, For J. CHRIST was Born under Herod. That Prince did Massacre the Children of Bethlehem, and JESUS at his Birth only escaped Dying, by his Father's flight into Egypt. However, two considerable faults are observed here too, without taking notice of several other Falsities directly contrary to the Text of the Gospel. First, J. CHRIST is said to be Born at the beginning of Herod's Reign; since this Prince did not dye till after he had order'd the Messiah to be Ston'd and Hang'd. Nevertheless any Body knows that Herod the Great Dy'd immediately after the Birth of J. CHRIST, which hasten'd his return from Egypt. Farther, he was not crucify'd, but in the Reign of Tiberius, when Archelaus was already banished, and that there was no more Kings at Jerusalem. These Facts can't be contradicted, seeing they are taken out of Prophane History.

But in describing the Progress of J. CHRIST, much grosser blunders are || committed by them: For they make Joshua the Son of Perachia, who had Study'd under Akiba, his Preceptor. And yet Akiba, so much celebrated among the Jews, liv'd but in the Reign of Adrian, which was above One Hundred Years after the Death of Herod and of J. CHRIST.

This Author Arms Herod the Great and his Son against the Inhabitants of a Desart of Judæa, because they followed the Party of J. CHRIST, and Ador'd his Image, and that of Mary his Mother. These Idolators desired the assistance of the King of Cæsaria against Herod and his Son. But as that Prince gave them to understand, that he had no War with the Israelites, the Inhabitants of Ai, submitted to Herod! What a horrible confusion of Historical Facts is here. This Author, who was writing his Book at a time, and in a Place, where he saw People adore the Virgin and Crucifixes, imagin'd that this Worship was as old as Christianity; or at least he hath ascrib'd it to the first Christians, that he might from their first beginning make them odious to his Nation. There was no King at Jerusalem to wage War with these pretended Worshippers of Images; for Judæa was then reduc'd into a Province. What King of Cæsarea is this, who is mention'd * in this History? Doth the Author mean thereby Germany? It is very likely; for when he speaks of the Jews Inhabiting Worms, whom Herod consulted, he says, that that City was situated in the Land of Cæsarea, and that the Inhabitants of Ai were so much the more inclin'd to desire their assistance against Herod, because they opposed the Death of JESUS. Nevertheless what Nonsense is here? to make Forces come out of Germany into Judæa, to call a King out of that Country, to make War upon Herod at a time when there was no Herod upon the Throne, and when Judæa depended upon the Roman Empire? Here are a great many blunders at the first setting out, and it must be confessed, that those who were so little acquainted with the History of J. CHRIST, should by no means pretend to the writing of it.

VI. The same Historian † makes Akiba go to Nazareth to inform himself of the Birth of JESUS, who from his earliest Youth, distinguish'd himself at School. By means of a false Oath he learnt of Mary that she was guilty of Adultery; at his return JESUS was seiz'd and shav'd, and his Head was wash'd with a Water, which prevents the growing of Hair; and seeing that every Body shunn'd him, he gather'd || some Disciples together, to whom he explain'd the Law in a very different manner from the Tradition receiv'd at that time. He order'd them to shave their Heads that so they might be known for his followers. Herod caused them to be persu'd, but none save John had the misfortune to be taken, and that cost him his Head. However, JESUS preach'd in the Desart that he was God, born of a Virgin, who had Conceiv'd him by the Holy Ghost, and assured them that he was the true Redeemer, and that he who believ'd in him should have a share in the World to come. Lastly, he asserted † that the Law ought to be abolish'd, because a Thousand Generations were passed since David; and that Prophet had taught, that God remembered his Covenant for ever, the Word which he commanded to a thousand Generations.

There are herein some Truths, because Allusion is there made to what the Evangelists relate, that JESUS, when he was twelve Years Old, was sitting in the Temple, disputing with the Doctors. This Author owns, that he publickly asserted his Birth to be from a Virgin, that he was the Messiah, and God blessed for ever. In a word, he doth not conceal the end of his Preaching, which was very far from Tradition, whereby the Law had been greatly adulterated. The Calumnies which he mixes with those Rays of Truth, are palpable: For could JESUS have gained any credit with the multitudes that follow'd him, if upon his own Mother's confession an Authentick Sentence had been pronounc'd against his Birth? This Writer doth not only herein contradict himself, but also casts a Reflection upon Akiba, since he makes him to take an Oath to the Virgin, which did not come from his Heart? Besides, whence came this Water Boleth, which hinder'd the Hair from growing? You cannot find the least footstep of this Fable in the Talmud, where there are so many Others. This is of a much newer invention; for this Author seeing the Monks and Priests to be shaved, believ'd that J. CHRIST and the Apostles had been so too; and some Christians are silly enough to give way to this imagination, when they run up the Origine of the Tonsure as high as St. Peter. But especially he overturns the History of John the Baptist; for he was not a Disciple but the fore-runner of JESUS. He did not loose his Head because he follow'd him in the Desart, but because he upbraided Herod for taking away his Sister-in law. John the Baptist did not Dye at Jerusalem where Herod had no Authority; and that Prince who put John to Death, was not Herod the Great, in whose Reign JESUS was Born. Josephus agrees in this point with the Christians, and as he was a Jew, and almost Co-temporary with him, so the idle fancies of a Modern Writer ought not to make us question what he says upon that subject.

VII. The

VII. The third thing that we are to examine, is, by what means J. CHRIST did work his Miracles, the truth of which is owned even by his very Enemies. For they maintain that all thoſe Prodigies were perform'd by virtue of the Name of Jehovah, which JESUS had ſtollen in the Temple. Some Chriſtians, who do believe that the Name of Jehovah contains ſome Supernatural Virtue, inſert it in that of JESUS. They inſert an S in the ineffable Name, and find Jehoſchuah, or JESUS in it. After that they ſee in it ſome admirable Myſteries; They ſay, that this * S being inſerted in the Name of God, denotes that the † Fire of the Wrath of God hath been put out by J. CHRIST, or elſe that the Supreme God is become || Man. I know not what other Myſtery an antient Greek found in it, of whom we have a Fragment, and thus tranſlated this Name compounded of Jehovah and JESUS; *She, ſhe is the beginning, the Teeth * and living in her.* This alteration of Name is grounded † upon the Authority of R. Tarphon, who aſſures us, that God in the State of Nature was call'd Schaddai, or Self-ſufficient; under the Law, Jehovah; and JESUS at the time of the Meſſiah. Laſtly it is thought, that when the Rabbies ſpeak of that ineffable Name, which JESUS ſtole away out of the Temple, they have an alluſion to that Paſſage of the Revelations, where the Son of God, hath a name written on his veſture and on his thigh, KING OF KINGS, AND LORD OF LORDS. Revel. 19. 16.

But I can't conceive how Chriſtians come to venture upon ſo many frivolous Conjectures. I own that the Jews were the firſt that imagined this miraculous Virtue in the Name of Jehovah, which was unknown to all the antient Jewiſh Church, that would have undoubtedly made uſe of it againſt all her Enemies: But we muſt not ſuffer our ſelves to be carry'd away by the Rabbies. The Chriſtians are ſo ſo much the leſs excuſable, as being in poſſeſſion of Truth, they ſhou'd defend that chaſt Virgin, and not expoſe her to Impoſtors, or cloth her with the Rags of Error and Falſhood. It is trifling with a Truth, to prove it by Arguments that are palpably falſe. The Jews laugh at our weakneſs, which makes us run after their Chimæras. The Unbelievers are thereby confirm'd in their Doubts; and the Prophane inſult us. Thoſe, who have ſubſtituted the Name of JESUS in ſtead of that of Jehovah, who write it in Characters of Gold, or of Silk upon a little Tablet, and who look upon it as a Relick, and adore it, or make it a point of Religion to repeat it ſeveral times, add Superſtition to Ignorance.

VIII. I do not know whence the Rabbies have taken all their Extravagancies upon the Name of Jehovah, and which it is not improper to expoſe here, that People may learn upon what Foundations they build their Calumnies, and to what extremities they are reduc'd, when they recur to ſuch ſilly Stories. It is eaſy to convince the Jews either that they had not the Name of Jehovah, or that that Name had no miraculous Virtue; For if they cou'd have made uſe of it, they had done it during the Siege of Jeruſalem, to prevent the Deſtruction of the Second Temple, and of the whole Nation. If J. CHRIST had made uſe of it to work Miracles; and if it was us'd againſt him, it might ſo much the more have been employ'd to overſet the Romans, and to hinder their Approaches. But where have they learnt that David, in caſting the Foundation of the Temple, found upon the mouth of the Abyſs a Stone whereon the Name of God was read, and that he placed it in the Holy of Holies? It is alſo ſaid, that this Name was engraved upon the Stone that ſerv'd Jacob for a Pillow. When that Patriarch was going to Bethel, he had a mind to make a Pillow of Stone; but each Stone diſputed the Honour of being employ'd by him. It ſhall be upon me, my Lord, that your Head ſhall reſt, cries one; No, replies another, I ought to be preferr'd; and to make up this Quarrel, thoſe Stones became one Stone; and it was upon that Stone that the Name of Jehovah was found, which was kept in the Holy of Holy's. But Magick was made uſe of to keep it: And therefore Lions are imagin'd to flank that Holy Place, who by their roarings made thoſe that came into it to loſe their Memories. Is it not a very ſhameful thing for the Doctors of the Second Temple to call in the Devils to keep the ineffable Name of God?

Cerberus hæc ingens latratu regna trifauci
Perſonat, adverſo recubans immanis in antro.

They commit a ſecond Crime, in giving Juda leave to learn that Name contrary to Cuſtom, and the Will of God. They were in an errour, when they determin'd that they might take upon themſelves Juda's Sin. Laſtly, this Juda being arm'd with the Name of God raiſes himſelf up in the Air; JESUS aſcends there alſo; and there they ſtrugled till both were defil'd. The Jews wou'd be even with ſome Chriſtians for the Contention which Simon Magus had at Rome with St. Peter; But the ignorance of the One doth not excuſe that of the Others.

IX. The fourth || Circumſtance of Moment is the Death of J. CHRIST, whereupon both theſe Writers have committed ſome Faults which prove them equally guilty of Forgery. We will here take notice of ſome of them. Firſt * they relate, that after it had been reſolv'd at Jeruſalem to have JESUS apprehended, they prevail'd upon his Landlord to give him ſome ſophiſticated Wine, which made him to forget the ineffable Name, without which he cou'd not have been taken. This is but a bungling Story, For it doth not only run upon the Chimæra of the ineffable Name; but it alſo borrows from the Heathen their River of Oblivion, which is yet more Chimerical.

Secondly, "They kept † an extraordinary Faſt at "Jeruſalem, altho' there was at that time but one "Faſt-day enjoyn'd by the Church. The pretence "of this Mortification was the War which the In"fidel Kings wag'd againſt Iſrael; but the real de"ſign of it was, to beg of God that he would de"liver up JESUS, who taught that he came into "the World to aboliſh Feſtivals, and ſettle a "Law that was to go out of Sion, and make an "atonement for Sin. JESUS and his Diſciples, ha"ving eaten the day of the Propitiations, and drank "the Wine ſo adulterated by his Landlord, was "apprehended, and the King commanded that the "Stoning of the Diſciples of JESUS ſhou'd be de"ferr'd till the Feaſt of Tabernacles, that ſo "this execution might be perform'd in the preſence "of all the People, and his Commands were exe"cuted accordingly.

Here are further I know not how many Lies, which we ſhall not go about to prove by the Goſpel, becauſe the Jews reject that, but by Prophane and

* יהוה Jehovah; they read יהשוה Jehoſchuah, by adding a ש † Æſch, אש Fire. || איש Man, * He interpreted the S by San, Teeth. † Le Moyne Diſſ. in Jer. 23. 6. || The Author of the Toldos Huld. p. 51, &c Mixes ſeveral tales about the hunger which J. Jewiſh Hiſtory: And in the firſt place there was no King in Jeruſalem, when JESUS was ſeized. Neither was there, Secondly, any War againſt Judæa, which might give a Pretence to keep an extraordinary Faſt. Tiberius governed that Province peaceably. A Man muſt be an abſolute Stranger to the State of the Roman Empire, to ſpeak of the Kings of the Nations, who deſign'd to wage War with the Jews, ſeeing that Jeruſalem was under an entire Subjection to the Romans; and the Rebellion, which happen'd afterwards to the utter ruin of the Nation, was not as yet begun. To conclude, the Impoſtor is miſtaken, not only in over-turning Prophane and Sacred Hiſtory (ſince St. Stephen was ſtoned many Years after his Maſter's Death:) But he alſo forgets the Rites of his own Nation. For it is falſe, that there was not at that time any other Faſt, beſides that celebrated at the Feaſt of Propitiations; and the Talmudiſts poſitively ſay the contrary.

X. The Death of J. CHRIST was deferr'd till the Feaſt of the Paſſe-over. Thoſe two Impoſtors do not agree about the manner how it happen'd. For ‖ "One always brings in the King, who ſends his "Orders throughout the World, that if any one "had a mind to defend the Cauſe of JESUS, he "ſhou'd appear before the Council. He even ask'd "the Advice of the Sanhedrim of Worms, which vo"ted, that JESUS ſhou'd be ſhut up and nouriſhed, "but not condemned to Death. But the King reje"cted this Advice, and JESUS was faſten'd to the "Wood. The Other * on the contrary ſays, that "J. CHRIST was Apprehended immediately before "the Paſſe-over by an Armed Multitude, that kill'd "one part of his Diſciples, and made the reſt to fly "to the Mountains, and that the Sanhedrim con"demn'd him afterwards to be Ston'd. But turn "which way you will, you find out the Cheat. And indeed the Edict that was publiſh'd throughout the World to Summon in Advocates to plead J. CHRIST's Cauſe is a Fiction that deſerves not any body's notice. The Talmudiſts † affirm, that a Herald was order'd to go before JESUS, and to cry for forty Days together, that if any one had a Mind to Vindicate the Innocency of JESUS, he ſhou'd be permitted to do it. But all this is only invented to perſuade the People that JESUS had been juſtly condemn'd. For what King of Judæa had a Power to publiſh ſuch Edicts throughout the World? The Sanhedrim had no longer a Power of Life and Death; becauſe the Romans had depriv'd them of it. So that J. CHRIST cou'd not be condemn'd according to the Rules of the Jewiſh Council. Beſides, it was not the cuſtom to have Heralds go for the ſpace of forty Days to beg Advocates for the Parties accus'd. It is only read in the Miſnah ‖, that it was practis'd when they were leading a Criminal to the Place of Execution; declaring that ſuch a one was condemn'd for ſuch a Crime; If any one can prove that he is innocent, let him draw near. The Impoſtors allude to this Cuſtom; but they load it with new Falſhoods; and do not obſerve that it ought not to have been practic'd with reference to J. CHRIST, who was condemn'd by a Roman Judge.

But it is moſt of all ridiculous to introduce there the Sanhedrim of Worms. The Jews of that City formerly maintain'd to the Emperor that they oppos'd the Death of J. CHRIST; pretending that this Act of Humanity ought to have engag'd the Chriſtians to uſe them more kindly. The Author of the Book which we refute, who in all likelyhood liv'd in the Neighbourhood of Worms, notwithſtanding he pretends, that he wrote at Jeruſalem in the time of J. CHRIST, and drew from thence the pretended conſultation of Herod with the Council of Worms, about the manner how they ſhou'd treat J. CHRIST; as if Worms was at the Gates of Jeruſalem; and that there were at that time ſome Jews diſpers'd upon the Banks of the Rhine, and that the Sanhedrim of that Country had a great Authority at Jeruſalem. I ſet down this Stuff, becauſe it contributes to ſhew how pitifully the greateſt Enemies of the Chriſtian Religion oppoſe it. In ſhort, One ſays, that JESUS was Ston'd, and the Other that he was faſten'd to the Croſs. They pretend this Contradiction is eaſily ſolv'd, by ſaying, that the Stoning was done before, becauſe R. Eliezer hath told us, that every Man that was ſton'd, was to be hang'd afterwards. But the Opinion of the Rabbies, who wrote long after the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and when there were not any Footſteps of the old Government remaining, is not an Argument that this Law was obſerv'd; and ſo much the rather, becauſe the Sages affirm that it was only ſometimes done againſt Blaſphemers and Idolaters. We do not find in any place of Scripture that it was practis'd. St. Stephen, who was Ston'd to Death, was not afterwards Hang'd. In a word, the Contradiction of theſe Writers is manifeſt. For J. CHRIST whom Pilate condemn'd, was not ſton'd; but he was nail'd to a Croſs, according to the Cuſtom of the Romans. The firſt Impoſtor ſwells the Blunder by making him to be hang'd upon a Cabbage of a prodigious heighth; becauſe JESUS had charm'd all the Woods. If the Name of Jehovah did then preſerve its Vertue, how came JESUS to ſuffer himſelf to be Crucified?

XI. The Death of JESUS, ſays one, * caus'd a War among the Jews. For thoſe of his Party took up Arms in the Deſart of Ai, and Kill'd two thouſand Jews; and no body ever durſt come up to the Feaſt becauſe of them. They maintain'd, that their Maſter had after his Death brought down fire from Heaven, and was riſen from the Dead, whilſt Judas did ſhew his Body, which he had hid in a naſty place. They alſo roſe up in Arms at Jeruſalem againſt the King, becauſe of JESUS; but all this is contradicted by Hiſtory. For the Chriſtians were not in a condition immediately after the Reſurrection of our Lord to take up Arms, or to maſſacre the Jews, who oppreſs'd them. Herod had no hand in his Death; and that Tetrarch of Galilee was not in a Condition to appeaſe the Tumults at Jeruſalem. What is moſt particular, is, that after mature deliberation ſome Chriſtians have been impos'd upon. Simeon aſcended on a Cloud with thoſe who had a Mind to follow him, and left them to fall down from the Cloud in the Wilderneſs, where they broke their Necks.

Simon Kepha, who puts himſelf among his Diſciples, is St. Peter, as Juda is that Traitor Judas. This Man having taken the Name of Jehovah in the Temple, with the conſent of all the Sages, cloth'd himſelf as an Impoſtor. He † pretended, that he was ſent by JESUS, altho' his deſign was to ruin the Chriſtians. His Collegues take his Crime upon them; They ſay, that he went to the Metropolis of the Chriſtians; But that is falſe, becauſe they being diſpers'd and become Fugitives in all places, had no Metropolis. The Chriſtian Metropoliſes were not known before the Council of Nice, which was three hundred Years after CHRIST. How cou'd Kepha then find among them a Metropolis which never had a Being? They cauſe to be aſſembled there about Kepha a Multitude of Chriſtians as numerous as the Sand of the Sea. Is not this, contrary to their intereſt, againſt all probability to make the Chriſtians ſo numerous immediately after the Death of J. CHRIST who never went out of Judæa? The Chriſtians are deſir'd to be favourable, and to do the Jews no harm; as if this growing Society was all of a ſudden become ſo powerful as to be able to cruſh the Jewiſh Nation and Commonwealths of Iſrael; Laſtly, they make Kepha to remain among the Chriſtians notwithſtanding his Jewiſh Religion. He ſhuts up himſelf in a Tower; and a Stone call'd Peter is ſhew'd at Rome. This is borrow'd from St. Peter's going to Rome, but it is diſguiſed with Impoſtures and Fables.

XII. Elias, who ſucceeded Kepha, and was cruſh'd to pieces by the fall of a Stone from Heaven, is a Man ſo little known, that no part of his Hiſtory can be applied to any body. At the ſame time that he inſtituted || the Lord's-Day inſtead of the Sabbath, he enjoyn'd Circumciſion. The firſt of theſe Rites is Chriſtian, the ſecond Jewiſh. Simeon, whom the ſecond Impoſtor ſent to the Inhabitants of Ai, that were all Chriſtians, hath invented ſome Books that never were known, and among them one Intitul'd, Avon Kelaion, wherewith he deluded that People. However, the Author * ſpeaks of the Revelations, which it ſeems he had read, becauſe he applies the Number 666. to J. CHRIST. But even that ſhews him a Cheat, ſeeing that was not compos'd till after the Death of Jonathan, under whoſe name he hath conceal'd himſelf. He frames another Romantick Tale concerning the Death of the Virgin, which he ſays, coſt the Lives of a hundred Chriſtians, all relations of J. CHRIST, becauſe they had erected a Monument to the Virgin, and taken away that which the King had ſet up there to perpetuate her Shame: As if the Chriſtians had a Power in Jeruſalem to build Tombs and engrave Inſcriptions to the Virgin, who 'tis believ'd dy'd at Epheſus when Judæa had already felt the Judgment it drew upon her ſelf, for her Blindneſs and Obſtinacy on the account of the Meſſiah. This is an Abridgment of Toldos Jeſchu.

XIII. Tho' theſe Books are full of Blaſphemies, yet there may be ſome Advantages reaped from them. And indeed, notwithſtanding the inveteracy of theſe Writers, which they ſcrew up to the heighth againſt the Chriſtian Religion, and maugre all the Fables and Lies which they have heap'd together, they own that J. CHRIST wrought ſome Miracles, that the People were dazled with them, and that thereupon a Commotion was raiſed even in Jeruſalem upon his account. This truth muſt needs have been very palpable to the whole Nation, ſince it was not diſputed. 'Tis true, thoſe Miracles are aſcrib'd to the Name Haſcemphoras, the ineffable Name; but it is enough, that the Fact is certain, and that ſome Miracles are aſcrib'd to J. Chriſt; both the Jews and Chriſtians being at Liberty to aſcend to the Spring of thoſe ſupernatural Operations. Beſides, the Jews loſe their cauſe, if they go ſo far back. For no Man of Senſe will be ſatisfy'd with ſo ill contriv'd a Fable as that of a miraculous virtue inherent in a word of four Letters which never was made uſe of by any but J. CHRIST. What did this uſeleſs Name do for ſo many Ages in the Temple, when it might have been ſo ſerviceable to the Nation? What is the reaſon, why God hath permitted that JESUS alone, who aboliſhed the Law, ſhou'd thereby have wrought Miracles. Theſe are downright Chimæras, which betray the weakneſs of Judaiſm, and of the Doctors, who attack J. CHRIST and his Religion with the utmoſt heat and violence.

XIV. We ſhall not ſay much of the laſt Notion the Jewiſh Vulgar have of the Meſſiah; It is ſo indeterminate and uncertain, that the firſt Impoſtor, who boldly aſſumes that title, is follow'd as the Deliverer of the Nation; and none have been ſo palpably and groſsly cheated as the Jews. For they do not examine whether he has the Characters ſet down by the Prophets or Doctors; they think it enough if any one takes upon him the Title of the Meſſiah. How many Impoſtors have appear'd, who did not deſerve ſo much as to be taken notice of, and yet they have drawn a World of Admirers after them? Becauſe we deſign to write the Hiſtory of all theſe Impoſtors in the times wherein they appear'd, we ſhall only here obſerve, that before J. CHRIST came into the World, we hear of none who aſſum'd to himſelf the Title and Authority of the Meſſiah; but ſince his Manifeſtation in the Fleſh, many attempts have been made that way on purpoſe to ſeduce the People. Did therefore J. CHRIST inſpire any of theſe Impoſtors with ſuch a ſtrong deſire to be worſhip'd? No; But the Croſs and Sufferings of this Son of God had been rather a reaſon to deter Men from it than to tempt 'em to it. No Man wou'd be ador'd after his Death, upon the Condition that he ſhould be miſerable and crucify'd whilſt he was alive. It was perceiv'd that the times foretold by the Prophets began to be fulfill'd when J. CHRIST appear'd. Impoſtors, who were afraid of being convicted of Fraud by ſo plain a Circumſtance, durſt not till that time attempt any thing: Whereas when the Scepter was departed from Judah, and the ſeventy Weeks of Daniel were accompliſhed, it was believed that they were at liberty to venture at all. On the one ſide the People, who impatiently looked for their Meſſiah, and were grieved to ſee the times denoted by the Prophets running out, were the more ready to be deluded: And on the other, it was not ſo eaſy for them to convict thoſe of a Cheat who appeared when they were already tired out with expecting the Deliverer. In a word, the Jews being forced to confound their Calculations, and to invent ſeveral Reaſons for the delay of the Meſſiah's coming, thoſe that took that Title upon them, cou'd not be convicted of coming too ſoon; and they thereby ſaw themſelves rid of one Circumſtance which was not in their Power, but which alone would have been ſufficient to have detected the Impoſture. And therefore ſeveral have appeared, and not one of them but they have had ſome Diſciples; and likewiſe there has not been any Sect of them but what became extinct almoſt as ſoon as it appeared. For † if that Counſel or that Work had been of God, it had not been overthrown; but becauſe it was of Men it came to nought; as Gamaliel one of the Chiefs of the Sanhedrim had foretold. JESUS, who was of God, and was God, is ſtill ador'd throughout the World, whilſt all thoſe who have taken upon them the Title of the Meſſiah after him, have periſh'd, and are become the Objects of Abhorrence and Contempt of thoſe whom they had deceived.

He hath call'd One the Synagogue, becauſe that term is borrow'd from the Cattle which an Herdſman leads with his Goad, and the Shepherd gathers together with his Crook; and he gives to the Other the Title of Church, becauſe Men are call'd Rational, when they will unite and be brought together into one and the ſame place.

II. It can't be lay'd to St. Auguſtine's charge, that he did not underſtand Hebrew, and that he would never have been of that Opinion had he been vers'd in that Language, where the term that ſignifies the Aſſembly hath no relation to Cattle: For St. Jerome, who was better skill'd in the Hebrew than any Father of the Church, hath adopted St. Auguſtin's Thought; and thoſe two Doctors alluding to the term of Synagogue, aſcend higher; becauſe they believ'd that the Meſſiah had put that difference between the Church which he came to aboliſh, and that which he had erected upon its Ruins; However, thoſe Fathers are guilty of a Childiſh Fault. Let the Chriſtians boaſt as long as they pleaſe, that their Oeconomy is more excellent than that of Moſes; the Jews, who had been the Favorite People of God, did not differ ſo much from the Chriſtians as a Man differs from a Beaſt. The Church which ſignifies the Aſſembly of Chriſtians, is an indefinite term, which is apply'd to Man, to profligate Fellows, and to Brutes. The Author of the Vulgate, which St. Jerome had corrected, ſpeaks of the Church of the Wicked. St. John ſays *, that the Shepherd calls his Sheep; and Brutes have their Church in Ariſtophanes.

III. Let us not diſpute with the Jewiſh Church a Title which juſtly belongs to her. She hath had her Advantages; her Revelations; her Divine Laws; her Miracles; excellent Gifts, and her Right to eternal Life. Moſt of the Rites of the Synagogue have been transferr'd into the Chriſtian Church; and the firſt Chriſtians, inſtead of affecting an odious difference from the Synagogue, endeavour'd to be conformable to it. If J. CHRIST deſign'd to put ſome difference between the Names, it was becauſe there was a Neceſſity that they ſhou'd be extinguiſh'd. He left the Jews in poſſeſſion of their antient Title, and they invented a new Name for the Primitive riſing Church, and for ſome Aſſemblies which were not to be any more confounded, although the Members thereof were the ſame. Reaſon required this to avoid Confuſion; and it is a too far fetch'd Thought to imagine that J. CHRIST intended to denote a Church which was to be call'd from ſeveral Places, or which made up one and the ſame Body, tho' ſeparated by a great diſtance of Cities and Provinces; or that he had repreſented the Jews as Brutes. And yet this Thought is ſtill admir'd; and People wou'd be wonderfully ſcandalized if the Chriſtian Church was call'd a Synagogue. Thus Jealouſy ſtretches even to indifferent Names and Matters.

IV. The Jews proud of the Advantages which they had enjoyed, have not a mind to yield them up, altho' they have loſt them. They look upon themſelves as the only Primitive Church, and exalt themſelves above the Chriſtians. They teach their Children as ſoon as they can ſpeak, to thank ‖ God, that they are born Jews. They boaſt of the Miracles that were done for their Anceſtors; of thoſe Sacraments which God hath given them to be Seals of diſtinction between them and Infidel Nations; and of thoſe Laws whoſe Divinity the Chriſtians dare not deny, and which are to this day the Rules they walk by. They trace up their Traditions as far as Ezra, and Moſes, whereof ſome are undoubtedly older than J. CHRIST. They ſhew the Succeſſion of their Doctors through ſo many unhappy Ages, and which is ſtill preſerv'd. Where ſhall you find a Church ſo long perſecuted, which hath out-braved the Violence of Perſecutions, and which after ſo vaſt an Effuſion of her Blood, hath ſeen her ſelf continually ſpringing up again on the ſide of a Red-Sea, and there Sing the Praiſes of God? The Perſecutions of the Chriſtians laſted but ten Years, and Diocletian proudly boaſted that he had aboliſh'd the Name of Chriſtians in his Dominions. If the Perſecutions of the laſt Ages have been longer, they have at the ſame time reduc'd the Reformed to diſcover ſome of the Faithful that kept themſelves conceal'd, and to acknowledge that a dark thick Cloud hath overſpread their Church, which is the reaſon that ſhe can't be exactly trac'd, and always known. The Jews being alone miſerable at all times, and in all places, do not only recover themſelves from their Calamity, and ſhew their Church by the light of thoſe Torches which conſumed their Martyrs, and by the tract of their own Blood; but they alſo always produce ſome living Societies that have their Paſtors, their Sacraments, and their Aſſemblies. What a crowd of Doctors adorn'd with honourable Titles, as Chiefs and Princes of the Captivity, Patriarchs, Primats, Doctors, Maſters; all which Titles the Chriſtian Church in her greateſt Proſperity hath appropriated to her ſelf! They repreſent to God his Promiſes and Oaths concerning an eternal Duration. He had Sworn, As I live, ſaid he, I will put my Name in Sion for ever; and tho' this People ſhould forſake me, yet will not I forſake them. The Chriſtians are forced to ſuppoſe that the Jewiſh Nation ſhall be recall'd to ſave the Truth of theſe Promiſes and Oaths. And laſtly, the Jews glory in the Unity of their Church. Inſtead of that prodigious Number of Chriſtian Sects which labour to deſtroy one another, there is an Uniformity of Opinions among the Jews, which makes up the Unity that is ſo neceſſary to the true Church. Leo of Modena affirms, that there is no difference of Opinions in the Synagogue about the two eſſential Articles of Religion, which are the Law of Moſes, and the Oral Law; and that the Diſputes obſerved among the Jews, that are call'd Levantines, who are thoſe of the Morea, Barbary, or Spain; and the Others who are comprehended under the general Title of Germans, becauſe they live in Bohemia, Moravia, Poland, and Moſcovy; I ſay, their Diſputes are only about ſome Ceremonies, which the Chriſtians have always look'd upon as indifferent things.

V. Thus the Synagogue boaſts of having the external Marks of the Church, an Unity in her Tenets and Worſhip; and a Succeſſion of Prelats and Doctors from Moſes to this time; and a Succeſſion of Tenets. For as one handed down to the other thoſe Tenets, which he had received from his Predeceſſor, they could not have varied. This Church claims Duration: For ſhe ſubſiſted a long time before Chriſtianity, and hath had no interruption. She hath the Promiſes and Oaths of the living God for an eternal Duration. The Gates of Hell are not to prevail againſt her. For tho' ſhe ſhou'd forſake God, he wou'd not renounce his Covenant, that is to ſay, he would not ſuffer her to be deſtroy'd. She doth not want Enlargedneſs; for ſhe is ſpread into the Eaſt, and into the Weſt; but tho' ſhe ſhou'd be confin'd within very narrow Bounds, and in one ſingle Place, yet no Argument cou'd be drawn from thence againſt her, ſince the Unity of Place makes one of her Antient Characters. As ſhe did not ceaſe to be the Church of God during the Captivity, when all the Tribes were diſpers'd among Idolaters, ſhe doth ſtill enjoy that Privilege notwithſtanding the Temple is deſtroy'd, and her Children ſcatter'd over all the face of the Earth. In ſhort, ſhe can't be deny'd any of the external Marks of the Church, except Proſperity, which is but an Equivocal and Ambiguous Character. If ſome Chriſtians enjoy it at this time, their Anceſtors were depriv'd of it; and the cruel Perſecutions which the Chriſtian Church underwent from her Infancy for three hundred Years, ſhew plainly, that it cannot be concluded from the Misfortunes of the Jewiſh Church, that ſhe is not now the Object of God's Love. Thus they argue in the Synagogue, where they ſtill keep up their Pride and Haughtineſs; becauſe they judge of their Condition by I know not what external Marks, which are fluctuating and uncertain. But if the Body of that Church doth ſubſiſt, it is but a dead Body, a Carcaſs without a Soul and without Faith.

'Tis certain, this Church is as yet adorn'd with the external Badges of the Church, but hath not the true Doctrine without which there can be no true Church of God, and which alone is the Criterion whereby ſhe ought to be diſtinguiſh'd. She hath a long while ago loſt an important part of her Religion; her Temple, that was the Center of Unity, where the Jews met together from all the corners of the Earth, and the Sacrifices, which God had inſtituted to be the typical Remedies for Sin, are aboliſh'd. The Levites, who made part of the Nation, are become uſeleſs; becauſe their Miniſtry, tho' a Divine one, hath ceas'd. But they ſay, that if the Remiſſion of Sins was much more eaſily obtain'd by Sacrifices, yet they enjoy the ſame Advantages, * becauſe a contrite Heart and a penitent Mind are Sacrifices acceptable to God. Beſides, they hope that the Sacrifices will be again one day reſtor'd; and therefore the Prophet earneſtly beſeeches God to Rebuild the Walls of Jeruſalem, becauſe God ſhall then have ſome Sacrifices and burnt Offerings. Sacrifices were the beſt means to appeaſe God's Anger; but in a caſe of Neceſſity for want of them they make uſe of Repentance and Satisfactions; So that this Defect doth not deprive them of the Title of a Church.

VII. Formerly they look'd upon all thoſe as Dogs, that were out of her Communion, and cou'd not imagine, that they cou'd have any ſhare in the Privileges of God's People; but they have ſoften'd their Theology either out of Neceſſity or thro' Complaiſance. Some Rabbies do ſtill without mercy Damn all Nations: but Others having more Humanity ſave Strangers, who have ſome Knowledge and Principles of Religion. They ſay, that the Law was given in a Place that was open on every Side as the Wilderneſs; to teach us that all the Nations of the Earth ſhould partake of its advantages, altno' they properly and more immediately belong'd to the Jews, to whom it was given. They make uſe of the Compariſon of a Dog, that God found a Carcaſs to reward him becauſe he had not bark'd at a Jew; and † they thereby inſinuate, that thoſe who are kind to their Nation, ſhall have a ſmall Share in the Reward of the other World.

VIII. They impoſe three conditions on Stangers, in order that they may be ſaved. One to practice the Precepts of Noah, and eſpecially to abſtain from Idolatry: The Second to obſerve thoſe Precepts of the Noachides from a motive of Reſpect, and Obedience to God, and becauſe He hath given them. Thoſe ſeven Precepts ſeem ſo many Natural Laws; but they are not to be obſerv'd meerly becauſe Nature hath imprinted them in Men's Hearts, but becauſe God gave them to Noah. Orobio || confirms this Opinion; for he ſays that a Gentile may be ſav'd, provided he worſhips the true God and procures the Redemption of Iſrael by fear and love for God. Maimonides * the greateſt of the Jewiſh Maſters, had taught the ſame thing a long time before theſe Doctors, who Dy'd in the laſt Century. Thirdly and laſtly, † they do not allow Salvation to the Gentiles till after they have ſuffer'd twelve Months either in Hell or in Purgatory, where they make Attonement for their Sins. However, they are not ſo ſevere as the Roman Catholicks, who condemn their Brethren to the ſame Torments for ſeveral Ages.

IX. Some Modern || Jews have extended Salvation even to Chriſtians: But this Confeſſion may be but the effect of Human Prudence, and of the neceſſity they find themſelves under to pacify thoſe with whom they are forc'd to live, and have a frequent Commerce with. They ſay, 'tis certain that the Chriſtians worſhip the true God; but at the ſame time they adore alſo him that hangs on a Tree; and this Worſhip paid to a Creature is reckon'd Idolatry by them. They may eaſily be favourable to the Anti-trinitarians, and put Servetus among the Great Men, becauſe he did not look upon J. CHRIST as God; but they cannot ſave the Chriſtians without giving the Lye to their Principles, and thoſe Prayers which they ſo frequently offer to God, whereby they beg of him that the Edomites and the Moabites, who adore a Log of Wood, and bow before it, and own it as God, may be ſtruck out of the Book of Life. The Roman Catholick, who bows down before the Croſs, is laid foremoſt; but yet the Proteſtant, who owns a Crucify'd JESUS for God, is included in the ſame Condemnation: But as it is neceſſary to dive into this Matter, we ſhall elſewhere be more particular about the manner how the Jewiſh Church hath always treated thoſe that were Strangers to the Covenant.

Of thoſe that Dye, and the Revolution of Souls after Death.

I. Whether the Bodies ſuffer after Death. The Fable of Titus. II. This explain'd. III. Burial neceſſary to the Soul. IV. Her Knowledge. V. This Tenet prov'd. VI. Some Chriſtians agree with the Jews about the State of Souls after Death. VII. The Revolution of Souls neceſſary. VIII. It juſtifies the Death of the Righteous. IX. Revolution by Embryonat. X. The true Revolution. XI. The number of thoſe Revolutions. XII. The different Orders of Souls that are ſubject to it. XIII. A Tranſmigration in Brutes. XIV. Arguments for this Opinion.

I. SOME Doctors believe that the Body doth not loſe all its Senſations after its ſepartion from the Soul, but that it ſuffers in the Grave. They apply to this thoſe words of the Talmud; The Worm is as ſharp to the Dead, as a Needle to the Living. Jarki ſaid in the ſame ſence, that it was a great happineſs for a Man not to be bury'd when it Rain'd upon his Corps, or when a wild Beaſt did tear it to pieces. He did not deſpiſe Burial; but he fancy'd that the Pain occaſion'd by Rain, or the Bitings of a wild Beaſt ſerves after Death for the expiation of Sins. Certainly to this may be apply'd the ſtory made of the Emperor Titus, who ordered his Servants to burn his Body for the ſpace of ſeven Days together, and ſcatter his Aſhes, leſt God ſhould find him, and inflict ſome Puniſhment upon him for having deſtroy'd his Temple.

II. When Lipman * examines this Opinion, he can hardly conceive that it was taught in the Synagogue; and to vindicate thoſe that have done it, he maintains, that thoſe Blows given to a Dead Body in the Grave, as ſome have pretended, ought to be underſtood in a Metaphorical Senſe; as if they deſigned to inſinuate, that God re-unites the Soul to the Body in the particular Judgment which is pronounc'd immediately after Death, that ſo Man may know all his Sins, and the greatneſs of the Puniſhment which he hath deſerv'd. Farther, he refers to the Soul what thoſe Divines ſay of the Body. It is ſhe that ſuffers, and is Sorrowful, becauſe ſhe ſees how ignominiouſly her Palace is us'd, when it is drag'd upon a Dunghil, or deny'd Burial. The Fire of Hell, which is ſo much talk'd of, is but the anguiſh of the Soul. The Body of Titus could not have been burnt in Hell, unleſs a Miracle be ſuppoſed; but they meant, that God had inflicted on that Prince as terrible a Puniſhment after his Death, as Fire is to the Living. Laſtly, he determines, that the Body being as inſenſible as a Stone, is not ſuſceptible of any Pain after Death.

III. The Fate of Souls after Death is very different; for they muſt ſtay till their Bodies be Bury'd before they are receiv'd into any Place, whether to deſcend into Hell, or to be admitted into Paradiſe. They ground this Opinion upon the Blood of Abel's crying after his Death, and the Soul's being in the Blood: That of Abel complained that ſhe wanted Burial. This part of the Jewiſh Theology is like that of the Greeks and Laoins: For nothing is more frequent than the Complaints of the Dead who remain'd above Ground.

IV. The Knowledge which is aſcrib'd to the Dead is partly grounded upon this Hypotheſis: For when it is ask'd how Souls that are ſeparated from the Body can have any Knowledge of what is done under the Sun; they anſwer, that the Soul is not in her place; that ſhe is ſtill upon Earth in the ſame ſtate as a Man who is Aſleep, and may hear what is ſaid or done in a Chamber.

V. All Souls are travelling for the ſpace of twelve Months. They deſcend from Heaven, and come again about their Graves and Carcaſſes, for which they have ſtill an Affection. Hence it is, that during that time they are ſubject to the Powers of the Air, which torment them, break their Bones in the Grave, and reduce them into Powder. From thence it is alſo that they are pray'd for in the Synagogues; and we muſt imagine that this only relates to the Souls of the Wicked, upon a pretence that the Jewiſh Doctors † acknowledge, that thoſe of the Saints when they go out of the World aſcend into Heaven. For they allow thoſe Beatifick Souls a liberty to return upon Earth for the ſpace of One Year, after which time they have nothing here further to do. They ground this Fancy upon an appearing neceſſity: For it would not be convenient that the Soul ſhould all at once paſs from one extreme to the other, when they go out of Human Bodies; and therefore thoſe of the Wicked are Cloth'd with a ſort of a Garment, wherein they accuſtom themſelves to ſuffer; and thoſe of the Saints alſo put on a ſtately Garment, and a reſplendant Body, by the favour of which they uſe themſelves to the Brightneſs and Blifs that they are to enjoy in Heaven. Theſe Journeys, which they from time to time undertake, woen they aſcend and deſcend upon Earth, contribute very much to frame that neceſſary Habit.

VI. Though this Theology ſeems very extraordinary, yet one not much unlike this is found among Chriſtians. For a great many Father's maintain'd, that the Souls did not enter into Heaven immediately after Death; and that Opinion was ſo common, that he who forg'd the Letter of Pius ‖ to Juſtus of Vienna, believ'd that it ought to be aſcrib'd to that Pontif, to conform himſelf to the taſte of the Age, in which he pretended to write. The Prieſts, ſaid he, that liv'd from the time of the Apoſtles to this Day, remain confined in Eternal Beds ſince the Lord hath called them. Some other Doctors of the Church have aſſerted, that the Angels and the Powers of the Air waited for the Souls in their Paſſage, and that there they had very hard ſtruggles to hinder their going into Heaven. Theſe Souls are ſometimes ſeen to come up, and the howlings of the Devils were heard. It was not the Father's fault that the Souls did not return to their Graves, and to thoſe parts of the Earth wherein they delighted; and therefore they were moſt commonly invoked at their Sepulchres. It is even believ'd, that this Opinion, which was ſpread in Spain, had oblig'd the Council of Elvin to forbid the lighting of Tapers in the Church-yard, for fear of diſturbing the Souls of the Saints. If the Fathers were wrought upon to pray for the Dead, there are alſo the ſame motives drawn from the immediate ſtate of the Souls after Death, which obliged the Jews to pray for them, and to celebrate their Anniverſary Feaſts.

VII. Their Doctrine * of the nature and different Revolutions of the Soul after Death, is very much cumbered. Upon this matter they ſay ſo many fooliſh things, and wrap them up ſo obſcurely, that it is hard to comprehend them. Our design is not to search into the bottom of this Abyss. We will only give you some scantlings, that so you may have a formal Notion of it. Adam represented all Mankind, whose Chief he was; and in him were included all those Souls that were created the first Day. Every Spark of the Soul (for they divide every Soul into several Sparks) is forced to separate the Good, which is found mixed with the Evil by the first Man's Fall; and this is done by an exact observation of the Negative Precepts, which they multiply to the number of 365. The Soul ought also to fulfill the Good, by Religiously observing the positive Precepts. As it is impossible to attain to that perfection on a sudden, or in the space of one Life, by reason that Man's Constitution raises an almost invincible Obstacle against it, the Soul is compell'd to come again upon Earth, and enliven other Bodies, that they may attain that degree of Perfection which God requires.

that

VIII. By establishing this Revolution of Souls that go from Body to Body, some pretend to remove all those Objections that arise from the Death of the Saints and Holy People. As for Example, we see many that Dye in the Flower of their Age, altho' they lead an exemplary Life. From whence does this proceed? Why does Death come so soon to extinguish a light which shined with so much Glory? Should not Piety rather be moved to defer Death than hasten it? It is answer'd, that those Saints as R. Bon, Dyed young, because having early attained to Perfection, they had nothing more to do upon Earth in a Mortal and Frail Body. Some Saints, as Moses, dyed against their wills and with regret, because they had not fulfilled all those Duties that concern'd the Sanctuary, or the Land of Canaan, and for that reason the Soul of that Prophet is subject to Revolutions, as well as others, and to go into the Messiah: Others, on the contrary, rejoyce at their Deaths, and find it happy, because they have fulfilled every thing. Daniel was one of those to whom God said, * Go thy way till the end be, for thou shalt rest. Thus by the help of these Revolutions, they explain the different Opinions that are held about Death.

IX. These Revolutions † of the Soul are perform'd after two different manners, the One is call'd Embryonat, and the Other Revolution.

The Embryonat is the descent of a Soul into a Man already Born, and consequently who has another. It seems, that this new Soul coming into him at the Age of thirteen Years, dilates him as a Child that is formed in the Womb of its Mother, and therefore he is called an Embryo. The Soul comes down from Heaven to animate that Body, or else to purchase some new degree of Perfection that is wanting in it; and then she is obliged to undergo all the Infirmities of the Body, or else comes to help him whom she so animates to perform his Duty; and then this second Holy Soul is look'd upon as the Father of him whom it animates; and it is in this Sence that the Rabbies say, that the Saints may have Children in the other World.

X. The Revolution is perform'd when a Soul goes into a Body newly formed, either to expiate some Sin which she had committed in her former Life; or to become more Holy; or lastly, to help a weak Soul to overcome Sin, and then she does not Sin in that new Body; because it would not be reasonable that the Holy Ghost should make a Soul already Sanctify'd, lyable to Corruption. This Revolution is sometimes done in order to Marry a Woman whom that Soul had not deserv'd in her first Life. Some Doctors add, that some gross and sensual Souls have ardent desires to come back again upon Earth, and be re-united to their Bodies; whereas others more Refined, and out of Conceit with the World and all its Pleasures, fly up to Heaven, there to settle their Habitation; and this love for the Earth makes a fifth Reason for the Revolution of Souls.

XI. These Revolutions are perform'd three or four times, and to that these words of Job are apply'd, || Lo all these things worketh God, oftentimes ('tis twice or thrice in the Hebrew) with Man. However, other Interpreters explain those words with reference to the number of Souls, that may enter into one Body, and believe that there may be three Souls found in one and the same Body; but they never exceed this number. The truth is, Job does not speak of the Revolutions of Souls, nor of their number; but of the Deliverances which God grants to Man, when the danger is pressing, and he is threat'ned with a sudden Death. But it is enough for the Jewish Doctors to find in these Words the number of Three, to make it the Ground and Prop of their Fancies, concerning the return of Souls.

XII. They distinguish two sorts of Souls in these Revolutions, which have been from the beginning; the first are the Souls of Cain; the others those of Abel. In the first Evil is mingled with Good, but the second are of a more excellent Nature. As for example, the Egyptian whom Moses slew was one of Cain's Souls. Cain had killed Abel out of Jealousy for a Woman; and therefore the Scripture says that it was done in a Field, and the Field signifies a Woman. Moses calls the Egyptian his Brother, because indeed he had Cain's Soul, and Moses that of Abel. Before he kill'd him, he look'd on every side, to see if there was any Body, that is to say, he consider'd whether a Proselyte would not arise from that Egyptian, because then he would not have killed him; but finding that there was nothing good in that Infidel, he took away his Life, and sent his Soul into Jethro, his Father-in-law, where it was purify'd, since Jethro became a Proselyte, shining all over with Glory. The Souls of Abel went into the Saints and faithful of the Old Testament; and Moses had one of them. King Solomon was of Moses's Revolution. Some Doctors * pretend that R. Simeon Jochaides, that liv'd fifty Years after J. CHRIST, and to whom a Collection of the Cabalistick Explanations of the Law are ascribed, had also Moses's Soul, tho' it was not so resplendent as that of this Prophet when he came down from the Mount, where he Conversed with God. I know not whether this Tenet was borrowed from Pythagoras, or from the Orientals; but at leastwise they have disguised this Philospher's Metempsychosis, as we may see by the following Verses of Ovid.

Morte † carent animæ: Semperq; priore relicta
Sede, novis domibus vivunt, habitantq; recepta.
Ipse ego (nam memini) Trojani tempore belli
Panthoides Euphorbus eram: Cui pectore quondam.

Omnia mutantur: Nihil interit, errat, & illinc
Huc venit, hinc illuc, & quoslibet occupat artus
Spiritus, eque feris humana in corpora transit,
Inque feras noster: Nec tempore deperit ullo.

XIII. The Jews as well as Pythagoras, extend their Transmigration of Souls into Beasts, and even to inanimate Creatures: For a Doctor affirms || that the Soul of a Slanderer whom he knew, was revolv'd into a rapid stream, and that he knew it again there;

This Story he tranſmitted to his Diſciples, that ſo the Memory of it might be preſerv'd after him. The Souls alſo go ſometimes into Womens Bodies, but then there happens a great Misfortune, For they remain Barren in Women. They ſeldom go through theſe Revolutions of Souls, becauſe God will not ſuffer them to be perfect; and therefore ſome affirm, that as there are more Women than Men, ſo God doth more Deeds of Juſtice and Severity, than of Mercy.

XIV. We muſt not imagine, that there are but a few of the Modern and leſs celebrated Rabbies *, who maintain this fantaſtical Opinion. No, it is quite otherwiſe, the number of its Defenders is very conſiderable; The moſt famous Doctors are of that Mind, and ſtrive to prove it. What they ſay, that Pythagoras, Plato, Virgil and others, who had ſpoken of it, had taken this tenet from the Writings of the Prophets is falſe, ſince we can find no traces of it in the Old Teſtament, and that God's threat to Adam, Duſt thou art, and unto Duſt thou ſhalt return, can't without Violence be apply'd to the Tranſmigration of Souls; and only concerns Death, which puts Man again into the boſom of the Earth from whence he came. But the Chaldee Paraphraſt upon Iſaiah, which is very antient, has followed this Opinion; for in explaining thoſe words, (viz.) If ever this Iniquity be forgiven you, that you dye not; he means a ſecond Death; and this ſecond Death is not Hell, but that which happens when a Soul that has animated a Body a ſecond time, ſeparates from it. The ſame thing is found in the Book of Zohar. Philo † maintain'd alſo, that ſome Souls did return upon Earth and entred again into a Body which they greatly lov'd; whereas others look'd upon the Body as a Priſon, or a Grave, in which they had ſuffer'd.

Of the Origine of Hell among the Jews: Whether they borrow'd it from the Greeks.

Every Nation had its Hell.* IV. The Jews rather took this Tenet from the Perſians. The Perſian Religion upon this Article explain'd. V. The different Opinions of the Jews and Greeks. VIII. Why the Prophets made no mention of Hell.

I. AFTER we have unravel'd the Revolution of Souls, let us examine what ought to be their Reward or Puniſhment at laſt. Luke of Bruges aſſures us, that the antient Jews were very ignorant upon this Matter. They thought of nothing but of the Rewards and Puniſhments of this preſent Life; but having been intermix'd with the Pagans during the Captivity, and with the Greeks after Alexander's Conqueſts, they began to examine what the Greek Poets ſaid of the Elyzian Fields. This diſcuſſion divided the Doctors; One Party whereof ſiding with the Heathen Poets, defended the reality of future Torments, whileſt the Others oppoſed it, and it was that Diſpute which formed the Sect of the Saducees.

Several Criticks who have adopted this Opinion, endeavour to prove that Hell was never ſpoken of till after the return from the Captivity. Homer had invented this Manſion for the Dead, and ſome Poets liking his Fancy, becauſe it kept People within the bounds of their Duty, have followed it, and laboured to ſpread this Opinion by their pathetical Deſcriptions of Hell. Pythagoras forbad Eating of Beans, * becauſe they reſemble the Gates of Hell which is † inflexible. Numa alſo forbad the uſe of Beans; and the Prieſt who ſacrificed to Jupiter durſt neither touch them, nor name them, becauſe there was a Notion of Death attached to them; and that this Notion ought never to come into Jupiter's Sacrifices, he being the Father and Author of Life. They were reſerved for Funeral Ceremonies, and to appeaſe the Devils that came to torment dead Bodies.

Cumque || manu purè fontana perluit unda;

Averſuſque jacit: ſed dum jacit, hæc ego mitto,
His, inquam, redimo meque meoſque fabis.
Hæc novies dicit, nec reſpicit: umbra putatur
Colligere, & nullo terga vidente ſequi.

However it be, Pythagoras knew the Gates of Hell: Socrates would not ſpeak of it, either becauſe he gave but little credit to it, or becauſe he found the matter too intricate to unravel: And therefore his Diſciples were ſurpriſed to ſee that Plato ſhould dive ſo far into this Myſtery. It is believed that he ſhewed the Rabbies the way; for the Prophets never mentioned it, and they would not have been ſilent upon ſo important a matter, and ſo fit to keep People in Obedience, had they but known it.

II. Others, jealous of the Glory of the Jews, maintain, on the contrary, that the Heathens have taken their beſt Productions from them. They have mangled the original Truth with Fables, and invented ſuch Puniſhments as Men of ſenſe think ridiculous: However, the Heathen had taken from Moſes the Ground of this tenet. Moſt of the Fathers honour Religion ſo far, as to ſay that the Heathen had only given a new turn to the Jewiſh Opinions, which they adorn'd with fabulous Stories to make them the more acceptable to the People. Therefore the Rabbies give out, that the Nations * had a Knowledge of ſeveral Truths; but it was only the dregs of the Religion of the Children of Iſrael.

III. We take a Medium between the Antients and Moderns concerning this Point. I am perſuaded that the Jews never lent their Hell to the Greeks, nor ever borrow'd it from Homer, nor from Plato's Writings, which they had but little knowledge of.

The Greeks had ſome Notions of Hell before Homer; and he only related what the Nations before him had believed concerning it. And indeed the Poets did not contrive Hell; but only added the turns of their own Fancies to make the Deſcriptions of it more terrible. Thoſe Men, and eſpecially the Greeks, that were full of vivacity, being convinced that Crimes ought to be puniſhed, and ſeeing that wicked wretches who died peaceably and quietly in their Beds, believed that ſome Puniſhments waited for them after Death; they were even oblig'd to urge the certainty of thoſe Puniſhments, which ſerv'd as a bridle to Men's Corruptions, and without which they could not have been eaſily perſuaded to Vertue. If Vice proſper'd, and was never puniſhed, it would be a powerful Argument to wallow in Sin, and neglect Vertue. But People are eaſily perſuaded that there is another Tribunal beſides that of Men; and that there are Puniſhments in the other World. There was no neceſſity for this Notion to have been taken from Moſes's Writings; becauſe our reaſon and the Ideas of God's Juſtice naturally leads us to it.

IV. But it is an Affront to the Jews, to pretend, that they ſtood in need of Homer's Verſes, or Plato's Phædo, to find out Hell which was before unknown to them. For in truth the Jews had as much Senſe as other Nations, and might reflect upon the Proſperity of the Wicked. And indeed we ſee that they did it more upon this Article than upon any other; and it was eaſy for them to conclude from thence, even by natural reaſon as other People did, that there were Puniſhments after Death. It is a very wonderful thing, that People will have the Jews to have been ignorant of thoſe Truths that were known by the Pagans. Beſides, this Tenet was rather to be brought from Perſia than any other place. Bardeſanes in Euſebius affirms, that the Perſians kept Dogs to devour their ſick Friends. Agathias ſays alſo, that they expoſed their dying People to the Wild Beaſts, giving each a Stick, and a little Bread and Water; and that thoſe that recover'd and eſcaped were look'd upon as Ghoſts, and not fit to be converſed with, till they were purify'd. For which reaſon one of the Articles of Coſroes's Treaty with Juſtinian was, that he ſhould give the Chriſtians leave to bury their Dead, which the Perſians did not. One wou'd think, that this barbarous Cuſtom would have deſtroy'd the Notion of future Rewards and Puniſhments; but it did not, for the Perſians believ'd that thoſe whoſe Carcaſſes were ſoon devoured were happy after Death, but that the others were cruelly tormented, And they have even ſtill to this day ſome relicks of this antient Cuſtom; For tho' they will not let Beaſts devour dead Bodies which they do not bury, yet they expoſe them to the Birds. If the Raven plucks out the right eye of a dead Body, his happineſs is certain; but if the Carcaſs remains entire, they lament and roar, and look upon the Dead with horrour. They alſo make uſe of a Dog, by ſending him to the Carcaſs that has a bit of Bread in his Mouth; If the Dog eats the Bread, they believe the Dead to be happy; if he runs away inſtead of going cloſe to it, or waiting for the dying Body's laſt Gaſp, they conclude he is miſerable. However, they dare not weep over it, for fear of ſwelling, by their Tears, that River wherein he is tormented. So that the Perſians had ſome Notions of Heaven, and Hell; and the Jews might have taken theſe Ideas from them, eſpecially after the Conqueſt of Cyrus, who was their Deliverer. It was more natural to draw from this Spring, than from that of the Greeks, ſo little known at that time of day. And yet we do not ſee, that the Jews and the Perſians do not in the leaſt agree about this matter.

V. It is affirmed, that the Jews borrow'd from Pythagoras the Gates of Hell and the Beans; but doth J. CHRIST alſo copy this Philoſopher, when he ſpeaks of theſe Gates? It was a general Notion that Hell was a Priſon, in which the Guilty were ſhut up, and from whence they cou'd not get out. The Rabbies even give this term a quite different Signification from that of Pythagoras. For they mean by it the Explanation of a Tenet; and therefore often mention the Gate of Moſes; and a Learned Man gives to the Sections of his Book the Title of the Gates of Truth. In the Miſnah there are † three Gates, the firſt, the middle one, and the laſt. Theſe are three Diſcourſes upon Wrongs, in which, as is pretended, the Myſteries of the Law and Tradition concerning this Point are unfolded. The firſt Gate that is open'd is always the moſt Material, the ſecond is leſs, and the third only runs upon Conſequences drawn from the Law, and the Maxims of the Doctors, for the reparation of thoſe Injuries they have ſuffered. Nothing was then more common among the Jews than this Expreſſion. It is not neceſſary to go back to Pythagoras to find the Original of it; and J. CHRIST, who found it frequently us'd in the Nation where he taught, might ſay, without copying this Philoſopher, that the Gates of Hell ſhould not prevail againſt his Church.

As for the Beans, every one knows that Moſes, who put ſuch ſtrict Bounds to Food, never forbad them. A learned Critick maintains, that the High Prieſt of the Jews never eat any; but the Ground of this Conjecture is very weak. The High-Prieſt, ſays he, did eat no Beans, becauſe he was not ſuffered to be ſorrowful: and the Rabbies ſay, that it was the Food of thoſe that mourn'd and were ſorrowful for the Dead; but tho' they were uſed in time of mourning, they were nevertheleſs eat at other times; and we do not find in any part of Scripture, that they were forbid upon any Occaſion either to the Prieſt or the People. Nay, even that Conjecture of the Doctors is very uncertain, which aſſures us, that Beans were eaten when Abraham died, and that Haran was burnt Alive: Or rather their thought ſeems overſtrained, for they ſpeak of Pulſe in general, and ſhew by that an Abſtinence from Meat, which ‖ laſted ſome time.

VI. The Prophets believed the Immortality of the Soul, and it was an old Tenet in the Jewiſh Church. It was ſpoke of before the Captivity, and in believing the Soul immortal, they were obliged to appoint a State for her after Death, and of neceſſity to put her into a place of Happineſs or Miſery.

The Prophets alſo believed the Reſurrection of the Body. David ſpoke of it very clearly; and it was not a new Doctrine which he introduced into the Church: but ſuppoſing him to be the Father of it, we ſtill ſhould be obliged to own that it was older than the Captivity. But what wou'd this Reſurrection of the Body ſignify, if no place was then known to put them in, either Heaven, or Hell?

The Prophets believed a future State of Happineſs. They often mention it; and David made the hopes of poſſeſſing it one day, his greateſt Comfort. However Heaven, and Hell, tho' oppoſite one to the other, are ſo cloſely linked together, that it is impoſſible to believe that the Souls of good Men ſhall be rewarded in the other World without being convinced at the ſame time that thoſe of the Wicked ſhall alſo be puniſhed; and that is Hell.

VII. I own, that the Name of Hell was but little known by this antient Church; and when any one impartially weighs all the Paſſages of S. Scripture who ſeeks rather to be inſtructed than to make his own opinion triumph; he will hardly find one, where the term Scheol *, or Hell, ſignifies any thing but Sepulchre; but then again it muſt be acknowledged with the ſame Sincerity, that when St. John the Baptiſt ſays * that the Chaff ſhall be burned with unquenchable fire, it is to be underſtood of the eternal Puniſhments which the Wicked muſt undergo in the life to come. To have recourſe to that Fire, which reduced Jeruſalem to Aſhes, and to ſay, that it is eternal, and never to be put out, becauſe that miſerable City was not to recover it ſelf, is to make the Sacred Writers ſpeak according to their own Fancy, without ever conſidering the common acceptation of words. Hath any Hiſtorian in the World, who ſpeaking of Cities that were deſtroy'd and never rebuilt, ever ſaid, that they burned with unquenchible fire? Were Babilon, Nineveh and many others thrown into everlaſting fire? Would a wiſe Man ſpeak at this rate? But Jeruſalem is not here meant. For the Unbelieving Inhabitants of Judæa, and thoſe who came from all Parts to be Baptized, are they that St. John the Baptiſt threatens with that fire which ſhall never be quenched. In order to give any meaning to thoſe words, it ſhould be ſaid that their Souls ſhould be annihilated, and their Bodies remain in the Duſt; but it is eaſy to conceive that St. John had another quite different View, and that this Expreſſion doth not ſignify the Soul's being annihilated.

VIII. The Prophets always threatned the People with the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and with the Judgments that God would inflict upon the Nation. They had two Reaſons for it; One, that it was in reallity a preſent, and ſenſible Chaſtiſement, wherewith God would puniſh his Peoples Idolatry. Thus when Perſecution ariſes in a Kingdom or threatens a Church, thoſe ſenſible Misfortunes which hang over the People's heads are made uſe of to move them the more. They are pathetically told, that God is ready to ſtrike; and a lively Deſcription is made to them of the Fall of their Temples, of the Light of the Word which is extinguiſhing; of the taking their Children from them, of the Violence offer'd to thoſe that are expiring; and of Baniſhment, and the Calamities that attend it. Preachers, improving the preſent Circumſtances, rather preſs their Auditors by theſe Objects which ſo nearly concern them, than by the diſtant Fear of Hell, which is common to all the Wicked, and from which every one flatters himſelf he ſhall be freed, by ſome Motions of Repentance upon their Death-Beds.

But there was a particular reaſon which induced the Prophets to uſe this Method. For beſides the general Impreſſion which theſe Objects that we now ſpeak of make, the Land of Canaan was looked upon as a Token of God's Love. That was his Mountain, his City, his Temple; Nothing then could be more moving to the People, than to threaten them that God was going to forſake the Mountain of Sion, to deſtroy Jeruſalem, to burn his Temple, and to carry away his People into Strange Countries. That Nation had ſuch an entire love for their own Country, that the Perſians have called Jeruſalem Ghanghdiz-Houcht, the Jew's Paradiſe; becauſe they continually heard theſe Refugees talk of their Country, and of the God that was worſhipped at Jeruſalem ||.

We have ſufficiently proved that the antient Church believed a Hell before the return from Captivity, and their Communication with the Greeks. Let us now ſee how the Rabbies have altered this Tenet.

I. THERE are three ſorts of Souls, whereof every one goeth to his own place, the Good, the Wicked, and thoſe that keep a Medium between both, becauſe they are not altogether good, nor altogether bad. Let us ſee what will be their doom after this life, and begin with the Wicked.

The Souls of the Wicked go into the bottomleſs Pit. This is an Expreſſion moſt commonly * uſed among the Rabbies by which to ſignify Hell, becauſe of the Valley of Hinnon, which was near Jeruſalem, where formerly Children were offered to Moloch, which afterwards became a receptacle of Filthineſs. They generally place it in the Centre of the Earth; and compare Heaven to Tent; God dwells at the top of its Vault; the hollow of the Tent is fill'd with Spirits, Men, and Beaſts; its Borders extend to the Sea, where it ends, and under it are Subterraneous and empty places in which Hell is placed. The Jew judg'd of Heaven and the extent of it, by what he fancied that he ſaw, and by deceitful Appearances, The polite Greeks and Latines have not been wiſer than they. Ennius repreſents Heaven juſt as the Jews do:

Quæq; freto cava cæruleo cortina receptat.

And it is known that they plac'd Hell Underground; The Chriſtians have ranked among Hereticks thoſe that believed the Antipodes, who make the falſhood of this Hypotheſis manifeſt.

II. The Roman-Catholicks † made four different Appartments in Hell. The place of the Damned; † Codex Irwin. c. 2. p. 19. 107, &c.

Purgatory,

Purgatory; the Limbo Patrum, and that of Children. The Jews * multiply them to Seven; becauſe they find that in Scripture this place is called by Seven different Names; and they are perſuaded, that there is a vaſt difference between the degrees of Pain which the damned ſuffer. J. CHRIST authorizes this laſt Notion, when he ſays, that it ſhall be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon at the Day of Judgment than for the Jews; but we muſt not multiply the Appartments of Hell proportionably to the degrees of Pain, for the Wicked may all be in one and the ſame Place.

III. Hell has three Gates. The firſt is in the Deſart; and it was by this Gate that Korah, Dathan, and Abiram † deſcended into Hell. The ſecond is in the Sea, for || Jonah that was caſt into it, ſays, that he cried unto God out of the belly of Hell. The third and laſt is placed at Jeruſalem; for * Iſaiah ſays, that the fire is in Sion, and the furnace in Jeruſalem. There is ſome reaſon to conclude from theſe Explanations that the Rabbies often meant Hell by the word Scheol, which we interpret Sepulchre; but at the ſame time it is eaſy to obſerve that they are miſtaken, ſince Hell is not meant by any of thoſe Texts of Scripture which they produce. And it is more eſpecially ſurpriſing, that the Jews, who were ſo jealous of the beauty of Jeruſalem, ſhou'd have put one of the Gates of Hell in it. The Heathens alſo put Gates to Hell:

Porta adverſa ingens, ſolidoq; adamante columnæ.
Vis & nulla virum non ipſi exſcindere ferro
Cœlicolæ valeant.

IV. There are three different Puniſhments in Hell; Heat, Cold, and the Confuſion of the Soul. The Heat is cauſed by a very violent Fire, and was created the ſecond Day; and therefore for that reaſon God did not bleſs that Day. The Rabbies † repreſent it as a River of Fire, which falls upon the Wicked, thereby repreſenting the abundance of it; but at the ſame time they ſay, that this River increaſes daily by the Sweat of thoſe Beaſts that draw God's Chariot, which Alluſion they have borrowed from Ezekiel's Viſions falſly interpreted. Others with more Senſe agree upon a thing that is alike unknown to all Men; For they ſay, that this Fire created by God is very ſubtil, "It is not properly a Body, "that can receive its ſuſtenance from Wood and "other combuſtible Matter reducible to Aſhes; but "God maintains and feeds it, and keeps it ſhut up "in a place, as he has placed Millions of An-"gels in Heaven. Some believe that this Fire will not laſt for ever; and thus they explain this Axiom of the Doctors, the torment ſhall fail; but the damned ſhall not fail, becauſe in ſtead of the Fire which ſhall ceaſe, God will ſubſtitute the Sun, which at the end of the World he will remove from its Centre, and that iſſuing forth all its Heat will cauſe a moſt dreadful Puniſhment; This they prove from the Prophet Malachi ||, which ſpeaks of a hot Oven, and a Day that ſhall burn them up. Origen ſaid that J. CHRIST will baptize the Wicked with a River of Fire; but he meant by that the Terrors of a guilty Conſcience, and it was not until the laſt Day, that this Fire which was to burn up the World, ſhould fall upon the Wicked. This Father then agrees with the Jews in his Expreſſions and Thoughts.

V. The Damned ſuffer Cold as Well as Heat. The Author of the Apocryphal Book of Eſdras invented this ſecond Puniſhment. He puts the Souls between Fire and Water; the Fire is on the right hand, and the Water on the left; and the Rabbies * have followed him very exactly. They really believe it was from Hell that God fetch'd two great Plagues, (viz.) The Fire with which he burnt Sodom, and the Water of the Deluge that covered the Earth. The Heathens likewiſe as well as the Rabbies have made a River of Fire for the Phlegeton and on the contrary the Acheron had Waters as cold as Ice:

——Turbine † anhelo

—Gelidam ejuerat cum murmure arenam:

and it was by theſe two different Puniſhments that they attoned for their Crimes:

Aliis ſub gurgite vaſto
Infectum eluitur ſcelus, aut exuritur igni, ſays Virgil.

VI. They that maintain, that St. Jerome had adopted this Opinion of the Jews, and eſtabliſhed it in his Commentary upon Job, are mightily miſtaken; for that Work was made long after him by Beda, who had no Commerce with the Jews. He had rather taken it from a Saxon named Drithelmus, who conceited that one Side of the Damned burnt, whileſt the other was a kind of Hail, an inſupportable Cold or Snow. Indeed Job had ſaid || that Drought and heat conſume the Snow waters, ſo doth the Grave thoſe who have ſinned. I know not how his Interpreter * could find in this two different Puniſhments, one of Fire and the other of Water, for the Devil and the Ungodly. He moreover, affirms, that J. CHRIST countenanced this Thought, by obſerving, that in the burning Lake of fire, there would be weeping and gnaſhing of teeth. Since Cold cauſes the gnaſhing of teeth. Beſides, change of Torments is a redoubling of the Puniſhment; ſometimes to burn in Flames, and then again to freeze in Ice. He explains this by the Example of an Ague, wherein we ſuffer Heat and Cold in their turns one after another, and yet thoſe Accidents proceed from one and the ſame Cauſe. Laſtly, to theſe Tortures which Heat and Cold ſhall produce, the Jews add the Sorrows and Anxieties of the Soul:

Patiturq; ſuos mens conſcia Manes.

VII. This Puniſhment is not generally acknowledged to be everlaſting. We ſhall not yet ſpeak of thoſe who one day are to come out of Hell; but of the Ungodly of the firſt Rank, who are caſt into the deepeſt place. Leo of Modena † ſays plainly, that there are ſome Men condemned for ever to ſuffer thoſe Torments, without any hopes of relief, and R. Menaſſe || who had perfectly ſtudied the Doctors Opinions, ſtrenuouſly maintains the eternity of Torments from the Immortality of the Soul, which is received as a certain Truth in the Synagogue. He reckons up three ſorts of Perſons that muſt undergo this diſmal Doom, tho' their Life be never ſo Upright; the Atheiſt that denies the Being of a God; they that withſtand the Divinity of the Law,

they

they mean by this Expreſſion the Oral Law; and laſtly, they that deny the Reſurrection of the Body.

Nevertheleſs it can't be deny'd, but that there are ſome Doctors * as the famous Maimonides, Abravanel, and other Rabbies of great Authority, that maintain the Annihilation of the Soul. There are ſome alſo that limit the Sufferings of the Damned to twelve Months, becauſe after that time the Soul conſumes to Aſhes; it looſes its form; and becomes as matter that is burnt. Origen alſo deny'd the Eternity of Hell-torments, and we might find among the Modern Chriſtians ſome Divines, that are perſuaded that this Opinion is very convenient to clear God about the Origine and Cauſe of Evil; and even believe that Souls have a Power to deliver themſelves from the Torments of Hell; but that they will not, becauſe they perſiſt in the bad choice they have made; and chuſe rather to ſuffer than forſake it, as we ſee ſome Children that chooſe rather to be poor, and diſinherited by their Parents, than be forced to forſake their Miſtriſs, or their Debaucheries †.

VIII. Thoſe that maintain that there is a material Fire in Hell, are obliged to encounter with a great Objection, that ariſes from the Activity of this Element, and its natural Effect upon Bodies. The Fathers have contrived a Fire that nouriſheth Bodies, inſtead of conſuming them: it burns and reſtores them ||. They compare this Fire to that of Thunder, which touches Bodies but does not burn them, and to that of Mount Ætna, which always burns, becauſe its inward fire breeds inſtead of deſtroying it ſelf. And indeed this is the Notion that the Poets give of it:

Sed quanquam largo flammarum exæſtuat intus,
Turbine *, & aſſidue ſubnaſcens profluit ignis.

But theſe Compariſons do prove nothing, becauſe they are falſe; for Thunder reduces to Aſhes all that it ſtrikes, and the Fire of Mount Ætna or of Veſuvius doth not beget it ſelf. Philoſophers grant that after the bituminous part of the Matter is conſumed by the Flames, the Fire goeth out, or at leaſt diminiſhes conſiderably; Nothing remains but the Hearth, till ſomething is laid on it to kindle and cauſe a new Conflagration. The Fathers that have produced theſe Phænomena to prove to the Heathens the nature of Hell-torments, did not know them. It is almoſt impoſſible to conceive that a Fire ſhould for ever burn upon a Body made up of ſeveral different parts, without dividing them. Would it not be ſufficient to aſcribe to thoſe Souls loaded with guilt, the checks of Conſcience, cruel Agitations, and a Deſpair that might conſume them like Fire? This is ſo much the more likely, becauſe the Souls of the Wicked will be tormented long before they can be reunited with their Bodies by the Reſurrection, upon which alone a material Fire can have any Power.

IX. Some attribute to the infernal Torments the Power of purifying Souls, and expiating Sin. I don't know whether this Doctrine be borrow'd from the Academicks; but it is certain Plato believed, that Souls were cleanſed by the Torments they endured. Origen and Lactantius ſaid it after him; and the Jews are ſtill of this Opinion. Tho' it be a common Axiom among the Rabbies, that there is no room for repentance after death; yet they bring forth the Souls out of the dark Dungeon of Hell. How can theſe things that ſeem ſo contradictory, be reconciled? They do it by ſaying, that the God of Mercy is always moſt inclined to Compaſſion; that it would not ſeem juſt that any one ſhould ſuffer eternally for Crimes which were oftentimes but trivial. They praiſe the excellency of Circumciſion, by vertue of which they are Saved. Abraham who is the Patron of it, deſcends from time to time into Purgatory to fetch out the Circumciſed. Laſtly, they appeal to the Law, which as ſevere as it ſeems to us to be, yet is a ſource of Deliverance. For it ſuffers not any one that puts it in practice, to periſh; therefore they maintain that very few Jews remain in Hell.

X. The Roman Catholick boaſt of finding among the Jews † a Purgatory like to theirs; and they are not miſtaken. The Jew's Purgatory is Hell itſelf; but this makes no conſiderable difference, ſeeing the Purgatory of Rome is next Neighbour to the Place of the Damned, and 'tis the ſame Fire that burns in both. This Place is allotted only for the Tranſgreſſors of Iſrael. By which are to be underſtood thoſe that are neither abſolutely good, nor abſolutely bad, and that Die without doing Pennance. The Roman Purgatory likewiſe only atones for Venial Sins. The Jews Purgatory is not only in Hell; for the Rabbies relate, that Akiba one Day met a Man loaded, running very faſt; whereupon he ſtopt him to have ſome Diſcourſe with him; but the other informed him he was a Dead Man, and condemned to carry Wood for the Atonement of a Sin which he had committed at the Cuſtom-houſe, (whereof he had been a Commiſſioner) by favouring the Rich and oppreſſing the Poor; that he was making haſte to perform that Task, for fear of being whipp'd at his return by thoſe Spirits that had the charge of him. Juſt ſuch another Story they tell at Rome; how that a Biſhop knew a Man again after he was Dead carrying Water at the Bath, and making his Purgatory there. The Jews get the Souls out of that Place by many Prayers; and it is alſo by Maſſes, and by the Suffrages of the Saints, that the Romiſh Souls come out of their Purgatory. The Jews ſell Indulgences to the People, that they may be delivered the ſooner, and the ſame is done at Rome. The Sabbath is a Priviledge Day whereon the Fire of Hell is reſpited; and a Rabbi ſenſibly proved it to an Unbeliever, by ſhewing him, that no Smoke came out of his Father's Tomb that Day. But above all, the Dead are taken out thence at the Day of Expiations, in which God opens his Regiſter-book, and ſees the condition of thoſe that ſuffer. And thus Chriſtians are perſuaded, that there are Priviledged Days and Years to deliver Souls out of Purgatory; and this Belief is kept up by ſuch Miracles as often amaze the Judicious. There is only this difference, viz. The Jews are not ſo Ingenuous as the Romiſh Prieſts: For beſides, that they ſeldom miſuſe this Tenet ſo as to ruin Families, or drain the People; they have alſo limited the duration of thoſe Sufferings to Twelve Months. This Expreſſion I muſt confeſs is a little affected; for they will not ſay not a Year, for fear of prolonging the time; becauſe ſome Years have an Intercalary Month; but Rome has been cunning enough to prolong the Puniſhment of the Dead to whole Centuries, and ſometimes further, that they may ſtill enjoy the Income.

XI. It is pretended || that beſides Purgatory, the Jews admit of a Limbus in which the Souls of the Fathers are Repoſed; but this is only grounded upon a diſtinction of Hell. 'Tis true, they divide the bottomleſs Pit into two parts, the One above, the Other below, where the Torments are more wracking; yet it is ſtill the ſame Place. The Souls ſuffer in both, and are neither quiet nor happy in this Retirement, as those of the Fathers were in the Limbus. The uppermost part is allotted for the less Sinful, who there atone for their Crimes. It is true, they sometimes speak of Abraham's Bosom; for they say that R. Ada sits this Day in Abraham's Bosom, to shew that he Dies; but this Expression is very rare among them, and a famous Doctor says plainly in so many Words, that this Limbus is forged. We deny that there is any Limbus in Hell. He gives a Reason for it too; for if the Souls of the Patriarchs and Righteous Men, such as Enoch and Noah, enjoyed the Grace of God, whilst their Souls were united to Polluted Bodies, they much more ought to enjoy the Glory after Death. Those that are jealous of this Conformity about the Limbus of the Fathers, and defend it, did not think it was only contriv'd, because the Messiah was to open Heaven by his satisfaction and Death; and as in the Synagogue they have no Notion of the Messiah's making any Atonement for Sin by his Sufferings, nor of his opening Heaven by his Blood, which they think already opened by the fulfilling of the Law, and by the Blood of the Circumcision. No Man ought to impute this Tenet to the Jews, unless he would have them argue very Fantastically. Besides, the Glory and Advantage that is drawn from this Conformity with these Doctors, is thereby lost.

XII. It is an Article of the Jewish || Catechism that God never denies a Recompence to any one, and that he will give it to those that keep his Commandments; and the same thing is repeated Daily in the Prayers * that are offered up to God; but there are two different Opinions in the Nation concerning the nature of those Pleasures and Joys which make up the Saints Reward.

First, Some believe that Souls go after Death into the Garden of Eden. Therefore in the Prayers that are made for the Dead, they generally beg that his Soul may have his Portion in Eden, and in the World to come, and the Angel of Death forbids the Living to come in. It is said, that R. Azariel deceived this Angel, and went into the Seven Appartments of that Place; but they only designed to say, that that Rabbi gave as lively a Description of this Paradise, and the different degrees of Reward which the Souls receive in it, as if he had been there, and seen it.

XIII. There is † a magnificent Description made of that Place. The Houses are built of precious Stones, which agrees with what St. John says of the Heavenly City in his Revelations. The Rivers flow with Wine and Perfumes, and one may live in it without Care or Trouble. The Souls are carried thither after Death in an I know not what kind of Chariot or Garb that God gives them, where they shall remain quiet till the Messiah comes. Then the Souls will come out of the Receptacles wherein they were shut up, and being re-united to their Bodies, they shall live under the Rule and Government of the Messiah. They shall Eat and Drink with Pleasure as they do now; and beget Children too As the Earth would never be big enough to contain every Body that has been born in the World, none but the Saints and the Righteous shall rise again to enjoy the Bliss that the Messiah shall procure for them. This Happiness is to last forthe space of three Hundred Years, or a Thousand, that is to say, a long time; and then the Body annihilating it self, the Soul only shall go into the other World, or into the Heavenly Paradise.

Maimonides heads this Party. Menasse ||, whom we have often quoted, and who is one of the last and most judicious Rabbies, supports it upon the testimony of several Doctors. They also prove it by the conformity that is to be between the Saints and Adam in his state of Innocence, and by the Wisdom of God that makes nothing in vain. For what reason should he have put Plants and Fruit in Paradise, unless it were to feed those Men that he would put into it? Why should the Bodies rise again, if they were not to re-act the same things which they did here in this Life? He pretends, that the Land of Canaan will belong to the Patriarchs, and that the Tithes will be paid to resuscitated Aaron, which would be needless, if he was not to make use of them for his maintainance. Abravanel adds, that as the Soul will find her Bliss in God, so the Body must enjoy those Pleasures which are suitable to its Nature.

There are also some footsteps of this Opinion found in the Second of Esdras *; for the Souls of the Righteous ask, when cometh the Fruit of the Floor of our Reward? They are answer'd, When the number of Seeds is filled in you; and in another place it is affirmed, that the full Store-houses shall suddenly be found empty. These Store-houses are the Receptacles from whence the Souls shall come out on a sudden, when the Messiah appears, to enjoy with their Bodies a more compleat Happiness. Marrying and Eating after Death seem to have been a common Opinion among the Jews in Our Saviour's time; since the Sadducees asked him, how a Woman that had Seven Brethren for Husbands, could claim one; saying, In the Resurrection whose Wife shall she be? A Question that supposes a notion of Marriage; and upon this Authority St. Augustin † does not stick to ascribe the same Opinion to the Jews of his time; but it is very strange that the Christians should have adopted part of it. The Essenes in J. CHRIST's and Josephus's time looked upon Paradise, in which the Souls were to be gathered togethe, as into a Place where no Rain nor Snow fell, and in which no inconveniency was found. Justin Martyr || disputing against a Jew, maintains also, that the Souls of the Saints remain some where in a very agreeable Place. Tertullian did more; for he said, that this Place was separated from the known World by a Zone of Fire. All the Doctors of the Primitive Church that were Millenarians agreed with the Jews in this point, tho' these Notions are gross and carnal.

XIV. The Cause of this Error is, that the Jews giving the Name of Paradise both to the Garden of Eden, wherein Adam was put, and to Heaven, this Expression that ought to have been understood in a Figurative, was taken in a Literal Sense. The Error of the Doctors that have believed a Millenarium, and a Temporal Felicity of the Righteous during that time, is a demonstration that the Ideas of the Soul's Happiness is not sufficiently refined; and that not only the Vulgar, or some Doctors of little Note, may fall into those Carnal Fancies, but that even the Learned, and the bulk of the Learned too, may be also imposed upon in this Matter.

XV. Some Modern Criticks * maintain two things: One that this Opinion of the Soul's Felicity, which we have related, is common and reigning among the Jews. The Other, that it is so Antient, that J. CHRIST spoke conformably to it, when he promised to the converted Thief, that he should be with him that Day in Paradise. This Thief, who was used to hear his Doctors speak of those Pleasures that were to be enjoyed in the Terrestrial Paradise, could have no other Idea of it, nor otherwiſe underſtand J. CHRIST, when he ſpoke in the Language of thoſe Doctors. But this Fancy is grounded upon two ſuppoſitions. One, that the Jewiſh Doctors ſpoke and thought in Our Saviour's time juſt as the Talmudiſts have done ſince. This is a common Method, viz. When any Expreſſions are found among the Rabbies like thoſe of the Evangeliſts, or any Opinion that has ſome relation to that of J. CHRIST, both the Goſpel and J. CHRIST are explained by the words and deſigns of the Rabbies. But this is not fair, ſince none can be ſure that the Doctors, who liv'd in this Nation four or five Hundred Years after J. CHRIST, have given the ſame conſtruction to figurative Expreſſions that he did. No Writers in the World are ſo little to be depended upon, as to the ſucceſſion of Tradition and Faith, as the Jews that are uſed to prefer their own Fancies to the Law of God; for the Imaginations of Men have no bounds. It is ſufficient to ſee how they wreſt the Paſſages of the Law to ſupport their ſhallow Fancies. One word being altered in the Senſe, will do their Buſineſs. It does not follow, that becauſe the Rabbies have taken the word Paradiſe for the Garden of Eden, and there placed the Souls of the Saints, that therefore the Doctors, the common People, and the Thief who was Crucify'd with Our Saviour, were of the ſame Opinion. Had this Style been in uſe, JESUS CHRIST would have alter'd that word, and made uſe of another, to give the Thief a higher Idea of the Happineſs that he promiſed him. What Intereſt had the Redeemer of the World to keep the People or Doctors in their Errour, inſtead of teaching the Truth to him that knew it not? Did it become that Son of God to promiſe Reſt in the Garden of Eden, at a time when it was abſolutely neceſſary for this new Convert to get his Heart looſe from this Earth, and to have it raiſed upon high in ſearch of Heaven?

XVI. But Grotius improperly ſuppoſes this to be the Opinion of the Jews. He ſhould have diſtinguiſhed two Parties, whereof the One believes that the Souls will be exalted to the Contemplation of God immediately after Death. It is || agreed, that moſt of the Jewiſh Doctors in France and Spain are ſtanch in this Opinion; and this Teſtimony can't be ſuſpected, ſince Abravanel, one of the Chief of the contrary Party, tells us ſo, It is obſerved that the Soul enjoying from the Hour of Death the Glory of the Divine Majeſty, and a ſupreme Felicity, none ought to believe or think, that the Saints will quit that happineſs to come and dwell in a deſpicable Place, full of croſſes, and near the bottomleſs Pit. The Sages add, that if Moſes had no need of Food upon the Mount, being ſuſtained by the Light and Glory of God; the Faithful that are to riſe again, ſhall be preſerved by the ſame Light; that is to ſay, by the will of God, and by his Spirit, that will be within them for their ſupport. Laſtly, there are ſome Sermons in which God is introduc'd ſpeaking to the Soul of Moſes, which was affraid of Death, and endeavour'd what ſhe could to put it off. Defer not, Daughter, ſaid God to her, for I am going to ſet you upon the Throne of my Glory, near the Throne of the Cherubim and Seraphim. That none may imagine this privilege to be peculiar to that Prophet, the Talmudiſts affirm, that not only the Soul of Moſes is placed under the Throne of Glory, but alſo that the Souls of all other Saints have the ſame advantage, which invincibly proves the variety of their Opinions concerning this Matter, whereof One draws near that of the Antient Millenarians, and the Other is the Faith of Orthodox Chriſtians.

XVII. The Reſurrection * of Bodies is one of the chief Articles of the Jewiſh Faith; ſince thoſe that deny it are Damned with the Wicked. Here you have what is remarkable upon this Subject.

Queen Cleopatra being convinced of the Truth of the Reſurrection, asked R. Meir one Day whether the Dead ſhould riſe again Naked or Dreſſed. He anſwer'd by the example of Corn that is thrown Naked into the Earth, and comes out of it with ſeveral covers: So the Jews † determine that the Dead ſhall appear again Clothed with ſeveral Suits. Moreover, there are ſome Dead Bodies that muſt revive twice, for the Saints muſt come out of the Earth to Reign with the Meſſiah, and Eat with him the Viands he has prepared. And they will dye a ſecond time to riſe again at the Day of Judgment, and enjoy the Glory of God. Nevertheleſs, Elijah left a contrary Tradition; for he told his Diſciples that thoſe that ſhould riſe again with the Meſſiah ſhould never return into the Duſt.

God will raiſe the Dead by the means of a little Bone that is in the Back-bone, and called Luts. They maintain that this little Bone, which is unknown to every Body, is incorruptible; they prove it by David's Words, who ſays that God will preſerve the Bones of the Righteous, and that not one of them ſhall be broken. Chriſtian Interpreters underſtand by this, that God will ſo protect the Righteous, as that none of their Bones ſhall be broken, and they find this Oracle fulfill'd in the Perſon of the Meſſiah; but the Jews will have God's Care to extend to a particular Bone that neither can be broken, nor corrupted. They prove it by the Example of the Emperor Adrian, who laughing at the Reſurrection, and what a Jew told him concerning the Virtue of this Bone, made Experiment of it; for it was put under a Mill-ſtone, and was not broken; it was caſt into the Fire, and it was not burned; but it is childiſh to ſuppoſe that the Emperor Adrian then going into Judæa, to puniſh the famous Rebellion of Barchochebas, ſhould diſpute there upon the Reſurrection. This Prince's Conference with that Rabbi, is all imaginary, and his Diſpute chimerical. Laſtly, They rely upon the Teſtimony of the Doctors that have authenticated this Tradition, (viz.) That all the parts of the Human Body, diſperſed into never ſo many Places, will gather together about this Bone, and make up the ſame Bodies that Men had here when they were alive.

XVIII. Some Doctors || fancy, that none but the Saints ſhall riſe again. They exclude the Wicked, becauſe they ought not to partake of the Happineſs which the Saints are to enjoy with the Meſſiah here upon Earth. And indeed this naturally follows from their Principle, but that Reaſon does not always affect them. Menaſſe *, for Example, tho a Defender of this Carnal Felicity, owns, that according to Reaſon and Scripture, the Wicked muſt riſe again to be puniſh'd in their Bodies that have ſinned. He even maintains, That this is the Tradition of the Fathers: So that this Truth, tho' oppugn'd by Great Men, is ſtill preſerv'd in the Synagogue. Moſt of the Doctors affirm, that God alone raiſes Men from the Dead to reward and puniſh them, but there are alſo ſome that acknowledge no other Motive in the Operation of this Miracle, than the Will and All-mighty Power of God, which appears with great Splendour. Others believe it is done to accompliſh what is wanting in their Obedience, and then it would not be general. In ſhort, as the Jews are infatuated with the Beauty and Excellency of the Land of Canaan, ſo we muſt not be ſurpriſed, if they believe, that the Reſurrection of the Dead ſhall be there. They prove it by ſeveral Paſſages of † Scripture which it wou'd be needleſs to relate, as well as the conſequence which they draw from Adam's being made of that Holy Earth, which is a falſe ſuppoſition.

XIX. After the Reſurrection comes the Judgment. We have already obſerved, that ſome believe that there ſhall be a ſpace of three Hundred or a Thouſand Years between theſe two Events; but there is another Opinion conformable to that of the Chriſtians, viz. that this Judgment will be perform'd at the very moment of the general Reſurrection. God Judges Men every Year on the firſt Day of Tiſri, which anſwers the Month of September. He Judges every one at the Hour of Death; but he will Judge them all at the end of the World in the Valley of Jehoſhaphat, near the Mount of Olives. For this Reaſon the Jews delight in burying their Dead near Jeruſalem. They do not obſerve that when Joel ſays, that the Nations ſhall be gather'd together and brought down to the Valley of Jehoſhaphat, and that the Lord ſhall ſit to Judge all the Heathen round about. Joel. 3. 2. & 12. That he ſpeaks of a Temporal Deliverance of his People, in which their Enemies ſhall be routed as the Moabites and Ammonites had been in that ſame Valley.

XX. Chriſtians are perſuaded, that in the Day of Judgment the Elements ſhall paſs away with a great Noiſe, and be melted with fervent Heat; that the Earth alſo, and the Works that are therein, ſhall be burnt up, as St. Peter ſpeaks, 2 Peter 3. 10. This Tradition was common among the Pagans. Some even believe, that the Sacred Fire of Veſta was not worſhipp'd among the Romans, but as an Image of that Fire which is ſhut up in the Centre of the Earth, and is one Day to break out and burn the whole World. Cæſar was formerly comforted for not having made any Funerals for his Soldiers after the Battel of Pharſalia, by this Reaſon, that the ſame Fire which is to burn the World, would reduce them to Aſhes, and that they ſhall have the ſame Coffin as the whole Univerſe.

Hos * Cæſar Populos ſi nunc non uſſerit Ignis,
Uret cum Terris, uret cum gurgite Ponti;

Mixturus.

No Body is ignorant of what the Stoicks thought concerning the Conflagration of the World, cauſed by the want of thoſe exhalations which now ſerve to nouriſh Beings. None of the Philoſophers, except Ariſtotle and his Diſciples, believ'd the World Eternal; even Epicurus made it to end in one Day:

Una † Dies dabit exitio, Multoſq; per Annos
Suſtentata ruet moles & machina Mundi.

They go beyond this; for they now prove this general Conflagration by Natural Cauſes, which make it more ſenſible. For this, it is not requiſite to remove the Sun from its place, nor open the Centre of the Earth. According to antient Tradition, ſays an Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtorian ||, Forty Years before the end of the World the Rain-bow ſhall diſappear, and that will demonſtrate a prodigious Drought; but others have fancy'd, that Elijah, who ſhall then appear, will ſtop the Rain. However it be, this great Drought will be a preparation for the Conflagration of the World *. The Mountains that have long ſince caſt out many Flaſhes of Fire, and of Bituminous and Pitchy Clouds, ſhall then open and ſet all the Neighbouring Places on fire. I know not whether St. Auguſtin may be credited when he ſays, that one Day Mount Ætna did caſt out ſuch a prodigious quantity of Flames, and threw them ſo far, that the Rocks of the Sea were blacken'd by it, and the Pitch of the Ships that then ſailed by, was melted; but every one knows, that nothing is ſo diſmal as the Diſorders cauſed by thoſe Flames: The Rocks and Stones caſt with Fury into ſeveral Places, and the Earth-quakes, ſhall cauſe new Deſolations, as when Sodom and Gomorrah periſhed; the Earth opening by violent Earthquakes, ſent forth a vaſt quantity of Sulphur and Bitumen, kindled by the Fire of Thunder and Lightning, ſo the ſame ſhall happen at the end of the World. The Stones and Rocks ſhall melt away as they generally do when a Fire is violent and laſting. The Waters that continually are running through ſubterraneous Channels into the Sea, ſhall be dryed up; The Rivers that fill and ſwell it, ſhall be drained; then it will diſappear and become a heap of Sulphur and Bitumen, and thoſe Waters being Salt and agitated, will eaſily kindle. Sometimes this is carried much farther; and ſome pretend that this Conflagration is to begin in Italy, it being the Seat of Anti-chriſt, which Our Saviour J. CHRIST will deſtroy at his ſecond coming. And hard by that Place are the Mountains, by whoſe Vomiting of Fire the Deſtruction of the World is to begin. Laſtly, it is maintained by ſome, that the World will be renew'd by this Conflagration, and that J. CHRIST will come and reign in it for a thouſand Years with his Elect.

XXI. The Jews follow an antient Tradition, which imports, that the World ſhall laſt ſix Thouſand Years, after which a perfect Peace will be enjoy'd in the Meſſiah's Reign for one Thouſand Years. They look upon God's Creating of the World in ſix Days, and reſting the ſeventh, as a Type of this. They † add, that the Letter ו, which ſignifies a thouſand, is repeated ſix times over in the ſame Verſe of Geneſis; and that Elijah, who lived one Hundred and fifty Years after the Reſtoration of the Temple, determin'd this Queſtion. Juſtin Martyr, Lactantius, St. Jerome, and St. Auguſtin have followed this, tho' ill-grounded, Opinion, becauſe they took it from the Jewiſh Tradition, or becauſe it is a common Notion, that the World ſhall laſt ſix Thouſand Years, for that God was ſix Days in making of it. Voſſius alſo made uſe of Elijah's Oracle, to make the duration of the World agree with the Verſion of the LXX. But he has been deſervedly upbraided for this falſe Calculation, ſince he was forced to encreaſe the number of ſix Thouſand Years, by thoſe that were ſpent from Adam's time to Noah, as if they belonged to another World. The Rabbies do not believe that the World will ever periſh. Our Doctors || in vain juſtifie Philo the Jew, and make him ſay, that the World ſhall not be deſtroy'd; and if any change happens to it, it ſhall be only to make it more perfect: For that is not his thought. He maintains, that the World is incorruptible, and that if ſome of its parts fall off and rot, it does not therefore follow that the whole muſt; becauſe, that as a Man ceaſes not to live after his Finger or Hand is cut off; ſo why may not the World ſubſiſt; notwithſtanding the Corruption of ſome of its parts. Maimonides alſo pretends, that all the Texts in Holy Scripture, which mention the new Heavens and a new Earth, are Metaphorical; and it muſt be owned, that the Prophet Iſaiah's Oracle, which is uſed to prove the Reſtoration of the World in its perfection, and in the ſame ſtate that heretofore the Terreſtrial Paradiſe, the Garden of Eden, was, points out to us the Meſſiah's Reign under the Goſpel. He concludes, that the World ſhall not be deſtroy'd, ſeeing, that the Sacred Pages ſay nothing of it. That Rabbi, ſomewhere mentioned by * Gaſſendi, on the contrary, drew the Deſtruction of the World from expreſſions of the Law; but he could not do it, without the help of the Cabala.

I. GOD could not more ſeverely puniſh the Jewiſh Nation, than by depriving it of the Liberty of uſing thoſe Ceremonies that were injoyn'd in their Religion. It is the Inclination of all People to love ſenſible Objects; but the Jews, who ſaw God to countenance this Inclination, and to imploy them by a long Train of Rites and Ceremonies, had increaſed their Love and Affection for them. Their Anceſtors had in vain cry'd out, It is a Yoke that neither we, nor our Fathers were able to bear. They could not without extreme Grief ſee this Yoke broke; they ſtill lament the Ruin of their Temple, to which the Obſervation of theſe Ceremonies were faſt'ned; In a word, notwithſtanding the violent Obſtacle which the fall of the Temple effected towards the fulfilling of the Antient Rites, they nevertheleſs charge themſelves with a great many, and obſerve them very zealouſly. The Miſnah, and Talmud, are a Collection of Determinations concerning an infinite number of Scruples of Conſcience, that ariſe from the practiſe of thoſe Rites. The Rabbies have made it their chief Work and Study for theſe many Ages. They particularize to ſuch a Degree, that it is eaſy to judge how very fond that Nation is of Ceremonies. Beſides, the Rabbies teach in the Synagogues, that they have Paſtors, and Houſes of Judgment, wherein all Doubts of Conſcience are determin'd; and thoſe that tranſgreſs the Laws are ſeverely puniſhed. We ſhall not follow the Rabbies in the explanation of their Government, and Ceremonies; but thus much at leaſt is neceſſary, to relate the moſt material things which they have practiſed, in order to give a juſt Notion of the Religion and Hiſtory of this People.

II. Every body knows that Moſes, being overcharged in judging all the Cauſes of Six hundred thouſand Souls, deſired to be eaſed of ſo weighty a Burden. God commanded him to intruſt ſeventy Elders with that Care, whom he animated with his Spirit, and who made up the Grand Sanhedrim. The Jews ſay, that Moſes was very much perplexed in the choice of theſe Councellors, becauſe if he had choſen Six out of every Tribe, there would have been two too many; if but Five, then Ten would have been wanting. Neither could he take Six out of one Tribe, and but Five out of the other, for fear of cauſing a Jealouſy. What cou'd he do to extricate himſelf out of this perplexity? He reſolved to take Six out of each Tribe, and to caſt Lots for the excluſion of thoſe two that were Supernumerary. He put Seventy Tickets on which the word Elder * was written; and added two blank Tickets, which unhappily were drawn by Eldad, and Medad, to whom Moſes ſaid, God will have none of you. This Lawgiver † did not favour his own Family, for these two Men were his Brothers; his Father Amram had put away his first Wife Jochabed to take another, from whom came these two Persons whom God rejected. This Story is grounded upon Moses's Authority, who says, that he wrote the names of the Elders; but however it is false.

III. And indeed Eldad, and Medad were so far from being cast off by God, that they were extraordinarily enliven'd by his Spirit. They spake and judged with such good success, that it was thought Moses would have been jealous of them. Some went in a spiteful manner, and told him that they prophesy'd; but this holy Man reply'd, would to God that all the Lord's People were Prophets. Eldad, and Medad, then were Judges, Members of the Council which Moses instituted, and Prophets inspired by God. These two Men were not Moses's Brothers, Children of Amram's second Wife, and the Divorce of his first Wife, tho' she was his Aunt, is Chimerical. Nor does it appear, that Moses chose these Counsellors by casting of Lots. It is more likely that it was the Gift of the Holy Ghost poured out upon LXX. Persons, which made them to be distinguished from the rest of the People; For Moses observes, that God gave them his Spirit, and he did not write the Names of Elders till after the Election was over, and that was done to make them the more easily known by the People. Lastly, it can't be said, that this Tribunal lasted after the Death of Moses, since the Divine Inspiration, which was the ground of this Establishment, was transitory, and that in after-times there is no mention of this Grand Council. Nevertheless the Jews, and the Christians, who blindly follow them when it concerns the Antiquity of their Rites and Government, do obstinately maintain, that this formidable Tribunal has all along subsisted; that It judged the Kings before the Captivity; and that Ezra re-established it after the return by the Name of the Grand Synagogue. It is also seen in the Gospel invested with great Power, notwithstanding the decay of the Republick. Selden has given the Names of all the Presidents of that Council who succeeded one another, and this Catalogue seems to prove that the Chain of this Succession was never broke.

IV. A Critick * not satisfied to bring back the Origine of the Sanhedrim to Moses, relates the History of its different Vicissitudes, till the time of the Captivity of Babylon. This Tribunal, says he, was seen to act and determine about War and Peace while the Republick lasted; for the Elders of the Congregation, restored to the Tribe of Benjamin the Land that was taken from them by the War, and who after they had advised the Benjamites to carry away the Daughters of Shiloh, said, when † their Fathers, or their Brethren come unto us to complain, we will say unto them, be favourable to them for our sakes. Here is a Tribunal ‖ made up of Elders, before whom the Oppressed were to bring their Complaints; and this Tribunal was in being, even when there was no Judge in Israel, and that every one did that which was right in his own eyes. It alter'd in Jeroboam's Reign; because instead of its being taken out of the Twelve Tribes, most of the Counsellors forsook their office to follow their Brethren, and enter with them into the Schism; So that they were reduced to the two Tribes of Benjamin and Judah; but nevertheless the number of the LXX. was kept up. In short, Jehoshaphat made another distinction; for he placed the High-Priest at the head of this Council to Judge of those things which related to God; a President for the King's Business; and the Levites were before them to judge all the Differences that arose: So that the Sanhedrim was in being in all those times that preceeded the Captivity of Babylon. There was only some Alteration in the form of it. All these things deserve to be examined, for the Origine of the Sanhedrim does not appear to be of so old a Date.

V. First, The Epocha of the War against the Benjamites, caused by a Levite, whose Concubine had been ravished, is not favourable to the Sanhedrim; For it was natural and proper for the injur'd Levite to complain to the Sanhedrim of the Affront he had received. The Law of Nations was infringed; the Law of God transgressed by an infamous Debauchery; and the Crime had been committed against a Levite. The Grand Council was the natural Judge of this Business; why then did not the Levite apply to it? To say, as some do, that the Great Council never appear'd but when Peace was to be proposed and settled, is to be willing to impose upon ones self; For the Levite did not know whether the Tribes would arm upon that Matter. He ought at least to have had recourse to the usual Forms of Justice, known by all the People, and the Benjamites Rebellion against the Chief Tribunal might very well have given the People occasion to make War. 'Tis true, after the Victory was obtained and the Crime punished, the Elders judged and advised the Benjamites; but it is not observed that the People were gathered together. They were then the Chief of all the Tribes that made up this Judgment, in the Name of the whole Nation then Assembled; and those Elders that headed their Tribes, had no relation to the Sanhedrim, whose Tribunal should have been fixed. There was then no Grand Council, when every one did that which was right in his own eyes.

VI. Those that relate such a formal History of the Sanhedrim, and the Alterations which have happened to it, must build upon Conjectures. From whence do they know that the Senators chosen out of the Ten Tribes, forsook their Honourable Office at Jerusalem, to go and live retired? and how do they know that those Elders would have quitted the High-Priest, the Temple, and the Holy City, purely to enter into the Schism? What proof had they, that Rehoboam fill'd up their Places with the Elders of the two remaining Tribes? It might be said with more probability, that the Ten Tribes would have erected a Tribunal like the Sanhedrim of Jerusalem, if they had known the Use and Authority of it; but they did not think of it, because there was no Sanhedrim at that time. It is true, Jehoshaphat did set up a Court of Justice at Jerusalem, but this was no peculiar to that Capital City; For he did the same thing in all the other Cities of his Dominions. That Prince seeing the Laws infring'd, resolv'd that Justice should be restored, and for that purpose he erected several Courts of Justice for the People; but those Tribunals set up for the Conveniency of those that would Plead there, were not the Sanhedrim; on the contrary, the erecting of those Courts of Justice plainly shew, that the Grand Council of the Jews was not known in that King's Reign; For if it had, the Historian would not have fail'd to have mention'd it.

VII. The generality of Criticks * and Divines vindicate the Antiquity of the Sanhedrim; but a

Learned

Learned Man †, who weighs every thing with a Care and Exactneſs worthy of imitation, has diſcovered and proved, that it is ill grounded. And indeed upon Examination of the old Hiſtory, it is found that this Tribunal, tho' neceſſary to the Nation, diſappear'd immediately after the Death of Moſes. Joſhua governed the People with great Authority. He ſettled the Portion of ſome Tribes in the Land of Canaan. That of Ephraim who thought their lot too little, went and complained to him. The Levites, who ought to have been judged by the Sanhedrim, apply'd only to him. Laſtly, it was Joſhua that as General and Chief of the Nation disbanded the Army, and ſent beyond Jordan thoſe Tribes which had aſſiſted their Brethren in Conquering the Land of Canaan. How could he have ſpoken and acted with ſo much Authority, if he had been curb'd by a Supreme Council.

Joſhua's Government was not Abſolute. There were ſome important Affairs to which the Elders of the Nation were call'd; but even this helps to ſhew, that there was at that time no conſtant Council; for if it had always remained at Shiloh, or followed Joſhua, there would have been no diſtinction made between thoſe Affairs that came under the cogniſance of the Elders of the People, and thoſe that Joſhua, tho' of great Conſequence, judged alone. He himſelf tells us, who they were that were call'd, and conſulted || The Elders and Fathers of the Tribes; for there was in each a head of the houſe of their Fathers among the thouſands of Iſrael. Thoſe Deputies were they that made up the Grand Council of the Nation; but that was not the Sanhedrim which we look for. Laſtly, there were ſome Concerns in Joſhua's Reign, about which the whole Nation was Aſſembled to take care of their own intereſts, and of that which related to their Religion; as it was done, when the Tribes, parted by Jordan, raiſed an Altar upon the Border of that River.

VIII. After the death of Joſhua, God rais'd Judges, whom he endow'd with extraordinary Courage and Underſtanding. Theſe miraculous Deliverers were not the Heads of the Sanhedrim as 'tis ſuppos'd. Neither Gideon, Samſon, Jephthah, nor all the other Antient Hero's ever conſulted it: For they always acted as Maſters that were independent on the Senate. It is not material to take notice, that Grotius * who owns it to be ſo, falls afterwards into a kind of Contradiction, making the Power of the Senate equal to that of Kings: or to obſerve, that the Suphes or Suffetes among the Carthaginians, who borrow'd their Name from the Judges Sophetim, had not the Supreme Power. For that do's not prove, that the Judges acted dependently on the Sanhedrim, which was not yet inſtituted: and when there were none of theſe Judges in Iſrael, every man did that which was right in his own eyes. How could the Jews have degenerated into licentiouſneſs; if there had been a conſtant Tribunal of LXX. Elders, choſen out of every Tribe, inveſted with the Supreme Authority to reform Abuſes, and puniſh Criminals? The Kings, who ſucceeded the Judges, and whom ſome pretend that they depended on the Grand Sanhedrim, never mention this Council. They have ſometimes Suſpended the High Prieſt; or order'd him to alter the Publick Worſhip of God. Then indeed the Sanhedrim, which is repreſented as infallible in its Sentences, ought to have exerted its Authority and Power; but we never find that it either condemns Idolatry, or oppoſes the Incroachments of Kings who were to be their Inferiors. The Prophets, who ſo ſeverely cenſured the Wickedneſs of the People, never referr'd them to the Sanhedrim, or complain'd that this Court was too remiſs and indulgent in puniſhing of Crimes. That Senate was to Judge or Examine whether Prophets were true or falſe. However, we do not find any where that they ever made any ſuch deciſion, either to undeceive the People when ſeduced by Impoſtors; or to confirm them in their Faith when it was in danger. Let them ſay what they pleaſe; ſo general and ſo obſtinate a Silence of all the Sacred Writers for ſo many Ages, ſufficiently proves that this Tribunal did not then Subſiſt; whereas in the Goſpel, tho' it be ſo very ſhort, and within the narrow compaſs of the Hiſtory of three or four Years, mention is made of the Great Council of the Jews; becauſe it was then in Being. So that it wou'd be impoſſible but that this Tribunal ſhou'd have been mention'd by ſome of the Writers of the Old Teſtament, had it been eſtabliſh'd and well known in their time.

IX. But are not we oblig'd at leaſt to own, that it was eſtabliſh'd by Nehemiah, and Ezra, after the Captivity of Babylon? No; for thoſe two Hiſtorians being wholly ſilent in the Matter, we have good grounds to draw the ſame Inferences from their Silence, that we drew from the Silence of their Predeceſſors. Nehemiah cauſed the Covenant to be ſigned by the Heads of the Nation; and there they think the Sanhedrim is found: And indeed had it been eſtabliſh'd at that time, the ſignature of that Body Repreſentative of the whole Nation, aſſembled to be its Judge, as in whom the abſolute Sovereignty was depoſited, wou'd have been ſufficient; but Nehemiah, inſtead of cauſing the Treaty to be ſign'd by the Sanhedrim, aſſembled three different Bodies; the Deputies of the High Prieſts; thoſe of the Levites, and thoſe of the People. This was an Eccleſiaſtical and Political Aſſembly (as the Councils in France were during the Second Race of their Kings) which had no manner of relation to the Sanhedrim, and whoſe place of Reſidence was to be fix'd and perpetual. Joſephus, cou'd never have forgot a Matter of Fact of ſuch great concern as was the eſtabliſhing of an Infallible Tribunal, and of the Great Synagogue: And his profound Silence wou'd be conſtrued as an Injury done to the Nation.

X. Some pretend that the Sanhedrim was not eſtabliſh'd till the time of Alexander the Great; becauſe that Name is Greek, and the Greeks being then Maſters of Judæa, 'tis very probable they were the firſt occaſion of that Eſtabliſhment. It is indeed very odd, to look into the firſt Centuries of the Jewiſh Church for the Original of a Council, the Name of which is Greek; and nothing in the World is † a harder task for the Jewiſh Maſters, than to find out the meaning of a Word in their Tongue that is not derived from it. They fancy that in it is comprehended the Duty of Judges, who above all ought to hate Preſents, and to have no reſpect of Perſons. 'Tis alſo a hard matter to find the Hebrew Name of that Council before Alexander the Great; whereas all thoſe Difficulties vaniſh, by acknowledging that the word is borrow'd from the Greeks, who cou'd never have taken it from the Caldæans or Syrians ||. To this purpoſe Livy * obſerves, that thoſe Senators, whom the Macedonians truſted with the Adminiſtration of their Government, were called Synedrii, from whence came the

Name

Name of Sanhedrim. This more may be added, that Ariſtotle had ſaid long before the Roman Hiſtorian's time; that Alexander had us'd to call thoſe Judges Synedrii, whom he had appointed to take place in Council.

XI. Pompey having conquer'd Judæa, Gabinius was oblig'd to make War againſt Alexander the Son of Ariſtobulus, and having defeated the Rebel, he conducted Hircanus back again to Jeruſalem to take care of the Temple, Prieſt-hood and Religion. In the mean while he divided Judæa into five Parts, and eſtabliſh'd a Sanhedrim in every Juriſdiction; One at Amathus, another at Jericho, the third at Sephora, a Town in Galilee; the fourth at Gadara; and the conſiderableſt of all was kept at Jeruſalem. Here we find the Names to be the very ſame, and this is the firſt time that Joſephus * has mention'd the Sanhedrim. The Council ſetled by Gabinius at † Jeruſalem, was compoſed of the Chief Men of the Nation, to whom he gave the Adminiſtration of Affairs. This Council was inſtituted to reſtore publick Tranquility, which had been before diſturb'd by Alexander, and to bring that Commonwealth into good Order again; and as among the Jews Civil and Eccleſiaſtical Affairs were always confounded together, ſo this Tribunal took cogniſance of all manner of Cauſes, whether Eccleſiaſtical, Civil, or Criminal.

XII. I was dazl'd at this Conjecture of mine, while I was writing the Firſt || Book of this Hiſtory. But I have found ſince, that it was neither new, nor ſolid; it is in Petavius, * and it may be overthrown by theſe three material Difficulties. For 1. how can any body conceive that a Council of ſo freſh a Date, and inſtituted by a Roman Governour, cou'd in ſo ſhort a time have acquir'd ſo large an Authority both in the Nation and Church? for a few Years after its Eſtabliſhment, and in J. CHRIST's time, this Council took cognizance of all Matters of Religion. There is hardly any mention made of thoſe other Councils ſetled by Gabinius; becauſe they had little Power given them, and were of a ſhort duration; whereas every body paid profound reſpect and veneration to the Great Sanhedrim of Jeruſalem; and from it came all Orders and Conſtitutions any ways relating to the Temple, Sacrifices, and Worſhip of God. Can one fancy, that Gabinius had eſtabliſh'd this Eccleſiaſtical Court; or that being at its firſt beginning but a kind of Civil Juriſdiction ſetled by that Governour, it ſhould in ſo ſhort a time have changed its Form, and judg'd of all Points of Religion, and of Eccleſiaſtical Matters? But 2. The Sanhedrim was very well known in the time of the Chaldee Paraphraſt, who is believed to have been before J. CHRIST for he makes uſe of that Name. † The LXX. Palms are called the 70 Sanhedrims. He ſays that Boaz ſtood at the Door of the Sanhedrim; that word muſt needs have been of an antient Standing among the Jews, ſince it was commonly uſed. Beſides, Gabinius made five Sanhedrims in Judæa, and we look but for one; conſequently this cannot be the Inſtitution of the Great Council ſo famous among the Jews; and Gabinius acted only in imitation of what he had ſeen at Jeruſalem, and multiply'd Councils in order to have Juſtice done with more Eaſe and Expedition. There was beſides a Political Reaſon for it, for by multiplying of Councils their Authority was leſſen'd, and the People were the more eaſily kept in awe, by putting over their heads Wiſe Men in the reſpective Parts of the Country.

This Council appears in the time of the Maccabees; either Judas or Jonathan were the Inſtitutors of it; but 'tis more likely the latter was the firſt Founder.

XIII. Do but read the Hiſtory of Jonathan in the Firſt of the Maccabees ||, and you will find there, 1. His Election by the Votes of Judas's Friends, there being then no Set form of Government. The principal Officers that had ſerved under Judas, made choice of a new General. 2. That General called the People ſeveral times together, and it was by the advice and conſent of the People aſſembled that he refuſed the Advantageous * Offers that Demetrius made to the whole Nation. 3. But when the ſame Jonathan did ſend Letters to the Lacedemonians to procure an Alliance with that Republick, his Letters were in the Name of the † High-Prieſt, the Senate, Prieſts, and People. There the People and the Prieſts are named; and alſo a Senate, and the High Prieſt at the Head of it. It is then a very eaſy matter to diſcover what ſort of Government the Jews had at that time; for in all publick Affairs of Moment the People and the Prieſts were Summon'd. At the Head of this Aſſembly was a Senate, and at the Head of the Senate was the High Prieſt, Tributary to the Kings of Syria, of whom he deſired to be confirm'd in his Office when he could not otherwiſe avoid doing it; how ready ſoever he was to ſhake off that Yoke, as often as the frequent Revolutions in Syria cou'd permit it. 4. The People choſe Simon to fill up Jonathan's Place; but the Council was ſtill in Being. And the Letters ſent into Egypt under Hircanus his Pontificate, in order to oblige the Jews to keep the Feaſt of Tabernacles, and of the Purification of the Temple, were written in the name of the People who lived in Jeruſalem, of the Senate and of Juda. The Senate was then Standing, and in their Name were written all Letters ſent to foreign Countries.

XIV. It muſt however be own'd that there are great Difficulties about this laſt Letter of the Senate of Jeruſalem; becauſe neither Juda, a Prince of the Nation in Judæa, nor Ariſtobulus, Tutor to the King of Egypt, were known at that time. The Latin Interpreter, who has chang'd the date of this Letter, as if it were written in the Year 108. according to the Æra of the Seleucides, with an Anticipation of fourſcore Years, is of no avail at all; becauſe at that time there was neither ſuch a Judas at Jeruſalem, nor ſuch an Ariſtobulus in Egypt. Some Authors are of Opinion that Judas, who Signed the Letter, was the firſt of the Maccabees; and becauſe he was dead many Years before, they pretend that the Date of 188 ought to have been put at the end of a Letter which preceded. But this Conjecture is manifeſtly falſe; for the Year was commonly ſet down at the top of all Letters, and that cuſtom muſt not be altered.

If any body has a Mind to correct the Date which the Latin Interpreter has chang'd, he muſt read in the Year 148. wherein Judas did celebrate the Purification of the Temple the 25th of the Month Caſleu, or the 7th of December; and that Correction takes off all manner of Difficulty. But in that caſe the Inſtitution of the Sanhedrim muſt be plac'd at the time of Judas Maccabeus. But if this Conjecture be not accepted, there are two other things that might be further

further alledged; One, that Juda, whose Name is seen at the top of this Letter, was Aristobulus the Son of Hircanus, who sometimes took that Name, as is testify'd by Josephus. His Name is indeed set down after that of the Senate; for tho' he was not High-Priest, nor had the Rank and Authority of his Father; however, he was considerable enough to have the Command of the Army. Rupert puts in this place one Judas an Essene, whom they made a Prophet, because sometime after he foretold Antigonus's Death; but to be a Prophet was not a sufficient qualification to sign the Senate's Letters: He must besides have a rank of Distinction, as Judas the High-Priests Son, and the Head of the Nation. Moreover, Aristobulus was at that time living in Egypt, and tho' not then Tutor to the King, yet he might keep that Title, because he had been in that post, which was a great honour to him. 'Tis needless to dwell any longer upon all these difficulties; because what has been said was only out of a design to render the History of the Jews as plain as possible. And in the History of the Maccabees we plainly see a Senate; for there was at that time a Reason which made that establishment necessary; because the Maccabees changing the nature of the Government, wanted the content of the People, or at least a Body that represented them, that they might act with more Authority; and tho' they did not then assume the Title of Kings, yet however they would have their Resolutions Authenticated by a Council.

XV. The Jewish Doctors ascribe to that Senate a form which is not very likely, because it is grounded upon a false supposition, that this Council being establish'd by Moses, continued under the Judges and Kings, and during all the time that their Republick lasted. They say that the King could not be elected one of the Senate, because it is not allowed to contend with him; the High-Priest himself was never admitted into that Council, but when his Merit procured his Election. However, it can hardly be believ'd, that the Chief Men both in Church and State should not have a Right to set therein; for we find that the High-Priest was always in that Assembly; but we no where read in Scripture, that the Imposition of Hands was any ways necessary to have him installed in that Place.

The Maccabees, who had instituted that Council, would not to be sure exclude themselves from it. I do not doubt therefore but the High-Priest was by his Dignity born President of that Council. Some in the room of the Prince have substituted || a Father of the Senate; but that is a Chimerical Dignity.

The Senate was made up of Priests and Lay-men; and as they made choice of those that were distinguished for their Learning in the Law, and the Scribes being the Principal Doctors of it, they must needs have had a Right to sit therein. I can't imagine how this * can be disputed, since St. Luke observes, that St. Paul being brought before the Sanhedrim, the Scribes, who were there together with the Saducees and Pharisees, declared for him. One must shut his Eyes very hard not to see them in that part of Sacred History. To make them but simple † Assessors or Registers, is imposing a meer Conjecture for Matter of Fact; for they had their Vote in the Senate, seeing they stood for St. Paul; Act. 23. 9. they were also sufficiently qualify'd to take place in it, since they were learned and skilfull in the Law, and that none but such were commonly chosen.

XVI. Some Writers suppose || that all these Senators were of David's Family, because of the Authority given them in the Talmud, to judge the Tribe, the King, the False Prophet, and the High-Priest, but this Fact is utterly false, since most of the Judges were Priests. * Examination was made of the Age, Manners, Trade and Profession of the Candidate who was to be admitted into so Venerable a Body; Gamesters, Usurers, those that taught Pigeons to fly, were rejected. They would never admit Eunuchs, Old Men, nor those that had not Children, because they were supected of being Cruel or hard-hearted. There were three Secretaries elected; One to write the Sentences of those that were Absolved; the Other had Condemnations under his care; and the Third was appointed to enter in the Books the Pleas of the contending Parties. There were besides three different Classes of Candidates to be instructed; and in case of vacancy, the Place was immediately given to the Senior. It is however affirmed by some, that from them the † Judges of Inferiour Courts were preferr'd, as being skilful in Judgments

XVII. Sentences of Death, if we may believe the Jewish Doctors, were pronounc'd and past with the utmost caution and exactness; for after the Witnesses were heard, and the Matter in question decided, the Judge did put off the Sentence till the next Morning. Then the Judges went home, Eat but little, and Drank no Wine. They met again two by two, in order to weigh all the particulars of the Tryal. Next Morning he that had past the Sentence of Condemnation, had power to Absolve; but he that once had delivered his Opinion for Absolving the Criminal, cou'd not afterwards alter his Mind. As soon as the Judge had pronounced the Sentence, the Malefactor was conducted to the Place of Execution about Sut setting, an Herald going before on Horse-back, and crying out such a one is condemned for such a Crime; but if any Body can alledge any thing in his behalf and defence, let him speak. If it happened that any Body came to the Gate of the Court, the Door-keeper made a sign to the Herald to bring back the Malefactor; two Judges standing by his side to receive what he cou'd say for himself, and to consider whether it was any thing material *; and if it prov'd so, the Prisoner was sent for five different times.

XVIII. These Formalities are indeed described in the Misnah; but were they not contrived since, with a design to recommend the Justice and Equity of the antient Jewish Tribunals? For besides that, no other Nation ever has observed such cautious Formaties, so favourable to those that were found Guilty; there is not the least mention of it in Sacred History. They that suppose the Sanhedrim to be instituted soon after the Deliverance out of the Captivity of Egypt, would do well to find those Rites if they can, either in the Law, or in the Practice of that Nation; but I believe they are not to be found in any part of History; whereas Matter of Fact, and Maxims directly contrary to them, are to be met with in the Talmud. A Prisoner being conducted to the Place of Execution, declared upon Oath, that he was Innocent; and for a confirmation, the false † Witnesses recanted; but the Judges would not take any Notice of their Retractation, and said only, Let the false Witnesses perish, but a Judge cannot recall his Semence when it is once past and pronounced.

I. THE Antient Jewiſh Church never pretended to Infallibility : It has been only a preſent made by Chriſtians to the Sanhedrim, that they might have a Foundation for their own. In the XIIth Century Maimonides ſpoke in very plain terms againſt his Church's Infallibility ; for, ſaid he, if the Sanhedrim is in an Errour, and the People fall into Sin by following their deciſion; in that caſe the Sanhedrim is obliged to offer up a Sacrifice to expiate their own Sin, and that of the People, when they come to know their Errour. It will be ſufficient to obſerve, 1. That that Honourable Council was not of great Antiquity among the Jews : Then how cou'd the Maccabees confer upon it an Infallibility which they had not themſelves ; or how did the Church come by that Privilege, ſince it had been without it for ſo many Centuries? The ill uſe they made of it in JESUS CHRIST's Condemnation ſhou'd perſuade Chriſtians to reject with Abhorrence ſuch a carnal and imaginary Prerogative. Had not the Jewiſh Doctors Grounds to ſay, as well as the Biſhops of our Age, the Church has pronounced ; the Matter in hand is decided ; the Tribunal that gives the Judgment is infallible ? Tho' 'tis a Matter of Faith, this is not a diſpute upon a Matter of Fact, but of Right. The Judgment is ſo formal, that there is no queſtion made about the different Senſes it can bear. J. CHRIST is condemned ; he dies by virtue of that Condemnation. Had the Sanhedrim been infallible, they ought to have Sign'd his Condemnation ; for the Church had pronounced it. They may, as much as they pleaſe, call this a Jewiſh Argument, it undermines and wholly overthrows the Infallibility of the Church ; ſince J. CHRIST appeared at the bar in an humble manner, deſpiſed of Men ; and there was no other Tribunal that could judge of the Truth of his Doctrine and Miracles. Some ſubtile Jews have taken advantage of this Liberality of the Chriſtians, and have of late held that Infallibility did belong to their great Council.

II. They aſcrib'd to the Sanhedrim a Power to judge Kings ; but beſides my Remarks on this Matter againſt the Learned Schickard, who has amply and fully treated of it, I don't ſee when this Authority cou'd have been employ'd ; ſince this Council was inſtituted but in the Maccabees's time, and the Gemariſts aver, that this Privilege was aboliſh'd in Alexander Jannæus his Reign. That Prince being cited to appear before the Sanhedrim *, to give an account of one of his Officer's behaviour, wou'd ſet down ; but Simon the Son of Scerah commanded him to ſtand up. Alexander deſired it might be put to the Vote ; whereupon every one of the Senators look'd down upon the Ground and durſt not give his Vote. Simon in a Paſſion threat'ned them with a ſpeedy Death, and his Threat was put in execution by the Angel Gabriel who deſtroy'd them all. But leſt ſuch Misfortunes ſhou'd befall them for the future, the King neither judges, nor is judg'd. So the interval of this pretended Authority over the Kings ſhou'd have been very ſhort. 'Tis to no purpoſe to bring for an inſtance, that Herod appear'd before the Sanhedrim as a Criminal, for he was then but Governour of Galilee ; and when he came to be King, he caus'd all the Senators Throats of that great Council unmercifully to be cut, excepting only Sameas who had made an atonement for his Crime, by perſuading the People to open the Gates of Jeruſalem to that Uſurper : but the High-Prieſt had not the ſame Privilege that the King had ; for the High-Prieſt judges and is judged ; which ſhews that he was not look'd upon as an infallible Judge, nor as being above the Law.

III. The third Queſtion relating to the Sanhedrim's Authority, is, that of judging of Life and Death. No body denies them that Power before that Judæa was ſubdued by the Romans ; but 'tis believed, that thoſe haughty Conquerors took away that Privilege from them. For it was the conſtant practice of the Romans to let conquered Nations enjoy their Temples and their Gods ; but in all Civil Matters they were bound to act in Obedience to the Laws and Orders of their Republick. Syria being conquered by Pompey obtain'd to be continued in the Privilege of being govern'd by its own Laws, by giving great Summs to his Favourite Demetrius. This was ſo great an Advantage that the City of Antioch had it ſtamp'd upon Medals, in Memory of the Favour. It aboliſh'd the Æra of the Seleucides, which had been made uſe of thitherto in all Contracts, and took a new one, which went under Pompey's Name. Cæſar deſigning to ſhew his Gratitude to the People of Antioch, for having declar'd for him aſſoon as he had got rid of Scipio, Pompey's Son-in-Law, continued them in the ſame Privilege ; and for an Acknowledgment of ſo great a Grace, they reſolved, after the Battle of Pharſalia, to eſtabliſh the Æra Cæſariana, which was anticipated two Years, by beginning it from the Year 705. as † Cardinal Noris does invincibly prove it.

Judæa ‖ was not exempted from the general Law of the Romans when Pompey ſubdued it. He gave away to Demetrius the Town of Gadara, and reſtored ſome others to Syria ; and thoſe Towns as well as Gaza, enjoyed the ſame Privilege as the Province to which they were reunited: but Judæa having neither redeemed their Privileges, nor found favour with Pompey to obtain them, loſt them. Judæa fared yet much worſe, when reduced into a Province after Archilaus was baniſh'd: So that at the time of J. CHRIST's Condemnation, the Romans were abſolute Maſters of all Temporal Juriſdiction; and all the Authority left to the Jews was only in Eccleſiaſtical Matters. The Talmudiſts own it; for they confeſs that all Authority of Judging was taken from the Senate forty Years before the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem, that is to ſay, three Years before J. CHRIST's Death. * Wagenſeil is of opinion, that there is a Miſtake in the Talmud, and that we ſhou'd read four Years inſtead of forty, becauſe they did put St. James to death a little before the War, and the Talmudiſts affirm, that this Privilege was taken from the Jews at the time when the Gates of the Temple open'd of themſelves, which happen'd four Years before its Conſumption by Fire. But this is raiſing a Miſtake where there is none; for Maimonides who wrote in the XIIth Century, ſays, that the Power of Life and Death was taken from the Sanhedrim forty Years before the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and proves it by the Authority of the Talmud. A great many Years are gone and paſt ſince that Confeſſion was made, which perfectly agrees with the Sacred Hiſtory.

Province

IV. J. CHRIST foretold to his Diſciples that they ſhou'd be Scourged in the Synagogues, and delivered up to the Governours. He diſtinguiſhes here two degrees of Perſecution. The Jews had Power to inflict Flagellation upon thoſe that violated the Law: but when they deſigned to make a more ſevere Example; then they made application to the Governours who had the Coercive Power in their hands, and deſired them to inflict a greater Puniſhment. Can one think, that if the Jews had Power to puniſh the Diſciples of J. CHRIST, they wou'd have delivered them up to the Governours, and ſent them before Pagan Judges? As they ſcourg'd in their Synagogues, becauſe they had leave to do it, and ſo they have to this Day; They wou'd likewiſe have condemned to Death if they had had Authority to do it, inſtead of waiting for the Governour's Judgment and Sentence. J. CHRIST who had made that Prediction was dragg'd † before the Governour; for it was Pilate that condemned him. The ſame Pilate had already mingled the Blood of the Galileans with that of their Sacrifices. Fadus having clear'd the Province of thoſe High-way Men and Robbers that did ravage it, condemn'd to Death Ptolomeus the Chief of that Gang. The ſame Governour did likewiſe put to Death Eleazar's Accomplices, and ſent him to Rome to be there puniſh'd as he deſerv'd. Theſe Governours never conſulted the great Council in ſuch caſes; and they were never accuſed for having aſſumed to themſelves the Power of Life and Death, and for depriving the Jews of it. In that they acted as all other Governours of Provinces, whoſe Buſineſs it was to take cognizance of all capital Crimes, and to puniſh them with Death as they deſerved.

V. Lightfoot || affirms, that the Sanhedrim had yet all its Authority; but the great Number of Malefactors and the remiſneſs of the Judges were the cauſe that it was not made uſe of at the time of J. CHRIST; But if this Council ſpar'd the Maſter, it ſoon exerted its Power upon his Diſciples, of which St. Stephen is an inſtance. St. Paul had been ſerved ſo too, had he not prevented their Sentence by his Appeal to the Emperor. Eleazar did remember that he had ſeen the Daughter of a Prieſt burnt; and 'tis written in the Talmud that Ben was ſton'd by Sentence of the Sanhedrim ſeveral Years before the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem. Another Learned Man * pretends, that the Power of judging to Death was ſtill lodg'd in the Sanhedrim; but they were bound to beg Leave of the Roman Judge for the free exerciſe of it: and where the Jews ſay in the Goſpel, that it is not lawful for them to put any body to death, it muſt be added, becauſe of the Feaſt which was a high Day, and which they cou'd not have kept after having crucify'd J. CHRIST. This laſt Argument is Cyril's of Alexandria.

VI. I can't but admire to ſee the Pains ſome People take to darken what is very clear and plain. The Jews were acted by a Helliſh fury againſt J. CHRIST; they had him in their hands, and they hazarded all by ſubmitting to the Judgment of a Pagan, who was not tranſported with hatred ſo much as they were. However, the Sanhedrim did not Condemn him; they proſecuted him indeed to Death, but durſt not pronounce the Sentence, and they juſtify their doing ſo by Saying, That it was not lawful for them to put any body to Death. A Man muſt needs be ſtrangely prepoſſeſs'd to affirm, that the Sanhedrim had Power to Sentence to Death, after they publickly confeſs'd that they had it not. Pilate had no mind to take upon himſelf the Guilt, which he found was to be contracted by condemning J. CHRIST, ſince he was willing to ſend him back to his Accuſers; Take ye him, and judge him according to your Law †. Thus he gave them leave to judge him. However, thoſe inveterate Enemies of the Meſſiah, did not preſume to make uſe of it; becauſe it was not lawful for them to put any || body to Death. They don't make here an exception to their Right, viz. Becauſe of the Feſtival, as they had done, when the Buſineſs was to enter into the Prætorium; they don't confine themſelves to the Example of J. CHRIST, who had been taken into Cuſtody in an extraordinary Juncture of time; the Confeſſion is made in general, it is not lawful for the Jews to put any body to Death: And that diminution of Authority of the Jews was according to the Cuſtom of the Romans. I don't ſee then upon what Ground this Power can be allowd them, when they themſelves ſay, it does not belong to them.

VII. St. Paul's Appeal to Cæſar forms an Argument ſo like that we have taken from the Hiſtory of J. CHRIST, that they ought never to be parted. 1. A bloody Mob dragg'd this Apoſtle before the Sanhedrim; 'tis not material to enquire into their Deſign; but the Senate having at the Bar of their Tribunal a Man infinitely hated by all the Jews, they ought to have paſt Sentence upon him, but they did not do it. 2. The Authority was ſo entirely in the hands of the Romans, that Lyſias who commanded the Garriſon took away the Priſoner from the Judges. 3. The High-Prieſt Ananias, inſtead of ſitting as Preſident at the Tryal, and giving Judgment, inſtead of appearing there as the Judge, acted as a Party; and we may eaſily believe, he did not willingly diveſt himſelf of that Authority of which he deſigned to make ſuch an ill uſe. 4. The Roman Governour was the Judge; and St. Paul having appeal'd to Cæſar, that Appeal which was made by vertue of the Laws and the dependency of the Jews upon the Romans in Civil Juriſdiction, was received, and the Apoſtle was remitted to Rome there to have his Tryal. It was not then the Puniſhment that might be juridically inflicted, but the Fury of the Jews that St. Paul wou'd prevent; and all Parties there acknowledg'd the Roman Governours, or the Prince that gave him his Commiſſion, as Judge.

VIII. However St. Stephen's Martyrdom ſeems to overthrow all that we have already alledged in this Matter. For the * Libertines that took him Priſoner, brought him to the Bar of the Sanhedrim, where the High-Prieſt, as Preſident, tendered the Interrogatory to St. Stephen, heard the Witneſſes, and they according to cuſtom threw the firſt Stone at this Martyr. But if in the beginning of the Tryal they proceeded in a regular and juridical form, at the end of it there were no formal Proceedings at all; for the Council did not judge, and the High Prieſt did not pronounce the Sentence of Death; but the Mob ruſh'd in all at once, and fell upon St. Stephen who was ſtill Pleading his Cauſe. That furious Croud dragg'd him out of the Town, and ſton'd him, I don't deny, but the Sanhedrim had the Cognizance of all Eccleſiaſtical Cauſes, and received Informations againſt the Infringers of the Law. They proceeded in that manner againſt J. CHRIST, and he was as all others brought before the Council; but the buſineſs is to ſhew that this Council juridically condemned to Death. St. Stephen's Martyrdom does not prove it; for the Council did not there pronounce the Sentence, but the Head-ſtrong enraged Mob ſeized upon the Priſoner before he had had a full Hearing; and murder'd him out of a Pang of Zeal. But that violent act, which the Governour conniv'd at, does not eſtabliſh a lawful Authority.

IX. The death of St. James, Biſhop of Jeruſalem, which is brought in as a new Argument for the Council's Authority, does entirely deſtroy it. It is left to our choice to take Hegeſippus's † account, or that of Joſephus, no matter which. We find in the firſt, that the Phariſees had placed St. James at the top of the Temple to oblige him to Preach to the People againſt J. CHRIST; but afterwards being themſelves deceived, and angry at it, they violently threw him down, and as he was at Prayers upon his Knees after ſuch a terrible Fall, a Fuller knock'd him down with his Club. I ſhall not ſay any thing againſt all this: Notwithſtanding there are in this Narration ſome Particulars which ſmell ſo rank and ſo like Fables, that it is very ſtrange, they ſhould be divulg'd by ſo Antient an Hiſtorian, or that he is to this Day ſo much credited after he has wrong'd his Judgment ſo groſsly, and ſhewed ſo violent an Inclination for Stories and Fables. However, even by that account St. James was made a Martyr by a popular Commotion; from whence no Inferences can be drawn in favour of the Council of the Jews, for in all this, there is not the leaſt mark of its Authority.

X. Joſephus || relates, that Ananus, a very ſevere Man of the Sect of the Saducees, which Profeſſion made him more untractable, called the Council together, and cauſed James, the Brother of J. CHRIST, to be condemned to Death with ſome others who profeſs'd the ſame Impiety, and contemned the Laws. The Sentence was executed and St. James Stoned. There we ſee the Council aſſembled with all the Formalities, that judges and condemns ſeveral Perſons to Death, as being the Supreme Power. But at the ſame time Joſephus takes notice of two things that entirely ruin that Authority, which the Sanhedrim uſurped; One that Ananus had taken a very favourable time for it, viz. During the interval that was between the Death of Feſtus and the coming of Albinus, both Governours of Judæa. He affirms, that the Supreme Power did belong to the Governours; but Ananus took his time when there was none in the Country for one was lately dead, and his Succeſſor was on his way to Jeruſalem. Beſides, Joſephus obſerves further, that there were Complaints made of Ananus to the Governour and to King Agrippa, for having acted againſt the Rules of the Court. Therefore this inſtance is ſufficient to make us infer, that the Sanhedrim had not then a Power of Life and Death; ſince the time of the Governour's abſence was taken for ſuch Executions, which were afterwards condemned as being contrary to Law.

XI. Laſtly the two inſtances, which Lightfoot has taken out of the Talmud are Apocryphal. It has been obſerved already, that the Jews, to whom Eleazar made the report of the Condemnation of a Prieſt's Daughter to be burnt alive, did take the report as a very uncertain Tradition; ſince it came out of the Mouth of a Child whoſe Father carried him upon his Shoulders, and was the only Evidence. The ſecond inſtance proves nothing, becauſe it proves too much; for the Sentence of Death was pronounced at Lydda after the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem: But it remains beyond queſtion, that after the taking of that great City by Titus, the Jews had no longer any Power to judge to Death. They were entirely under the Yoke of the Romans, who left in the Province but a very few wretches without the leaſt ſhadow of Authority. Lightfoot ſuppoſes, that the Sanhedrim was transferred from Jeruſalem to Japhné, from Japhné to Lydda, and from thence to Tyberias, and that's what I am going briefly to examine.

XII. The Rabbies affirm, that they have found thoſe different Tranſlations of the Sanhedrim foretold in the Cabala; and that Titus during the Siege of Jeruſalem gave leave to the Great Council to go out of it, and to form a Tribunal in a neighbouring Town. In a word, the Judges that had been Preſidents are nam'd, till at laſt removing from place to place, they came to Tyberias. This ſeems to be a poſitive Matter of Fact; therefore the Chriſtian Criticks agree with the Rabbies to defend that Syſtem.

XIII. What is alledged out of the Cabala ought to be of no weight at all, becauſe in it one may find whatever he pleaſes. The Permiſſion given by Titus, is likewiſe a Fiction. To think that the Rabbies are better verſed in their own Hiſtory, than the Chriſtians who make it their Study, is a grand Miſtake. Indeed if thoſe Sages had Monuments and Antient Chronicles, that cou'd not be look'd into but in the Synagogues, and that Chriſtians were debarr'd the Advantage of reading them, then there wou'd be ſome reaſon to grant them that Privilege. If all the buſineſs was only about ſome particular Matters of Fact, that had happen'd in the Nation ſome hundred Years ago, their Tradition might carry a conſiderable weight with it; But when examination is made of what has been done ſeventeen Centuries ago, ſurely it is a mere illuſion to pretend that Tradition has been kept pure and entire for ſo many Ages in a Nation diſpers'd all over the World, and forced to fly their Country. The moſt antient Monuments, which the Jews can boaſt of, are the Miſnah and the Talmud, and they were written long after the Deſtruction of the Temple, and corrected by ſeveral different Hands. There is

therefore no relying upon the Teſtimonies and Tradition of their Sages in Hiſtorical Matters.

XIV. Moreover it is falſe, that the Sanhedrim was transferred forty Years before the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem, ſince J. CHRIST was brought before that Tribunal, as St. Stephen and St. Paul likewiſe were ſome time after; and to prevent all cavilling, and ſaying that we quote only our own Monuments, Joſephus affirms, that this Tribunal was ſtill kept there at the time of the War made by the Romans. A general View of his Hiſtory is ſufficient to make every body believe, that this Tranſlation is a meer Fiction, and that the Senate reſided all along at Jeruſalem. If Titus had given leave to that Council to remove, and tranſport themſelves elſewhere to be ſecur'd from the diſmal effects of War, cou'd that Hiſtorian, a Jew, and full of Zeal for his Nation, have forgot ſuch a material Circumſtance? It is a contradiction to ſay, that the Senate had been transferr'd forty Years before the Deſtruction of the Temple, and to affirm that Titus granted that favour during the Siege. There is a double contradiction in it, to ſay, that the Patriarch Jochanan obtain'd that Privilege * of the Emperor in conſideration of his great Learning; for beſides that there was then no Patriarch in Judæa, if Jochanan had fill'd up that place, he died before the Siege of Jeruſalem. In a word, by the Account that Joſephus has given us of the taking of that City, we may plainly ſee, that there remained in Judæa neither a Sanhedrim, nor indeed any mark of Authority.

XV. 'Tis affirmed that the Sanhedrim's Authority extended over all the Synagogues, whether they were in Judæa or in foreign and remote Countries; and that no Appeal cou'd be made from their Sentences; becauſe a Pleading to the Juriſdiction of their Court was puniſh'd by Death. The Deputies of the Sanhedrim went from Town to Town to make choice of thoſe, that ſeem'd the fitteſt to fill up the Vacancies in their Aſſembly. At the ſame time they decided the moſt important Affairs, they even judged the Prophets; and 'tis pretended that J. CHRIST alludes to that, when he ſays, that a Prophet ought not to die out of Jeruſalem; becauſe there reſided the Tribunal, that decided about the Life and Death of thoſe who were accuſed of Hereſy, or upon the account of Religion. Alſo to the ſame Council belong'd the Power of judging the Woman charg'd with Adultery; and as her Crime diſcovered it ſelf by a wonder, it was thought that all thoſe Senators were Magicians. They made new Orders concerning Religion, which were reſpectfully received. Laſtly, it appears by the Hiſtory of the Acts, that this Council impoſed Laws, and extended its Determinations as far as Rome; ſince the Jews that lived in that great City, and to whom St. Paul addreſſed himſelf, received him favourably, only becauſe nothing was written from Jeruſalem againſt him; which ſuppoſes that the Senate wrote againſt thoſe whom it had condemned, and that their Advice was followed.

XVI. We have no intereſt to carry on in our impugning this degree of Authority. It is very natural, that as this Council was compos'd of the High-Prieſt, and the ableſt Doctors of the Nation, they ſhould rather conſult it upon new Controverſies, and receive their Deciſions, than that of others. Nevertheleſs, Joſephus obſerves, that the Heads of every Synagogue conſulted the People about the Government, and took their Advice, inſtead of going ſo far as Jeruſalem, and waiting to receive the final Determination of their Doubts from thence. The Hiſtory of St. Paul does not deſtroy this thought. For the Proceſs being begun at Jeruſalem, and this Apoſtle having appealed to Cæſar, it was natural to inform the Jews at Rome of what had happened in a buſineſs of Religion that concerned them all. The Confederacy of the Churches only requir'd that Inſtructions ſhou'd be ſent there, without our being able to conclude that it was done by Authority. The Rabbies were ſo jealous of the Sanhedrim's Power, that they extended it as far as they could; but we are not obliged to follow them exactly.

XVII. Maimonides has traced out to us the formality that was obſerved in bringing a Law-Suit before the Sanhedrim. The Buſineſs was firſt to be examined in the Inferiour Courts; if it could not be decided there, the Judges ſent to Jeruſalem to conſult the Judgment-Chamber, that ſat upon the Mountain of the Temple. From that firſt Tribunal they proceeded to that which was at the Temple-gate; And laſtly, from thence they went to the great Council-Chamber that was held in one of the Appartments belonging to the Temple; and this laſt Council determined with ſo much Juſtice and Authority, that there were no Diviſions ſeen during all the time the Second Temple laſted. Thus ſpeak the Doctors who are opinionated with their own Church. They do not conſider, that by heightening the Glory of the Sanhedrim, they do it at the coſt of Moſes, the Judges, and the Prophets, that could not under the firſt Temple prevent the Diviſions and Rebellions which ſet God at war againſt his People. Beſides, they muſt be altogether ignorant of their own Hiſtory, and of all that has been ſaid of the Caraites, of the Phariſees, of the Sadducees, and of the Eſſenes, who in the time of the ſecond Temple divided the Nation into ſo many different Sects.

I. THE Sanhedrim being brought to nothing by the Ruin of Jeruſalem, and the diſperſion of the Nation, it is probable that it was ſome time quaſh'd by ſo violent a Blow. It was difficult to preſerve or reſtore their Authority in ſo general a Calamity; but when the Jews began to breath again, they re-eſtabliſhed in every City where there were Jews, ſome Courts to determine Caſes of Conſcience, and private Controverſies: Beſides the great Council, every City had their peculiar Judges. This cuſtom was renewed, and as it was at Tiberias that the Jews began to lift up their Heads; it was there alſo that they erected a Tribunal, and this new Erection gave occaſion afterwards to have it ſaid, that the Sanhedrim had been tranſmitted to that Place. Maimonides * maintains, that there are no Houſes of Judgment, for ſo they call thoſe Juriſdictions, unleſs it be in the Holy Land, or in its Neighbourhood. It is true, they drew their Riſe from thence; but that did not hinder the eſtabliſhing of Tribunals in all Places where the Jews were. The Chriſtian Emperors have even Authorized theſe Tribunals; and Juſtinian by forbidding the Elders and Maſters to judge Differences between a Chriſtian and a Jew, or to Excommunicate in ſome Caſes, is a clear confeſſion that they had a power to do it between thoſe of their own Nation. In fine, theſe Houſes of Judgment are in being to this Day in all thoſe places where Synagogues flouriſh.

II. The Doctors † proportion their number of Judges to the importance of the Queſtions which are to be determined. They maintain, that Pecuniary Cauſes may be judged by three Perſons. Meir added to them Defamatory Cauſes; that is to ſay, as when a Man complained that his Wife was no Virgin: But the Doctors obſerving that the Puniſhment of Death was linked to Adultery, Decreed, that in ſuch a Caſe the number of Judges ſhould be multiplied; the number of three being ſufficient only for the Laſh.

Theſe three Judges alſo conſult upon the Intercalations; if they do diſagree, they add two to their number, then two more, and the Seven decide the Queſtion. They alſo lay Hands upon the Elders, tho' Judah has ordered there ſhould be Five.

Thoſe Crimes that deſerve Death are judged by three and Twenty Perſons. They || add three Orders of Diſciples, and every Order is alſo made up of three and Twenty Perſons, who hear for their better Inſtruction; but yet are conſulted with in ſome Caſes; and if the Voices be equal, the Preſident of the firſt Order gives his Vote, and his Vote is reckoned the Caſting Vote.

Laſtly, Their moſt weighty Concerns were carried to the Council of LXXI. A whole Tribe, or a falſe Prophet, could not be judged by any other Council. This is the notion that the Myſtical Doctors and Talmudiſts give of their Antient Government.

III. Joſephus * overthrows this Syſtem; for this Hiſtorian, who ought to have known the Rites of his Nation, maintains, that there was not above ſeven Judges in every City, and that then two Levites were added to each Tribunal, which made up the number of Nine.

Grotius. † has endeavour'd to reconcile Joſephus with the Talmudiſts, who are blindly followed, when the Jewiſh Laws are in queſtion. He pretends that every Counſellor had two Levites. There were then fourteen in that Aſſembly, who with the ſeven Judges made up One and Twenty; and the better to fill up the number of Twenty three fixed by the Rabbies, he adds to them two Supernumerary Judges.

IV. I know not how ſo Judicious and piercing a Critick as Grotius, could thus explain Joſephus. Is it not a down-right contradiction to add Supernumerary Judges when the number of ſeven is fixed? Beſides, where ſhall we find that Ἀρχὴ ſignifies each Counſellor? The Latin Interpreter has tranſlated it thus, I own; but ought Grotius to have followed him? This Expreſſion generally ſignifies Empire or Government. We ought not therefore to forſake this Natural meaning in pure Complaiſance only to the Talmudiſts. In ſhort, why will he have it that the number of Levites ſhould be double to that of the Judges? It agrees with good reaſon, that there ſhould be ſeven Judges of known probity to determine in Civil Matters; and that there ſhould be two Levites joyn'd to them, becauſe Eccleſiaſtical Cauſes are oftentimes mixt and interwoven with the Civil. We muſt then at this rate acknowldge, that there were but nine Judges; and to make Joſephus and the Talmudiſts agree, he had better own, that after the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem things were alter'd; and that they both ſpake acccording to what was done in their time, for nothing is more common.

V. Thoſe Tribunals were compoſed of the moſt upright and ableſt Men of the Nation. Some Rabbies ‖ affirm, that none could ſit in the Grand Sanhedrim, unleſs he underſtood ſeventy Tongues. The Chriſtians eſpouſe this Fancy; and ſome ſay, that in every particular Tribunal there ought to be two at leaſt that could underſtand ſeventy Languages.

VI. True it is, that the Jews became a little more curious after the Captivity of Babylon. Their mingling with ſtrange Nations in Chaldæa, had forced them out of neceſſity to be leſs haughty and more tractable. They learn'd their Maſters Tongue; but at the ſame time forgot their Father's; inſomuch, that they had need of Interpreters to make them underſtand the Holy Scripture, which was written in Hebrew, The Grecians being afterwards ſpread into Judæa, and the Neighbouring Provinces in the Reign of Alexander; and the Trade with Egypt, being become neceſſary and common, doubtleſs they learned Greek, ſince ſeveral Interpreters were found capable to Tranſlate in that Tongue: For the ſame reaſon they were obliged to learn Latin when the Romans came near Judæa, and ſent them Governors after their Conqueſt. And therefore we ſee that the Superſcription of the Croſs was written in Hebrew, Greek and Latin, which were the three Languages at that time known in Judæa. Conſidering that the Jews had but little commerce with other Nations, I know not why the Judges of the Sanhedrim, or of other private Tribunals, ſhould be oblig'd to learn ſeventy Languages. The Talmudiſts being uſed to triſle with numbers, would needs have ſeventy Tongues; for they believ'd there were ſeventy Judges and ſeventy Nations in the World.

their

VII. Joſephus, who ought to underſtand the ſtate of his own Nation better than thoſe Writers who flouriſh'd ſeveral Ages after, owns, that thoſe who learned to ſpeak many Tongues, were not much eſteem'd in Judæa. This ſcorn of Learning, natural to the Synagogues, who were too proud of their own Laws to ſtudy any others, continued in Origen's time *; ſince he obſerves, that the Jews of his time did not much trouble themſelves to know either the Greeks or their Tenets. This Contempt increaſed after that; for we read in the Miſnah, that it was forbidden to teach Children Greek. The Talmudiſts have ſo often confounded Hiſtory, that we can be in no doubt but that their Ignorance has been verygreat. Sedaias, one of thoſe Maſters, who is yet reverenc'd by the Nation for his profound Learning, doth not ſcruple to ſay, that Alexander divided his Conqueſts among four Perſons. He gave Rome to One Romanus, Antioch to Antiochus, Alexandria to Alexander, and Ptolemais to Arudus. What frivolous ſtuff is this! and how can we conclude after this that the Judges of every Tribunal were obliged to know, at leaſt to learn, all Languages.

VIII. The Objections made againſt us are frivolous, and I am ſurprized that ſo able a Man as Selden could be able to ſay, that Ariſtotle being inſtructed by the Jews, at his Death had recanted whatever he had taught contrary to the Law; and I wonder that he has drawn this concluſion from thence, as alſo many other learned Men have done, viz. that the Jews believe that the Philoſophers had known and plunder'd them. What matters it whether the Jews believed a thing that flatters their Pride, ſince they have built upon evident Falſhoods? Ariſtotle had ſo little knowledge of the Jews, that he confounds them with the Indian Bracmans. This is a groſs Ignorance for a Philoſopher that knew ſo many things. St. Paul born at Tarſus (where there was an Academy) and the Holy Writers may have learn'd Greek, which was then ſpoken over all the Roman Empire, without being able to draw a general Inference from thence of the Jews their Learning, nor a particular one for the Judges that took their Seats in the Sanhedrim, or in any other Tribunal: For it is ſufficient for them to be learned in the Law, and in the Jewiſh Polity.

IX. And indeed Maimonides † making an enumeration of their neceſſary qualifications, does not ſpeak of that great Learning. 'Tis true he owns, that they are not ſo exact in the choice of Perſons, when it only concerns the Juriſdiction of three Judges. But could it be poſſible that he ſhould entirely forget the ſtudy of Languages, if it had been required as abſolutely neceſſary to Magiſtrates? What was chiefly required of them was Prudence, a good Reputation, love for Juſtice, and Diſintereſſedneſs. They relate upon this Subject that R. Iſhmael had a Gardener, who brought him a Basket full of Fruit every Week. This Gardener having a Law-ſuit, came with his Fruit to his Maſter a Day ſooner than ordinary. Iſhmael ſurprized at this, demanded of him the reaſon of it. I have a Law-ſuit, ſaid the Gardener, and I hoped to pleaſe you by this. Iſhmael would neither receive his own Fruit, nor be his Judge in the Cauſe. As he walked alone by himſelf, he began to think how he might do his Servant a kindneſs; but he made this Reflection, Wo be to him that takes Preſents; for if I am ſo prepoſſeſſed in favour of a Gardener that gives me what is my own, what muſt others do? How many Judges and Magiſtrates had need to think on this, when they aſcend the Tribunal? They do not often think on any thing elſe but how they may deſerve the Preſents they have received, and how they may aſſiſt their Vaſſals and revenge themſelves of their Enemies. However, the upright Judge * takes care to make the Glory of God to reſt upon Iſrael, and the wicked Judge makes it his to Cloud and overſhadow it.

X. Law-ſuits are much in requeſt at theſe Houſes of Judgment; and it is moved as a doubtful queſtion, whether it be allowed to reconcile the contending Parties. R. Eliezar determines, that he who makes Peace, Sins, and that thoſe who bleſs the Peace-maker, Blaſpheme. Judgment † ought to pierce the Mountains. It was Moſes's Opinion. R. Juda maintains on the contrary, that both Parties ſhould be demanded whether they will agree to loſe part of their Right before they are judged; and he juſtify'd his Opinion by the Authority of Moſes and the Law.

XI. Some ‖ have believ'd that all Judges were Eccleſiaſtical; nevertheleſs Joſephus reckon'd in his time, but two Levites and ſeven Magiſtrates that were of the Laity. The Lay men now perform this Function, except it be in the poor Synagogues, where the Rabbi is alone by himſelf, and does all.

Every conſiderable Synagogue chuſes three Judges every Year by the plurality of Voices, and they generally pitch upon the richeſt and moſt honourable Perſons. Lightfoot *, having read in the Talmud that three Paſtors were choſen to gather the neceſſary Taxes, and then to diſtribute that Money, was ſo prepoſſeſſed with theſe words, that he confined there the whole Miniſtry of the Parnaſim, or Paſtors, to this Employ. There are † two ordered to gather the Collection, and a third to diſtribute what is received. It can't be deny'd but this is one of their Functions; but it is a miſtake to think it the only one. In effect they are the Parnaſims that have the care of the Synagogue, either to repair or rebuild it. They provide all things neceſſary for the Church, and chiefly for the Poor. They are Judges of all Diſputes that concern the People or Religion. They have a Power to excommunicate Rebels. In ſhort, their Authority is great in their Juriſdiction; ſince there is no Head of the Captivity, nor any Patriarch, and that all the Synagogues are become Independant.

I. IT is a ſurpriſing thing that the Old Teſtament ſhould make ſo little mention of Synagogues. The Jews were obliged to keep the Sabbath; and ſo ſtrict were they in their obſervation of it, that they durſt not gather up any Chips of Wood upon pain of Death. There were alſo other Days appointed for ſolemn Devotion. There was but one Tabernacle, or rather * one only Temple, where the Jews from all parts of Judæa could not meet every Week. God allotted ſome Towns for the Levites, whom he diſperſed throughout the whole Nation; but if he had deſigned to place one or more of them at the head of each Synagogue, he would have put them in all their Towns, inſtead of appointing certain places for themſelves. How were the Sabbaths kept, if there were neither Temples, nor any other publick Places Conſecrated for Devotion? This Objection is puzling. However, the Scripture is ſo profoundly ſilent in this Matter, that we are not able to diſcover any one of theſe Places.

II. It is true, that Aſaph complained to God, that his Enemies had ſet fire to his Synagogues; and ſince Aſaph lived in David's time, it might be concluded, that in thoſe Days there were in many parts of Judæa publick Aſſemblies. But this Pſalm ſpeaks ſo plainly of the Captivity of Babylon, that it is not eaſy to be deceived by it. To ſay † that the Prophet who liv'd many Years before, had in his view the Deſolation which was to befall the Chriſtian Church, or thoſe of the Captivity of Babylon, as ſome learned Interpreters have done; it is to forget that the Prophet here makes a Prayer to God; and can we imagine that any one ſhould make bitter Complaints to God, and beg of him in very pathetical terms, to deliver them from an Evil which is not yet come, nor will come till I know not how many Ages after?

If Aſaph deſcribes the Evils to come, as if they were already paſt, well and good; but could he ask the Deity why he had forſaken his People, ſeeing that he had not done it, nor could they fear it till ſeveral Ages after? Could he ſay to God, why doth thine anger ſmoke when he was appeaſed? Why the Temple was laid waſte, when it was actually in Being? Laſtly, why there were no more Prophets, when there were ſo many in the Reigns of David and || Solomon? We muſt diſtinguiſh Prayers from Oracles; and the deſcription of paſt Evils from the predictions of thoſe that are to come. The Learned * Bochart maintained, that Aſaph lived in the time of the Captivity of Babylon; and that he bore that Name becauſe he deſcended from that Aſaph who liv'd in David's time. If any refuſe his Conjecture, it may be ſaid, that the Title of the Pſalm was ill put, and that the Work of a Prophet tranſported into Babylon, is aſcribed to Aſaph, ſince there are many Pſalms that were compoſed, during that Captivity, whoſe Authors are not known.

III. This does not ſolve the Objection. For we ſhall be obliged to own, that there were Synagogues before the Captivity of Babylon; ſeeing that the Caldeans had burnt them during their Irruption into Judæa. We have no intereſt of our Own in oppoſing this Piece of Antiquity; Nevertheleſs we may obſerve, it is very wonderful that this ſhould be the only place in Holy Writ, which mentions Publick Places ſet apart for the Service of God. Further, the LXX Interpreters have tranſlated it thus, Let us deſtroy all the Solemnities of God upon Earth. The old Caldee Paraphraſes have kept the ſame Senſe in making the Prophet to ſay, that the Enemies of God had burnt all his Feaſts. Theodotian has follow'd the ſame Steps, and ſaid, that they had burnt the times † of God. Theodoret approves the Septuagint Verſion. St. Jerome owns, that he has tranſlated like them, and the ſame thing is found in the Vulgate. Theſe Interpreters therefore did not believe that any Temple or Synagogue had been burnt; but that the Aſſemblies that met together on ſolemn Feſtival Days were diſpers'd, and they were not ſuffer'd to celebrate them to the honour of God. If any will keep to Aquila's Verſion, which makes the Prophet to ſay, that the Caldeans had burnt the Synagogues; and ſtick to the Original word, which properly ſignifies to burn, ſince from thence the Seraphim and burning Serpents have borrowed their Name; And laſtly, if they will maintain that this Expreſſion can't be apply'd to any thing but Buildings; and that the Antient Interpreters have ſtrain'd the Prophet's words by applying them to Times and Aſſemblies; to conclude from thence that there were Synagogues, I will not oppoſe it. But it muſt alſo be own'd that the Silence of all the Writers makes the contrary Problematical; and that it is ſome ſort of Preſumption to reject the Figure which all the Antient Interpreters have found in Aſaph's Expreſſion. Perhaps it is here ſpoken of the Temple in the Plural Number, to ſtrengthen the more forcibly the Peoples Complaint; For there were certainly ſeveral places of Aſſembly in the Temple. In it were celebrated all their Feſtivals; and when that Edifice was burnt, all the Feſtivals and Aſſemblies of God ended upon Earth. This is the Conjecture of a learned Man || who believes, that the Synagogues were not eſtabliſhed till after the Jew's return from the Captivity, that they might execute the Orders given them by Ezra and Nehemiah, concerning the reading of the Law.

IV. It is alſo * ſaid, that the Jews diſperſed in the Eaſt, began to erect Synagogues, becauſe the Temple, which was look'd upon as the Centre of Religion, and the only place wherein they ought to worſhip, was deſtroy'd. Beſides, theſe private Aſſemblies became neceſſary to re-unite the Nation, and inſtruct the People in their Law, which otherwiſe would have been forgot in a ſtrange Land. It is very likely, and ſtands to good reaſon, that where ever they had the Liberty to do it, they made theſe Aſſemblies; Nevertheleſs we are not to look here for the true riſe of the Synagogues of Judæa: For firſt, the Temple being Re-built, after the return from the Captivity, the Jews had as great a Veneration for that holy Place, as their Forefathers had in the foregoing Ages. They thought it unlawful to worſhip any where elſe, and that it was to violate the Law to erect any other places of Aſſembly. The Temple of Garizim, which was look'd on as a breach made upon the antient Inſtitution, awaken'd the Zeal and Jealouſy of Ezra, multiplying of Temples and Houſes of Prayer would have been as they thought, the authorizing of Schiſm, eſpecially in the firſt Years of their return. The Neceſſity, which had cauſed little Synagogues to be ſet up at Babylon, was now at an end; ſince there was a Temple, in which all the People might Sacrifice, and be inſtructed in the Law; and that the Tribes of Judah, and Benjamin being but few in Number, and not living far from Jeruſalem, might eaſily come to it. Nehemiah's and Ezra's ſilence authorize this Conjecture. For thoſe holy Men, 'tis true, commanded that the Law ſhould be read every Sabbath-Day; but it might be read in the Temple; and if they had changed the antient Cuſtom, by ſetting up Synagogues for the reading of the Law, we ſhould have found ſome mention of it; whereas we can't diſcover the leaſt tittle concerning the Matter, not even in the Hiſtory of the Maccabees, which is of much larger extent. There are Complaints in it about the Profanation of the Sanctuary; but not one word of the overthrowing of Synagogues. The People driven out of Jeruſalem gathered together in Miſpa, where formerly ſuch like Aſſemblies had met together to make Prayers to God; but we do not find that there was any Houſe of Prayer. Alluſion is made to the cuſtom of the firſt Ages, without inſinuating that there was then any manner of Change. Could it be poſſible that Antiochus, who declared War with the Sacred Books, and burnt the Exemplaries of the Law, would have left thoſe places ſtanding in which this Law was read and taught every Sabbath-Day; For that having commanded them to be overthrown in all Judæa, the People ſhould not have once murmured at it? Perſecution generally begins with the Temples, the Aſſemblies are broke, then the Books are taken away from private Perſons; and this Deſtruction of the Houſes of Prayer always cauſes great Cries and Lamentations; for the People think all loſt from the very moment that they are deprived of the Means of aſſembling together to be inſtructed. And yet not a word is there ſaid of any Synagogue's being demoliſhed during the whole Perſecution of Antiochus, which is an evident Argument and proof that there was none in his Reign. This ſame Silence of the Hiſtorians, which ſhews that the Synagogues were unknown before the Captivity, ſhews alſo that none were erected till the time of Antiochus Epiphanes.

and

V. St. James giving his Opinion in the Council of Jeruſalem ſays, that Moſes in old times † hath them in every City that preach him, being read every Sabbath-Day. This Expreſſion has made an Interpreter go back to the firſt times, and ſay, that the Synagogues are of as antient ſtanding as Moſes; But then on the other hand St. James here uſes the ſame Expreſſion as our Saviour J. CHRIST did to ſhew the riſe of the Traditions which altered the Law. It was ſaid to the Elders; And as theſe Traditions were not ſo antient as Moſes, but had been invented by ſome Doctors that lived in the reign of the Aſmonæans, ſome few Ages before J. CHRIST, ſo we have good reaſon to believe, that the Synagogues were of the ſame Antiquity. The Zealous Traditioniſts, who made long Commentaries upon the Law, thought it a Crime to keep the People in ignorance of them, whoſe applauſe they mightily deſir'd, and inſtead of confining their Explications to Jeruſalem, where they found themſelves too much ſtreightned and limited, they carried them into every City, where they founded Oratories and Publick places of Aſſembly. Before this, private Perſons made their Prayers to God in their own Houſes, where they had places ſet apart for that Holy Exerciſe. It was generally upon the top of the Houſe that the Family, and their Friends met together to read ſome Portion of the Law, on the Sabbath Days; and when there was any Prophet in the City, the devout People aſſembled at his Houſe. This appears by the Shunamite, who was asked by her Husband the reaſon of her going to the man of God, ſince it was neither New Moon, nor Sabbath; 2 Kings 4 23. But this was not fixed, becauſe the Prophets often removed their Habitations. Thoſe that were rich, kept a Levite in their Houſes to reſolve their Doubts; Others made uſe of the Levites or Prophets that travell'd through their Country. This further appears by the ſame Shunamite, who made a little Chamber for Eliſha. After the Doctors had added their Traditions and Commentaries to the Law, the Miniſtry of Interpreters became ſo much the more neceſſary; becauſe thoſe Traditions were not written. So that the number of Interpreters and Interpretations increaſed daily: And therefore convenient places were made choice of, that the People might the better meet together to be inſtructed; and from thence in all probability it is that they derive their Synagogues. For this reaſon alſo they were call'd Houſes of Interpretation or Study, || בית המדרש which have been ſince transform'd into Schools.

The Number of Synagogues increaſed very conſiderably, becauſe they were found convenient for the exerciſes of Piety. But moſt of them were but Chappels and Oratories, wherein Companies of Tradeſmen, or private Families met. Inſomuch, that they reckon'd 460. of them at Jeruſalem.

VI. Some * Learned Men have thought that Oratories † were different from Synagogues; becauſe in the One they only made Prayers to God; and in the Others they expounded the Law. Beſides, it is ſaid, that the Oratories were put to other Uſes. Druſius || affirms, that Apples were ſold in them, and he proves it by this Inſcription:

P. CORFIDIO SIGNINO POMARIO A PROSEUCHA.

And others * Imagine, that theſe places were deſpiſed; becauſe Beggars, who ſtood at the Doors whil'ſt the People were at their Devotions, to crave their Charity at their coming out, after Service was over, got into them, and there lay.

VII. There is no mention of theſe Oratories in the Goſpel, nor in the Hiſtory of the Acts of the Apoſtles.

JESUS

JESUS CHRIST indeed says, that they made of the house of Prayer a den of Thieves; but in that was meant the Temple consecrated to Prayer. St. Luke says also, that J. CHRIST spent the whole Night in Prayer † to God. To find an Oratory in this, and to maintain that the Name of God is added by opposition to Pagan Chappels, consecrated to false Gods, is too great a refinedness and Subtility. For St. Luke only tells us, that JESUS went out into a Mountain to pray, and continued all Night in Prayer to God.

The Passage of the Acts of the Apostles which is quoted has more difficulty in it. For St. Paul coming from Philippi went to the place || where Prayer was wont to be made. St. Chrysostom believ'd, that this was an Oratory besides the Synagogue which the Jews had in the City. Grotius tells us, that the Jews having no Synagogue in Philippi by reason of their small Number in that City, or because the Magistrates would not suffer the free exercise of their Religion in it, they had an Oratory without, by the River side. This Argument may be good; but no notice is taken of the difficulty, which arises from St. Luke's words, that St Paul went to the place where Prayer was wont to be. Be and make Prayer is one and the same thing.

No body speaks thus of a Temple, or of a Place. It would be then better to say, that they usually made Prayer there. There generally was Prayer; that is to say, it was made in that place; and it was for want of Chappels that Prayer was made in an open place by the River-side; for Philo* represents the Jews who were deprived of their Chappels, running early in the Morning to the Banks of the neighbouring Rivers to pray there to God.

VIII. The Sacred Writers have not adopted this Expression of Oratories; But the Jewish Authors as Philo † and Josephus, that liv'd in their time often mention it. It would be needless to copy all those places where it is found, since they are sufficiently known. Let us only observe what the first of these Authors says, That there were a great many of these Chappels in all the Parts of the City of Alexandria; but that they were pull'd down, burnt, or made useless, by setting in them the Images of Caligula contrary to the Law. So that Oratories were known before J. CHRIST's time, and very common in great Cities; tho' the Sacred Historians have said nothing of them.

These Chappels were the same thing as the Synagogues, and I know not why they are distinguished; since there is no reason for it. They were generally || situated on the Banks of Rivers, without any Roof, in imitation of the Temple of Jerusalem; and from thence it was that the Heathens of that time upbraided the Jews, of worshipping the Heavens, and the Clouds:

*Nil * præter Nubes & Cœli Numen adorant.*

Judæus † licet & porcinum Numen adoret,
Et cœli summas advocet Auriculas.

Tertullian || placed the Oratories on the River-side, and made the Jews to pray uncovered. Lastly, St. Epiphanius * observes, that the Samaritans, who were the Jews Apes, had one of these Oratories at Sichem, or Napolousse in which they were exposed to the Sun, and all Weathers, because there was no Roof. This being the Place where they assembled to make their Devotions, no wonder that Beggars flock'd thither also. Juvenal both knew the begging Temper of the Jews, and their Oratories:

Arcanam Judæa tremens mendicat in aurem.

IX. It might happen, that some of the Poor people did lie in the Porches, and under the Galleries of the Oratories, as round the outward Court of the Temple, to shelter there; But it was not the Habitation of Beggars, as Turnebius has thought, neither could it be so; because the Doctors prohibited Sleeping † in Synagogues. If the Sages have permitted Eating and Drinking in them, it must have been in pure Devotion, the Evening before the Day of Propitiations; and this Exception confirms the general Prohibition. But above all, it is ridiculous to look upon them as places wherein Apples were Sold. Drusius's Inscription does not prove it: It only shews the Religion of Corfidius, who was a Jew, and a Fruiterer; but it does not argue that he Sold his Apples in the Oratories:

Ede || ubi consistas, in quâ te quæro Proseuchâ.

X. The Government of the Synagogues has been often chang.d In our Saviour's time they were regulated by a certain number of Doctors, more or less, proportionable to the Wealth of the Cities, and number of the Inhabitants. There were one or two Persons set over these Doctors; the President, and Vice-President, were call'd the Chiefs of the Synagogue. Lightfoot * gives this Title to three Persons who were set over ten Leaders. 'Tis also from thence that the Christian Church has taken its Discipline; For in the beginning of every Church, there was a certain number of Priests ordered, proportioned to the Number of Christians. When the Cities were large, as Jerusalem and Rome, they placed two Bishops in them: as in other places there were several Heads of Synagogues. But most of the Christian Churches had but one Bishop, as most of the Synagogues had but one Head. There was no other difference put between Bishops, and Priests, but that of Presidency, which was given to Age and Merit; and therefore the Names of Bishops and Priests are so often confounded in the Gospel, as well as among the Jews. All the Doctors † that took care of the Synagogue, were of the same Order, and held the same Rank. In following this Original of Discipline, which is Natural, since the Jews, jealous of their Rites, laid the Foundation and Peopling of the first Churches; It is easy to take off the Objections against Episcopacy, which would become very difficult, by following other Principles. It seems that the Christian Church hath also borrow'd from the Jews even to their very Names: For that of Apostles, which were the Patriarch's Officers, was not known till after the Destruction of Jerusalem. The Jews had also a Bishop, who was call'd the Angel of the Assembly; and this Angel took care to see that the Service of God was not neglected: He presided over the Reading, and the performing of all other Ceremonies. For this reason St. John in his Revelation censures the Angel of Thyatira, and the Angel of Smyrna, because those Bishops had neglected their Duty. The Conjecture of a Divine || who believes, that St. Paul alluded to that Pastor of the Church, when he ordered the Women to be cover-

XI. The Talmudists * after their old manner stretch finely, when they give the description of the Synagogue of Alexandria. For they maintain that there were in it seventy Gold Chairs, set with Precious Stones, in which the LXX. Elders sate; and that every Trade had their particular Benches. So that any Stranger who came in, went directly and placed himself among those of his own Calling. Philo ascribes this Practice to the Essenes, whereof the greatest number resided in Egypt. For they took place according to their Age, and there was a partition-wall between the Men and the Women, for fear least their sitting together should cause some Disorder. The Christians also followed this Custom in their Assemblies; for St. James † in his time upbraids them with their distinction, What man, says he, that has a gold Ring, comes in to the Synagogue, that is, the Church, you say unto him sit here in a good place, but to the poor, you say, stand thou there. The Clerk was charged with this Distinction, and there were even at that time Benches for Persons of Quality, but the Poor were forced to stand.

XII. Benjamin of Tudela ||, who in the Twelfth Century, ran over most of the Synagogues of his Nation; describes that of Damascus governed by a Senate, at the head of which were two Chiefs. There was Ezra, and his Brother Sarchalom; the one Chief, and the other Prince of the Senate. There was Matsliah the Preacher, and Joseph the first of the Consulters: He reckons even ten that performed different Functions in that Senate, to whom belong'd the Knowledge of all Controversies and Scruples.

The Synagogue * of Lunel was also governed by nine; There were among them five Brothers, Children of a famous Rabbi, one of whom Studied the Law Night and Day, and eat no Meat. This Senate was so Charitable as to keep all those that came to Study there. There were two Synagogues upon the Sea-side at Marseilles; whereof the One was governed by three Rabbies, the Other by four. I take notice of this, that none may imagine the Senate was always fixed to a set Number, either of five, seven, or ten Persons. Their Number was more or less, according to the Cities, and the Number of Jews that dwelt in them. For this reason the same Benjamin, speaking of some Synagogues that were very poor in Egypt sets but one Doctor over them. Most of the Synagogues in the East were oblig'd to beg the Ordination of their Rulers from the Chief or Head of the Captivity; and this was the most considerable Alteration that was made in the Antient Government known by the Gospel.

XIII. There is now a distinction made between the Judges and Doctors. In every Synagogue there is one or more Rabbies that are call'd by the name of More, or Doctor, preferably to that of Rabbi, especially in Italy; Besides this, there is a Court of Justice, or a Senate made up of some of the most considerable People of the Nation. Whereas the Antient Senate was form'd of Doctors of the same Rank and Order, that both taught the Nation, and judg'd their growing Differencies; these two Functions have been since divided. The Rabbi is sometimes call'd into the Senate, but this is done only when they design to Honour him, or when a Dispute arises about some Point of the Law. The Rabbi receives Wages of the Pastors, call'd Parnasim; but these last have nothing but the bare Honour of their calling. The Rabbi teaches, and the Parnasim judges.

XIV. The Jews put a mighty difference between the Synagogues of the Holy-Land, and those of Babylon. They still have a great Veneration for the places where the Temple or Synagogues were built, tho' they are destroy'd; because their Holiness remains for ever. But those of Babylon, and consequently of all other Countries, do not deserve the same Veneration, by reason that they have but a transitory Holiness, which will cease at the time of the Messiah, when they will be forced to forsake them to follow him. There was no Eating nor Sleeping † in the Synagogues of Judæa, excepting upon some religious Occasions where the Observation of the Law requir'd it; neither were any permitted to go into them for shelter when it rain'd; but only in those of Babylon, and that too not till after they are half demolish'd.

XV. It was an antient Custom to build their Synagogues without the Cities, and to surround them with Trees, tho' it was not lawful to do the same thing about the Temple. But it appears by the Prayers which they make in the Country-Synagogues, that Necessity obliged them to build there; for being struck with Fear of the Danger they were expos'd to, they appointed some Prayers, towards the latter end of their Services to beg of God that he would deliver them from it. And indeed they have often been so odious that they would not endure them to be in Cities.

When the Jews had more Liberty, they chose the highest part of the City for their Synagogues, and rais'd them above any House whatsoever. From thence arose some Imperial Laws which prohibited them not only to build new Synagogues; but also to inlarge or raise the Roofs of those that were already built. They think it a Dishonour to God to have his House inferiour, or so much as equal to those of Men; and threaten the City in which that happens with a speedy Desolation. However, they except Towers and Castles whose heighth is absolutely necessary, and extend their Law no further than to Private Houses.

XVI. We || shall not here offer to give a Description of the Synagogues, It will be sufficient to observe, that there was a Cup-board, in which were lock'd up the five Books of Moses; and this is the Memorial of the Arch, wherein the Fables of the Law were kept. In the midst of the Synagogue there was a Desk or Pulpit, where the Rolls were brought, whereof some Portion was to be read three times a Week; They stood upon this Desk when they read and explain'd the Law.

XVII. The Reader puts a Veil over his Head all the time he's performing the holy Office. The Jews generally went bare-headed; and we do not even find among them any Expression that denotes the usual covering of their Heads. They only ty'd their Hair with a Ribbon, and that was call'd a Crown. For this reason Ezekiel * threatning the People with a Desolation for which they should not mourn nor be afflicted, says, that Men shall have their tires upon their heads. Thus our Interpreters have translated it; and Grotius following the same Notion, repreſents the Jews as Travellers, who provide themſelves with Hats to keep them from the Sun: But in the Original it is, You ſhall have your Crowns. And the Jews Misfortune is repreſented by that, becauſe inſted of having their Heads cover'd, as it was uſual in the time of Mourning, they ſhould then be ſeen array'd as in the time of Proſperity. And indeed they were never cover'd, but during the time of their Affliction, or when they read the Law; following thereby the Example of Moſes, and the antient Prieſts, who commonly officiated with their Heads cover'd. Joſephus alſo obſerves, that they took a great deal of Care in adjuſting their Caps, or Turbants on their Heads, for fear leſt they ſhould fall during the Service; and Maimonides, explaining the Traditions of the Fathers upon the Pontifical Dreſs, does not forget the Turbant wherewith they cover'd their Heads. The Jews of Italy, † Germany, and Arabia, do now cover to this Day their Heads in their Synagogues; but this Covering is different from the Veil, uſed by him that reads the Law.

I. BEſides the Houſes of Judgment, and the Synagogues, there are Academies, which the multiplicity of Laws, and contradiction of the Doctors render abſolutely Neceſſary. They are often Confounded with the Synagogues, becauſe they are join'd together; and even Lectures are read in the ſame Places where the People meet for Divine Service. They are not diſtinguiſhed one from the other; but where they are rich enough to have different Houſes and Appartments.

The Jews make Adam their firſt School-Maſter, and ſay, that God gave him an excellent Book, for his and others Inſtruction; that He took it away after his Sin and Fall; and reſtor'd it again to Adam upon his Weeping and being Penitent. That God alſo gave him an Alphabet, the Letters whereof had been engraven round his Crown from all Eternity *. That Enos, under whom many gather'd together to call upon the Name of the Lord, Geneſ. 4. 26. taught thoſe of his Communion their Catechiſm and Religion. That Noah alſo kept a great School; and wrote the Hiſtory of the Creation of the World. The Chriſtians are not much more reaſonable than the Jews as to this Point; for one of them † affirms, that the Rephaim, that is to ſay, the Giants, were the Reſtorers of Piety; that they made Lectures upon it, and had eſtabliſh'd their Academy in the City of Aſhtaroth, the Capital of Og King of Baſhan, which was the City of Uz, where Job liv'd, and taught. That Melchiſedec had his Academy in the City of Books, or Kiriath-Sepher. That Abraham who was inſtructed by Heber, taught in Caldæa; but he ſet up a School of Diſpute in Egypt. That he propoſed ſeveral Theſes to the Learned of that Country, upon which they raiſed ſeveral Arguments. They look'd on him as a great Maſter; and for that reaſon, they made no Scruple of ſitting under his Feet, and Learning Aſtronomy of him. His Grandſon Jacob, who improv'd by his Learning, kept School alſo; for the Scripture ſays, || that he was a plain man dwelling in Tents; but the Caldee Paraphraſt * has tranſlated it thus, Jacob was a perfect Man, and a Miniſter of the houſe of Doctrine. He was then Uſher to ſome School, while Eſau went a Hunting; and by following the Original, the Rabbies conclude, that thoſe Tents were the Schools of Heber and Melchiſedec, which Jacob held after thoſe great Men.

Of all theſe Notions there is but one worthy our taking notice of, which is, that Joſhua found in Canaan a City call'd Kiriath-Sepher, or the City of Books, which looks like an Academy, wherein there was a Library. The Jewiſh Doctors, who are uſed to enlarge upon all that they handle, affirm, that indeed this City was call'd Daber, when the Perſians were Maſters of it; but the Jews having conquer'd it, Othoniel preferr'd it above all others, for teaching there, and gave it the Name of the City of Books.

But I can't imagine to what purpoſe the Perſians are brought in here, for they were not ſo much as known at the time of the Conqueſt of the Holy-Land; neither do I conceive why they make Othoniel to change the Name of this City; ſince it was the City of Books, long before Moſes appear'd; which proves that there were Books of older ſtanding than this Law-giver, and that he was not the moſt antient of all the Writers, as the Fathers of the Church would have it. The Canaanites it may be lodged their Records in this City with their Regiſter-Books, and thoſe few antient Monuments which they had left; or ſuppoſing they had an Academy there, what is that to thoſe of the Jews which we look for, and which are of a newer Date?

II. It

II. It was in Samuel's time that the Schools of the Prophets appear'd; and since the Scripture does not mention them till his time, who was both Judge and Prophet in Israel, we may venture to conclude that he was the Founder of them, or at least that they were not long before him. Abravanal gives grounds for this Conjecture, by observing that the Spirit of Prophesie was almost decay'd under the Ministry of Eli, and that it reassum'd its strength under Samuel: But he spoils all again that he said, in proving that by those Words of the Holy Scripture, God appeared most in Shiloh; and by imagining that the Virtue of the Holy Ghost is like the Sun, which darting against the Wall by reflection, heats and scorches other Places. He pretends, that Revelation being too abundant for Samuel, over-flow'd upon others, who sharing in this Advantage, Prophesied like him. This Rabbi gives a false Notion of Grace, and of the Schools of the Prophets, and is thereby in the wrong.

III. And indeed it is not to be imagined that all those who frequented those Schools became inspired Men, or were able to foretel what was to come. It is Kimki's fancy, who deplores the loss of the Oracles of all those Prophets, because they were not written; but at the same time he makes of Prophesie an Art, or rather a Human Science, and deprives it of all that is Miraculous and Divine. It is more likely, that the Prophets brought up their Youth, by teaching them to explain the Law, and to serve God by a frequent practice of Devotion. Some pretend * that they reveal'd to their Scholars the future Events, after they had received them from God; but they took more especial care to inform them of the time of the Messiah's appearing, his Death and Resurrection; but this is too Christian like. These Scholars † rather compos'd Psalms and Spiritual Songs after an Enthusiastick manner. Others were but Ministers and Servants to the Prophets. To conclude, some of them became Prophets themselves: But God did not fix his Inspiration to these Schools, for we find that few of the Prophets, whose Writings are extant, came from these Colleges.

IV. St. Jerome out of these Prophets has made so many Monks, because most commonly they went and seated themselves on the Banks of the River Jordan, and far from Cities in the Desarts, where they liv'd upon Pulse and Herbs. And indeed we find those Sons of the Prophets in the time of Elisha complaining that they were too much straiten'd in the Places where they lived, and begging leave of him to go to the Banks of Jordan, there to make every one a Habitation to dwell in. One would think by this that they were in a Monastery, in which every one had his Cell. Some also kept their Virginity, but that state of Life was not absolutely enjoyn'd them, because we find that || a certain Woman of the Wives of the Sons of the Prophets cryed unto Elisha. It is certain that they were obliged to live under a very Austere Discipline in that Retirement.

V. There are ordinarily reckon'd but two of these Schools, the One at Bethel, the Other at Jericho; but the Rabbies, who are used to multiply what is for their Advantage, maintains, that there were some of them in all the Cities of Judæa. A * learned Christian erects one upon Mount Carmel, where Elijah was the Chief: and I think him in the right, because that Mountain, which was cover'd with Trees, was fit for such a Retirement. Elijah was often there, and it is not likely he dwelt on it by himself: Besides, Elisha went back to that Place after the Death of his Master without doubt to see the Youths whom he had left there, and was still willing to continue his Lectures to them. But because those Schools of the Prophets did not last always, for none were seen after the Destruction of the First Temple; therefore we can't say that those were the Academies which we are in search of.

VI. At Jerusalem the † Jews taught in the Temple, since it was there that J. CHRIST sitting in the midst of the Disciples, explain'd the Prophet Isaiah. They also taught in the Cities of the Levites; at least we may think with a great deal of reason, that those Cities were as so many Schools in which Masters vers'd in the Law, expounded it to the Children, and that it was for this reason that they paid Tithes, not only to the Priests Ministring in the Temple, but also to the Levites that kept School in the Towns allotted to them. Lastly, they taught in other Cities; for it is apparent, that Gamaliel had a School, and that St. Paul was brought up at the Feet of that great Master.

VII. The Principal Academies were erected after the Destruction of the Second Temple, either by this means to supply the Sanhedrim and Courts of Justice, whose Jurisdiction was quite extinct, or else to preserve the Law and Traditions, that were in great danger of being lost through the dispersion of the People, and Destruction of the Temple. Jerusalem being the Centre of Religion, and the Body of the People flocking thither Yearly, to perform the weighty Matters and Ceremonies of the Law, it was almost impossible they should forget it. But this Succour failing, together with the Succession of the Priest-hood, by the Destruction of the Temple, it was convenient to seek some Remedy for the Cure of so great an Evil; and none was found more effectual than the erecting of Academies, in which the People might be taught the Religion and Laws that they were to observe for the future.

VIII. It is said || that the first of these Academies was at Japhné, which was afterwards call'd Ivelyn, and whether the Sanhedrim had been transferr'd before the Destruction of Jerusalem. But we have already shew'd the falshood of this Translation, which was only devised to prevent our believing, that this Venerable Council, was bury'd under the Ruins of Jerusalem. There is perhaps as little ground to say, that there was an Academy in it, where Gamaliel St. Paul's Tutor taught.

The famous Jochanan had a School in the same City, or at least in the Neighbourhood of it; but seeing he was there the Chief of that Great Council, how came he to humble himself so far as to keep a School? He is suspected to be the same John of the Priestly Family that sate in the Council held against the Apostles; and who seeing that it was impossible to deny the Miracles which J. CHRIST had wrought, forbad the Apostles to speak any more in his Name. If this be true, it is false that the Council was then at Japhné, and that Jochanan, who resided at Jerusalem with the other Priests, should be the Chief of the Academy of that Place. It is also said, that he dy'd in an Unbelief unworthy to be Chief of an Academy, or of Religion: For his Disciples perceiving him to cry upon his Death-bed, and asking him what was the Cause of his shedding so many Tears, he ingenuously own'd that the uncertainty of his Salvation or Damnation had brought him to that dismal Condition. " If * I had to do

There " are two ways; the One leads to Heaven, and the " Other to Hell, and I know not which I am going " to take.

IX. At the ſame time there was another Academy at Lydda which was St. Jerome's Dioſpolis. It was there that St. George delivered a King of Libia's Daughter: But I fear this is the Hiſtory of Perſeus, who delivered Andromeda in the Neighbouring City of Joppa, and was taken by the Chriſtians out of Ovid's Metamorphoſis, and put into their Legend. The famous Akiba was one of the Profeſſors of this Academy; but Gamaliel turned him out from that to Japhné, atd took his place. But after his Death Tarphon appeared, who ordered a Faſt for him.

X. The moſt conſiderable Academy in Judæa at that time, was that of Tiberias. It is a ſtrange thing that the Reſidence of Learning ſhould be tranſported into Galilee, whoſe Barbarous Language made its Inhabitants to be known where-ever they went, as it appears by the example of St. Peter in the High-Prieſt's Court. And yet the Scholars forſook Japhné and Lydda to go and ſtudy at Tiberias, which Herod the Tetrarch had built in a Place where they before had bury'd their Dead. There it was that thoſe great Maſters, ſo much Reverenc'd to this Day among the Jews, taught. Judah the Saint, and Chanina, Jonathan and many others were there. The Miſnah and Talmud of Jeruſalem were compoſed in this Academy. Laſtly, it is pretended, that the Maſorites, who pointed the Bible, taught alſo at Tiberias.

XI. Judah the Saint did a mighty prejudice to this City, in leaving it for Sephoris or Dioceſarea, which is accounted the Native City of the Bleſſed Virgin's Father and Mother. Herod had fortify'd it, as being a fit Place to ſecure his Tetrarchy; and perhaps Judah the Saint choſe it as a much quieter Retreat than Tiberias. He Dy'd there, after he had taught in it ſeventeen Years. The Inhabitants were ſo exceſſively Afflicted for his Death, that they threatned to kill every One that ſhould dare to affirm that he was not Alive; and as the Academies are valued by their Maſters Reputation, ſo this was in great Repute for ſome Years. Benjamin of Tudela aſſures us that Judah the Saint's Tomb was ſeen in his time in this City. with that of the Prophet Jonas; but he oppoſes the Tradition of his Maſters, who ſay, that if Judah the Saint Dy'd at Sephoris, he was bury'd in great Pomp at Bethſaarim, ſo that Benjamin could not then have ſeen his Tomb there.

XII. The Jews did not fail to erect Academies in the Eaſt, in imitation of thoſe that were in Judæa. About the end of the II. Century they eſtabliſh'd one at Sora, another at Pundebita. Some time after they raiſed more at Nahardea, Machuza and Perutz Schibbur. It would be to no purpoſe to run over all the other Places where the Jews have had thoſe Schools, ſince they erected them in thoſe Places where they enjoyed the greateſt liberty. They had ſeveral in France, whither they were forced to fly for Refuge when they were driven out of the Eaſt. Benjamin of Tudela mentions that of Baucaire, at the Head of which was Abraham the Son of David, who kept his Scholars when they were Poor. They have one at Sapheta a City of Galilee, &c. They have ſeveral likewiſe in the Ottomon Empire, and eſpecially at Salonichi, which is the old Theſſalonica. We ſhall only obſerve, that tho' the Academies of the Eaſt flouriſh'd longer, and were more famous than thoſe of Judæa, yet theſe latter were the moſt eſteem'd, becauſe the Doctors that taught in them were more moderate: For Diſputes in Judæa were handled with a great deal of Mildneſs, Love and Charity; whereas thoſe of Babylon were ſharp and violent. For this reaſon, † The Doctors are put among thoſe three things which bear one another an irreconcilable Hatred. This Theological hatred is too unhappily known among Chriſtians, as well as among the Diſciples of the Doctors of Babylon.

XIII. Leo of Modena || aſſures us, that none of his Nation ever ſeek for the Doctorſhip, becauſe it is a ſhameful Vanity ſo to do. For this reaſon thoſe that pretend to that Title are never examin'd; but when they find any one learned enough to be a Rabbi, common Report declares him Doctor. We muſt not diſpute with this learned Jew about the Cuſtoms of his Nation; but it appears by this that they often change. Their Doctors and Academies are now more ſcarce, and the Profeſſion leſs profitable, ſo that they do not effect this Title, with ſo much eagerneſs as they did when it was more honourable. And indeed the Antient Maſters willing to oblige their Diſciples, who were numerous, conferr'd the Impoſition of Hands upon them, and gave them a Title as an aſſurance of their Capacity, and a Character of Diſtinction, by which they were declared Capable of Inſtructing, of Preaching and Governing a Synagogue before they were call'd to it.

XV. We have already obſerv'd that the Synagogues in the Eaſt choſe their Doctors, and preſented them to the Chief of the Captivity, who laid Hands upon them. He then had the ſame Privilege as the Biſhops of Alexandria and Rome, that ordain'd generally all the Biſhops belonging to their Dioceſſes; but the Chiefs of the Captivity being aboliſh'd, this Cuſtom has been chang'd in the Eaſt; and the Peo- People now confer, and 'tis the common Voice that declares a Doctor. In Italy and Germany the moſt Antient Doctors by word of Mouth gave the Title of Caver Rau, the Maſter's Companion, when he is a Young Man; or that of Rau when he is Aged; and that Word is their whole Ordination. Thus the School-Divines have given Power to the Pope to make a Prieſt, by ſaying, be thou a Prieſt. This has been long in uſe; for in the Talmud they ask " from whence is it known that a Prieſt was or- " dain'd by three Perſons? for Moſes was alone " when he gave the impoſition of Hands; and if he " alone repreſented the College of LXXI. the diffi- " culty would be much * greater, ſince for want " of Moſes the ſame number would be requiſite. " Moreover, they ask whether the Doctor ought " to be made by the impoſition of Hands, and to all " theſe Queſtions they anſwer, that it is ſufficient " to give the Title of Maſter to him that is advanced " to the Doctorate..

XV. By aſcending higher than the Talmud, we do not only find that they laid Hands on the Doctors; but they likewiſe gave them the five Books of Moſes with a Key, to ſhew them, that they had liberty to open the Myſteries of the Law; and they added, as we have already obſerv'd, that they had power to bind and to looſe, that is to ſay, to determine what was lawful or unlawful. A new Critick † links two things together, and believes, that J. CHRIST taking from the Jews the Ordination of the Apoſtles, and their Expreſſions, alluded to the Locks and Keys of the Antients, which were made with Cords; but J. CHRIST did not give to his Diſciples the Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven, to bind and to looſe. Theſe are two different Metaphors, which the Maſters made uſe of in Ordaining their Diſciples; and they are very natural, becauſe the Law is ſhut up to the Ignorant Vulgar, and it is that which binds or looſes Conſciences. It had been better to have obſerved, that J. CHRIST having taken from the Jews thoſe Expreſſions which ſhew'd the power of the Apoſtles, we ought to go to the ſource, to find out their true meaning. For if we will examine theſe words impartially, we ſhall find that J. CHRIST only gave Power to his Diſciples of unfolding the Myſteries of the Goſpel, which were then but little underſtood, and take off thoſe difficulties which puzled the Conſciences of many People; for that is truly the Key of the Kingdom of Heaven, and what J. CHRIST calls binding and looſing. And as the Ordination given to the Jewiſh Doctors by theſe words, did not not give them an abſolute Power to forgive Sins; ſo likewiſe we can't attribute this Authority to Prieſts, without deſtroying the alluſion which J. CHRIST made to the words of this antient Ordination.

XVI. The Power of the Doctors is great among the Jews; and they omit nothing that may draw the Veneration of the People. They repreſent themſelves as Men inſpired by God; or like the Angels of the Miniſtry; and even to that Man mentioned by * Daniel, that was clothed with Linnen, whoſe Loyns were girded with Gold of Uphaz. One of their Maxims is, that if a Child by the Law is bound to fear and honour his Father, he is yet more obliged to reſpect his Maſters †. A Child that ſees his Father and Maſter over-loaded with a Burden, or Groaning in Bondage, ought to unload his Maſter, and redeem him from Slavery, before his Father. The Phariſees under a pretence of Religion, taught Children to forſake their Fathers. This was ever practiſed. Have not ſome Religious Perſons, tho' they be Chriſtians, taken theſe Maxims from the Antient and Modern Jews, and practiſe them ſtill with the ſame cunning and Avarice?

The Doctors ‖ often equal their Power to that of God himſelf; for they tell their Diſciples, that he who contradicts and fights againſt his Maſter's Opinion, in ſome meaſure oppoſes and fights againſt the Deity; and that he who murmurs againſt a Doctor, murmurs againſt God; That he who tarniſhes his Maſter's Reputation, is the cauſe of God's withdrawing from Iſrael. Scholars are not allowed to ſalute their Maſter as other Men; but they muſt bend their Knee before him. It is a Crime to pray to God either by his Side or behind his Back. It is an enormous Sin for a Scholar to ſet up a School near to that of his Maſter's; and he that ſpits in his Face, deſerves to be puniſhed with Death. Buxtorf * has tranſlated it, he that ſpits before his Maſter. But ought the greateſt Puniſhment of all in this World to be inflicted, for having ſatisfied the neceſſity of Nature? Doubtleſs a Crime which deſerves Death is the greateſt of all; and by that is meant a publick and intolerable Affront. However, they can't carry their Authority further than to put thoſe to Death that that do not reſpect their Maſters. They formerly looked upon the Ignorant with the laſt Contempt and Scorn, and were ſo hard-hearted as to refuſe them their Arms. They alſo accounted their Death as nothing, if he had been killed by a learned Man.

XVII. The Doctors taught in a ſitting Poſture; and to that J. CHRIST alludes, when he ſays, that the Phariſees ſate in Moſes's Chair; but we cannot eaſily gueſs what was the poſture of the Scholars. There is a † Tradition, that from the time of Moſes to that of Gamaliel they ſtood; and that after this Doctor's Death, under whoſe Feet St. Paul ſate and ſtudied, they were permitted to ſit, by reaſon of a Sickneſs which then reigned, and that it was at that time that the Glory of the Law decay'd, becauſe this poſture was leſs reſpectful.

Many Doctors have believed, that Jacob had this Cuſtom in his View, when he foretold that the Lawgiver ſhould not depart from Judah's Feet until Shiloh come, and that he would thereby ſhew, that ſome Diſciples ſhould always learn the Law at their Maſter's Feet.

XVIII. I will here only obſerve two things. One, that the Jews and the Chriſtians who pretend, that Jacob made alluſion to the Cuſtom of the Diſciples lying on the Ground, are manifeſtly miſtaken; for without taking notice that this does not concern the Diſciples hearing the Law, but a Maſter that gives it; and that it cannot be ſaid, that the Diſciples depart from their Maſter's Feet, becauſe their number fails. Jacob's Oracle was ſpoken ſo long before the Law, or that there were any Schools among the Jews, and any Rules eſtabliſh'd for ſitting of Scholars; that I can't conceive how any one can ſeriouſly give a Dying Patriarch the thoughts of alluding to ſuch a trifle, or to God that of Miraculouſly revealing this Rite to him, in order to make it the Subject of his Propheſy. 2. The Paſſage of St. Paul ſeems clear to me. He was Fed, or Inſtructed at the Feet of Gamaliel. What can this mean, unleſs the Rabbies at that time made their Scholars to ſit upon Mats on the Ground, or upon little Benches, under them and at their Feet. It is needleſs to alter the pointing of thoſe words, thereby to give them another turn and ſence, and to make St. Paul ſay, that he was brought up at Gamaliel's Feet, and inſtructed in the Law; for here Education and Inſtruction means the ſame thing. Mr. Petit ‖ is ſtill more remote from his meaning, when he maintains, that St. Paul would ſay, that he ſlept under the feet of Gamaliel's Bed, becauſe he was his Boarder, or Servant. St. Ambroſe aſſures us, that the Tradition of the Synagogues import, that the Diſciples were lying in the Schools, and Joſes the Son of Joezer adviſed the Young Men to wreſtle in the Duſt of their Maſter's Feet, and to drink their words with greedineſs. It is doing violence to theſe words, to ſay, that that Rabbi deſign'd to teach Youth not to forget their Leſſon, even when they were at play; for Wreſtling is a Recreation. It is more probable that he alluded to the Duſt, in which the Diſciples roll'd at the Feet of their Maſter's; and that he adviſed them to go conſtantly to School, where they were ſent at the Age of ſeven Years. Here the Rabbi is St. Paul's Commentator.

Upon

Upon * ſome Stones you have J. CHRIST repreſented teaching his Diſciples. In One he is ſitting in a great Chair, and the Twelve Apoſtles ſtanding round about to hear him; In the Other, J. CHRIST is ſtanding with Eleven Apoſtles; but St. Peter appears ſate in a lolling Poſture at his Eaſe. I ſhould not have taken notice of theſe Figures, if ſome had not given to the firſt ſo venerable an Antiquity. I obſerve, that no inference can be drawn from an Ingraver's Fancy, who gives little Caps or Hats to Six of the Apoſtles, and leaves the other Six bare-headed. It is no wonder that St. Peter ſhould be made to ſit before his Maſter, ſince there is oftentimes more Power aſcrib'd to him than to J. CHRIST, as well upon Earth as in the Church. But this Divine Maſter taught Sitting, or Standing, according to the times, places, and number of People that heard him, as we may ſee in St. Mark's Goſpel.

XIX. The Jewiſh Doctors have the care of inſtructing the People in the Law of Moſes, and the Traditions of the Fathers. They determine what is clean, and what is not; what Meat may be eaten, and what muſt be abſtained from. St Jerome ſays, that in his time the Doctors not being able to judge by their Eye, whether the Blood that flows every Month, be clean or unclean, were obliged to taſte it, and thereby to give their Opinions one way or other. Their Determinations are commonly received with a great deal of Reſpect, but yet they cannot eaſily gain Credit, nor make any one to obey them. The Rabbies † complain, that the Jewiſh People when they did no longer ſtand in need of them, maſſacred them; but then on the other ſide they continue to kill this execrable Mob. At leaſt it is || ſaid, that the Rabbies do not receive the Teſtimony of Laicks, nor ever travel with them. This is enacted by their own Laws, and they never infringe them but in caſes of abſolute Neceſſity: which often ſtirs up the Peoples hatred and Rebellion againſt them.

XX. The Rabbies alſo prohibit Pleading at any Foreign Bar, or Judicatory, becauſe their Proud and Haughty Temper is ſuch as makes them || think it a Shame to ſubmit to a ſtrange Power. To their antient Haughtineſs they have added a hatred againſt the Chriſtians, which makes them ſay, that what we call a Tribunal, or Court of Judicature, ought to be call'd, the Ditch houſe, or Houſe of Office, and that the King's face ought to be Call'd the face of a Dog. Some pretend, that St. Paul alludes to the antient Cuſtom of the Jews, who ſubmitted in every thing to their Doctor's Opinion; when he forbids the Believing Chriſtians to go to Law before the Unbelievers, or Jews; and asks of them if there were not a Wiſe man among them? 1 Cor. 6. 6. No, not one that ſhould be able to judge between the Brethren. This title of Wiſe the Jews gave to their Maſters; but the Apoſtle here only ſpeaks of an Umpire that might be choſen among the faithful or Believers. For at that time there was no Civil Judge eſtabliſhed among the Chriſtians, as there was among the Jews; ſo that this Alluſion could extend no farther than the Name.

XXI. Theſe Maſters are not ſatisfied with Judging the preſent Affairs, but they alſo ſell Indulgencies and Powers to the People of delivering them from Hell to all Eternity. And the better to authorize this Sale, and to make it the more conſiderable, they give out that by reaſon of that vaſt and excellent Knowledge they have of the Talmud *, the Fire has no Power over them; but like the Salamander they can live in the midſt of the Flames, and not be conſumed. They go further and ſay, they have a Power to confer this Privilege to others, and this reaſon they alledge for it, (Viz.) that as the Altar which was overlay'd but with a thin leaf of Gold, withſtood the Fire for many Ages; So the Iſraelites ſacrificed, or conſecrated to God ought much more to enjoy the ſame Advantage. And therefore Rome is not the firſt that invented Indulgences, and given Power to her Prieſts of delivering Souls from the Violence of the Flames of Hell, and Purgatory. Thoſe † that will neither believe nor obey thoſe Maſters, deſerve the greateſt Puniſhments; For it is one of their Axioms, that he who contemns the words of the Sages, is worthy of Death. They || formerly bore ſo great a deference to their Maſters, as not to dare to ſpeak in their preſence, or teach, but at twelve Miles diſtance, for fear of cauſing a Jealouſy, and that the Diſciple ſhould be thought more Learned than his Maſter.

XII. Under theſe firſt Preceptors there are * other Miniſters in the Synagogues; One ſerves as a Precentor to direct the Singing of the Prayers, and performs much the ſame Functions as the Reader does in the Reform'd Churches, who Sings Pſalms and takes Care of Divine Service: The other is call'd Sciamas, and only cleanſes the Synagogues and lights the Candles. I cannot imagine why ſome compare the Deacons of the Primitive Church to theſe Sciamas, or Sweepers of the Synagogues; For tho' the Name of Deacon had been uſed to expreſs the Service of a running Foot-man that raiſes a duſt by his nimbleneſs; yet it is alſo true, that the Deacons of Jeruſalem, mention'd in the Acts of the Apoſtles, had a nobler Imployment, which was that of diſtributing the Alms; and Philip who was one of them Preached the Goſpel. When one would diſtinguiſh, as a learned Critick in theſe Matters does, the Deacons of Jeruſalem, as extraordinary Miniſters, from thoſe whom St. Paul gives a Character of in his Epiſtles, it is ſtill true that they cannot be confounded with the Sciamas's, or Keepers of the Modern Synagogues.

XXIII. Women have † no ſhare in the Service of the Synagogues, they cannot ſo much as keep School; for fear leſt the Fathers going there to ſee their Children, ſhould ſeduce them. Beſides, they don't deſerve that Reſpect which is ſhewn to Maſters. A Diſciple ought not to contradict his Maſter, tho' he determines againſt the Law; but civilly to ſay to him, Maſter, you have taught us ſo and ſo. They muſt often go and viſit their Maſter, walk a little backwards as it were behind him, pull off his Stockings, and tear off his Clothes when he is Dead. They would be aſhamed to do all this to a Woman. They do not ſo much as ſuffer a Woman to learn the Law; ſo that if ſhe Studies, ſhe is not much the better for it.

Of Proselytes.

Six Periods in which they were differently treated.

The Contradictions of the Rabbies. The Court of the* Gentiles unknown. XIII. The third Period since the Captivity. XIV. The title of Stranger whether Shameful, or Honourable. XV. The Proselytes of the Pharisees were not from the Heathens. XVI. They were scarce in Judæa in J. CHRIST's time. VII. The Laws of the Talmudists against Proselytes. XVIII. Their great Number in the Messiah's time contested.

I. THE Gentiles were allow'd the Liberty to go and worship in the Temple. St. John says, that certain Greeks, who were come to the Feast had a Mind to see JESUS CHRIST. Shall we understand by these, the Jews of the Dispersion, or the Proselytes of the Nations? But this term in the Gospel seems appropriated to express the Gentiles, and it was thus translated by the antient Latin and Syriack Interpreters. The Gospel distinguishes three sorts of People. The Jews altho' dispersed among other Nations that still retain'd the Name of their first Origine; The Proselytes of Justice, which the Scripture calls devout people, or people fearing God; And the Greeks, or Gentiles, that made up the third sort. These Gentiles accustom'd to many Gods, and to follow, him whom they thought the most Powerful, came often to Jerusalem there to honour God. They * pray'd unto him; for the Tradition imports, that if a Gentile makes Prayers to God, the Jews are oblig'd to say, Amen. They also made Vows, brought Presents, and went in with the Proselytes to the Porch of the Nations, but could go no further. For this reason it was rail'd in, and Writings were put up in several Places, and in several Languages to forewarn those Strangers from going in to the Sanctuary, who might have done it through ignorance. Pompey † with his Attendance went in to the Holy place, where the High Priest only had a right to go. He examin'd the Tables, Candlesticks, Gold, and Silver, that was in it. Otho of Fresingan says, that the Temple was polluted by the Sacrifices, which Pompey offer'd; but he is mistaken. For the Sacrifices were offer'd by the Priests pursuant to the old Ceremonies. Hircanus himself, who was but just re-establish'd, in the Office of High-Priest officiated. Pompey won the good will of the People by his Mildness; and the only thing that vex'd them, was to see him in a place, where the Gentiles were not suffer'd to come.

II. Gifts sent by any Prince, or private Idolaters, either to thank God for some Favour, or because they would not neglect a powerful Deity, were also receiv'd in the Temple. Julia || sent golden Cups, and other Ornaments to the Temple of Jerusalem, which were receiv'd with Acknowledgment: and the Sages judiciously demonstrated, that the Gifts of the Pagans were some of the chief Ornaments of the Temple.

III. However there was a great Distinction made concerning these Gifts. If the Rabbies are to be believ'd, 1. Neither Pagan, nor Samaritan, could offer the half-Shekel for the Temple, nor the Doves for the Purification of Women. It was a constant * Rule to accept of nothing but what was given by Vow, or wilful Oblation. 2. No Tithes, no First-fruits were taken from Strangers. 3. Lastly, they were not suffer'd to contribute any thing towards the re-building of the City, or Temple, tho' their Contribution was voluntary; because Ezra had said; It belongeth to us to re-build the house of the Lord. However the same Ezra had accepted of Cyrus's Bounty to re-build the Temple, and could not have done it without this Prince's liberality.

The Christians as well as the Jews have vary'd about this Matter. Some Bishops have taken Pride in haughtily refusing the Presents of Princes, because they were Hereticks; and others have receiv'd from the Arians not only Presents, but the Priesthood, which they could not exercise without their Approbation.

IV. The Sacrifices which the Pagans offer'd for Sin were receiv'd in the Temple. Augustus had order'd an Ox, and two Lambs to be offer'd daily for him, and this Sacrifice lasted a long while after his Death. Some † were very forward in offering Sacrifices for Caligula; For this was the first Temple, in which any had been made for him. To conclude, the Decree whereby it was forbid to receive Presents, and offer any Sacrifice, but for those of the Nation, was one of the principal Causes of the War under Nero, because the Sacrifices offer'd for the Emperour were abolished.

The Jews || made a distinction of Sacrifices, as well as of Presents. For they receiv'd of the Heathen no other Sacrifices, but for Sin; and it was not lawful to offer incense with these Victims. But for fear of disgusting the Pagans, they took from them all that they gave; and the Priest afterwards directed it in his Mind for Sin, tho' the Sacrifice was offer'd for another thing.

V. This Complaisance for the Gentiles arose after the Captivity of Babylon. Their wanting the Persian King's favour, the mixture of Nations caused by the Conquests of Alexander the Great, who went into Judæa, and their frequent trading with the Egyptians, had oblig'd the Clergy to slacken that great Severity, which the Law seem'd to impose upon them, concerning Strangers. The Romans also becoming Masters of Judæa, and governing it by Procurators, encreas'd this Obligation. But notwithstanding all this Compliance, The Rabbies affirm, that the Infidels were neither suffer'd to observe the Precepts of the Law, nor the Sabbaths, nor Holy days, nor even to have Publick Prayers at their ſet Hours, and that thoſe who would have attempted it in Judæa became guilty of Death. This is ſo peremptory, and fantaſtical, as it can't eaſily be credited, tho' the Doctors of the Nation affirm it. For it is not the firſt time that they have been miſtaken about their antient Rites. Beſides, they contradict themſelves. For they maintain, that the Voice of him that deliver'd the Law upon Mount Sinai, ſounded from one end of the Earth to the other; that it was Grav'd upon ſeventy Columns in as many Tongues, for all the Nations of the Earth; and that moreover every Nation ſent for a Copy of the Law, that they might know and practice it: And now ſince we have ſpoken of the Gentiles, who perſever'd in Idolatry, let us come to the Proſelytes.

VI. We * muſt diſtinguiſh ſix Periods, wherein the Proſelytes were differently us'd. The firſt was, the Jews going out of Egypt, at which time Jethro Moſes's Father-in-Law was admitted, and a Letter added to his Name as God had done to Abraham. For before he was call'd Jether. Revel. It was alſo at that time that a great number of Egyptians, aſtoniſh'd at Moſes's Miracles, or drove to it by Neceſſity and Miſery, join'd with the Iſraelites, and were confounded with that Nation. Africanus † pretends, that the Genealogy of theſe antient Proſelytes was preſerv'd till J. CHRIST's time, and that it was an honour to be deſcended from them. They are even call'd in ſome Manuſcripts Archi-Proſelytes. Valeſius || follow'd this reading in putting ſo great a difference between the Antient and Modern Proſelytes; but there never was any Archi-Proſelytes among the Jews. This Expreſſion which he finds in ſome of Euſebius's Manuſcripts, was foiſted in by ſome unknown Hand, who had a Mind to ſhew thereby the diſtinction he made of two ſorts of Proſelytes.

The ſame Valeſius has alſo too ſubtily diſtinguiſh'd the Strangers and Autoctones, mention'd by Moſes, when he orders every Man to be deſtroy'd, that ſhall eat leavened bread, whether he be a Stranger or born in the Land; for when he reads, that one Law ſhall be to him, that is home-born, and unto the Stranger, he maintains that there were two ſorts of Egyptians, that joyn'd with the Iſraelites when they went out of Bondage; the one born in the Land call'd Autoctones, and the other were Farmers that rented the Land of Egypt. But Moſes doth not there ſpeak of the Proſelytes, that follow'd the People; he makes an Order for the Celebration of the Paſſe-over in future times, and in the Land of Canaan. So that by the home-born, he means thoſe Jews, that ſhould be born in the Land which they were going to Conquer; and by the Strangers, thoſe that ſhould embrace the Jewiſh Religion, or partake of its Ceremonies.

What ever the Rabbies may now ſay, it is certain that thoſe who went out of Egypt with the Iſraelites, mingled with them; and this mixture gave them the ſame Rights and Privileges, which the natural Jews enjoy'd. In proceſs of time there * was no real diſtinction made of the antient Proſelytes, whoſe Families were confounded by Marriage in the Deſart, and in the Land of Canaan.

VII. God in that firſt Period was very ſevere to the Idolatrous Nations. For the tenth Generation of the Moabites was not ſuffered to enter into the Congregation of Iſrael, becauſe of Balaam. It is true, the Rabbies ſtrive to prove by the Example of Ruth, who was receiv'd into their Alliance, and whoſe Name is honourably ſet down in JESUS CHRIST's Pedigree, that this Law only concern'd thoſe who could not marry Jewiſh Women; but this Example of Ruth is a peculiar one, and an Exception to the General Law. For the Moabites are excluded from the Covenant beyond the tenth Generation, without diſtinction either of Men, or Women. The ſame Law without doubt concern'd all the People of Canaan, whom God likewiſe utterly deſtroy'd. For this reaſon he ſeem'd diſpleas'd at the League that Joſhua had contracted with the Gibeonites, tho' it was obtain'd by Craft. All theſe Nations then might embrace the Jewiſh Religion; but theſe Proſelytes were never reckon'd in the number of the Jewiſh Families, nor incorporated into the Nation.

IX. The Egyptians were more favourably treated by the Jews; becauſe they had liv'd among them. However, it was not a Jewiſh Wife, or a Mother, that confer'd the Privilege of the Covenant. For it was fix'd to the third Generation. Doubtleſs the ſame Right muſt be given to all other Nations, that were not formally excluded from the Law.

X. If Men would reflect upon God's Proceedings, it would Cure them of many Prejudices. One wou'd have Truth to ſhine as bright as the Light, that it might force People to believe it. He fancies that God is always running after Man, to remove all the Obſtacles that might oppoſe his Knowledge, and reveal his Laws unto him in ſuch a manner, as he may not be able to juſtify himſelf by what is call'd an invincible Ignorance. Another would have God to foreſee, and prevent all the Errours which might happen, and thereby keep Men from ruining themſelves. Laſtly, there is a great and wide Door made to the Church, to be ſeen at a diſtance, and Men go eaſily into it, otherwiſe the Deity could not be excuſed. We'll let the Philoſophers weigh the Power, Juſtice, and Goodneſs of God, by ſpeculative Arguments; but if we examine his Proceedings, we ſhall ſay with the falſe Eſdras, that there comes but little Gold from the Mold of the Earth; many Men are created, but few ſaved. We ſhall obſerve that for four Thouſand Years together, God took but little care to make himſelf known. He ſeem'd not to concern himſelf with reclaiming his People from their Errours; and ſo far was he from opening the Door of the Church, or Salvation, that many Nations were formally excluded from it, and that for many Generations. To others he impos'd difficult and burdenſome Conditions, as we have ſufficiently prov'd.

XI. The ſecond Period includes the reigns of David, and of Solomon. Maimonides affirms, that thoſe Princes receiv'd no Proſelytes; becauſe it was to be feared, that the Proſperity of their Reigns rather than the love of Religion, might have drawn them. And indeed Solomon when he built the Temple made no Porch for the Gentiles. But this is diſputed by Villalpand *, who endeavours to find out ſome myſterious Reaſons for Ezekiel's not meaſuring it. But it would be impoſſible, that ſuch a conſiderable part of the Temple ſhould be forgot, and no where mention'd in Scripture; and the general ſilence of the Sacred Writers, who have left us an exact Deſcription of that ſtately Building, ought to prevail over all the Conjectures of Criticks.

XII This Porch of the Gentiles is found in Joſephus, and in the Apocalypſe; becauſe there was one in the latter times. But in vain do we look for it among the antient || Writers. For they ſay not one word of one. Why did not Manaſſah, when he raiſed up

Altars

Altars in the two Courts of the Houſe of the Lord for the Hoſt of Heaven, did he not put ſome in the Court of the Gentiles, if there were any at that time? Tho' it were true, that the Devil prefer'd the moſt Sacred places of the Temple to any other, would it follow, that he neglected the Court of the Gentiles, in which Idols were neceſſary for the Devotion of thoſe Nations that were us'd to worſhip them? The Wars that were between David, and the Infidels, and the hard uſage which they receiv'd from that Prince, compleated their hatred for his Religion, and the Jews did not endeavour to gain thoſe they utterly deſtroy'd. The Rabbies ſay, that Solomon made of his Wives ſo many Proſelytes; but beſides that they contradict their Maſters, they contend with the Scripture, which affirms that Solomon's Wives drew him into Idolatry. As for his League with Hiram and Pharaoh, it was Political, and made no alteration in Religion.

XIII. During the Captivity, the Jews, being ſpread among the Medes, and in Chaldæa, where they were mingled with the Idolaters, became more tolerating. Alexander's Conqueſt; the neceſſity of finding a Sanctuary, or of ſubmitting to the Kings of Syria; ſoftn'd this Nation, who before look'd upon all others with Scorn. Far from rejecting Proſelytes, they then drew them, and gladly receiv'd thoſe who embraced the Truth. If we will give any Credit to their own Hiſtory, we can't doubt but they were alſo admitted to Imploys; for Abtalion and Schemaia, Preſidents of the Council, and Chiefs of the Nation, were Proſelytes, born of a Jewiſh Mother. Abtalion is made to deſcend from Sennacherib, who worſhipped the true God after he had waged a Cruel War againſt him; and as there is in the Roman Code a Law, which bears the Name of Abtalion, it is ſuppos'd that he gave it before he forſook the worſhip of Idols.

XIV. Joſephus obſerves, that there was a great deal of care taken to ſend the Genealogies of the Proſelytes from Babylon to Jeruſalem, and alſo of thoſe that married with Strangers; but this exactneſs only concern'd the Prieſts: For Lay-men, tho' deſcended from Paganiſm, were admittable to all Offices, excepting the Prieſthood. Some learned Men fully perſuaded that this Law mention'd by Joſephus, extended to all ſorts of People; add to prove it, that the Shame of being born of a Stranger was ſo great, that St. Paul to avoid it, affirms that he was a Hebrew born, and of Hebrew Parents. Beſides, when in any of the Maxims of the Fathers, ſome of Jochanan's are produc'd, he is quoted in a myſtical manner *, becauſe being a Proſelyte, there was a blot in his Birth, which hindered his being named.

We muſt not ſtretch the thing too far, by fancying that they thought it an honour to be deſcended from the antient Proſelytes; and that they carefully preſerved their Pedigree to prove it. It was more glorious to be a Hebrew born of the Hebrews, as St. Paul ſays. We only maintain two things, One, that during the third Period which laſted from the Captivity to J. CHRIST, the Secular Proſelytes were admitted to Offices, as Abtalion and Schemaia prove it. The Other, that theſe Proſelytes were confounded by degrees with the Jewiſh Nation by their Marriages, and Poſterity; ſo that after ſome Generations there was no diſtinction made among them. The Example of Jochanan, which is produc'd, doth not overthrow this Opinion. For that Fagius believ'd him a Proſelyte, it is not certain; and Maimonides found in this Expreſſion בג בג Bag Bag, two Cotemporary Rabbies, in ſtead of Jochanan.

XV. At the beginning of Chriſtianity, which is the fourth Period, the Phariſees compaſſed Sea and Land to make one Proſelyte, However I doubt whether this ardent Zeal did in any way concern the Converſion of the Gentiles. In the midſt of ſo many different Sects, which then divided Judaiſm, every one ſtrove to ſtrengthen his Party. It is the Character of every Private Society, to work for their own particular intereſt, rather than for the Publick Good of Religion. The Phariſees, far from endeavouring to Convert the Gentiles, look'd upon them as Dogs; For it was from them that J. CHRIST borrowed the Expreſſion he uſed to try the Woman of Canaan's Faith.

XVI. It is true, Cornelius the Centurion had learnt in Judæa to worſhip the true God. Nevertheleſs the greateſt number of Proſelytes came from Aſia, Egypt, and other places, where the Tranſlation of the LXX. was ſpread, and contributed to the Converſion of Infidels. I own, there have been † a great many learned Men that did not read it; but the Ignorance of ſome Writers, as Trebellius, Pollio, Pliny, and Plutarch, who never ſaw the Jewiſh Writings, does not afford a general Proof againſt all the Idolaters: For in Matters of Religion the Learned are often Ignorant of what the Vulgar know. The Pagan Authors have not been very exact in ſpeaking of the Chriſtians, altho the Goſpel had been preached unto every Creature under the Heavens. The ſame thing might happen to the Jews, though the Tranſlation of the Scripture was read in all the Synagogues of Egypt and Aſia; and thoſe private Men who deſired to be inform'd of the Jewiſh Religion, had it in their hands.

XVII. Beſides, what we have ſaid of the Neglect and Contempt of the Phariſees with reference to Strangers, we ſee by the Miſnah || that they ſtill kept them off even after the Deſtruction of the Temple; For it was one of the Chief Subjects of the great Diſpute which Gamaliel had with Joſhua, who was made Prince of the Senate. One Judah ſtriv'd to get into the School, while Gamaliel II. was Patriarch of it; but he ſhut the door againſt him, becauſe he was an Ammonite Proſelyte, and that the Law forbad the Ammonites * to enter into the Aſſembly till the tenth Generation. Joſhua maintain'd that this Prohibition was of no effect, becauſe the Nations were confounded when the King of Syria carried them away from their Habitations. To this Gamaliel oppos'd Jeremiah's Oracle †, in which God ſays, I will bring again the Captivity of the Children of Ammon. Joſhua reply'd by a Paſſage of Amos ||, in which God ſhew'd that he would bring back the Captivity of Iſraël, tho' he had not done it. The Diſpute * upon this and other Articles went ſo far that Gamaliel was put out of his Place, as we have already obſerved.

The Talmudiſts have continued in the ſame Mind as Gamaliel was; For we ſee the Complaints which the Chiefs of the Jewiſh Nation carried to Arcadius and Honorius, to demand their Protection againſt the Judges of their own Nation, that receiv'd the Abjurations of thoſe Pagans and Chriſtians, who deſired to enter into the Synagogue. This perhaps was only affected; but they have excluded Proſelytes from Offices, from being Judges, and the honour of being reckon'd Jews. They have even regulated the Prerogatives of Matrimony, and the Birth of Proſelytes.

XVIII. Finally, there will be a ſixth and laſt Period for the Proſelytes in the Meſſiah's reign. Some of the Sages maintain, that the Church-Door will be ſhut againſt the Nations, by reaſon that the ſparkling Proſperity of his reign will render their Converſion ſuſpectful. But Others have a contrary Notion; becauſe the People conquer'd by the Meſſiah, will embrace his Religion, and obey his Laws. Abravanel alſo maintains, that the whole World will then be in perfect Peace, ſince all differences in Religion ſhall be aboliſh'd. We read that a Maſter having ſeen his Oxe ſick, put a Horſe in his room; the Oxe being well, and the Maſter unwilling to loſe the Horſe, joyn'd them together. This ſick Animal is the fallen Jews, in whoſe room God hath ſubſtituted the Pagans, and he joyns them to the Jews after their Repentance. Laſtly, God is introduced in the Gemara *, acknowledging the Jews and Gentiles for his Family, Why ſhould I loſe them, ſaid he, are not they both the Work of my hands?

Different Orders of Proſelytes.

The manner of receiving them into the Church. Their Baptiſm examin'd.

Alterations made in the Law for them.* III. Whether the Obſervation of the Sabbath was a Crime worthy of Death. IV. Whether it was permitted to fall into Idolatry again. V. Whether the Noachides's Precepts are found in the Council of Jeruſalem. Schickard confuted. VI. Third Order of Proſelytes. Thoſe of Righteouſneſs. Their Circumciſion: how adminiſtred. VII. Their Baptiſm not in uſe in the firſt Ages. VII. Its Origine taken from the Phariſees. IX. The Neceſſity of it. It was never repeated. X. New Name. XI. Tacitus's Reproach of the Proſelytes apply'd to the Jews. XII. The Privileges of the Proſelytes extenuated by the Rabbies.

I. THE Scripture does not ſpeak of different Orders of Proſelytes; none but the Rabbies have contriv'd their Diſtinction, according to their Quality, and degrees of Converſion. They only ſpeak of the Proſelytes of the Gate, and of Righteouſneſs. But three different Sorts may be reckon'd among them. The firſt is that of Slaves, who embrace the Jewiſh Religion without receiving their Freedom. They were but Demi-Proſelytes, who neither belong'd to the Jews nor the Gentiles, and nothing could ever repair for this defect. Maimonides relates a diſpute that the Rabbies had about this Principle, the Determination of which ſtrikes horrour; For they affirm, that a Demi-Proſelyte Slave may know his Siſter, Mother, or Daughter, without committing Inceſt; becauſe being no ways related to the Jews, among whom he is not fully entred, nor with the Gentiles, whom he has forſaken, all manner of Relation ends; and this Annihilation of Kindred leaves him a full liberty of committing the worſt of Inceſts without a Crime. So that while they refuſe the Slaves or Proſelytes, I know not by what Advantages belonging to their Nation, they make them amends, in permitting them to wallow in the moſt crying Sins. This is an abominable Doctrine.

II. They had * a ſecond Order of Proſelytes, that were call'd of Abode. Theſe ſame Jews, that ſcrupled to force any one to profeſs their Religion, conſtrain'd upon Pain of Death all that came to ſettle in Judæa, to forſake Idolatry, and to obſerve the Precepts of the Noachides. They were obliged to make this Profeſſion before three Perſons, either Jews, or Proſelytes, after which they might ſettle their Abode where they pleaſed. Maimonides † excepts Jeruſalem, but he is miſtaken; And we muſt even obſerve, that this Law was not always kept. It was infring'd every time that either the Jews ſtood in need of the Pagans, or fear'd them, or the Heathens were two powerful in Paleſtine. The Jews own, that it diſcontinued with the Jubilees, becauſe Judæa being often ſubject to Pagan Kings, and the Confuſion of Nations becoming too great, the Jews had not Power enough to demand theſe Confeſſions of Faith, nor to conſtrain the Gentiles to forſake Idolatry, or their eſtabliſhment in Judæa. So that by this means Converſion became Voluntary.

III. Two things that are Singular are ſaid of theſe Proſelytes. One that it was || a Crime worthy of Death for them to go beyond the Seven Precepts of Noah; as to obſerve the Sabbath, and ſtudy the Law; becauſe it is call'd the Inheritance of Iſrael, and belongs to none, but them. The Talmudiſts are they that have deviſed this Strictneſs; for on the contrary, they ſhould have delighted to have ſeen the Proſelytes of the Gate make ſome Progreſs in the knowledge and love of Religion. Beſides, ſome Doctors have withſtood this; for Meir * ſays, that a Pagan Studying the Law becomes like a Prieſt. 'Tis true indeed, this is underſtood of the Noachides's Principles; but the Interpretation is ſtrained, the Law ſignifies the Precepts given by Moſes. The Pagans would not ſuffer any to celebrate, nor even to be at the Celebration of their Myſteries, unleſs they were initiated; but the Law far from acting with the ſame Severity againſt Strangers, order'd that he, who dwelt within the Gates of Iſrael ſhould obſerve the Sabbath; and the LXX Interpreters knowing the Law-giver's meaning, have render'd it more clear, The Proſelyte having his Abode among you ſhall keep the Sabbath. So that none but the Talmudiſts have contrived this Severity againſt the Proſelytes of the Gate.

IV. Mai-

IV. Maimonides † affirms, that these Proselytes were not oblig'd to keep the Law out of the Holy Land; and that a Man going back to his own home, might fall again into Idolatry, and not be Guilty. To this is apply'd the example of Naaman, for Elisha suffered him to kneel, and worship him in the House of Rimmon.

Let us add a third thing concerning these Proselytes. Their Sacrifices were offer'd with the same Scruple, and Care, as those of Strangers; and even now, if any will raise an Altar upon the Ruins of Jerusalem, and offer Sacrifices there, they are taught how a Victim was Kill'd; but the Jews will have no hand in the Choice of the Place, for fear of offering in the Holy place what should not be offer'd but in the Court of the Gentiles; and because the Temple, tho' demolished long since, doth still preserve its Holiness.

V. The Seven Precepts of the Noachides, which they pretend the Proselytes of the Gate took upon them, are sufficiently known. Schickard || would have it, that the Apostles renew'd them in the Decree of the Council of Jerusalem. He even dazled Selden by it; but this dimness did not last long; For that great Man afterwards confuted him. And indeed it was not the design of the Apostles to introduce a Demi-Christianity, by receiving Proselytes of Abode, as the Jews did. There were then no Disputes about Noah's Precepts, which the Rabbies have perhaps since invented; but the Controversy ran upon some Ceremonies of the Law, whereof those Pharisees were Jealous who had left the Synagogue to enter into the Church. Besides, it was needless to have forbid Idolatry to the Heathens already converted and become Christians. For that was the first Act of their Abjuration. But they fancied, that they might still partake of the Entertainments which their Friends and Relations made after their Sacrifices; and it was this remainder of Idolatry that the Apostles condemn'd, and which had no relation with Noah's Precepts. How can any one find Murder in the abstaining from things stifled and from blood? Noah, so far from establishing this Law, gave leave to eat of Beasts that were stifled and dead. Again, where can any one find in the Decree of the Council of Jerusalem, the Condemnation of Theft, and the Establishment of Tribunals? 'Tis said indeed, that there are Manuscripts in which these words are to be found, do not unto Others what you would not have done to you: and this Article is very old; since the Emperour Severus is suspected to have borrowed it from the Christians, and that St. Cyprian had already found it in his Copy. Let any give this Maxim as Antient a Date as they think fit, I will not oppose it; but since it has been violently thrust into the Decree of Jerusalem, with which it has no Connexion, there will be need of new Machines to draw from it a particular Condemnation of Theft, and the erection of Tribunals to punish Offenders. Nay, even good Sence will not suffer these things to be found in it; since it can't be done but by a long series of Consequences: So that of Noah's seven Precepts, there are two wanting in the Council's Decree. There are even grounds to suspect, that by Fornication, (which is a general term, that St. Paul uses to express the Incest committed at Corinth) is to be understood those unlawful Matches forbid in Leviticus, and permitted among Heathens. Let us then agree, that the Apostles assembled in Council, had no regard to the Precepts of the Noachides, nor to the Proselytes of the Gate.

VI. The third Order of Proselytes are those of Righteousness. They profess'd the Jewish Religion, and took upon them to observe all its Rites. Three Persons instructed them in their Law; examin'd them carefully, and receiv'd them by Circumcision, Baptism, and Sacrifice.

First, They administred the Circumcision to the Proselyte, but if he had already receiv'd it, as indeed it was receiv'd among the Æthiopians, and several other Nations, they only took two or three drops of Blood from the Wound; and this was call'd the blood of the Covenant. St. Epiphanius * assures us, that when a Samaritan became a Jew, he was again Circumcised. He even expresses in what manner it could be done. St. Augustin contradicts him, by maintaining that Circumcision was never repeated; from whence he draws an Argument against the repetition of Baptism. And indeed some Jewish Doctors say, that they only took a little Blood; but we must own, that they have differ'd. 1. St. Epiphanius is in the right to say, that the Samaritans receiv'd a second Circumcision, since it was administred to Symmachus. It is true, Origen says that the Circumcision was forbid to the Samaritans at that time. His Observation is right, for Antonius had taken from the Samaritans that Liberty which he restor'd to the Jews; but the Consequence drawn from it is not good, because the Prince's Law was often transgressed. 2. A few drops of Blood was sufficient. Three Witnesses were present at that Ceremony, to make it the more Authentick. They praised God at the same time, and put up their Petitions to him in the behalf of the Proselyte, and of the Standers by. O God, said they, Grant that we may find in the Law good Works, and thy Protection, as thou hast introduced this Man in thy Covenant.

VII. After their Wound was healed, they were Baptized; but this Custom is not so old as is generally believed; for we do not observe that the Multitude of Egyptians, or the Family of Jethro, who followed Moses, were Baptized in the Desart after they had embraced the Jewish Religion. Maimonides who derives the Origine of these Baptisms from the time of Moses, and quotes these words, † There shall be one Ordinance for you and for the Stranger, manifestly strains them. For the thing there in question does not concern the reception of Proselytes into the Church, nor their Baptism; but that God would have a Stranger in the offering of his Sacrifices, observe the same Rites and Ceremonies as the Jews. Josephus relates the forc'd Conversion of the Idumæans wrought by Hircanus, who oblig'd them to be Circumcised; but he does not speak of any Baptism confer'd upon that Nation. Shall it be said, that he included Baptism under the other Rites of Judaism which that Nation observed? That may be, but it must be own'd, that as Josephus never spoke of those sorts of Baptisms; and forgetting them in a Circumstance where they ought to have been mentioned, there are some Grounds to believe, that their use was not yet known in Hircanus's time.

VIII. The Rabbies, that speak of this Baptism, are divided about the Origine, and Necessity of it. R. Alphes maintains, that it was added to the Circumcision by the Jews to make a greater Separation between them and the Samaritans that did not Baptize. Some would have it, that this Baptiſm went from the Chriſtians to the Jews, which is not very likely. It is yet more unlike, that the Heathens borrow'd from the Jews that Baptiſm which they confer'd upon thoſe who were admitted into the Myſteries of Iſis. The Idolaters had long believ'd, that Sin could be waſhed away by the Baptiſm of pure Water; But the Phariſees extremely multiplied Waſhings, as we find by CHRIST's upbraiding them with it; and perhaps they compell'd every one, that entred into their Sect to waſh themſelves in order to expiate their paſt Crimes. And the Baptiſm of this Sect became afterwards a general Rule for the reception of Proſelytes; or at leaſt this uſe gave the Rabbies occaſion to ſay, that Moſes had ſo ordered it. Indeed theſe words of the Law-giver waſh your Raiments neither concern'd the Proſelytes, nor their Baptiſm.

IX. Maimonides believ'd this Baptiſm abſolutely neceſſary to a Proſelyte. But this does not ſeem ſo much an Eccleſiaſtical Rite, as a Political Law: At leaſt it is the Houſe of Judgment that orders this Baptiſm; and the Ceremonies of it. The three Judges muſt be preſent, and the abſence of one makes Baptiſm uſeleſs. They that are Baptized muſt get a Certificate under their Hands, without which they are not receiv'd into the Church, becauſe the truth of their Baptiſm is queſtion'd. A Child unborn partakes of that Baptiſm which his Mother received, when ſhe was big with it.

Beſides, the other Sages are not ſo ſevere as Maimonides: For we read in the Gemara * that he that is Circumciſed without receiving Baptiſm is a Proſelyte, becauſe our Fathers were Circumciſed without being Baptized; and he that is Baptized without receiving the Circumciſion is nevertheleſs a Proſelyte, becauſe our Mothers were Baptized, and have no foreskins to loſe. Women, that embraced the Jewiſh Religion were to be Baptized like the Men; but the three Witneſſes were to withdraw, turning their Back towards the Perſon that came out of the Font. The Water was to touch every part of their Body, otherwiſe the Ceremony was void. It was never repeated among the Jews, no more than among the Chriſtians. Laſtly, they offered a Sacrifice for the Proſelytes; but this Cuſtom is aboliſh'd by the deſtruction of the Temple, and of its Altars.

X. Theſe Ceremonies being ended, the Proſelyte was counted a Jew like Others. He took the title of it, after that Name became common to the whole Nation, he chang'd his Name, renounc'd his Kindred, Family, and Wealth, and receiv'd as it is pretended a new Soul. For this reaſon he was call'd a new Man, a new Creature, and his Converſion, a Regeneration, or a Second Birth.

XI. Tacitus reproaches thoſe that forſake Heatheniſm, with learning firſt to deſpiſe the Gods to forſake their Country, Children, and Kindred, whom they look'd upon with Indignation. This Reproach can't be apply'd to the Chriſtians, unleſs it be own'd, that it is a Calumny of this Hiſtorian who had but little Knowledge of them; For tho' the Chriſtian Religion teaches to deſpiſe falſe Gods, yet it inſpires Charity for Men; but this is ſo much the more applicable to the Jews; becauſe Tacitus affirms, that they received the Circumciſion, in entring into the Religion whereof he complains; and that in reality this Baptiſm and change of Religion, broke all the Bonds of Blood and Friendſhip, which were contracted before.

XII. The Rabbies now leſſen the Privileges of theſe Proſelytes. For they maintain, 1. That they always retain their quality of Strangers, without being able to aboliſh it by a long ſeries of Generations. 2. That a Proſelyte could have no Office, either Military or Civil. 3. That a Woman Proſelyte could not marry a Prieſt. 4. That the Children of a Proſelyte Man, and a Heatheniſh Woman, were counted Heathens, and Gentiles. 5. That the Children of a Proſelyte Man, and a Jewiſh Woman, were look'd upon as Jews; becauſe of the excellency of the Blood, Partus ventrem ſequitur. 6. Laſtly, if Salvation and eternal Life be granted to them, it is upon Condition that they ſhall ſuffer Hell Torments for a whole Year; becauſe they have retarded the Meſſiah's Coming, and can't be look'd upon but as the Scurf of Iſrael.

SOME pretend * that the Circumciſion was known before Abraham in Egypt, and that God borrow'd it from that Idolatrous Nation, as he had borrow'd from Nature the Rainbow to be a ſign unto Noah, that the World ſhould be no more deſtroy'd by a Flood. Sanchoniathon † affirms, that Saturn firſt gave the Law of Circumciſion, after he had practiſed it himſelf. It ſoon went into Egypt, where it became neceſſary. Indeed Pythagoras could have no Society with the Prieſts of that Country, till he was Circumciſed; and moſt Hiſtorians || conclude that the Ethiopians and People of Colchis came from thence, becauſe they receive Circumciſion. Laſtly, * Herodotus ſays; that the Phenicians and Syrians, that is to ſay, the Jews, own they deriv'd this Rite from the Egyptians, who had uſed it from the beginning. only been eſtabliſh'd in theſe Nations for a more peculiar mark of diſtinction. St. Ambroſe ſays, that the Women were alſo circumciſed at the Age when the motions of Concupiſcence firſt began to be felt, to ſtop their titillations; but Marſham can't imagine from whence that Father took this Notion. It is ſufficient for his purpoſe, that the Egyptians had circumciſed their Children from the beginning.

II. 'Twas no wonder for Celſus an Heathen, and an Enemy to the Jews and Chriſtians, to make this Objection, as he did, who prefer'd the teſtimony of Herodotus, or of the Fictitious Sanchoniathon, to that of Moſes; but 'tis very ſtrange he ſhould be Copied by the Chriſtians. Indeed we ought not from a prejudice of Religion to engage on the ſide of Moſes, or make him ſpeak as deciſively on the ſubject as Origen has done, who introduces him ſaying, that Abraham was the firſt that received the ſign of Circumciſion; for Moſes only relates that God gave him Circumciſion as a ſign of his Covenant. But we may obſerve four things: Firſt, That Herodotus did not know the Jews, and ſtill leſs the Hiſtory of the Patriarchs, who preceded the erection of this Republick, by many Ages. There is no reaſon therefore to take his word for it, that the Syrians confeſs'd they had taken Circumciſion from the Egyptians. On the contrary, all the Sacred Hiſtory informs us, that they would not have received this Sacrament from the Hand of Idolaters. 2. Herodotus does not carry the Hiſtory of the Egyptians higher than Abraham. Indeed they exiſted long before, and even pretended to the Antiquity of a vaſt many Ages; but that's no ſufficient Argument to prove a Cuſtom upon them from their firſt Original; it being impoſſible to know exactly their Rites and Cuſtoms, without having their Hiſtory diſ-engag'd from Fables. Whoever owns his Ignorance, as to theſe primitive dark Times, or full of Fables, can't believe what they advanced about Circumciſion to be certain; and the Expreſſion uſed by Herodotus, from the beginning is accidentally dropt, without proof, and according to the ſtyle of the Vulgar, which always aſcribes a great Antiquity to all its Cuſtoms. 3. Moſes has another Character. He knew the Hiſtory of the Patriarchs, and particularly that of Abraham: He neither vents Fables nor Popular Reports, nor contents himſelf with an indefinite term about the Original of Circumciſion; but ſpecifies the circumſtances and cauſes of it; and, in fine, wrote a long while before Herodotus. This therefore is moſt truly the firſt time of mentioning Circumciſion; and till more antient and ſolid proofs are produc'd than Herodotus's indeterminate expreſſion, in the beginning, we ought to believe this to be its firſt Original. 4. Abraham had already Travell'd, and made ſome ſtay in Egypt, and his Hiſtorian does not bring him back Circumciſed like Pythagoras. Therefore he derived not this Cuſtom from the practice of Idolaters, but from the inſtitution of God, who gave him this Seal of his Covenant.

III. From Abraham, Circumciſion paſs'd down to the Inhabitants of Canaan by Jacob's Children, who gave it rather by way of violence than in Zeal to Religion. 'Tis alſo very probable that Hircanus who impoſed this Seal of the Covenant upon the Idumæans, deſign'd rather to leave the Mark of his Victory, than of Judaiſm impreſs'd in this Conquer'd Peoples Fleſh. This Cuſtom being taken up by the Canaanites by Abraham's ſojourning among them, their Neighbours the Syrians borrow'd it. Abaham alſo communicated it to the Arabians, his Poſterity, by Ketura his ſecond Wife. Philoſtorgius ſays, the Homorites, who Sacrificed to the Sun and Moon, had a Cuſtom of Circumciſing their Children eight Days after they were born. Mahomet did not inſtitute it, as is ſuppoſed, there being no Precept in the Alcoran about it; but having found this very antient Cuſtom among the Arabians, he left them to continue its practice. The Abyſſins deſcended from the Homorites, or Arabians; and if that Conjecture be ſound, we ought no longer to wonder, that Circumciſion had long ago come into Ethiopia.

IV. The Iſraelites deſcending into Egypt, carried it with them. Nor is it ſtrange that the Egyptians ſhould have borrow'd this Rite from the Jews, tho' they were very odious to them, ſince Joſeph had been highly eſteem'd by them whilſt he liv'd. Moſes inſinuates, that many of the Royal Succeſſors of Pharaoh, to whom he had been Miniſter of State, preſerv'd the Memory of his Services, and it was a long time before they were forgotten, to the ill uſing his Poſterity. So that a conſiderable Tract of Time had paſs'd wherein the Egyptians, as Friends of the Iſraelites, might imitate this Rite. A Rabbi aſſerts, that they cancell'd this Uſage after Joſeph's Death, and reduced the Præputium, that they might have nothing in common with a Nation of Shepherds whom they infinitely hated: But Herodotus affirms, they were ſo far from forgetting this Rite, that they always practiſed it.

V. St. Ambroſe had reaſon to ſay that the Egyptians Circumciſed their Women, and deſerved not Marſham's Cenſure for it, as if he had publiſhed an unheard of Abſurdity. Strabo † mentions ſome Nations who had the Cuſtom of Circumciſing Virgins. The Ethiopians ‖ do it at this Day, and we find ſeveral inſtances of it among the Orientals.

VI. 'Tis pretended that Circumciſion was mightily neglected in Egypt, where the People lived under great Oppreſſion. And the Talmudiſts maintain, that God for this reaſon obliged Moſes to Circumciſe his Son, that the Nation might be induced to follow his Example. But if we except that Seaſon when Pharaoh cauſed all the Iſraelite's Male children to be killed before they had reach'd the Eighth Day, appointed for this Ceremony; why ſhould they prohibit the Iſraelites from being Circumciſed, ſince 'twas the common Cuſtom of the Egyptians who had borrow'd it from the Jews?

VII. This Ceremony was rather interrupted in the Wilderneſs, by reaſon of the long Marches that were to be made. As God at that time diſpenſed with the celebration of the Paſſe-over, he was alſo pleaſed not to require of the Jews the execution of a Law that would have coſt a great many Children their Lives, tho' ordinarily it could not be violated, without risking exemplary Puniſhments. Theodoret alledges, as a reaſon of this Interruption, that the ſign of diſtinction was unneceſſary to the People, whilſt Travelling in the Deſart, ſeparate from other Nations; but that Father had forgotten that this ſign was a Seal of the Covenant and a Sacrament; and was as neceſſary as Baptiſm to the Chriſtians.

Some ſuppoſe, that the People being obliged to ſtop a long time at the foot of Mount Sinai to receive the Law, and build the Tabernacles, they then began to Circumciſe the Children, having opportunity for it, as they renewed the Celebration of the Paſſe-over; but this is a meer Conjecture. The Talmudiſts reject it, and ſay, that God would by no means require them to be Circumciſed during their Journey, ſince the North Wind, which was neceſſary to refreſh the Wound, ceaſed to blow for Forty Years, being ſtop'd by God, leſt it ſhould drive away, or diſperſe the Cloud by its violence. Cunæus's * Notion is no better, who ſays, that none of the Children that were born in the Deſart dyed, leſt they ſhould be expoſed to the Puniſhments denounced by the Law againſt the neglect of this Sacrament: But this is making Circumciſion of indiſpenſable obligation. The Children that died before the eighth Day, were exempted from the Curſe of the Law; and the Jews, who at preſent Circumciſe them after Death, and in the Grave, are Guilty of Superſtition. If God had diſpenſed with Circumciſion whilſt they Travell'd through the Deſart, and till he had given Joſhua freſh Orders to obſerve it; there was no neceſſity of Miraculouſly length'ning all the Children's Lives that were born in the Deſart, to ſecure them from the Divine Malediction.

VIII. Joſhua was commanded to reſtore Circumciſion, that had been interrupted for ſo many Years. Make thee † ſharp Knives, ſaid God, and Circumciſe again the Children a ſecond time. Theſe words give occaſion to two difficulties. The Hiſtorian employs a word that ſignifies a Stone. The LXX. ſpeaking of Zipporah, make her uſe a Stone in cutting off the Fore-skin of her Son Eleazar. They alſo give Joſhua Knives of Stone. St. Auſtin has followed this Interpretation, which ſeems the more juſt, becauſe the Heathens made uſe of it for a more violent Operation:

Mollia ‖ qui raptâ ſecuit Genetalia teſtâ.

Indeed this was the way that Atys caſtrated himſelf:

Devolvit ille acuto ſibi pondera ſilice.

And the Prieſts of the Antient Gauls made no more Ceremony about it. 'Tis alſo pretended, that Stones have a peculiar Vertue to heal the Wound. Laſtly, many learned Men maintain, that the word * uſed by Joſhua never ſignifies a Knife; not even in the Pſalm, † where David ſays, thou haſt alſo turned the edge of his Sword. In the mean time the Modern Jews explain Joſhua's words otherwiſe, and make uſe of a Razor inſtead of Stones: Beſides, could they have found Stones enough of this ſort to Circumciſe all Iſrael, as they were obliged to do it then all at once?

IX. God ordered Iſrael to be Circumciſed a ſecend time. The Talmudiſts ſometimes take this Repetition of the Sacrament literally, and anſwer the objected impoſſibility by Barchochebas's Example, who cauſed thoſe that embark'd in his Party to be Circumciſed a ſecond time. They alſo offer other reaſons for it which might defile the Imagination. Some explain Joſhua by ſaying, that God only gave Abraham an imperfect Circumciſion, whereas that of the Jewiſh People was entire; and therefore it is called the ſecond Circumciſion. Kimki aſſerts, that this word relates not to the Sacrament, but to the Command given to Joſhua, to go once and twice into the Camp, to oblige every Body to diſcharge this Duty. The Chriſtians ſeem as much at a loſs as the Jews upon this ſubject; and fly to a Myſtical Interpretation. 'Tis pleaſant to hear Juſtin Martyr teaching them, that the Idols of the Heathens were the Foreskin that God had cut with the Stone, that is JESUS CHRIST, who has cut off the worſhip of the falſe Gods by his word. St. Jerome underſtands by it the purity of the Soul, which is produced by the little Knife of the Goſpel. We ought not to refine ſo ſubtilly upon Joſhua's words. Circumciſion had been interrupted in the Deſart, and God's Order to renew it was a ſecond Inſtitution, or a ſecond Circumciſion. The firſt was inſtituted in Abraham's time, and Joſhua was the ſecond Eſtabliſher of this Ceremony.

X. The Eighth Day from the Birth was always Conſecrated to its obſervation; but they divide into three or four Opinions about this choice. The Jews ſay, that the Sabbath corroborates the Children to undergo the Operation. The Chriſtians ſometimes aſſert ‖ that the Eighth Day repreſents the Eternal Life, in which Sin ſhall be perfectly cut off. Some diſtinguiſh themſelves by ſaying, that we don't reckon all ſorts of Creatures in the number of Animals, till the Eighth Day, either becauſe we are not aſſur'd they live before, or that ſo many Days were neceſſary to cleanſe them from the impurity they bring with them into the World: And for that reaſon they could not be offer'd in Sacrifice before that time. But it is more certain and eaſy to ſay, that God had no other Reaſon in the choice of that Day than his own good Pleaſure, which appears in moſt of the Jewiſh Ceremonies, about which People trouble their Heads in vain. We have ſaid enough of the Antient Circumciſion, let us now come to the Ceremonies of the New.

XI. When a Child is to come into the World, the Modern Jews take care to write upon the Doors and Walls of the Chamber theſe words, Adam *, Eve; away from hence Lilit: which is a kind of Prayer to God, that if he gives a Daughter ſhe may reſemble Eve rather than Lilit, and have an Husband to whom ſhe may be an Help-meet: And that if a Son be born, he may marry a Wife that is neither ſtubborn nor wicked like Lilit, but obedient and gentle like Eve. They expreſs little joy upon the Birth of a Daughter, and the Jews make ſo little account of this Sex, that in their uſual Prayers the Man thus addreſſes to God: Bendito † que no me hizo muger: Bleſſed be thou Creator of Heaven and Earth, that thou haſt not made me a Woman; and the Woman abaſed Daily ſays, Bendito tu que me bizo como ſu volontad, Bleſſed be thou who haſt made me as thou pleaſeſt. They only ſix Weeks after the Birth of a Girl muſter together a parcel of young Children about the Child's Cradle, which they lift up with their Hands, after giving her a Name, and divert themſelves. This is all the ‖ Solemnity obſerved vpon the Birth of Daughters; but the joy is much greater for that of Sons. But not to inſiſt on the Ceremonies of the Goſſips and Entertainments, we are to give an account of that of Circumciſion.

XII. All the Synagogues have Circumciſors * by right of Office, and they even attribute a kind of merit to this Function. The new beginners give Money to the Poor to learn this Art, by practiſing upon their Children. However, it is in the Father's power to Circumciſe his Child himſelf, or cauſe the Ceremony to be done by one of his Friends. This Sacrament is Adminiſtred in the Houſe, or in the Synagogue, as the Father pleaſes. 'Tis frequently done in the Synagogue, and then two large Elbow Chairs are placed near the Cheſt, in one of which the God-father and the † Mohel ſeat themſelves, and the other is reſerved for Elias, who fails not to be preſent to examine whether this Ceremony be Religiouſly obſerved or not.

XIII. They

XIII. They ſuppoſe, that in this Prophets time the People of Iſrael had renounced Circumciſion; for when he complained to God that they had forſaken his Covenat, he meant the Circumciſion they had abandonn'd; and this ſo mortally afflicted him, that retiring into a Cave, he deſired to end his Days there: 'Tis enough now, O Lord, take away my Life. God could no ways comfort him, but by promiſing that ſuch a Calamity ſhould never happen again. Now to ſee whether he has not been deceived, he aſſiſts at all the Circumciſions, and takes his place in the great Chair prepared for him. Nevertheleſs, to induce him to do this honour for the Children, Proclamation is made aloud that he may hear, This is Elias his place; and whether he can't always come the Moment he is call'd, or whether in reſpect to him, they leave his Chair in the Synagogue for three Days. Laſtly, they † pretend that the God father manifeſtly ſees him take his place: And they tell how Juda the Saint not ſeeing Elias his Co-aſſiſtant, foretold the Child ſhould be wicked, ſince the Prophet would not honour him with his preſence. The truth is, he turned Chriſtian. 'Tis no wonder the People ſhould feed their Fancies with ſuch Viſions; but 'tis ſtrange they ſhould have ſo great a reſpect for Elias, who was a Schiſmatical Prophet, and exerciſed his Miniſtry at Samaria under Ahab and Jeſabel.

XIV. The Circumciſor and the God-father being ſeated, they ſing a Hymn; preſently arrives a little proceſſion of Children, bringing every thing neceſſary to the Adminiſtration of the Sacrament: One carries a Candleſtick burning with a dozen of Wax-Candles, to repreſent the Twelve Tribes of Iſrael; Two others bring two Veſſels filled with Red Wine: A fourth holds a Razor; another follows with a Plate full of Sand; and laſtly comes a Baſon with Oyl and Linnen in it, neceſſary to bind up the Wound. The God-mother brings the Child to the door of the Synagogue, where it is met and received, becauſe ſhe is not privileged to enter; and at the ſame time it is proclaimed, Bleſſed || be he that comes. There are two great Myſteries in theſe words: Firſt the Letters contain a number of eight, which denotes the time of the Circumciſion made on the eighth Day. Secondly the Letters of theſe two Words may ſignifie, Behold Elias comes.

XV. The Mohel, or Circumciſor takes the Child upon his Knees, and ſometimes makes uſe of Silver Pincers, to hold the part he goes to cut off. Holding the Razor, he cryes, Bleſſed be the Lord who hath commanded us Circumciſion. He cuts off the Præputium, tears the Skin, and caſts what he has cut off into a Veſſel of Sand. By this they pretend to recal the Memory of the firſt Mans fall, cauſed by the Devil, and to give the Fore-skin and the Sand for that Enemy of Mankind to feed upon, in order to accompliſh the Curſe pronounced upon him, Duſt ſhalt thou eat. They waſh the Wound and bind it, whilſt the Father gives thanks to God, and prays him to bleſs his Infant, that he may prolong his Days in Proſperity; that he may fulfil the Commands of the Law; that he may ſee the Houſe of God Rebuilt: Divine Vengeance upon his Enemies, and their Faces cover'd with ſhame. He deſires that his Name may be among the Righteous and the Wiſe. Laſtly, he cryes, O God! Thy will be done; and the Aſſembly anſwers, Cauſe your Son to enter into the Law, into Marriage, and good Works, as he enters into the Covenant of Abraham. The Mohel having cleanſed his Hands and taken Wine, riſes with the God-father; makes a Prayer for the Child and his Parents, and dipping his Finger in the Veſſel where he has put the Blood and Wine, rubs the Lips of the Child, and gives it its Name, pronouncing theſe Words of Ezekiel, Live in thy Blood; believing that the Blood of Circumciſion will contribute to the preſervation of Life, and lengthning of his Days. He continues his Prayers for the Congregation: chants the 128. Pſalm, and recompences the Children that have waited on him, by giving them the remainder of the Wine. The Child is brought home, and his Circumciſion celebrated with a Solemn Feaſt, in imitation of Abraham. Sometimes they have a Sermon. The Circumciſor is oblig'd to keep a Regiſter of thoſe he has Circumciſed: The Names of the Father and the Child, of the God-father and God-mother are interwoven in it, with ſeveral Texts of Scripture. Theſe are the Ceremonies of Circumciſion, let us ſee what Notions they have of its effects.

XVI. Philo *, who could not bear to have a Ceremony ridiculed, that coſt his Nation ſo much Blood, explained the reaſons of its Inſtitution. He believ'd it was neceſſary to prevent a Diſeaſe call'd a Carbuncle, to which the Uncircumciſed were very ſubject. Beſides, it preſerved a greater Purity. And thus the Egyptians cauſed their Prieſts to be ſhorn, leſt any defilement ſhould remain in their Hairs. 'Tis ſtrange that an Ingenious Jew ſhould alledge theſe motives that are purely Human; but he adds, that this Sacrament repreſented the Circumciſion of the Heart, and that it was inſtituted by God, to inſtruct Men in their obligations to retrench all the Pleaſures of Senſe, and to diveſt themſelves of a certain Pride, wherein the Father's Glory, as thinking themſelves like ſo many Gods capable of producing Children after their own Image and Reſemblance.

XVII. Some Modern Rabbies have imitated Philo, in giving no very eſſential Reaſons of this Inſtitution; for they think God ordained it as a Character of diſtinction, that the Jewiſh Nation being more excellent than all others, might be diſcovered amongſt all the People of the Univerſe: But if this was the deſign of God, he ought not to have ſuffer'd it to paſs among the Syrians, Arabians and Egyptians, and the Nations of Judæa, from whom it was more neceſſary to be diſtinguiſh'd by a ſenſible mark, than from thoſe that were more remote. Another affirms, that God meant to inſpire all the particulars of his Nation with a more ardent Charity to their Brethren, ſince they all wore the ſame Seal, and the ſame Character. And thus St. Paul made uſe of Baptiſm, which was ſubſtituted in the room of Circumciſion, to unite Chriſtians in ſtricter Bonds of Union. You have all the ſame Baptiſm.

XVIII. But a Multitude of Jewiſh Divines run into another Extreme; maintaining, 1. That the Blood of the Circumciſion is the Support of Heaven and Earth: ſince God ſays, he would not have fix'd the bounds of Heaven and Earth, if his people had not kept his Covenant day and night. 2. They don't believe that their Fathers were ſaved from Death and the hand of the deſtroying Angel only by the Blood of the Paſchal Lamb, which they Sacrificed the Evening before; but maintain that all the Children of the Iſraelites were Circumciſed that Day: That their Blood was mingled with that of the Lamb; and that the Doors of the Houſes being ſprinkled with it, was the Means of their escaping the Vengeance of God. 3. They place Abraham at the Gates of Hell, who gives all the Uncircumcised free Admission; but he stops all those of his Nation, and sends them to Heaven; because Circumcision opens the Gate of Paradise, and renders the Souls acceptable to God. They look upon it as the Fountain of Life; and therefore cry in administring it: Live in thy blood, for they think it absolutely necessary; and Maimonides look'd upon Death as an inevitable consequence of the contempt of this Sacrament: He puts this difference betwixt the Children of Abraham by Keturah, that is, the Arabians, and the Israelites descended from Isaac; that the former were obliged to be Circumcised the eighth Day, especially after they were mingled with the Jews; but that this Obligation was not so strict as with the Jews, since they merited not Death when they neglected it. We shou'd not admire to see the Jews ascribe so much to Circumcision; 'tis the general Character of People to attribute too great an efficacy to sensible Signs. Don't most Christians ascribe too much to the Sacraments? There are even Divines * who pretend to see the Necessity of the Satisfaction in the Blood that flows in Circumcision, and the absolute destruction of Sin by Death, in the abscision of the Fore-skin.

XIX. A Learned Man † has been of Opinion that this Ceremony was grown peculiar to the Mahometans and Jews; but 'tis hard to be conceived how a Man of such vast Reading should have forgotten that the Ethiopians, tho' Christians, have retain'd it. The Inhabitants also of the Isle of Socotora in the Neighbourhood of Ethiopia have preserved this antient Institution; but they don't consider it as a Sacrament. The Confession of Claudius King of Ethiopia publish'd by Mr. Ludolf, is an undeniable Proof of this. "We "have not, said that Prince, the same Idea of Circumcision as the Jews; for we have learn'd from "St. Paul that Circumcision is nothing, and that "Faith and the new Creation in JESUS CHRIST "is Necessary. We have all the Writings of St. Paul, "and we follow his Doctrine concerning Circumcision and Uncircumcision. We observe not ours "with respect to the Law of Moses; but in obedience to a custom purely Human. We circumcise "with us, as they castrate in Egypt, and bore the "Ears in the Indies.

Of the Feast of the Passe-over and of Unleavened Bread.

I. THE Feast of the Passe-over is joyn'd with that of Unleaven'd Bread; which the Jews call Mazzot, and which ought to be eaten for the space of seven Days. This Subject contains abundance of Cases of Conscience, which the Talmudists have made their principal Study. Here follow some of their chief Decisions.

He that * neglects taking the Leaven out of his House deserves the Scourge; he that eats it by mistake and without consideration is amerced a Fine. R. Jehuda is absolutely for having it burnt, but the Sages allow it to be thrown into the Water, provided it be crumbled into little Particles, that are easily dissolved.

Tradition † permits the Eating the leaven'd Bread that an Idolater has preserved in the Feast time; but this is only to be understood of the Places where a Commerce with Strangers is allowed. Thus in Spain they Eat the Christians Bread, without troubling their heads whether it was baked before the Feast; but 'tis a great Crime for a Jew to keep any Bread with design to Eat it after the Passe-over.

The Law ‖ absolutely condemns the Cuzah of the Babylonians; which was a dish of mouldy Bread and Milk: the Beer of the Medes, the Vinegar of the Edomites: This was Barly which was suffer'd to ferment and sowr in Water: The Zythus of the Egyptians; which was a sort of Medicine compounded of Saffron, Barly, and Salt. Lastly, they forbid Book-seller's Paste, because there is Meal in it.

The same Law provides, that three Women that bake at the same Oven, shall not Mould their Paste at the same time, lest the Oven being too little, they be obliged to wait, and whil'st they wait the Paste may rise. And therefore it not only exactly regulates all their Movements in proportion to the dryness of the Wood, and the leisurely heating of the Oven; but it commands them to throw Water upon the Paste, to avoid the Fermentation. In fine, some are so superstitious, that they will not mention the name of Bread before their Children, for fear of exciting their desire of eating it. And thus they hardly ever name a Swine, for fear of making * this Creature known: The Doctors exhaust their Application in deciding such Cases of Conscience as these; and this has for a long time been the main of their Study, since we find these Decisions in the Misnah; but instead of following the Doctors in all their Decisions, let us offer at something more material.

II. They make a distinction of three things: The nice Enquest; the Destruction; and the Execration of the leaven'd Bread. First, the Father of the Family makes a diligent Search. Not satisfied with the light the Sun and Moon afford, he lights a Candle, the more carefully to examine all the holes of the House, and to sift out the Crumbs of this leaven'd Bread: And that this exactness may neither appear ridiculous nor uſeleſs to the People, care is taken to conceal in a corner ſome Scraps of leaven'd Bread, the diſcovery whereof cauſes a mighty Joy. If a Dog, or even a Rat, be perceived to bring in any Morſel of Bread, the Search muſt begin again with the ſame exactneſs. 2. When 'tis ended, The Father of the Family reſerves what is neceſſary for his Family till the 14th of the Month Niſan, * and burns the reſt, making his Prayer to God, That all the leaven'd Bread in the Houſe, as well what he has found, as what he has not found, may become as the duſt of the Earth, or entirely periſh. And leſt there ſhould remain any crumb or even ſmell of the Leaven, they waſh the Moveables, ſcour the Kitchin-Utenſils, paſs them through the Fire, or new caſt them. There are Chriſtian Women who brighten up all their Moveables on Eaſter-Eve, in memory of the Reſurrection. Bartolocci † owns it: But how can he afterwards juſtify theſe Women from Superſtition? This Cuſtom is far more irrational than that of the Jews. The waſhing the Furniture has no relation to our Saviour's Reſurrection, whereas the Jews are obliged to remove the leaven'd Bread.

III. The Monks ‖ are particularly careful in the choice of the Corn the Hoſts are made of. They obſerve innumerable Precautions about the manner of Cleanſing, Grinding and Baking it. The Jews are alike ſolicitous for their Unleaven'd Bread. The Wheat, or Barley which they uſe where Wheat can't be had, muſt be the beſt. They ſeparate all the moiſt Grains; carry it not to the Mill upon Horſes bare backs for fear it ſhould heat; examine the Sack wherein they put it, leſt there ſhould be any remainder of the old Meal. They dare not mingle it with Salt, or Butter, or Oyl; But they have the Azyme of the Rich and Sick, which they make up with Eggs and Sugar, to make it ſhorter. A Child, or a Fool, a Deaf Man, a Gentile, or a Chriſtian, muſt not venture to put their Hands in't. A Jewiſh Man muſt make the Paſte, and the Rabbies account it a point of Honour to work at it.

IV. Whileſt the Temple ſtood, the Jews made it a particular Devotion to appear there from all Parts of Judæa. Joſephus * relates how Ceſtius, deſigning to perſuade Nero that the Jewiſh Nation was not ſo deſpicable as he believed, cauſed the People to be numbred by the Sacrificers. At the Feaſt of the Paſſe-over they killed 255600 Lambs. There was a Lamb to each Family; every Family conſiſted of ten, and ſometimes of twenty Perſons; but by reducing them all to ten, there would be two Millions, five hundred, and fifty ſix Thouſand Perſons that celebrated the Paſſe-over; and near eleven hundred thouſand Men periſh'd at the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem by Titus, becauſe they were come to keep the Feaſt when it was Beſieged.

V. Authors vary about the time that the Feaſt continued; Some reckon Eight days of unleaven'd Bread; and others ſpeak of but Seven. Joſephus himſelf follows both theſe Reckonings in different places of his Book. The Contradiction is eaſily ſolved by obſerving, that eight Days are to be reckon'd when that of the Paſſe-over is brought into them, and but ſeven when it is left out. Leo of Modena † aſſoils the Contradiction another way, by ſaying, that the Jews who were without Jeruſalem and its Diſtricts continued this Feaſt eight Days.

VI. The Sacrament conſiſts in the eating of a Lamb which was to be Sacrificed betwixt the two Evenings; that is from Mid-day, or One of Clock, to Sun ſetting. Each Family brought a Lamb to the Court of the Temple, and the Levites and Prieſts kill'd it. Philo pretends ‖, that beſides the Levites, the Laity were imployed in this Miniſtry. He has been attack'd for it, as if he was ignorant of what was done at Jeruſalem, or had broach'd in the antient Church the ſame Opinion, which Tertullian has followed in Chriſtianity, by giving the Laity * liberty to offer. Laſtly, they ſcruple not to ſay, that all the Jews of Egypt were not Orthodox, from the time that Onias cauſed to be built a Temple in the City of the Lions, in which they ſacrificed, ſince the Laicks offer'd the Paſchal Lamb there.

But there is no reaſon ſo ſeverely to Condemn of Ignorance and Heterodoxy an Author who could not but know the Rites of his Nation, and was one of its Principal Chiefs. The Power he aſſigns to the Lay-men in the Adminiſtration of the Sacraments was neceſſary among the Jews. Each Father of a Family has the power to Circumciſe his Child, and it is not requiſite to be a Prieſt, or Head of a Synagogue to confer this Sacrament. They had alſo the Privilege of killing the Lamb. 'Tis eaſy to reconcile Philo and Joſephus about the immolation; for there is no doubt but the Prieſts and Levites Sacrificed as many as they could, as Joſephus ſays. But 'twas neceſſary for the Lay-men to come in with their aſſiſtance, as Philo affirms; for otherwiſe it would have been impoſſible for the Levites to have killed 255600 Lambs, between the time of half an hour after One, and Six at Night. God muſt have wrought a perpetual Miracle to continue a Supernatural ſtrength and activity to the Levites, if they had perform'd this laborious Miniſtry in ſo ſhort a time. The Prieſts only received the Blood of the Lamb. Laſtly, the Father of the Family perform'd the Sacerdotal Function, in his diſtribution of this Sacrament, and bleſſing the Cup: And why might he not do the ſame in the Immolation? By this it appears, that tho' the Feaſt of the Paſſe-over was Solemn, yet the greateſt part of it was ſpent in painful Services, and the reſt began not till towards the Evening: For beſides Sacrificing the Lamb, they were to ſearch for the leaven'd Bread. The Modern Jews having neither Temple nor Sacrifices, nor liberty to kill the Paſchal Lamb, have only retain'd the Cuſtom of removing the leaven'd Bread, and eating the Azymes for ſeven Days

VII. On the Eve of the Paſſe-over, all the firſt-born of the Family faſt, in Commemoration of their being ſaved by the deſtroying Angel in Egypt The Men go to the Synagogue in the Evening, where they begin the Service with reading the Hiſtory of Terah who worſhipp'd falſe Gods: They proceed to the places of Scripture, which ſhew that God has call'd this Nation to the Knowledge of him: They come to the Captivity, and the Miſeries they ſuffer'd in Egypt. The Women ſerve up a very neat Table, on which are ſet Cakes without Leaven; two pieces of a Lamb; a roaſted Shoulder, in remembrance that God deliver'd them with a ſtretch'd out Arm: The other Joynt is boiled in memory of the Sacrifice. To this they add †, as is ſaid, ſome little Fiſhes, becauſe of the Leviathan; an hard Egg, on account of a prodigious large Bird, which they call Ziz: Meat, by reaſon of Behemoth; Peaſe and Wall-nuts for the Children, for fear they ſhould fall aſleep, or that they may enquire the reaſon of this Ceremony. They have a kind of Muſtard, or rather Mortar, which they formerly compounded of Dates and dry Figgs, and at preſent of Cheſnuts and Apples, to repreſent the Labour of Brick-making. They call it Charoſſet ||. Some have ſaid the Charoſſet was not commanded by the Law; but R. Eliezer * maintains the contrary. Laſtly, they forget not Wild Succory and other bitter Herbs.

VIII. The Father of the Family ſeats himſelf at Table with his Children and Slaves; becauſe every body is free that Day. Only the Diſciples dare not ſit in preſence of the Rabbies, unleſs they give them leave. Some think, that before they ſit down, they cauſe their Feet to be waſh'd. An inſtance of this we find in the Goſpel, where JESUS CHRIST waſh'd his Diſciples feet, inſtead of imploying the Miniſtry of Servants, as the Cuſtom was. He alſo cenſured the Superſtition of St. Peter, who in imitation of the Devout of that time, would not only have his Feet, but his Body waſh'd all over. Being waſh'd and ſeated, the Head of the Family takes bitter Herbs about the bigneſs of an Olive, which he tempers in the Charoſſet; and then eats, and diſtributes a like quantity to all the Company. 'Tis pretended, that this was the Sauce in which Judas dipp'd his Bread, when our Lord foretold he ſhould betray him. Having eaten this, the Table is drawn a little back, and then a young Lad, who is order'd to ſing the Hymn, asks himſelf many Queſtions about the Origine of theſe Ceremonies. He interrogates himſelf, Why they eat that night Unleavened Bread? Why they only uſe Bitter Herbs? &c. The Table is brought back, and the Father of the Family explains the Hiſtory of the Paſchal Lamb, and of all the Rites obſerved in it. He concludes with ſaying, they are to bleſs God for vouchſafing their Anceſtors ſuch a glorious Liberty; to pray to him for the Reſtoration of Jeruſalem, and the antient Sacrifices, that they may be able to eat the Paſcal Lamb, and pacify God by his Blood.

IX. Prayer being ended, the Maſter of the Family waſhes his Hands, becauſe it is not lawful to eat with Dirty Hands, and there is reaſon to fear they ſhould have contracted ſome Impurity, ſince the ſitting down at Table. He takes one of the Unleavened Loaves, breaks and bleſſes it. He beſtows not his Benediction upon the other Loaves he ſees on the Table, ſince they ought to be contented that Night with a Morſel of Bread; becauſe it is a Bread of Affliction, a Bread deſign'd for the Slaves and the Miſerable. He mingles the Unleavened Bread with the Herbs and Charoſſet, and eats it, bleſſing God for having given this Ordinance to his People. Afterwards he takes a piece of the Lamb, which he eats with the like Acts of Thankſgiving. At laſt, they † take a little piece more of Unleaven'd Bread, after which they are permitted to eat no more; but they drink a third and fourth Cup of Wine, diluting it with a little Water. The Poor and the Rich are to drink equally alike; even the Beggars are ſubject to this Law, and thoſe that love not Wine can't be diſpens'd with from taſting it. They chant a Thankſgiving || and particular Pſalms all the while the Ceremony laſts: There is ſome Difference betwixt the Schools of Hillel and Schammay about thoſe Pſalms, and the Number of Verſes they are to ſing; but it is not conſiderable.

X. The Doctors * obſerve many Differences betwixt the antient way of celebrating the Paſſe-over and the Rites obſerv'd at preſent. 1. As they have no Sacrifice at preſent, the Child that ſings the Hymn, and makes the Interrogatories, does not ask the Reaſon why they eat the Meat only Roaſted. This was the antient Cuſtom. The Lamb was to be roaſted whole: But ſince the Abolition of the Sacrifices they have changed this Cuſtom, and it is no longer lawful to ſerve a Lamb upon the Table entirely roaſted, or entirely boil'd; becauſe that would be offering and eating Sacrifices out of Jeruſalem and out of the Temple. They remove this Scruple by boiling one part, and roaſting another of the Lamb, or elſe by mutilating it: For the want of any part ſuffices to incapacitate the Beaſt for Sacrifice. 2. This Want of the Sacrifice obliges them to Strike ſome Hymns out of the Service relating to the Paſchal Lamb. 3. Their Diſperſion alſo at preſent obliges the Jews to add ſome Prayers to God for the Reeſtabliſhing of the City, the Temple and Sacrifices, as he formerly deliver'd his People from the Egyptian Bondage, and for capacitating them to render him the ſame Thankſgivings. 4. In Imitation of Hillel, who, as they ſay, was uſed to take a little Bread, a few Herbs, and a ſmall piece of the Lamb, to ſauce it altogether in the Charoſſet, and to eat it without any Thankſgiving, they do the ſame thing at preſent. 5. Whereas the laſt Meſs they formerly did eat of, was the Lamb, that the Reliſh of it might remain the longer, at preſent they conclude with the Unleaven'd Bread, that both the Taſte of that, and of the Lamb, may remain, becauſe the Law commands to eat them both. 6. Laſtly they neglect at preſent the Girding of their Loins, the pulling off their Shoes, and taking a Staff in their Hand; but they Stoop with their Heads during the Repaſt: At leaſt this is a kind of Devotion, that thoſe who would be more remarkable, religiouſly obſerve.

XI. They doubt not but this Ceremony is of great Efficacy. They derive from it the Merit of the Blood which Abraham ſhed in receiving Circumciſion: Of that he deſign'd to ſpill in ſacrificing his Son, and even of the Blood of the Paſchal Lamb. Some aſſociate † the three Patriarchs Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob; as if they concurr'd to render this Repaſt more Efficacious. R. Bechai maintains more judiciouſly, that the Blood of the Lamb is no Security to the Sinner: But that he, who placing his Confidence in God, and without fearing Pharaoh, had the courage to Sacrifice the Abomination of the Egyptians (that is the Lamb, which was one of their principal Divinities) obtain'd Pardon. He aſcribes all to Faith, and derives the Deliverance from God alone. Laſtly, they regard this Sacrament as Eternal, peculiar to the Jewiſh Nation; to thoſe who have already received Circumciſion; and as the Fountain of good things in this Life, and in the World to come: And if after this Feaſt they ſpend Thirty three Days in Mourning without Marrying, or Shaving themſelves, or from having new Cloaths, 'tis from a particular Reaſon taken from the great Mortality which was formerly among Akiba's Diſciples: Which ſtopp'd the Thirty third Day.

I. THE Feaſt of the Paſſe-over was always celebrated after the Equinox of the Spring * on the Fourteenth of the Month Niſan, when the Moon is in the Full. God himſelf gave this Law; For when the People came out of Egypt, he changed the Order of the Times, and appointed the Month Niſan, which anſwers to thoſe of March and April, to be the firſt of the Year, that the Deliverance he wrought for his People might be more exactly remembred; but this change only related to the Feaſts of the Church.

The Day of the Paſſe-over had been fix'd by the Law; but as the Months were Lunary, and it was Neceſſary to make them Quadrate with the Courſe of the Sun, the Criticks fail not to intereſs themſelves in this Subject, and to offer abundance of Conjectures. That we may the better diſtinguiſh the times we'll begin with the Hours: Afterwards we'll examine the Days, Months and Years of the Jews.

SECT. 1. Of the Hours.

II. We are accuſtom'd to ſee the Night and Day divided into equal Hours, and this Cuſtom ſeems ſo Natural and Eaſy, that we are apt to think it never was otherwiſe. In the mean time it is of no very antient Date, and the politeſt Nations were a long time ignorant of it. The great Salmaſius aſſerts, that the Hours and Dials began to be firſt known by the Greeks † a little before Alexander the Great, ſince neither the Comical Poets, as Menander, nor the Philoſophers, as Plato, ever ſpeak of the Hours, but to indicate the Seaſons. They divided the Day into three Parts ||, the Morning, Noon, and Twilight of the Evening. The Romans had only the Morning and Evening, and Noon divided the two Extremes. They meaſured the Time by the Feet, from the Shadow of the Body: And in this manner the Peaſants without Dial and Clock can tell you the Hour of the Day by the Shadow of their Cottages. The difference of great or little Bodies made none at all in the Hours, becauſe the Feet are always proportion'd to the Stature: And thus it was that Pythagoras meaſured the heighth of Hercules, by his foot-ſtep which he had imprinted upon the Sand in the Olympick Games. They reckon'd up to twenty Foot of Shadow, and vindicated their Appointments and Meal-times by ſuch a Foot, as we diſtinguiſh them at preſent by the Hours: And hereby we are to underſtand the Raillery of a Comical Poet upon a Man who had been invited to Dinner at the Shadow of twelve Feet, and who for fear of being diſappointed roſe before Day, and took the Shadow of the Moon for that of the Sun.

* Vendelin aſſerts, That Hipparchus being the firſt that made Aſtronomical Obſervations upon the Courſe of the Sun; Nothing but the Solſtice was known before his time. So that the Jews had no regard to the Equinox for the Celebration of the Paſſe-over, which ſometimes happen'd eight Days before. He goes upon the Authority of Eliezar Son-in-Law to Gamaliel, one of the Patriarchs. But can it be conceived there was any need of Hipparchus's Aſſiſtance to notify that there was a time when the Days and Nights are equal? Could not the Egyptian and Caldean Aſtronomers, whoſe Experience and Knowledge we hear ſo often boaſted of, be able to make this Diſcovery? And ought Eliezar's Authority to prevail over the contrary and general Tradition of the Jews? Be it how it will, that Feaſt is not celebrated at preſent till after the Equinox. Vend. Ep. Contr. Antiquit. Orient. Ep. 41. p. 355.

† Homer ſpeaks of the Hours. Odyſſ. λ v. 293. & ω v. 141. But he means by them the Seaſons. Philo followed the ſame Notion long after the Invention of Hours. Τὰς ἐτησίους ὥρας. Philo de Mundi Opif.

|| Ἔσσεται ἠὼς ἢ δείλη ἢ μέσον ἦμαρ. Homer Il. φ.

We * ſhould be to blame to ſeek for a Sun-dial here with Scaliger: For the Poet evidently alludes to the ſhadow that was meaſured by the Feet. This was a very ſtupid Cuſtom. Nevertheleſs, the Romans knew nothing of Hours and Dials, till the firſt Punick War †; and twas Meſſala, who returning from Sicily after the taking of Catana, brought one of them with him, and erected it in a publick Place.

The Jews don't appear to have been more Ingenious than the Greeks and Latins. They diſtinguiſh'd the Day into || three parts, which they call Morning, * Noon, and Evening. The fourth part contain'd the watches of the Night, during which the Prieſts were to relieve one another in the Temple. If they borrow'd their Dials from the Greeks, and their equal Hours from the Romans, as we are told, that Cuſtom came very late among them. In the mean time, I think we may obſerve three things, 1. That the Hours and Dials were much earlier known among the Greeks than Salmaſius has believ'd. 2. That the Jews had them before the Greeks. 3. 'Tis only true, that their Hours were unequal; and from thence we explain in an eaſy and manifeſt manner how the Sun went backwards ten Degrees on Ahaz Dial. Theſe three things are to be proved.

III. Pliny relates that Anaximenes was the firſt that ſaw a Sun-dial at Lacedemon. Salmaſius † has attack'd him ſmartly; becauſe having lived above two Hundred Years before Alexander the Great, it would be impoſſible the Hours and Dials ſhould have been no better knownin that Prince's time, if the uſe of them had been ſo antient. He aſſerts, that the Invention of Anaximenes, or rather of Anaximander his Maſter, conſiſted in ſome Mathematical Inſtruments by which he uſed to diſcover the Meridians and Solſtices. I am amaz'd that Salmaſius has not given || Diogenes Laertius a Commentator of great Authority, in ſupporting his Conjecture by the teſtimony of * Euſebius, who ſays that Anaximander invented the Inſtrument by which they diſcover'd the Revolutions of the Sun, of the Seaſons and Equinoxes. This Commentary is exactly to the purpoſe; but the Invention aſcribed to Anaximander ought not to rob him of the Glory of being the firſt that found out Quadrants and Dials for the Greeks. On the contrary, as he made Aſtronomy and the courſe of the Sun his principal ſtudy, he might eaſily diſcover a more exact and compendious way of diſtinguiſhing the Diurnal courſe of that Luminary into ſeveral parts, and of making Dials that preciſely noted the Hours. Suidas † has diſtinguiſh'd theſe two Inventions which ought not to be confounded, and whereof one does not deſtroy the other. There is only one miſtake therefore to be corrected in Pliny, that of confounding Anaximenes with Anaximander, the Diſciple with the Maſter: For it is more Natural to ſay, it is he that is miſtaken, than Diogenes Laertius. Anaximander diſtinguiſh'd the Hours, and brought Quadrants and Sun-dials to the Greeks in the Fifty-eighth Olympiad, in the Year || two Hundred and eight from the building of Rome, and above two Hundred Years before Alexander the Great.

IV. This Conjecture which Salmaſius endeavours to invalidate by the ſilence of Authors, who liv'd betwixt that time and Alexander the Great, becomes manifeſt and ſtrong by the teſtimonies we ſhall produce. Anacreon lived at the ſame time with Anaximander: Nevertheleſs he ſpeaks poſitively of Hours:

Μεσονύκτιοις * ποθ' ὥρης.

The Interpreter, tho' a very Ingenious Man, has ill tranſlated it, Nuper ſilente Nocte; for the Poet makes Love ramble about in the Hours of the Night. I know not how Salmaſius came to over-look this Ode of a Man that was Co-temporary with Anaximander.

He has ſtrugled hard to get rid of Ariſtophanes † by correcting his Text; and rejecting the Authority of Pollux, who thinks the word employed by that Poet ſignifies the Needle of a Dial. He diſputes about another word, as if the converſion of the Sun could only be applied to the diſtance from the Solſtice. Laſtly he ſays, that the Comedian, inſtead of asking what a Clock 'tis, deſired to know whether the Sun was far from the Solſtice, and how many Days had paſt ſince that time. But Salmaſius makes this Player ask too Aſtronomical a Queſtion, no ways agreeing to his Character. 'Tis more natural for him to ask what Hour the Needle of the Dial pointed to. The word uſed by Ariſtophanes has often ſignified the Needle of the Dial; and ſo no violence is done to the Text. Thus you have two Witneſſes that prove the diſtinction of Hours to be much antienter than Alexander the Great; for Ariſtophanes lived in the LXXX. Olympiad, a little after Anaximander.

Herodotus || makes a third Evidence: He lived in the Reign of Xerxes, and poſitively ſays two things, 1. That the Greeks took the uſe of Dials from the Babylonians. 2. That they divided the Day into twelve parts; and he uſes the ſame word that Ariſtophanes has employed to ſignify the Needle of the Dial. 'Tis true, he does not give Anaximander the glory of inventing Dials; for he aſcribes it to the Babylonians: But he may be in the right; for Anaximander, who had travell'd into Chaldea, brought the Dials to the Greeks, who thought he had invented them, becauſe they never ſaw them before.

Indeed

Indeed he does not give the Name of Hours to these twelve parts of the Day; but, on the contrary, according to the old Custom, calls the different Seasons of the Year, Hours; but these difficulties are no obstacle to the division of the Day into twelve parts, taken from the Babylonians, and known by the Greeks, in the Reign of Xerxes, long before Alexander the Great.

We'll add a fourth testimony, which Salmasius did not know of; which is that of Xenophon † who followed Cyrus the Younger in his Expedition, and who makes Euthidemus say, that the Sun which is Luminous, discovers the Hours of the Day to us; and that the Gods have made the Stars to shine in the obscurity of the Night, that knowing how the Hours of it pass, Men may act accordingly. Socrates adds, that the Moon shews the parts of the Months as well as those of the Night. So that in Socrates and Xenophon's time the Day was divided into Hours, the Name of them was in use; and there were Dials that indicated those of the Night.

V. His Negative Argument, on which he bottoms, has four considerable defects; 1. The silence of Authors, who lived betwixt Anaximander and Alexander the Great, is not universal; since we have now produced four Witnesses, which is a great number for Ages so remote, and amidst so great a scarcity of Authors. 2. Salmasius is even mistaken in the Fact; for Plato, whose silence he reckons a decisive Argument, knew both Hours and Dials; for || Athenæus relating, that Ctesibius had invented a Musical Instrument, says, that Plato had some Idea of that contrivance, since he had made a Night-dial much resembling that Instrument; and this Philosopher ordered the Sovereign to put Women into Lucina's Temple, to observe what was transacted at the Celebration of Marriages; which Women were to stand Sentry every Day the third part of * an Hour. I confess Serranus has put Day instead of Hour; but the antient Editions note the third part of an Hour, and Marsilius Ficinus has so translated it. 3. We easily perceive the reason of other Authors silence; for Dials being very rare, and most People measuring the shadow and time with their Feet, they were not obliged to speak of this Invention. Dials were a long while after so rare among the Romans, that they had Servants in pay to tell them what a Clock it was.

Puer qui nunciat Horas.

Casaubon affirms that the first who used the Word Horologium, was one Batton a Comick Poet, whom he places towards the decay of Comedy. This Invention must needs have been very antient in his time, since he speaks of portable Dials.

Ὥσε † περιφέρειν
Ὡρολόγιον δόξε τις ἐχὶ λήπυθον. read, λήκυθον.

Lastly, this Argument drawn from silence, proves too much; since two things are acknowledged: 1. That Dials were invented before Alexander the Great. 2. That many Authors who lived under that Prince, or after him, have not spoken of them. The silence therefore reaches too far; and we have reason to conclude, that those who preceded that Prince might have said nothing of this Invention, tho it was a long time before them.

VI. Hours are much more antient than Casaubon and Salmasius have imagined; but whatever Antiquity can be assign'd them among the Greeks, the Jews enjoy'd that advantage long before. We have cited the passage of Herodotus, who acknowledges that this Science was brought from Chaldæa into Greece. Indeed those People as well as the Egyptians were the first Astronomers; and the light which the Antients had in this Science was borrowed from them. As the Jews had a great Correspondence with Chaldæa, whether by the Ambassadors that were sent thither, or received from thence, or by reason of the Ten Tribes that had been carried thither; 'tis easy to conceive, that that distribution of time, and invention of Dials was easily conveyed into Judæa. This can't be doubted, since there was in the Court of Hezekiah's Palace a || Sun-dyal that Ahaz had caused to be set there. This Prince had not only made a league with Tiglath-Pilneser King of Assyria, who came to his assistance; but he espoused the Rites and Superstitions of that Foreigner, with whom he had a long interview at Damascus. He was the first that brought into Judæa the division of the Day into twelve Hours, and the use of Sun-dials, which was common among the Babylonians, and unknown to his Nation. The Dial of the Court was called Ahaz's Dial, even in the Reign of his Son, because 'twas he that introduced that Custom, and they gave him the honour of it; so then the distinction of Hours which was antienter by two Hundred Years among the Jews than the Greeks, began under King Ahaz, in the Twelfth Olympiad.

VII. However, 'tis to be observed, that in these first Ages; and even long after the Invention of Dials, the Hours, were not equal, as they were in the Romans time. They still reckon'd twelves Hours to the Day; but as they went by the Zodiac and the Sun's declinations, the Hours of the Day were much shorter in Winter, and longer in Summer. This created a great difficulty in the making of Dials, since they were to note the changes that happen'd in the Hours every Month; but however, they discover'd them by lines much after the same manner as they shew the Minutes upon the Dial plate of Watches. 'Tis said, that the unequal Hours are at present call'd Antique, because the Antient Jews thus divided time; but this practise was common to the Chaldeans, Greeks and Romans, and that for a great many Ages.

VIII. This Observation removes the difficulty which we find in the Miracle God wrought, in causing the Sun to go down ten Degrees on Ahaz's Dial * to assure Hezekiah of the recovery of his health. For there is no need to seek out one of the longest Days of the Year, to corroborate the truth of the Miracle. There is no necessity that the Day should be Twenty-two Hours long, or that the Heathens should be sensible of so extraordinary a Change. I confess I have thought it a considerable difficulty in this Event, that the Heathens have never mentioned a Day of so enormous a length, nor the manifest disorder that Nature suffered by it. How came the Assyrians who were already great Astronomers not to observe it? I formerly solved the difficulty, by supposing that the Ambassy †, which the King of Assyria sent the Year following to Hezekiah was grounded upon the Curiosity of knowing the reasons and manner of so remarkable a Miracle being wrought for the King of Judæa; but I have ſince obſerved that this difficulty only riſes or grows conſiderable, becauſe we have a Notion that the Cuſtom at preſent was the practice of all times; and that the diſtinction of Days into twelve equal Hours was as antient as Hezekiah; whereas this is a miſtake, ſince the inequality of Hours was received in all Nations. They notified this inequality on the Dials by Lines, that they might know the Hours in Winter as well as Summer. They were thoſe Lines that ſhew'd the inequality of the Hours, which the Sacred Hiſtorian calls Degrees. Theſe Degrees could not be entire Hours, ſince Hezekiah could not have the choice of making the Sun go forward or backward ten Degrees; and therefore they have changed them into half Hours, that they might not overturn all Nature. But it's much more Natural to ſay, theſe Degrees were Lines which noted the inequality of the Hours in every Month There were many of theſe Lines betwixt every Hour noted upon the Dial; and ſo the Sun or its Shadow might go ten Degrees backwards without prolonging the Day above an Hour or two; which Change was neither ſo difficult, nor ſo conſiderable, as to awaken the curioſity of all the Neighbouring Nations, who perhaps did not mind it.

IX. We are told, that the Jews || continued this inequality of Hours, till they came under the Dominion of the Romans, who communicated to them the Reformation, which they themſelves had made ſome time before. This is a very probable Conjecture: But yet nothing in the Goſpel determines us to believe it. This only informs us, that they continued to count the Hours from Sun-riſing at Six a Clock; and that the Day was divided into four Parts; the beginnings whereof were notify'd by the Sound of the Trumpet, on Feaſt-days; becauſe then they reſum'd afreſh their Devotions and Sacred Exerciſes. The Firſt of theſe four Portions was from Six a Clock in the Morning till Nine; The Second from Nine till Twelve: The Third from Twelve till Three: And the Fourth from that time in which they made the Offering, till * Six; They ſeldom counted the Hours that paſs'd between theſe Diviſions: at leaſt they are very ſeldom mention'd. St. Mark ſays †, that CHRIST was Crucified at the third Hour, becauſe then his Tryal began, and the Sentence was proſecuted before Pilate, by vertue whereof he was Crucified: for that was the Hour in which the Jews and Romans commenced their Suits and Proceſſes, exercet tertia Cauſidicos. The Indictment was made at the third Hour, as St. Luke ſays, and the Sentence was executed about the ninth Hour, or three Hours after Noon. The Samaritans and the other Modern Jews in Civil Matters follow the diſtinction of Hours receiv'd in the Countries where they live: but they have ſtill their Hours conſecrated to Prayer and Divine Service. They divide each Hour into a thouſand and four hundred Scruples, and they reckon eighteen Scruples to each Minute.

SECT. 2. Of the Days.

X. The difficulty is not near ſo great concerning the Days as Hours. They are divided into three Sorts; Firſt the Natural, which contains both Night and Day. Moſes || brings God ſpeaking according to this Notion, when he ſays, that he ſanctified all the firſt-born of the Children of Iſrael, for himſelf, on the day that he ſmote the firſt-born of Egypt. In the mean time he ſtruck that fatal Blow in the Night, whileſt they lay at full ſtretch in reſt and ſleep, and deſtruction came whileſt they thought themſelves ſecure. This Natural Day began with the Evening at Sun-ſet, becauſe of the New Moon, the Feaſt whereof was to be celebrated, after the ſeeing its Creſcent. The Modern Jews * preſerve the ſame Cuſtom; and begin the Celebration of their Feaſts with the Evening.

The Second Day, which was call'd Artificial, conſiſted of Twelve Hours, and began in the Morning, at Sun-riſing at Six a Clock, and ended at Sun-ſetting.

They at firſt only diſtinguiſh'd the Days by their Number of Firſt, Second, &c. but for ſome Ages thoſe that are mingled among the Chriſtians give the Days the Planetary names. They are not ſo ſcrupulous as the Greeks, who have ſtruck out the odious name of Venus, and call Friday, i.e. Dies Veneris Paraſceve, or the Preparation. The Lord's Day is by the Modern Jews call'd Sunday. Some alſo call it the Day of the Nazarenes. The next Day is Munday, which as well as Friday is ſet apart for the Reading of the Law and the Exerciſes of Piety. If you ask them why they prefer theſe two Days before the reſt, they anſwer what Moſes relates, that they journied three Days and found no Water: that is, they ought not to ſuffer three Days to paſs without reading the Law, if they expect God ſhould ſupply them with the Neceſſaries of Life. 'Tis pretended that the Inhabitants of the Country come on this Day to the Cities to hear the Law, and that it was on one of theſe Days of Aſſembly that the Apoſtles † entred into a Synagogue at Antioch, where they Preach'd, for otherwiſe they muſt have kept the Sabbath with the Jews.

Laſtly, there is a Prophetick Day. We may give it this Title, becauſe the Prophets are the only Perſons that have call'd Years, Days. We have given an inſtance of it in explaining Daniel's Seventy Weeks.

SECT. 3. Of the Months.

XI. The Months of the Antient Church were Lunary. But 1. The Lunary Months are very different. 2. 'Tis doubted whether the Jewiſh Church always compoſed the Year of Lunary Months. 3. When they made uſe of them they were forced to reconcile the Sun's and the Moon's Courſes, that they might not celebrate the Paſſe-over, and offer the Firſt-fruits in Autumn, or in Winter; and as they have taken different Methods to make this Adjuſtment, we find great difficulty in ſetting this Matter in a clear light; and the ableſt Chronologers || find themſelves ſo bewildred, that they take quite contrary Roads to the Point deſigned.

XII. There are three ſorts of Lunary Months. 1. The Moon ſpends twenty ſeven Days and forty three Minutes in running through the Zodiac, and returning to the ſame Point ſhe ſet out from. This is what is called her Period. 2. The Moon rejoyns the Sun, and returns to the ſame Point, where ſhe left him. This is what is called the Synod * or the Conjunction of the Moon. To make this Circuit ſhe employs twenty nine Days and twelve Hours. And therefore the Antients who reckon'd their Lunary Months from this Conjunction had two ſorts of Months; the One hollow † of twenty nine Days, the other full conſiſting of thirty Days: But there was a great defect in their Calculation, since they had neglected the forty four Minutes which exceeded the twelve Hours; which Minutes being collected together in a long Tract of Years, threw the Moon horribly out of course. Many Criticks assert, that the Jews reckon'd their Months from the Conjunction of the Sun and Moon. 3. But 'tis much more probable, that they particularly depended on the Rising of the Moon, and observed its Crescent when it proceeded from the Rays of the Sun; and that Phasis, or appearance regulated the Feasts and the beginning of the Months. Two reasons induce me to prefer this Opinion; First, that the Caraites, who are the most tenacious Bigots of antient Customs, maintain to the Rabbonists, that this was the Primitive Usage of the Nation. Secondly, that the Israelites coming out of Egypt and travelling in the Desart, were not so well vers'd and skill'd in Astronomy as to regulate the Course of the Moon, and its Conjunction with the Sun. They made their Judgment by their Senses, and knew the time of the New-Moon by seeing it appear. This was the easier to them, because they travelled in the Mountains and Desarts of Arabia, where the Mysts that obscure the rising of this Luminary are very rare. The Romans * did the same thing; for Romulus order'd that every Month should begin with the first appearance of the Moon. Indeed this caused some inequality in the Months; but they afterwards corrected it by Experience. It may be said also, that when they had learn'd Astronomy from the Caldeans, they added the Rules of that Art to their Sense, and made use of them on occasion to rectify the Disorders that were crept into their Accounts. 'Tis so true, that this was the antient Custom of the Jews, that notwithstanding their present use of Astronomical Tables and Cycles, the Jews assemble to discover the Crescent, and when they perceive it, they make a Prayer, in which they call God the Creator of the Planets, and Restorer of the New-Moon. "They † lift themselves on Tip toe towards Hea- "ven; desire an exemption from all Evils; make "mention of David; salute one another, and disperse.

XIII, The Talmudists ‖ have pretended, that they used great precautions not to be mistaken about the Phasis of the Moon: For which purpose they set Sentinels on the top of Mountains, to discover it the Moment it appear'd. Those Sentinels were Select Persons who came in all haste to make their report to the Sanhedrim, or High-Priest, who intimidated them with Menaces, to oblige them to give the exacter account. He confronted this account with the figures of the Moon, which were drawn on the Wall of his Palace; and as soon as he was satisfied that the new-Moon had appear'd, he immediately dispatch'd Couriers to the Neighbouring Cities, to give them notice that they must Celebrate the Feast. The Christians *, who espouse all these Precautions, add, that the Couriers went not above ten Days Journey from Jerusalem, and that they rested not on the Sabbath. They fancy also that JESUS CHRIST alluded to this Permission, when he reproached the Jews of his time with violating the Sabbath.

XIV. But we only learn this exactness of the Sanhedrims examining the New-Moon by the Doctors, who came with an after-blow to imbellish their Narration, and describe such Customs as no where appear in any antient Monument. 'Twas impossible that those Couriers should make haste enough to give seasonable notice to all the Cities of Judæa of the Feasts that were to be celebrated during the Month. Tho' they had only gone ten Days Journey from Jerusalem, would not that have been enough to hinder the Celebration of the New Moons, and many other Feasts? What became of the more remote Synagogues? Did they continue in Ignorance, or had they some other expedient to avoid it, without the decision of the Sanhedrim, or High-Priest? They might easily foresee the Feast of the Passe-over, and promulge it, especially when they intercalated a Month; but they could not give such ready notice for the other Feasts, after the sight of the New Moon. 'Tis therefore much more probable, that without any dependance on the Sanhedrim and the Couriers it sent, each City examin'd the New-Moon, or caus'd it to be examin'd by some wise Person, to whom the Caraites give the honorary Title of Prophet. Each City had its Sentries, and determin'd it self by their report. There is nothing in our Saviour's discourse, that countenances the pretended Custom of the Sanhedrim, and that manifests his retorting the reproach that was made him, of violating the Sabbath by the Example of the Couriers that travell'd on that Day.

XV. 'Tis thought, the Jewish Church did not always use Lunary Months. This is what we are to examine; but in order to avoid Confusion, we'll distinguish four different Seasons.

The first Period is that of the Patriarchs till the Bondage of their Children in Egypt. Ainsworth † maintains that under the first Oeconomy, the Year was Lunary, composed of six hollow Months, and six full Ones, which made three hundred fifty four Days; but by examining the History of Noah more nicely, we find that the Year consisted of 360 Days, and the Months of thirty. For Moses reckons 150 Days, whilst the Rain fell, from the seventh of the second Month to the seventh of the seventh Month. It rained therefore for five entire Months; by dividing these five Months into thirty Days, you'll find the 150 mentioned by Moses. Besides I much question, whether in Noah's time, they had sufficiently Studied the Course of the Moon, to distinguish the six hollow, and six full Months, by reason of the twelve Hours, the Moon imploys, beyond the twenty nine Days, to rejoin the Sun. They were not then so exact, and this Fraction of the Calculations came not in till a long time after. I think also they are mistaken in saying, that the second Month was that of Jiar, which answers to our May; for God had not yet instituted the Ecclesiastical Year, nor chosen Nisan for the first Month of it. The Deluge doubtless began in October, and God accommodated himself in this Miracle as near as possible to the order of Nature; in which time the Rains are violent in hot Countries. Let us add, that Tisri, which answers to September, is call'd in the Book of the Kings the Month of the Antients ‖. 'Tis also intitled the Infancy *, because the Patriarchs began the Year with it. These Patriarchs had an Year or 360 Days, which neither perfectly agreed with the Course of the Sun, nor with that of the Moon.

XVI. The Israelites rectified their Astronomy by their going down to Egypt; for as the Inhabitants of that Country had a Solary Year of Three hundred and sixty five Days, so they conform'd themselves to that Calculation, tho' it was defective. 1. They were obliged to submit to their Masters, who kept them under the Yoke. 2. As they were not bound by any Ceremony to keep a different Account, why ſhould they do it? But this ſecond Period is of no great importance.

XVII. Kepler and Petavius * aſſert, that Moſes, when he left Egypt, retain'd his Solary Year. 'Tis true, ſay they, the Phœnicians, who were their Neighbours, had a Lunary Year, whether they had obſerv'd in thoſe Navigations that made them ſo famous, that the Flux and Re-flux follow'd the Courſe of the Moon, or that they deſign'd an honour to their Patroneſs Aſtarte; but there was no reaſon, which obliged Moſes to prefer the Phœnician Year before the Egyptian, to which he was already accuſtomed. On the contrary, there was reaſon to fear that if the Months commenced with the New Moon, the People would imitate the Worſhip, which the Phœnitians paid to that Planet.

XVIII. Whatever Pre-poſſeſſions a Man may have in favour of theſe great Maſters, we can't be induced to follow 'em. Firſt, God changed the Order, they had followed in Egypt, and inſtituted a new Year, different from that of the Egyptians; and he was ſo little apprehenſive, in this Inſtitution, of their worſhipping the Moon, that he conſecrated the time of its appearance to his Service, and fixed the Deliverance of his People, and the Feaſt of the Paſſe-over to the time of its being in the Full. Beſides Moſes, and other Sacred Writers had given the name of the Moon †, and the New-Moon to a Month. From whence came this Affectation, if it had not regulated the Beginning and the Courſe of it? They celebrated the New-Moons in Judæa, ſince the King made a Solemn Feaſt at 'em; and David was obliged to be preſent in the Reign of his Father-in-Law. Some think likewiſe, that they offered Sacrifices ſince David excuſed his Abſence by the neceſſity of appearing at Bethlehem, where there was a Solemn Sacrifice for his Family. The Sacrifice was offered the ſame Day that Saul made the Feaſt in his Palace, whence they conclude, that they ſacrificed at the New-Moon. The Rabbies anſwer, that this was the beginning of the Year, which was proclaimed with the Sound of Trumpets, and that no Inference can be made from this Sacrifice for the New-Moons; but they ground their Conjecture upon no Proof. 'Tis better to ſay that Sacrifice, by which David juſtified his Abſence, was a Feaſt peculiar to his Family; but tho' they did not Sacrifice for the New Moons, yet they diſtinguiſhed them from other Days, and ſanctified them by ſome particular Devotion; and therefore the Shunamite's Husband ſaid ||, wherefore wilt thou go to Eliſha the man of God to Day; for it is neither New-Moon, nor Sabbath? Why ſhould the Sabbath be joyn'd with the New-Moon, and Journeys be made at that time to the Man of God, if there had not been ſome particular Devotion at the New-Moons, before the Captivity of Babylon? The confident truſt they had in thoſe ſolemn Days was ſo great, that it has often been cenſured as Criminal by the Prophets; and that Superſtition, which began in the Prophets time, continued, and paſs'd even into Chriſtianity in St. Paul's time, who intreated the Coloſſians * not to ſuffer themſelves to be domineer'd over, either in reſpect of the New Moons or Sabbaths. The Apoſtle, like the Author of the Book of Kings, joyns the Sabbaths and New Moons together. Joſephus, who muſt know the Hiſtory of his Nation, affirms, that the Months were Lunary, from their departure out of Egypt. Laſtly, we have obſerved, that they began the Day with the Evening, becauſe they were to ſee the New-Moon, before they celebrated the Feaſt, and according to the Rabbies, when report was brought to the Sanhedrim, that the Moon had appeared in the beginning of the Month Niſan, it was proclaimed aloud, It † is ſanctified, it is ſanctified. There are ſtill Prayers in their Liturgy for this Day. All theſe Reaſons prove, that the Iſraelites had changed their Year in leaving Egypt, and that it conſiſted but of three hundred fifty four Days during this third Period, becauſe the twelve Months were Lunary.

XIX. The fourth Period of the Jewiſh Church begins at the time it was ſubjected to the Kings of Syria, after the Conqueſt of Alexander the Great, till it came under the Yoke of the Romans. who reformed the Kalendar. Joſephus [] almoſt confounds the Jewiſh Months, with thoſe of the Syro-Macedonians. He obſerves that Nicanor was conquer'd in the Month Adar, which is the Dyſtrus of the Macedonians; and that the Feaſt of the Lots, Purim, was celebrated the ſame Month. Laſtly, Joſephus was ſo fully ſatisfied with the Agreement betwixt the Jewiſh and Macedonian Months, that he was not always at the trouble of naming thoſe of the Jews. Indeed he aſſerts that his Nation came out of Egypt the Fifteenth of Xantippus *; but this Remark removes not all the Difficulty, ſince the Learned are not agreed about the length of the Attick and Macedonian Months.

XX. A great Party maintains, that they were all compoſed of thirty Days, which made an Year of 360. Scaliger † and Cardinal Noris, followed with a great multitude, are at the Head of this Party, and they found themſelves upon Arguments that ſeem very urgent; for Herodotus, reckoning a Life of ſeventy Years, aſſigns it a hundred and five thouſand and two hundred Days. Divide theſe Days by ſeventy Years, and you will find that each Year ought to contain three hundred and ſixty, and each Month thirty Days. It can't be reply'd that they made Intercalations from time to time, for Herodotus explains himſelf clearly, and excludes the Intercalary Months from his Computation *. Ariſtotle affirms, that Bitches are breeding their Whelps but the fifth part of the Year, which he confines to ſeventy two Days †. Five times ſeventy two make an Year of three hundred and ſixty Days. Laſtly Pliny obſerves, that the Athenians had erected three hundred and ſixty Statues to Demetrius Phalereus, as many as there were Days in the Year ||. Theſe Statues were thrown down almoſt as ſoon as they were raiſed, and then to flatter Demetrius, the Son of Antigonus, they called the thirtieth Day of the Month, Demetrius. We will not ſtand to multiply theſe Proofs, which may be ſeen elſewhere, and ſome of which demand Hiſtorical Diſcuſſions, which would carry us off from our Subject.

XXI. We alſo find at the Head of the other Party very eminent Learned Men. Petavius * could not agree with Scaliger upon this Point. He has had Diſciples and Defenders of great Renown, who maintain that if the Months of the antient Greeks were formerly of thirty Days, Solon reformed them long before Mechon, becauſe he perceived that the thirtieth Day fell ſometimes on the Old Moon, and ſometimes on the New. He therefore made them Lunary of twenty nine and thirty Days; and all Greece conformed to this Regulation.

One of the Proofs † produced with moſt foundation is the Teſtimony of Geminus, a famous Mathematician, who affirms, that the Greeks adjuſted their Months to the Courſe of the Moon, and their Year to that of the Sun. Demoſthenes ſays the ſame thing. They muſt have had a common Rule all over Greece, becauſe of the Games, Myſteries and Aſſemblies, that were celebrated at certain times. The Olympick Games were celebrated every four Years at the Full of the Moon, which follow'd the Summer Solſtice; and the Scholiaſt of Pindar obſerves, that it had ſometimes forty nine, and ſometimes fifty Months. This change proceeded from their having Lunary months, and being obliged to intercalate one the third Year, which made forty nine Months. They intercalated a ſecond at the End of the ſixth Year, which made the fiftieth Month the Scholiaſt ſpeaks of ||. The ſaying that theſe Intercalary Months were not full, is offering a pure Conjecture. The Macedonians, who enter'd into all the Aſſemblies of Greece, had doubtleſs the ſame Calendar. They communicated to the Jews their Lunary Months, after the Conqueſts of Alexander the Great; but this Queſtion of the Months is ſo allied to the Jewiſh Year, that we muſt put 'em together. We ſhall only obſerve that their Months were always Lunary of 29 and 30 Days alternately.

SECT. 4. Of the Year.

XXII. The Jews had four ſorts of Years; one for Plants; another for Beaſts; a third for Religion, and the Church; and the fourth was Civil, and common to all the Inhabitants of Judæa. The Year of Plants was reckon'd from the Month of January *, becauſe they paid Tythe-fruits of the Trees that budded at that time. The ſecond Year was that of Beaſts; for when they tyth'd the Lambs, the Owner drove all the Flock under a Rod, and they marked the Tenth, which was given without choice to the Levites; but they could only take thoſe which fell in the Year; and this Year began at the Month Elul, which was the Fifteenth of Auguſt. But the two Years, that are moſt known, are the Civil and Eccleſiaſtick.

The Civil began the Fifteenth of September †, becauſe 'twas an old Tradition, that the World was created at that time. From this Year they reckon'd the Jubilees; dated all Contracts; and noted the Birth of Children, and the Reign of Kings. 'Tis ſaid alſo, that this Month was appointed for making War, becauſe the great Heats being over, they then went into the Field; and David ſent Joab at the Head of all Iſrael to deſtroy the Ammonites, at the time when Kings go forth to battle ||; that is to ſay, in the Month of September.

The Eccleſiaſtical Year began in March, or the firſt of Niſan, becauſe that was the time of their coming out of Egypt. From thence they reckon'd their Feaſts; and from this the Prophets ſometimes dated their Viſions and Oracles; for Zachary * ſays, that the Word of the Lord came to him in the ninth Month, Chiſleu. This Month anſwer'd to that of November: And ſo the Prophet went by the Eccleſiaſtical Year which began in March. Laſtly, Niſan is noted in Scripture by the Over-flowings of Jordan, which were common, becauſe it was ſwell'd by the Snows of Mount Libanus, which melted at that time.

XXIII. The Year being Lunary, and compoſed of three hundred fifty four Days, there was a neceſſity of reconciling it with the Courſe of the Sun; otherwiſe they would have celebrated the Feaſt of the Paſſe over, and of the Firſt-fruits, ſometimes in Winter, and at other times in Autumn. Hence the great Faſt of the Mahometans has no fixed time, becauſe the Arabians, who have retain'd the Lunar Years, have not had the Precaution to accomodate the Courſe of this Luminary with that of the Sun. As we don't know the manner how the Antient Jews made this Reconcilement, each learned Man has thrown in his Conjectures; of which we'll here relate the chief.

XXIV. Firſt ſome Chronologers aſſign thirty Days to each Month, and make the Year of 360. Some, as Allatius †, call this Year Solary, and others make it Lunary. Nevertheleſs it was not Lunary, as containing more than 354 Days; nor Solary, ſince it wanted five Days, and ſome Hours. If the Jews had eſpouſed this Year, it would have ſufficed them to have intercalated five Days, for making one Month longer than the reſt; and this alſo is what ſome learned Men maintain.

XXV. Uſher || affirms, that the Macedonians reform'd their Calendar, and took a Solary Year betwixt the ſecond Year of the CVIII. Olympiad, and the ſecond Year of the CXI; or to ſpeak more intelligibly, in that twelve Years ſpace that paſs'd between Philip's writing his Convention-Letter to all the Commonwealths of Greece, and the Battle fought the twentieth of May on the Banks of the Granicus by Alexander the Great. He proves it, becauſe the antient Hiſtorians have affirm'd, that this Battle happen'd in the Months of Targelion and Daſius. The firſt was that of the Athenians, and the ſecond that of the Greeks. It appears alſo from the Journal of Alexander the Great, that this Prince died in the ſame Month Daſius and Targelion. In the mean time theſe two Months could not jump with one another, if a change had not been made in the Macedonian Year, which became Solary at that time. The Syrians brought this Solary Year to the Jews, as is the Cuſtom of Conquerors: But the learned Dodwell * oppoſes Uſher's Conjecture, and aſſerts, that they are Modern Writers, who have made the Correſpondence of Daſius with Targelion, and that even the Journal of Alexander the Great's Life is a Spurious Piece.

XXVI. Indeed this learned Man † after having ſifted the matter with a ſurprizing Accuracy, which is the peculiar Character of all his Works, obſerves, that Alexander the Great had no reaſon to change the Lunary Year of the Greeks before he left his Country. The courſe of his Life was afterwards ſo tumultuous, that he had not leiſure to think of the Reformation of the Calendar. Would he have taken the Year of the Caldæans, in aſſuming their Habits and Cuſtoms? That is not likely. The Kings of Syria, to whom a great part of Aſia was Subject, preſerved therefore the Lunary Year, till the Romans having carried their Conqueſts into that Country, each City, which received Cæſar's or Auguſtus's Benefactions, began a new Epocha, and followed the Calendar, as reformed by Cæſar. The Jews, whoſe Months exactly anſwer'd the Macedonians, as is proved from Joſephus, preſerved alſo the Lunary Year, and made uſe of the Calippick Period to reconcile the Courſe of the Sun and Moon together; In a word, they had the ſame Months, the ſame Year, and the ſame Cycle of ſeventy ſix Years, as the Macedonians.

XXVII. However, theſe great Men, who diſplay ſuch a profound Erudition, remove not the greateſt Difficulty; for they leave that mighty Vacuum betwixt Moſes and Alexander the Great, during which there was no leſs Neceſſity of adjuſting the Courſes of the Sun and Moon, than has been ſince this Monarch's Conqueſts. Nor is it of more importance to know what was done under the Empire of the Syro-Macedonians, than in thoſe numerous Ages that preceded it; but on the contrary, if we knew what the Jews did from Moſes to Alexander the Great, we might eaſily conjecture the reſt; ſince it would be more probable, they would continue their antient Practice. We'll therefore attempt this Method, and endeavour to illuſtrate how they made the Intercalations in the time of Moſes, and the following Centuries.

XXVIII. Firſt it is undeniable, that they had need of Intercalations from the very beginning of the Commonwealth of Iſrael, ſince they had always an equal intereſt to celebrate the Feaſt of the Paſſe-over at the Full Moon of Niſan. St. Jerome || ſays, that the Children of Iſſachar knew the diſtinction of Seaſons; that thoſe were the Doctors that calculated the Times, and the Maſters that obſerved the Feaſts. To this he applies thoſe words of Jacob, he bowed his ſhoulder to bear; which he had before explained of the aſſiduity of this Tribe in ſtudying the Law. This Tradition actually agrees with that of the Rabbies *, who ſay, that thoſe of the Tribe of Iſſachar ſtrenuouſly apply'd themſelves to the Study of Aſtronomy, and that their Father had aſcended to Heaven, from whence he had brought the diſtribution of the Hour into 1080 Moments. Laſtly, the Scripture authorizes this Tradition, by relating † that the Children of Iſſachar were men that had underſtanding of the times, to know what Iſrael ought to do. All that we learn from hence is, that the Jews in David's time, and many Ages before, were careful to regulate the Times and Feaſts; but as their Obſervations are loſt, we muſt here put an end to our firſt Conjecture.

XXIX. When they had left Egypt, they changed the Solary Year by Order of God and Moſes; but they did not forget, that this Year was compoſed of 365 Days and ſome Hours, ſince that was the reckoning of the Egyptians, and they could not have lived amongſt 'em for ſo great a Number of Years without adopting their Calculation. They knew therefore from the firſt Foundation of their Republick, that they ought to reconcile the Courſe of the Moon with that of the Sun, whoſe Year conſiſted of three hundred ſixty five Days, whilſt that of the Moon contained but three hundred fifty four, and ſome odd Hours.

XXX. Beſides, the Feaſt of the Paſſe-over was obliged to theſe two Circumſtances; 1. That it ought to be celebrated after the Æquinox of the Spring. This Tradition is certain, not only from the Teſtimonies of Joſephus || and Philo, but from that of Ariſtobulus, that Peripatetick Philoſopher, who lived a long time before J. CHRIST under Ptolomey Philometor. Anatolius, who wrote upon this Subject, added one Agathobulus, for a fourth Witneſs; and Bede farther reckon'd one Paniade; but the firſt lived not till Adrian's time, and the Second is an imaginary Man, ſprung up from the Miſtake of Ruffinus, who has ill tranſlated Anatolius's Greek word, Ὁ παῦν. Beſides, the three other Writers are ſufficient.

XXXI. Secondly, they were to offer their Firſt-fruits at Pentecoſt. The Rabbies add a Third Reaſon of making Intercalations; when the Ways were bad, the Bridges broken, and the Ovens of Jeruſalem demoliſh'd: But beſides that this laſt Reaſon is Childiſh, we ought to ſtand to the two firſt Rules drawn from Holy Scripture, and a conſtant Cuſtom. Theſe two Rules neceſſitated the High-Prieſt to remove the Feaſt of the Paſſe-over, which would fall in the Months of February or January, in which they not only would have anticipated the Æquinox; but could not have offer'd the Firſt-fruits to God. They could not remove the Feaſt, without intercalating a Month, which was ſometimes hollow, of twenty nine Days, or full, as Neceſſity required. They therefore added a ſecond Month of February, Ve-Adar, to the Year, to make it longer, and bring the Fruits to maturity; and they were aſſiſted in theſe Intercalations by the Phaſes of the Moon, which they examined with extraordinary Care. Thus it is that the Caraites, who are religiouſly devoted to the antient Rites, explain the Matter.

XXXII. That we may render it manifeſt to every Reader, let us ſuppoſe, that ten Years after the Departure from Egypt, or the firſt of Solomon's Reign, the firſt of Niſan, which anſwers to the Months of March and April, was the twenty third of March. The fourteenth of the Month, of the Moon, and the Feaſt of the Paſſe-over, were the fifth of April, after the Æquinox of the Spring.

The ſecond Year. They were to go backward eleven Days; and ſo the Moon, and the Month Ni- ſan began the twelfth of March; and the Feaſt of the Paſſe-over, which was the fourteenth of the Month, and of the Moon, was celebrated the day of the Æquinox, the twenty fifth of March.

The third Year from the Departure. The Year would begin the firſt of March, becauſe they went backward eleven Days; but then the Æquinox, which was the twenty fifth of March, would have fell beyond the ſixteenth of Niſan, and they would have celebrated the Paſſe-over before the Æquinox, which was to be avoided; and therefore they intercalated a Month called Ve-Adar, or the Second February, becauſe they gave it the ſame Name, as to the laſt Month of the Year. The firſt of the Year, of the Month, and of the Moon, fell then on the twenty ninth of March after the Æquinox: and this Year had three hundred eighty three, or three hundred eighty four Days, according as the Month was hollow of twenty nine, or full of thirty Days.

The fourth Year began the nineteenth of March with the New-Moon, and the Paſſe-over was celebrated fourteen days after. It would be uſeleſs to carry the tireſome Calculations farther. It ſuffices to add, that they were obliged to make theſe Intercalations from time to time, to regulate the Feaſts of the Paſſe-over, and thoſe depending on it.

XXXIII. It do's not appear, that they had then a Cycle or Period. They contented themſelves with adding a Day more or leſs to the intercalated Month, to make it hollow or full, when that was neceſſary to adjuſt themſelves to the Courſe of the Sun or Moon. If there had been any ſettled Cycle, there would have been no need of advertiſing the remote Synagogues of the retarding the Year and the Feaſt; whereas they wrote to the Cities, to acquaint 'em with the Year, when the Intercalation was made, as appears by the Letter we have already * related. There was no need of changing this Method, when they became Subject to the Syrians. The Aſtronomers who have found the Cycles very convenient, to fix the Years and their Calculations more exactly, would fain lend 'em to the Jews, and perſuade us that they imitated Strangers in this Point; but they do not prove it. Beſides, the Jews, who were unexact, were contented with a rude reconcilement of the Lunary and Solary Year, without giving themſelves the trouble of the rigorous Calculations of the Aſtronomers.

XXXIV. Petavius refuted Scaliger concerning the Calippick Period, which was neither, ſays he, receiv'd by the Greeks nor Jews. He was in the right as to the latter; for I am perſuaded, that they had not then borrowed the Cycles, or Periods of Strangers. As they were not ſo exact in their Calculations as to carry them to a nicety, ſo they were contented to regulate their Years by the Vernal Æquinox, and the Phaſes of the Moon: And ſo much the rather, becauſe the Aſtronomers of that time did not remedy every thing. The truth is, they were ſtill very groſsly ignorant; for the Ec-centricity of the Zodiack was unknown to them. They placed the Signs differently; they were ignorant of the anticipation of the Solſtices and Æquinoxes, and of the preciſe entrance of the Sun into the Cardinal Points. In fine, tho' Hipparchus had diſcovered Calippus's fault, in giving 365 Days and ſix entire Hours to every Year, yet the World went on for many Centuries without attending to his Obſervation, tho' very important. They perſever'd in the Error they had lived in; and Julius Cæſar did not make uſe of it in reforming the Calendar. 'Tis no wonder then that the Jews ſatisfied with their old Intercalations, made as occaſion offered, and as we may ſay by the eye, did not run after the Periods and Cycles of Strangers, who in reality did not remedy every thing as Experience has diſcovered. Joſephus only obſerves, that they kept the Feaſt of the Paſſe over, when the Sun entered into Aries, that is to ſay, after the Spring Æquinox, and never ſpeaks of Cycle or Periods. The Caraites reject the Aſtronomical Calculations of the Rabbaniſts, as a novel Invention; and an antient Author cited by Clemens Alexandrinus † ſpeaking of the Jews, ſays, they neither celebrate the New-Moon, nor the Unleavened Bread, nor the Feaſt, nor the great Day, till the Moon has appeared. 'Tis therefore in vain to examine, whether they adopted the Calippick Period of the Greeks, or the Cycle of eight, and nineteen Years, ſince it is certain, that they preſerved their Lunar Year, and regulated their Intercalations by the Phaſes of the Moon.

XXXV. 'Tis true, Joſephus has given the Macedonian Names to the Jewiſh Months; and this perhaps occaſion'd Malela to ſay, that theſe Maſters of Judæa and Aſia, had impoſed on their Subjects the very names of their Months; but to remove this difficulty, which ariſes from Joſephus's Style, there is no neceſſity of changing either the Lunary Months of the Jews into Solary, or the Solary Months of the Macedonians into Lunary; for Joſephus‖ might indicate the Lunary Months of his Nation, under the Names receiv'd by the Macedonians, which were known over all Aſia, as we note theſe ſame Months of the Jews by the Names of the Solary and Roman Months, which we have adopted.

XXXVI. The firſt change that was made in the Jewiſh Calendar, was cauſed by the Reformation of Julius Cæſar, who fixed the Æquinox ‖ to the twenty fifth of March inſtead of the third of April. This Obſervation was not new, Soſigenes having brought it from Egypt; and we even ſee Tracts of it in Greece long before Julius Cæſar. However, it was not ſufficiently attended to. Secondly, they followed the Solary Year that was received in the Empire. 'Tis very difficult to fix the Year, in which they received the Julian Reformation in Judæa: One while it is ſaid, that it was five Years before the Birth of J. CHRIST; becauſe Cæſar having been kill'd quickly after his Reformation, it was not received, till Auguſtus made a new Decree, ordering all the Provinces to uſe the Calendar of his Predeceſſor. This Edict was not publiſhed till thirty ſeven Years after Cæſar's Murther. To this muſt be alſo added twelve Years, during which, he had ordered there ſhould be no Biſſextile Year, to regain the three Days that exceeded. The Jews could not make a new Cycle, till forty nine Years after the Death of Cæſar, and five before our Saviour. This Notion is afterwards corrected, and 'tis thought that Herod the Great brought this Reformation to Jeruſalem a Year after he had taken it. Others † maintain, that no change was made during the Troubles which were frequent in Judæa, and all the time of that cruel War it was obliged to labour under. They have full liberty of making their Conjectures, becauſe there is not the leaſt Monument remaining, whereupon to ground them.

XXXVII. Tho' they reform'd the general Faults obſerved in the Æquinox, which had been ill-placed, and in the Courſe of the Sun, becauſe this was manifeſt, and ſupported by the Authority of the Emperors, yet the Jews had not hitherto any Cycles to reconcile the Courſe of the Moon with that of the Sun. St. Epiphanius gives 'em two Periods, One of fourteen, and the Other of eighty four Years; and 'tis believ'd, that theſe Cycles being very antient, the firſt Chriſtians borrow'd them of them to regulate Eaſter-day by, becauſe neither the Apoſtles, nor their Diſciples had leiſure to dwell upon Aſtronomical Calculations, and to make new Cycles to fix their Feaſt: And thus the Origine of the Cycles, which is ſtill uncertain, opens a new ſource of Conjectures.

XXXVIII. Bucher, who has deeply ſtudied this ſubject, and reſtor'd Epiphanius's Text, was perſuaded that Jaſon † brought into Judæa the Calippick Period, which was of ſeventy ſix Years; and in order to accommodate it to the Cuſtom of the Nation, eight Years were added to it, ſo that the Period conſiſted of eighty four Years, which preceded from ſeven to ſeven. The little Period of fourteen Years multiply'd by ſix, makes eighty four Years. This Cycle was made uſe of in Our Saviours time: Nevertheleſs, as neither the Phaſis of the Moon, nor the Cycles themſelves, which were ſtill defective, could not fix the time preciſely enough: After the return from Babylon, where the Skill in Aſtronomy had diſcover'd theſe defects, they were || us'd to celebrate the Feaſts for two Days together, inſtead of one: and 'tis by this method that Bucher ſolves the difficulty which ariſes from Our Lord's celebrating the Paſſe-over a Day before the reſt of the Jews.

XXXIX. It can't be denied, but there is ſome probability in this Conjecture. Yet it muſt be confeſs'd, that the ſilence of the Jews, and particularly of Joſephus and Philo, who liv'd in Our Saviour's time, gives a kind of demonſtration againſt the Antiquity of the Cycles. Theſe Authors not only do never mention thoſe different Periods, which ſeem at preſent extremely neceſſary; but they tell us that they ſtill followed the antient Cuſtom of regulating the Year by the Phaſis of the Moon, and celebrating the Paſſe-over, after the Sun's entrance into the Ram. Theſe are the two Characters by which they regulated the Year, and the Paſſe-over Day. People commonly make the Jews more Ingenious than they are, and the Chriſtians, who have thought their Cycles antient and very accurate, have given them the Glory of this Invention. Whereas we don't diſcover they had ſo great skill in Aſtronomy, which was not perfected till a long time after. Joſephus contents himſelf to fix the Æquinox by the Sun's entrance into the Ram, becauſe he was ignorant that the Sun had already paſs'd many degrees of the Ram at the Æquinox. They were not ſo exact upon this point before the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem, as is imagined; and inſtead of labouring upon a ſcrupulous Calculation, by the help of the Cycles, they were ſatisfied when they could reduce the Feaſt pretty near to the ſame point of the Solary Year. This appears not only by the Authority of Joſephus, but by that of the Caraites, who charged Aſtronomical Calculations upon their Enemies, as dangerous Novelties; and who, without admitting the Cycles intercalate as occaſion offers, and continue to govern themſelves by the Phaſes of the Moon. In the mean time, we know that they have been always moſt Religiouſly devoted to the Letter of Scripture, and to the antient Cuſtoms. 'Tis therefore more than probable, that they began not to make the Cycles till after the diſperſion occaſioned by the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem, when the Doctors were deſtitute of the Succours they had in the Holy-Land, for the uniform celebration of the Feaſt. And therefore they ſay, that it is not lawful to recur to the Phaſes of the Moon out of the Holy-Land.

XL. 'Tis imagined *, that they waited till Caracalla's time to reſtore their Traditions and Rules of their Worſhip; becauſe that Prince, who wept in his Infancy upon ſeeing a Jew whipp'd, favour'd the Nation. But there is no need of deferring a thing ſo long, the neceſſity whereof became manifeſt every Year. Moſt of the Jews retired into Egypt, where they had already conſiderable Settlements. The skill in Aſtronomy was greater there than any where elſe, ſince it was from thence that Cæſar ſent for the Aſtronomer, who made the Julian Reformation. The Refugees in Egypt made uſe of the Information they had found in their Exile. They made a firſt Cycle of fourteen Years, and afterwards multiplying this Period by ſix, they made that of 84. We muſt not therefore make uſe of the Jewiſh Cycles, to examine how JESUS CHRIST celebrated the Feaſt of the Paſſe-over before the reſt of the Nation; for they were not invented till after its Ruin and Refuge into Egypt.

XLI. As to Our Saviour, we might content our ſelves with one very ſolid Reflection; which is, that no body objected it to him as a Crime, that he eat the Paſſe-over before the Jews or the Prieſts; and the Phariſees, who ſought to accuſe him, never charg'd him with that violation of a Solemn Rite. The People were not diſturb'd at it, nor were his followers and Diſciples ſcandaliz'd. The Action was publick; the Houſe in which they celebrated the Feaſt was borrow'd; the Lamb ought to be killed in the Temple. It was therefore impoſſible they ſhould be ignorant of what JESUS had done, and that knowing it, they ſhould not have accuſed him of Impiety; for the Doctors are ſtill more jealous of Rites than Doctrines, and the Ceremony of the Paſſe-over was the moſt Solemn of all. The Evangeliſts, who have related without ſcruple, that their Maſter eat of the Lamb with 'em before the Feaſt, would have tranſmitted to the remoteſt Poſterity their Maſter's Crime, which they might have ſuppreſs'd in ſilence. Since therefore they freely ſpeak of it, we ought to be perſuaded, that this Cuſtom was generally receiv'd, tho' we are ignorant of the Reaſon of it.

XLII. Father Harduin pretends, that as there was a vaſt multitude of Jews, who came to Celebrate the Paſſe-over at Jeruſalem, and that the Levites were not ſufficient to kill the Lambs neceſſary for ſo great a number of Families, the Nation was divided into two Bodies; the Galileans, or the Iſraelites, and the Jews. Theſe two parts of the Nation agreed about the Celebration of the Feaſt, and by concert made a Rule called Baddu †, by which, when the fifteenth of Niſan (for on that Day he fixes the Paſſe-over preferably to the fourteenth) fell on the ſecond or fourth, and on the ſixth Day of the Week, the Galileans celebrated the Feaſt, and the Jews eat not the Lamb till the next Day. On the contrary, if the fourteenth of Niſan fell on the firſt, the third, or the fifth Day of the Week, the Celebration of the Jews preceded that of the Iſraelites. He aſſerts, that this Cuſtom was obſerved in Our Saviours time, and it was ſo much the more neceſſary, becauſe the Galileans did not Sacrifice with the reſt of the Jews; and by this diſcovery he removes the difficulty which ariſes from JESUS CHRIST's eating the Paſchal Lamb before the Feaſt of the Jews; for as he was a Galilean, he celebrated the Feaſt with them.

XLIII. Indeed the difficulty would perfectly vaniſh, if this could be proved to be the antient practice; but we don't find that there were two different Days ſet apart for the Galileans and the Jews. The Rule Baddu is Novel, invented ſince the Talmud, and its uſe is not to denote the Days of the Galilean and the Jew, as † is ſuppoſed. It is || employed to hinder the Feaſts from treading one upon another, becauſe the Nation would be incommoded, if after the extraordinary Feaſts they dropt upon the Sabbath-day: For which reaſon this Rule is ſtill in being, tho the Diſtinction of Galileans and Jews be deſtroyed long ago. Would they have preſerv'd for ſuch a multitude of Ages a Rule abſolutely uſeleſs, not to offend the Galileans, who no longer exiſt, and whom they never * reſpected?

XLIV. We may obſerve four things. Firſt, that Our Saviour obſerved the Law, which ordered the eating of the Paſchal-Lamb the fourteenth of the Moon, ſince it was on this Day that he eat it with his Diſciples, and no body charg'd him with anticipating a Day, which the Jews would never have pardon'd him on that Occaſion. 2. The eating of the Paſchal-Lamb hinder'd not ſervile Labours, ſince they killed the Lambs that Day in the Temple, and prepar'd a Table. Nor did it hinder the arreſting J. CHRIST a Priſoner; for not to obſerve that the Jews conſider'd this Violence as a motion of Zeal, and they had before on the laſt Day of the great Feaſt taken up Stones to ſtone him; we know by the Goſpel, that they deliberated to take him during the Feaſt,, and Herod alſo ſeiz'd the Apoſtles in the Feaſt-time. 3. The Evangeliſts had reaſon to place the Preparation on Friday; but this Preparation reſpected not the eating of the Lamb, but the Saturday following, which was called the great Sabbath; for which they were obliged to prepare the neceſſary Food. This thought of the Apoſtles appears by the Conjectures they made concerning what Our Saviour ſaid to Judas: What thou doſt, do quickly; for as he carried the Purſe, they imagin'd he order'd him to buy ſomething for the Feaſt. What Feaſt was that? It was not the Manducation of the Lamb; for they had juſt been eating it, and the Ceremony was ſcarce finiſh'd. They meant therefore the following Sabbath. 4. This Sabbath was the more Solemn, becauſe it was the Feaſt of unleaven'd Bread. They gave the Title of Paſſe-over to the whole term of the Feaſt, and to the Peace-Offerings that were made in it, as we have proved elſewhere †. The Azymes were a Feaſt, and that a ſolemn One; for the Ceremony laſts a whole Week, and for the || two firſt Days, the Feaſt is as ſolemn as the Sabbath. The Apoſtles had reaſon to call theſe complicated Feaſts a Feaſt, the Paſſe-over according to the uſual ſtyle, and the Day of Preparation, ſince People actually prepared for the exact obſervation of the great Sabbath. According to theſe four Remarks, there remains no difficulty; for JESUS CHRIST did eat the Lamb with the Jews the fourteenth of the Moon, as the Law commanded; and the ſcruples of the latter related not to the Lamb, but to the Preparation of the Sabbath, which followed the Feaſt of Azymes, and the Oblation of the Peace-Offerings, which are often called by the Name of Paſſe-over. To return to the Cycles, we believe they were unknown to the Jews, all the time of the firſt and ſecond Temple. The Year was Lunary, compoſed of three hundred fifty four Days; but they were contented to reconcile it with the Courſe of the Sun, by the Intercalation of a Month when neceſſity required; which neceſſity was determined by three things: The Æquinox, the Maturity of Fruits, and the Phaſes of the Moon; but the Cycles were not in uſe till after the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem.

XLV. 'Tis ſaid that Akiba intercalated two Years together, and 'tis imagined he was obliged to it by the Preſages preceding the Adrian War, which Dion has related: For the Year before this War was diſturbed with || the opening of Solomon's Tomb, and the fury of the wild Beaſts, which tore the Paſſengers; and as it was the Cuſtom to intercalate while the Bridges and ways were broken, Akiba did it from a more urgent reaſon; to prevent the Travellers, who came to Jeruſalem, from being torn in pieces. He therefore put off the Paſſe-over for a Month later, and the Year following was intercalary according to Rule; but not to examine either the Preſages related by Dion, which are commonly falſe, or the Cuſtom of intercalating invented by the Doctors, by reaſon of the breaking of Bridges, which is much ſuſpected; we have reaſon to ask, why there was leſs danger for Travellers in May than in April, ſince Dion makes the Preſages which preceded the War of Adrian to laſt for a Year.

XLVI. Samuel the Lunatick, who came afterwards, made a Cycle of nineteen Years, in which was obſerved a manifeſt fault, ſince it had an Hour and four hundered eighty five Scruples too much. R. Adda * corrected that fault, and divided the Hour and the over-plus into Scruples. Hillel compoſed another Cycle, which he commenced, as they ſay †, in the Year 344. or 363. of JESUS CHRIST: But we have proved that Hillel was Dead long before, ſince he had Society with Origen. Beſides, if it be true that St. Ambroſe || has mentioned this Cycle in the Year 387. we have reaſon to conjecture it was much antienter, ſince it could not have been received thro' all the Nation in ſo little time. Theſe two Jewiſh Aſtronomers did not correct all the faults of their Calender, ſince the Jews are tax'd with having celebrated their Paſſe-over ſometimes before the Æquinox of the Spring, againſt the ſtanding Rule of their Fathers. Moreover, R. Cid a long time after made the Alphonſine Tables, which have been ſo famous. At preſent they uſe a Cycle of nineteen Years, in which there are ſeven of thirteen Months, as in the Cycles of Adda and Hillel; but the better to facilitate the People's Knowledge of the Feaſts, they print every Year a Calendar, in which they are exactly noted.

A wretched Sermon.* XV. The Evening Bleſſing. XVI. The Ceremony of the Perfume. The end of the Sabbath.

I. THE Jews have an exalted notion of the Sabbath, and are infinitely afraid of violating the reſt of it. Their Principles carry reaſon with them; for 'tis impoſſible to reflect on the Miraculous Death of that Man, who had only gather'd a few dry Sticks to warm himſelf, without being terrify'd, and believing that God is peculiarly vigilant for the Sanctification of this Day, of which he has given the example. They ſay alſo, that he who violates the Sabbath, violates the whole Law, and undermines the Foundations of Religion; for he can't fail in reſpect for this Day, without denying the works of the Creation, ſince God hath inſtituted it for its Commemoration. They think alſo that the Sabbath breakers denie the Rewards and Puniſhments of the other Life; but they don't ſtop there.

II. Rabbi Joſes aſſures us upon the Authority of a more antient Doctor*, that this Command was given in ſecret to the People of Iſrael, as a particular ſign that ſhould diſtinguiſh them from all the Nations of the World. It is not one of the Precepts of the Noachides. They ask of one another how the Chriſtians and Infidels, who are ignorant of this Precept of the Law, can merit the Puniſhments threaten'd by God on the breach of it; and they anſwer, that the Chriſtians know that this Precept was given upon Mount Sinai, and that they are oblig'd to remember it, Remember the Sabbath-day; but that they are ignorant of the Reward annex'd to its Obſervation. They alledge for a reaſon, that God ſends every Friday a Superfluous Soul to a Jew, in order to drive away Melancholy, and that he may eat and drink, and make merry more eaſily. This Soul retires again on Saturday Evening. 'Tis written that God reſted the ſeventh Day; but they tranſlate it, that God reſted without Soul after the Sabbath, and upon this falſe Interpretation, they conclude, that God every Saturday calls back the Soul he had given the Day before to rejoyce with. The Chriſtians have not this ſuperfluous Soul, which God grants only to the Circumciſed, and conſequently they can have no Reliſh or Senſe of this Sabattick Joy. This Notion is extraordinary. But yet R. Abraham reaſons very ſedately upon this Soul in his Commentary uyon the Pentateuch, which he calls the Noſegay of Myrrh.

III. There is hardly any Recompence or Advantage that they can't promiſe to themſelves upon a Religious Obſervation of the reſt of this Day. 1. When on Friday Evening they Muſically chant a certain Prayer, all the Souls leave Purgatory, to run in queſt of Water, with which they refreſh themſelves for ſome time. And therefore the Rabbies ſeverely forbid the exhauſting all the Water from a Well or Cave of the Earth, for fear ſome Soul ſhould be deprived of this Refreſhment, after which it had panted all the Week. 2. They pray for the Souls which have not well obſerved the Sabbath; and they fancy that God hearing the Prayer, permits theſe Souls to turn from one ſide to the other, and ſo the pain is leſſen'd by its change. 3. Some even believe, that the Torments of the damned Jews ceaſe on that Day. The Souls come out of Hell on Friday Evening, and return not till Saturday after Prayers are ended. Hence it is that they lengthen out their Prayers as much as poſſible, to prolong the Refreſhment of the Miſerable; and for the ſame reaſon alſo on Saturday Evening they burn Perfumes in the Synagogue, becauſe the Fire of Hell, which had no ſtench all the Day, begins then to burn, and they are afraid the horrid Smell it ſends forth, may cauſe Deliquiums. We read in the Talmud a Story that proves it. Turnus Rufus, Adrian's General, ridiculed the Sabbath before Akibah, who ſent him to his Fathers Tomb, to ſee if it did not ſmoke every Day of the Week, except Saturday. The incredulous Turnus laugh'd at the Rabbi, telling him, that the Smoke and the Stink had ceaſed coming out on Saturday, becauſe his Father's Puniſhment had ended that Day. Akiba told him, that the Smoke ſhould begin the Week following: which proving true, Turnus conjured his Father from Hell, who acquainted them, that a Man burnt him continually; that on Friday, they heard a Voice proclaiming the Hour of Reſt to all the Damned, and the Day following, the Angel Dumah returned 'em to their place of Puniſhment, when the Prayers of the Jews were ended.

IV. It has been affirmed * of late, that God only diſtinguiſhed this Day, to procure a peaceable Reſt to People fatigued with the Egyptian Bondage, and to hinder them from falling into Idolatry, by bringing them back to the only God, Creator of the Univerſe, for their ſo frequent celebrating the Commemoration of that great work. 'Tis obſerved, that they are very fond of reſt. They muſt riſe late, and ſleep a long while on Saturday. Entertainments and Mirth are highly neceſſary to its Obſervation. The Sale of every thing is ſeverely forbidden, except of Wine, becauſe that rejoices the heart of man. There are places where they bleſs a Cup of it in the Evening in the Synagogue, that ſo the Poor may drink of it; becauſe without this the Feaſt would not be well obſerved. Laſtly, that Lazineſs, which they make a kind of Devotion of, has for a long time been laugh'd at:

Septima quæque fuit lux
Ignava & partem vitæ non attigit ullam.

It ſeems likewiſe, that God hath authorized it; for he enlarges much upon the corporal reſt, and only uſes a very equivocal Expreſſion to command what we call the Sanctification of that Day.

V. The Heathen † Poets do more juſtice and honour to God, than theſe Chriſtian Criticks; for they acknowledge that the Seventh Day was Holy, deſtined to acts of Devotion and to all the Ceremonies, the antient Religions were charged with. Agatharcides || relates, that the Jews not content with reſting that Day, and alſo not daring to bear Arms, continued in their Temples, ſtretching out their hands, and worſhipping from Morning till Evening. Here you ſee the Reſt and Sanctification of the Sabbath diſtinguiſhed among the Jews: This diſtinction maintained by the general Practice of the Nation; and this Practice atteſted by a Stranger, who had no intereſt to make the Jews better People than they were. To reduce this to ſome Devotes, who being more Zealous than others, or tired with a tedious Idleneſs, or elſe in imitation of God, who review'd his Works on that Day, ſtudied Nature, or made pious Meditations, is eluding the difficulty drawn from the conſtant and general Practice of the Jews: For, 1. The Devotes are always very few in Number, and if God had not commanded the Sanctification of the Sabbath, the People would have ſpent it wholly in Debauchery; the ſupererrogating Saints ſwallow'd up in the great Multitude, would not be ſo much as known by the Heathens. People diſlike conſtraining Devotions; which deprive 'em of Liberty; and are painful and expenſive. The Jews eſpecially abhorring this Yoke, have often ſhook it off, inſtead of taking it voluntarily. 2. 'Twas not the Works of Nature the Iſraelites ſtudied in imitation of God; they preſented themſelves in the Temple to ſerve him, and according to the Expreſſion of the Law-giver *, they reverenced the Sanctuary of the Lord on that Day, becauſe God had commanded it. 3. Laſtly, 'twas not only private Perſons who were weary of Idleneſs; but all the People that performed their religious Exerciſes, and they did it purely in Obedience to God's command. Philo † affirms, that God had diſtinguiſh'd the Seventh Day, that it might be ſpent in Acts of Devotion and Piety. Joſephus || likewiſe ſays, that Moſes commanded the Law to be read, and to that end they ceaſed from labour. He compares this Ordinance of God and Moſes to that of all Legiſlators, who have conſecrated ſome Days to the Deity. We may confront a Chriſtian Critick with the Apoſtles. St. James ſays, that Moſes had in old times thoſe that read him in the Synagogues, and 'twas on a Saturday that J. CHRIST, according to Cuſtom, went to the Temple to explain the Prophet Iſaiah. If we conſult the Prophets, we ſhall find them oftner cenſuring the neglect of Vertues and Devotion on that Day, than the Violation of Reſt, and Idleneſs. Laſtly, God himſelf informs us, that he not only reſted the ſeventh Day, but ſanctified it. This term is not equivocal, except to thoſe that will not underſtand it; for in the Language of the Jews it ſignifies to ſeparate and conſecrate to the Service of God. 'Tis ſtill more Significative, as uſed by the Chriſtians. It can't therefore be doubted, but that God commanded the Sanctification, as well as the Reſt.

VI. In vain does this Critick make a long Diſſertation to prove that the Sabbath is only a Remedy to prevent Idolatry; for God had ſufficiently condemned all Idolatry in the firſt and ſecond Commandment, without imploying the fourth. The Idea of the Creation is not a ſpecifick remedy againſt Idolatry; for all the Philoſophers, who have acknowledged a firſt Cauſe that formed the Univerſe, have nevertheleſs adored Intelligences, ſubaltern Gods, and their Images. Beſides, God would have fetch'd a long Circuit in the Compendium of ten Words, if he had deſigned to prevent Idolatry, by commanding them to continue at Reſt. The Jews never ſpeak of the Idolatry condemned by the Precept of the Sabbath. The Author of Coſri * aſſerts, that the Obſervation of the Sabbath is a practical Confeſſion of the Divinity; for, ſays he, the Man that celebrates this Day in memory of the Creation, confeſſes the Novelty of the World; and he that believes the World to be new, acknowledges a Creator; and the Faith is not pure, that rejects this Precept; from whence he concludes, that the Obſervation of the Sabbath draws us nearer to God, than Phariſaiſm or Nazariſm: that is to ſay, than a ſolitary and recluſe Life. He will therefore have the memory of the Creation celebrated by the Sabbath to be a Confeſſion of the Divinity; but this Confeſſion is practical, and the Joy that reſults from it, flows from a good intention, devotion, and a perfect heart.

VII. Spencer ſtill expatiates at large to prove the Sabbath a Sign; but no body doubts of it, and the Scripture ſays it too poſitively to conteſt it. But this Sign was not peculiar to the Jews; for the Ethiopians obſerv'd it, and they pretend to have received this cuſtom in Solomon's time, at the return of the Queen of Sheba. Beſides, the Signs of the Covenant have always been attended with acts of Devotion and Piety; why then muſt this be robb'd of this Advantage? The Commandment contains three Things, the Reſt, the Sign, and the Sanctification. He enlarges upon the two firſt, to cut off the third, tho' more important, expreſs'd by the Legiſlator, and practiced by the Nation in all Ages. 'Tis true, the Jews have ever been fond of Eaſe, and Jollity. They love Idleneſs even to Superſtition; but 'tis the Genius of all Nations, not excepting the Chriſtians, to prefer

prefer the ſenſible and material Part of Religion to all the Spiritual Exerciſes, and acts of Devotion. Is not the Church of Rome rigorouſly obſervant of Reſt on the Feaſts of the Virgin and the Saints, which proceeds almoſt as far, as that of the Jews for the Sabbath? Shall we conclude from thence, that they have not a Law to go to Maſs and Veſpers? Beſides, we ought not to lay too much ſtreſs upon the Rallieries of the Profane, and Enemies to that Nation. Rutilius has carried them even to the Reſt of God himſelf:

Septima quæque dies turpi damnata veterno,
Tanquam laſſati mollis imago Dei.

The Jews, who at preſent delight in reſting and feaſting, fail not to ſtudy the Law, to read it, and learn ſome Sections out of it; and they are a living proof of the Good and Evil, that has always been practis'd in this Nation.

VIII. The Reſt of the Sabbath began on Friday in the Evening*, half an Hour before Sun-ſet. Then they light a Candle of four Wicks, which burns part of the Night; and this is one of the Ceremonies they obſerve with the greateſt exactneſs. The Poor are obliged to beg to get Oil, or to deprive themſelves of Suſtenance, rather than fail to have a Lamp burning in their Houſes, becauſe that is Neceſſary for the delight of the Sabbath mentioned by the Prophet Iſaiah. At the ſame time they illuminate the Synagogue in imitation of the antient Temple, when the Maccabees reſtored † the Lamps after the Perſecution of Antiochus, and becauſe they have occaſion to make their Prayers on Friday Evening. The Doctors have not failed to lay down the neceſſary Rules for Candles and Lamps. Rabbi Iſhmael maintains ‖ that in honour of the Sabbath, they ought not to light Pitch and Tar. R. Tarphon has decided that Oil of Olives only ought to be uſed. The Wiſe Men, who are leſs ſevere, make no diſtinction of Oil, but permit the uſe of any. The Women are commiſſion'd to light the Lamps for two Reaſons: One is Natural, becauſe they are generally at home, and know the preciſe Hour, when the Sabbath begins: the Other is Myſtical, for hereby they are put in mind of the Sin of Eve, who, after ſhe had eaten the forbidden Fruit, took a ſtick, and beat her Husband, to oblige him to commit the ſame Crime; for, ſaid ſhe, if I muſt die, I am reſolv'd thou ſhalt die with me. Adam complained of this evil treatment to God; for when he tells him, ſhe gave me of the Tree, he meant a blow with a ſtick. The Sun ſeeing it, hid his Light. 'Tis therefore neceſſary, that the Women ſhould light the Lamps they have extinguiſhed, and that they ſhould be charged with this Puniſhment to expiate their Sin: Thoſe that diſcharge this Duty, perform as meritorious a Work, as if they lighted the golden Candleſtick in the Temple.

IX. The Men go to the Synagogue to ſay their Prayers on Friday Evening. Coming from the Synagogue, they bleſs one another, and wiſh each other a good Sabbath. At their return they find the Table ſpread, there muſt neceſſarily be ſalt upon it, two Loaves cover'd above and below, and a cup of Wine. The Bread is covered with a Napkin, becauſe it repreſents the Manna that fell betwixt two Dews, "or "elſe becauſe it is aſhamed to appear before the "Wine, which has the honour to be firſt ſanctified "by Prayer. In ſhort, the Father of the Family firſt takes the Cup and bleſſes it, giving Thanks to God, that he has inſtituted the Sabbath in Memory of the Creation. They chant the Twenty third Pſalm, whilſt this Benediction is pronouncing, and ſteadily behold the Candles or lighted Lamps, that by this means, they may repair the daily decays of their Eyes, which are conſiderably weaken'd by the numerous Steps they have made in the Week. Having taſted the Wine, they cut the Bread and eat it, and make merry, and this is the firſt repaſt of the three they are to make on the Sabbath-day, to exempt themſelves from three great Evils; the Puniſhments of the Meſſiah, the War of Gog and Magog, and the Fire of Hell.

X. They return to the Synagogue on Saturday Morning after having ſaid their ordinary Prayers, and the times they take for it are very different. 1. Some appear there at Sun-riſing, or at Six according to our account, and remain till Nine; after which they retire, being perſuaded, that one third of the Day is ſufficient to be employ'd in Publick Devotion. Others think, they ought to prolong their reſt in their Beds as much as poſſible. They riſe very late, and continue their Prayers till Noon, and then they are permitted to eat, and to make an end of the Sabbath, which is commonly long and ſplendid. Nevertheleſs, the Devout faſt till three a Clock. For the great Oblation, or the Evening Sacrifice began at half an Hour after twelve, and laſted till half an Hour after three; and as that Oblation ſeemed more excellent than the Other, they continued their Faſt and Prayers till that was ended. Laſtly, the little Oblation began at half an Hour after three, and thoſe who came from the Synagogue, or the Temple at Noon, returned to continue the Sanctification of the Day till Sun-ſetting.

We find this diſtinction clearly expreſs'd in the Goſpel; for the Apoſtles were at Prayer till nine a Clock *, and then it was that they received the Holy Ghoſt. They had therefore begun their Devotions at ſix in the Morning. The Centurion Cornelius was alſo in his houſe Faſting and Praying till three * a Clock. And laſtly, St. Peter and St. John returned to the Temple by the Gate call'd Beautiful at three a Clock, to partake of the little Oblation; and 'tis from this Jewiſh Practice that the Roman Catholicks have borrow'd their diſtinctions of Canonical Hours, Primes, Mattins, Nones and Veſpers.

XI. The Jews † go at preſent to the Synagogue in the Morning, to hear the Pſalms and Benedictions read in the Praiſe of the Sabbath and of God. They thank him, for not having made the Jews like other Nations, for not confounding them with 'em, and for giving them Reſt and Peace. They bleſs him, by crying, Holy, Holy, Holy is the Lord of Hoſts. There is nothing in all their Prayers but is edifying, ſince every thing is directed to the Glory of God, the Creator of Heaven and Earth.

The moſt ſolemn Ceremony is that of taking the Law out of the Ark, or Cheſt; which Office is performed by the Chazzan. Lightfoot thought this Man was the Biſhop of the Chriſtians. Since he has the Super-intendency of the Reading; but it has been ‖ very judiciouſly obſerved, that the Chazzan is one of the leaſt Miniſters of the Synagogue; and therefore the Compariſon the Author makes of him with the Deacons of the Primitive Church, ſeems more juſt. This Miniſter takes out the Copy of the Law, and ſhews it to the People, ſaying, * Behold the Law, that Moſes has ſet before the Children of Iſrael; the Law of the Lord is perfect, &c. Having ſhew'd it, he carries it to the Desk, and calls whom he pleaſes to read the Section appointed for the Day. The Rabby do's not read, except when the Aſſembly, or ſome powerful Perſon, deſires him; and then he is obliged to follow him, and ſtand by him to ſee if he reads well. The Chazzan does the ſame Office to thoſe whom he calls. He ſuper-inſpects the Reading; aſſiſts the Ignorant; corrects their Faults; and this is the moſt honourable Part of his Function. The Leſſon being over, he cries, Bleſſed † be the Lord our God, who has given us the Law. He carries it back to the Cheſt; and begins new Prayers. Lord thou ſhalt open my Lips; and they ſhall declare thy Praiſe, &c. ‖.

XII. After the Law, they read ſome * Verſes of the Prophets; chuſing ſuch Paſſages of their Writings, as have moſt relation to the Ceremony of the Sabbath, and the Hiſtory of Moſes. If any Feaſt happen to fall on that of Saturday, as the New-Moon or the Paſſe-over, they ſeek ſuch places as relate to that Feaſt. They muſt read twenty one Verſes; but ten ſuffice, when there is an Interpreter to explain them. 'Tis alſo lawful to ſtop, if the ſenſe concludes a little before. Some have imagined, that this Reading of the Prophets was ſubſtituted in place of the Law, which it is not lawful to read to the People; but thoſe that make this Conjecture, tho' converſant in the Jewiſh Cuſtoms, can't ſhew the time † when the reading of the Law was any more forbidden than that of the Prophets. The Jews take no Leſſon from thoſe Writings, they call Hagiographa. We find indeed in the Order of their Prayers ſeveral Pſalms of David, which private Perſons repeat; but the Chazzan makes no Publick reading of thoſe Books. 'Tis in vain to ſay, they can t ſeparate ſome Portions from theſe Works, which only treat of one Subject; no body will believe this, and it's more natural to think, that they have not the ſame eſteem for theſe Writings as for thoſe of the great Prophets. This reading of the Prophets is called the Maſs. Buxtorf has not diſcovered the beſt Signification of the word Haptorah. Howſoever ſome difficulty remains, becauſe the Morning Service does not immediately conclude with the reading of the Prophets. They ſometimes ſucceed it with a Sermon, and always repeat ſome Prayers, before they give the Bleſſing, and diſmiſs the Aſſembly.

XIII. Indeed, there are Sermons in the rich and powerful Synagogues. The Jews have ever been curious to hear 'em, ſince they ſo importunately asked St. Paul, if he had not ſome word of Exhortation: And J. CHRIST had the Liberty to enter into all the Synagogues of Galilee, and to Preach the Goſpel. The Head of the Synagogue had commonly the principal Right of Preaching, and the reaſon of it is very plain; for being at the ſame time Head of the Academy, it was natural for him, to bring to the People in the Synagogue ſome of the Lectures he had made to his Diſciples in the School, and which turned upon the Explication of the Law, or the deciſion of a Caſe of Conſcience. 'Tis pretended that the Right belonged to thoſe that were received Doctors by the Sanhedrim, and after the impoſition of hands were diſtinguiſhed by the title of Rabby. But yet this Notion does not agree with the Goſpel; for tho' it could not be proved that St. Paul had received the Doctorſhip, that Menahem, Barnabas, and Simeon were Doctors at Antioch, yet this would not remove all the difficulty; for J. CHRIST never received impoſition of Hands from the Sanhedrim, nor was ever looked upon as a graduate Doctor. It will ſtill be harder to be proved of St. Peter, St. John, and the other Apoſtles, who were Fiſhermen, and who never thought of being Doctors of their Nation. To pretend that J.CHRIST brought 'em to the Sanhedrim to receive the title of Rabby, and Authority to Preach in the Synagogues, is building one Conjecture upon another without Foundation. If there had been Preachers and Doctors ex officio, they would have eſtabliſhed ſome order to avoid Confuſion. Nevertheleſs we ſee that J. CHRIST preach'd not only at Jeruſalem, but in the Synagogues of Galilee, and where-ever he came. This diſorder ſhews, that all were allow'd to preach, who would explain the Prophets. They were ſo far from being nice in this particular, that they received even thoſe who were ſuſpected in their Doctrine. They will allow indeed J. CHRIST to read and explain Iſaiah at twelve Years of Age. The Jews ſay at preſent, that the Prophets may be read by a Child; but when the ſame JESUS had filled all Galilee with his Goſpel, how was he admitted Doctor? He might preach upon the Mountains, but how came they to ſuffer him in the Synagogues, if the Rabby alone had Right to aſcend the Chair by virtue of an Act of the Sanhedrim, confirm'd by the Impoſition of hands? How came the Apoſtles to be admitted not only into the Synagogues, but into the Temple at the Feaſt after the Death of J. CHRIST, when their Sentiments could not be concealed? St. Paul and his Companions were intreated at Antioch of Piſidia, to make a Sermon on Saturday after the reading the Law and the Prophets; and the principal Perſons of the Synagogue ſent to ask them, whether they had not ſome word of Exhortation. St. Paul * was unknown, as a Stranger, or known, as an Apoſtle of JESUS CHRIST; for he diſſembled not his Religion, and both theſe Qualities ought to have hinder'd him from being made a Preacher to the Synagogue. To ſay † that the Ruler acknowledg'd them for Doctors, becauſe he had heard 'em preach at Jeruſalem, is to increaſe the difficulty inſtead of removing it; for 'twas the Goſpel and JESUS crucified that St. Paul had preach'd. Thoſe who heard him, ſhould have driven him out of the Synagogue, inſtead of putting him into the Pulpit. If they took him for a Stranger, 'tis plain they had no Scruple about the Perſon or Quality of thoſe they ſet up to Preach; and without obliging 'em to ſhew their Commiſſions and Patents from the Sanhedrim, they heard 'em without knowing them. The Lay-men at preſent read the Law to the People; and tho' they are the Rabbies that commonly Preach, (for they reckon but very few places, where they have Preachers ex officio) yet || theſe Rabbies have no Impoſition of hands, and they make ſo little diſtinction, that the firſt who comes into a City, and offers to Preach, is admitted to utter his Sermon, as was done in our Saviour's and the Apoſtles time.

The Sermon is commonly made in the Vulgar Tongue; but the Paſſages of Scripture, and Sentences of the Doctors are cited in Hebrew. They immediately explain them; juſt as the Preachers of the Church of Rome cite their Vulgate, and the Paſſages of the Fathers in Latin, and afterwards interpret to the People what they think fit to let 'em know.

XIV. Theſe Sermons ought to be deſign'd for the underſtanding of Scripture, and the Sections of the Law, that are read before; but if we except the Feaſts of the Paſſe-over, and Propitiations, where they inſiſt upon Subjects of Repentance and Explication of Rites, theſe Preachers generally raiſe uſeleſs difficulties, which they ſolve by a ſtrange medley of Paſſages from the Gemara, and which leave the Minds of their moſt attentive Hearers in doubt.

Wagenſeil * provoked at their reproaching the Chriſtians with their fondneſs for myſtical Senſe, reports two Sermons preach'd by an unknown Perſon in a Synagogue of Germany, which give a very mean Idea of theſe Teachers Eloquence. The Exordium was ab abrupto : " With the good pleaſure of God, " who has made the Sun and Moon; with the good " pleaſure of the moſt holy and perfect Law, which " had already ſubſiſted two thouſand Years before " it was the Foundation and Support of the Crea- " tures, high and low, and which was the delight " of its Author, and afterwards was publiſhed with " an Earth-quake, &c. With the good pleaſure of " the Venerable Doctors, who ſtudy Night and Day, " to render it as clear as the Sun; at the head of whom " are the Judges, choſen to reſolve Queſtions, and pe- " netrate into the deepeſt Myſteries; amongſt whom " likewiſe is the Venerable old Preſident of this Sy- " nagogue, who girds his Loins with force, explains " the Law like a Hero, and a brave Soldier, who is " followed by a multitude of Diſciples, and whoſe " Name is known in all the Corners of the Eaſt and " Weſt, of the North and South. Laſtly, I ask " Pardon of the moſt holy Inhabitants of this Place, " if I attempt to explain the Section of this Week.

After this Proem, he enters upon the Subject, and handles this Queſtion, How the Commandment of the Sabbath equals all the Commandments of the Law. To reſolve it he enters upon another, namely, that Circumciſion has the ſame advantage of equalling all the Precepts. To illuſtrate this ſecond Difficulty, he obſerves, that it is founded upon two Paſſages: In One we read theſe words: Behold the blood of the Covenant, and tho' they concern the blood of Sacrifices, yet he applies 'em to Circumciſion: In the Other, which is cited in the Gemara, God ſays, I have made a Covenant with you. He examines, why theſe two different Paſſages have been cited to prove one and the ſame thing. He exhauſts himſelf in Speculations; thereupon he introduces the Speculative and Practical Life. He examines the Preference of the One above the Other, which is much conteſted, and concludes, that the Queſtion propoſed about the Sabbath and Circumciſion equalling all the Commandments of the Law, is duely and fully explain'd. The ſecond Sermon is no better than the firſt. Buxtorf, who heard another at the Ceremony of Circumciſion alſo found it very bad. It may perhaps be ſaid, that thoſe two learned Men went at an unlucky time, and that doubtleſs they have more able Teachers. Nor is it to diſcredit all of them that we have inſerted this Extract; but rather to ſhew the common Subject of their Sermons, which turns generally upon ſuch ſort of Queſtions. For the reſt, they not only Preach on Saturday; but at Weddings, Circumciſion, Funerals, and on other Feaſts.

XV. After the Sermon, and repeating ſome Prayers, they bleſs the People, who depart from the Aſſembly, ſaying, Lord guide me in thy Righteouſneſs, and prepare thy Paths before me, becauſe of mine Enemies. A guiame † en tu juſtedad : pormis ennemigos, Adere ſa delante mi tu carrera. Fin de la mannana de Sabbath. Here ends Saturday Morning.

XVI. In the Evening they return to the Synagogue to Prayer again. The Law is taken from the Ark a ſecond time. Three Perſons ſing the Pſalm of the Sabbath; read the Section of the following Week. They repeat the Hundred and nineteenth Pſalm, and bring the Perfume. According to Rabbam Simon the Son of Gamaliel, this was only a Gum that diſtill'd from a Balſamick Tree; but Others maintain || it was compounded of the three hundred ſixty eight Pounds of different Aromatick Drugs, which the High-Prieſt pounded in a Mortar. They find a myſtery in this number, which they divide into two, and refer one of them to the Days of the Solary Year. They think alſo, that this Perfume is neceſſary to guard themſelves from the ill odour that is exhaled from Hell, the Fire whereof begins to burn again, when the Sabbath ends. Laſtly, the Bleſſing is given as in the Morning, and the Sabbath concludes when they ſee three Stars appear in the Firmament. The Heathens thought, that they faſted till then. Auguſtus, who had been a Day without Eating, wrote to Tiberius, that the Jews kept not a more rigorous Faſt on Saturday, than he had done that Day. The Poets have ſpoke of them in the ſame Strain.

Culta Palæſtino ſeptima ſacra viro.

'Tis not to affront them that we lead 'em to the School of a Heathen Poet: But 'tis certain, that inſtead of conſidering this Day as improper for Labour, becauſe it is conſecrated to God, they are fallen into an exceſs of Superſtition for Idleneſs, which can't be repreſented without Amazement. An entire Treatiſe of the Miſnah upon this Subject contains moſt ſevere Rules for the Obſervation of this corporal reſt, and for the preventing its Violation, whilſt they have little Zeal for true Piety. They have been long ſince taxed with this:

Frigida † Sabbata cordi,
Sed cor frigidius Religione ſuâ.

We ſhall not follow the Rabbies in all their Superſtitious Deciſions. But yet we can't wave relating ſome of 'em, ſince they diſcover a part of the Religion we are writing the Hiſtory of.

II. In the Places where they had Liberty in Maimonides's time, they ſounded the Trumpet ſix times to give notice that the Sabbath was beginning. At the firſt Sound the Countryman left his Plough; at the ſecond they ſhut up their Shops; at the third they cover'd the Pits. They lighted Candles, and drew the Bread out of the Oven; But this laſt Article deſerves to be inſiſted upon, becauſe of the different Caſes of Conſcience, about which the Maſters are divided. When the ſound of the ſixth Trumpet ſurpriz'd thoſe that had not as yet drawn their Bread, what was to be done? To faſt the next Day was diſturbing the Feaſt; to draw their Bread at the beginning of the Sabbath was to violate it. The Perplexity is great; ſome have not ventured to decide it; others have given leave to draw out what was neceſſary for the three Meals of the Sabbath. But this Permiſſion has cauſed Abuſes; for a multitude of People meet, who under pretence of drawing out the quantity of Bread they have need of for their three Meals, take out all that might be ſpoil'd. The difficulty is encreaſed, if any one ſuffers his Bread to bake after the Sabbath is begun. If he has ſinn'd knowingly, he muſt leave his Bread there, and faſt to expiate his Fault. Nothing but Ignorance is ground ſufficient to Permit them taking wherewithal to ſubſiſt their Family for twenty four Hours. But how is this Bread to be taken out? they muſt not make uſe of a Peel, but a Knife, and do it ſo nicely as not to touch the Stones of the Oven; for that is a Crime. Such are the Queſtions that ariſe upon the entrance of the Sabbath. Let us conſider the Journeys, Acts of Self-preſervation, and thoſe of Charity to their Neighbour.

III. There are ſome People ſo very Superſtitious as to remain twenty four Hours in the ſame poſture, and place, where the Sun ſurprized 'em at its ſetting. The Goſpel ſpeaks of a Sabbath-days journey, and confines it from the Mount of Olives to Jeruſalem. Joſephus || relating the Story of that Egyptian, who under the Government of Felix had ſeduced the Populace, by making them believe if they would follow him to the Mount of Olives, they ſhould from thence ſee the Walls and Gates of Jeruſalem fall, reckons but five Stadia from this Mountain to the City, which makes the third part of a League of two thouſand Paces. But the Sacred Hiſtorians relate, that our Lord when riſen, conducted his Diſciples to Bethany, ſituate upon the Mount of Olives *, aſcended from thence to Heaven, and then they return'd from thence to Jeruſalem, which was a Sabbath-days journey. In reconciling Joſephus and St. Luke, it might be concluded lawful to make ſix or ſeven hundred Paces on the Sabbath-day; but this does not agree with the Tradition of the Modern Jews, who, tho' more ſuperſtitious than the Antients, allow a thouſand Paces; nor with St. John, who reckons † a League of two thouſand Paces from Bethany to Jeruſalem. Grotius imagines that St. John ſpeaks of the Stadia according to the Jewiſh Meaſure, which was perhaps leſs than others; but he ſolves not the difficulty, becauſe he grounds not his Conjecture upon any Proof.

IV. In my opinion it may be ſaid, that in our Saviour's time, a Sabbath-days Journey was fifteen Stadia, that is to ſay, a little League, as St. Luke and St. John affirm; for there was that diſtance from Bethany (from whence J. CHRIST aſcended to Heaven) to Jeruſalem, whither the Apoſtles returned. An antient || Arabian Geographer, according to the Evangeliſts, reckons two thouſand Paces from the Mount of Olives and the Village, whither JESUS CHRIST ſent to fetch an Aſs. Joſephus does not contradict the Apoſtles, becauſe the Egyptian Impoſtor, did not conduct the People to the top of the Mount of Olives, nor ſo far as Bethany, from whence he could not have diſcover'd Jeruſalem. He only led 'em to Beth-phage, which was much nearer, ſince it was there they prepared the Evening Oblation to carry it to the Temple. Origen * confirms our Aſſertion; for he owns, that tho' the Samaritan continued in the ſame place and poſture that the Sabbath found him, yet the reſt of the Jews allow'd a Journey of two thou- ſand Ells. The Ells have been ſince changed into Cubits, to reconcile Origen with the Rabbies; but according to the antient Interpreter, it muſt be acknowledged, that two thouſand Ells make two thouſand Paces. So that the Jews ſtill preſerved in his time the ſame Rule they obſerved in that of our Saviour's.

However, Superſtitions and Fables were then beginning to multiply; for Origen relates, that the Doctors ſaid it was not permitted either to wear Shoes or Breeches with ſtudds, without violating the Sabbath. 'Twas a Crime to carry any thing on one Arm, or one Shoulder, becauſe it ſuffered; but the Sin was avoided by taking the ſame thing upon both Shoulders, and this leads us to a ſecond Reflection: Namely, that Superſtition increaſing in Proceſs of time, they confined a Sabbath's Journey to a thouſand Paces. In ſhort, St. Jerome obſerves, that the Jewiſh Maſters had decided that they could not go above a thouſand Paces without violating the Day of Reſt. Eraſmus *, who went to correct the Text, and double the number, was miſtaken; for Agobard †, Biſhop of Lions, copying this Paſſage of St. Jerome, has cited it exactly as we read it in our Copies. But this change was made after the time of J. CHRIST. The Doctors have changed the Law of Moſes upon this Article; for whereas that antient Law giver allow'd 'em to walk twelve Miles, in order to appear at the Tabernacle, they had abridg'd this Liberty. 'Tis no wonder then, they made a new attack upon it, after our Saviour's time, ſince the Superſtition increaſed. Beſides, St. Jerome diſcovers the Original of this Change; for he attributes this deciſion to Akiba, whom Eraſmus has improperly metamorphoſed into Bar-Aquiba. St. Jerome adds Simeon and Hillel; but 'tis not neceſſary to go ſo high as the antient Hillel, the Founder of the Sect, as Druſius do's; ſince St Jerome places him after Akiba. We know alſo, that there were Patriarchs of this Name after J. CHRIST and the Emperor Adrian, who gave a new Authority to Akiba's Decree, and reduced the Sabbatick Journey to a thouſand Paces.

The Talmudiſts have follow'd this Decree, and reduced the two thouſand Paces of the Antients to two thouſand Cubits, which make but a thouſand Paces; which is the common meaſure of the Sabbath Journey among the Modern Jews, as Leo de Modena aſſures us. People cavil only about the meaſure of the Place of ſetting out; for if a City be ſituate upon a great River, or there be only a Tavern, or Cottage on the Bank of the River, it is included in the City, and not reckon'd into the Journey of the Sabbath, be it never ſo large; but if there be no Building upon the Bank, they muſt reckon the ſpace of the River, or the ſteps they make upon the Bridge. There is no need of reckoning, provided they go not out of the City or Suburbs; for they may walk within its Bounds as long as they pleaſe, without violating the Law, tho' it were at Niniveh, a City of prodigious Circumference. However care muſt be taken not to walk upon the Graſs. Some Doctors permit it; but others forbid it, becauſe it would be a Crime to carry away the leaſt part of it with their Shoe. The more ingenious diſtinguiſh betwixt Winter and Summer, or determine that the Shoes muſt be taken off, becauſe then the Danger is infinitely leſs. This is diſputing upon a Point of Graſs, which is more frivolous than that of a Needle.

V. The Maccabees had eradicated the Superſtition, which hinder'd them from arming, and defending themſelves in preſervation of Life; but it was ſo deeply rooted, that it quickly grew again. Pompey made an advantageous uſe of it, to play his Engines againſt the Walls of Jeruſalem; and that miſtaken Lazineſs contributed more than any thing to its being taken. The Doctors perſever'd in this Opinion; for the Head of the Synagogue took occaſion from a miraculous Cure that JESUS CHRIST had perform'd on Saturday to Preach and repreſent to the People the unlawfulneſs of it. Syneſius ||, who lived a long time after, relates, that a Tempeſt which had threaten'd them with an almoſt inevitable Shipwrack, having laſted till Friday Night, Amarantus, who was a Jew and Pilot of the Veſſel, gave her up to the mercy of the Winds, and refuſed to work. And thus he not only prefer'd the reſt of the Sabbath to acts of Charity to his Neighbour; but to the preſervation of his own Life.

In a word, every body knows the Action of the Biſhop of Saxony, who underſtanding that the Jews had refuſed to draw a Man out of a Jakes, where he was fallen for fear of violating the Sabbath, order'd him to continue in there on Sunday, becauſe that was the Chriſtian Sabbath; and this ſhews they have preſerved the ſame ſcruple, as to what concerns the preſervation of Life. They content themſelves, 1. With giving Food to thoſe that happen to be found in theſe Circumſtances. 2. With furniſhing them with Straw or Wood, if they are fallen into the Water, that they may get out again. 3. Laſtly, they permit Phyſicians to viſit the Sick, and to ſupply them with neceſſary Remedies: But the Doctors ſtraiten this Liberty as much as poſſible.

VI. JESUS CHRIST is accuſed of Falſhood in a Book intituled the Victory *, where 'tis aſſerted, that our Saviour juſtifying the Cure of a ſick Man which he had wrought on Saturday, by the Cuſtom of the Jews of his time, who drew out a Sheep from a Ditch that had fallen into it that Day, has abſurdly advanced that fact, ſince every body knows it was not lawful for the Jews to draw a Beaſt from a Pit or a Ditch on the Sabbath-day. So that J. CHRIST could not make his Apology but by the help of a Falſhood, and charging a Doctrine upon the Synagogue, which it evidently rejects.

VII. Firſt, this Author †, like the reſt of the Jews, runs commonly after Viſions; for he proves the Sabbath by the River Sambation, which rowls Stones for ſix Days, and ſtops on the ſeventh; and concludes from thence, that the Chriſtians ought to Stone all thoſe that labour on the Sabbath. He alſo makes the Chriſtians to make a falſe and ridiculous Objection, as if they believed that God laboured on the ſeventh Day to accompliſh his Work. 2. This Enemy of the Chriſtian Religion is forced to include David in the ſame Condemnation which he pronounces againſt J. CHRIST; for he can't reſolve the difficulty which ariſes from that Prince's action, Who did eat the Shew-bread; but he condemns that Prince, and pretends that his Fault do's not juſtify the Diſciples, who rubb'd the ears of Corn in the Fields. 3. He is ſtill more confounded about the words of God, I will have mercy and not ſacrifice; "for ſays he ||, "God only gives us to underſtand, that he ſuffers "not himſelf to be ſurpriz'd by Sacrifices, and 'tis "ſo true that he did not condemn them, that JE-"SUS CHRIST ſent the Leper to the High-Prieſt, to "make an offering for him. This arguing moves ones Compaſſion; for J. CHRIST, who ſaw Sacrifices offer'd, was far from proving that God had aboliſhed them. He only ſaid, that God prefers acts of Charity to our Neighbour before the exact obſervations of the moſt Auguſt and Solemn Ceremonies; from whence he concluded, he had done well to heal the Sick, ſince it was an act of Charity preferable to the ſcrupulous Obſervation of the Sabbath. Lipman therefore does not touch the difficulty. 4. The Talmudiſts forbid the taking up a fallen Sheep. I will not ſay with Buxtorf, they have inſerted this Clauſe in hatred to the Chriſtian Religion, that they might accuſe its Maſter of a lye; but who knows whether the Theology of the Talmudiſts has not been changed in four or five hundred Years time, which paſs'd betwixt Our Saviour and the Concluſion of the Talmud. We need only to draw out of it that prodigious heap of Contradictions it abounds with, and that Monſtrous diverſity of ſentiments among the Doctors, to ſee that this Theology was not always the ſame. We have an inſtance of it without departing from the ſubject we are upon: For in Our Saviour's time it was not allowed to heal a Sick Perſon, ſince that Cure, as miraculouſly as it was, excited the Cenſure of the Heads of the Synagogue. Whereas now 'tis allowed not only to Cure by Miracle, but by the virtue of Remedies that are applied, and the Phyſicians have liberty to viſit their Patients, of which they were deprived at that time. A quite contrary change has been made about Sheep, which they are not permitted to draw out of a Ditch at this Day, tho' they did it heretofore.

VIII. We ſhould never end, ſhould we relate the other ſcruples they have about the Obſervation of the Sabbath. Let us obſerve however ſome that are the more Authentick as we draw them from the Miſnah, which is the antient Law of the Jews, commented on by its moſt famous Doctors.

They muſt not be trimm'd, nor enter into a Barber's-ſhop the Eve of the Sabbath, a little before the Evening Sacrifice, for fear the Scizzors ſhould break, or ſome accident ſhould happen to the Razor, which ſhould oblige them to mend it and ſuffer Prayer-time to paſs over.

IX. The Schools † of Hillel and Schammay met upon a time, ſo that there was not one Doctor miſſing that was capable of ſpeaking his Opinion. This numerous Aſſembly was formed to decide thirty ſix Caſes of Conſcience of this nature. They agreed upon eighteen Queſtions, and divided upon eighteen others, one whereof related to the liberty || of laying Gins to catch Birds. The School of Hillel granted this liberty, which was condemned by Schammay's Diſciples, and the latter were the more numerous.

X. There is * another Queſtion upon which they divide, whether it be lawful to put out Candles, when they are afraid of the Perſians, who ſuffer'd not Lamps to be lighted during their Feaſts, except in their Temples; and the Doctors decide it may be done, provided it be in fear of Perſecution, or of Robbers. They may alſo be extingniſhed upon fear of the Evil Spirit; but they mean not by this the Devils, the Spirits of Darkneſs which ſhun the Light; but Melancholy, wherewith Studious People are often attack'd, and who delight to be dreaming in obſcurity. This Deciſion might ſerve for the explication of ſeveral Paſſages of Scripture, which calls perhaps Demoniacks, and poſſeſſed with an Evil Spirit, ſome Perſons that were fallen into ſo deep a Melancholy, that it produced fatal Effects. The Rabbies have had this Complaiſance for the Melancholick, becauſe they have obſerved, that the great Men, the Rabbies themſelves have been ſubject to it. Some Condemn thoſe who extinguiſh their Lamps by way of thrift; but R. Joſes gives 'em Abſolution.

XI. There are near Tiberias abundance of hot Baths. The Inhabitants of this City imagined, that it was no crime to ſuffer cold Water to run into their Baths, which temper'd the heat of them, and made them afterwards uſeful to drink and bath in; but the Doctors who compoſed the Miſnah † upon the place decided, that it was one and the ſame Sin to ſuffer Water to run into the Baths, and to heat it. They only diſtinguiſhed the Sabbath from the other Feaſts, in which they might uſe theſe Waters without a Crime to waſh themſelves, provided they did not bath in them. If the Fire fail, or go out, 'tis a crime to touch Wood to light it again. Hence proceeded that Subtilty of an Inquiſitor related by a Jewiſh || Hiſtorian, who meaning to diſcover to the Government the Artifice of the Jews, who profeſs'd Chriſtianity, cauſed them to get upon a Tower, and from thence to behold all the Chimneys of Seville. 'Twas quickly perceiv'd that there were a great many which had no Smoke, tho' the Winter was very Cold. Thoſe were the Houſes of the Jews, who after they had been forced to abjure their Religion, ſtill ſo ſcrupulouſly obſerved the Sabbath, as not to dare to light a Fire on that Day. They rather choſe to bear the Cold than to move their Hand to it. They are allowed to warm themſelves in the Sun; but they may not take Advantage of the Heat which it communicates to another Body; for fear they ſhould be miſtaken in the Cauſe that has produced it.

XII. It * is not lawful for a Woman to carry on the Sabbath a Sewing Needle, nor for a Man to have a Sword or a Bow, or even Shoes with Nails in them. They tell us, that being hid in a Grotto by reaſon of the Perſecution, and the noiſe being ſpread about that the Enemy was at hand, they began to puſh and trample one another with thoſe clouted Sandals, which killed many of 'em: And for fear of a like Accident, the Law forbids their having Nails in their Shoes on the Day of the Congregation. Nor is it permitted to look in a Glaſs, leſt the Women being curious about their Dreſs, ſhould obſerve a Hair ill placed, and ſo lift put up their Hand to put it in order.

XIII. 'Tis a great crime to cut their Nails, or to bite them, to pluck off their Hairs, or paint themſelves. The Doctors † however diſtinguiſh; for they allow the plucking off a Hair that is going to fall, or is almoſt pull'd off, and to cut a Nail that is cleft or divided. They diſtinguiſh alſo the Puniſhment; for they Stone him that plucks off his Nails with his Hand; but he deſerves capital Puniſhment, when he makes uſe of Scizzors. They cut them on Friday, and obſerve on the Sabbath a prodigious fecundity to make them grow again.

XIV. It is not || lawful to ſign their Name, nor even to write two Letters. A Sick Perſon can't make uſe of Oyl nor Wine to aſſwage the affected part. He may waſh a corrupted Tooth with Vinegar, but he muſt ſwallow it; and 'tis violating the Sabbath to ſpit it out of his Mouth.

XV. A great queſtion * was debated among the antient Doctors, whether it was lawful to kill a Scorpion that lies quiet in his hole, or in the way, and this queſtion could not be decided: I know not, ſay they, whether there be Sin or not in it. Maimonides more boldly declares, that we may kill on the Sabbath the Creatures that kill Men, as a Mad Dog; and as for thoſe Creatures and Reptiles, which only cauſe pain and ſmart, it is not lawful to kill 'em but when they attack us. If they remain in their holes, the ſureſt way is to let them alone, for fear it ſhould be ſaid you went a hunting.

XVI. There are ſome Caſes in point of Religion, in which the Sabbath is violated; for they do all that is neceſſary for Circumciſion before, if the eighth Day from the Birth fall upon a Sabbath: And even when they have forgot to carry a Razor into the Synagogue on the Evening, they do it on that Day, but it ought to be covered and concealed. Moreover, if a Houſe take Fire, wherein are the Books of the Scripture, 'tis † permitted to carry 'em all away whether they be read, or whether they be not read. They ſpeak thus, becauſe they diſtinguiſh the Hagiographa from the Books of the Law and the Prophets. The former are never read on the Sabbath, for fear the People ſhould mind 'em too much, and finding too much pleaſure in them, ſhould neglect the Sermon; but however they ought to be ſaved from the Fire and carried away, leſt they ſhould be burnt.

XVII. We muſt alſo add, that notwithſtanding their ſeverity for the Obſervation of this Day, they find ſecret methods to elude it. They have for a long time been guilty of this Abuſe; for they ſuffer'd the Merchants of the Sea-Port Towns to bring their Fiſh to Jeruſalem, and expoſe it to publick ſale; and they did not imagine 'twas a Crime, becauſe they were the Heathens, who made this Commerce with ſo much the more profit, becauſe the Worſhippers of Venus, or the Goddeſs of the Sea, never eat Fiſh. There are places at this Day, where, to elude the Law, they employ Chriſtian Women to prepare their Dinners on Saturday. However, they have propoſed this caſe of Conſcience, whether a Jew, who cauſes his Cow to be Milked by a Chriſtian, to drink the Milk of it, Sins; and they have determined, that he is obliged to buy it at a cheap rate, that it may be ſaid, that the Chriſtian has not work'd by Order, or for the ſake of a Jew, but for his own particular Intereſt and Profit.

XVIII. Some Chriſtians that laugh at theſe Superſtitious exceſſes, reflect not perhaps that they fall into the like themſelves. How rigorouſly are the Feaſts of the Saints obſerved? The Violater whereof is found Miraculouſly Puniſhed. The Old Jews only ſtoned one Man who had broke the Sabbath; but the Saints have puniſhed a thouſand and a thouſand Perſons for violating their Feaſt. A Woman has found drops of Blood upon a ſhift which ſhe went to ſew on a Feſtival; the Sickle has been faſten'd to the Labourers Hand, who went to cut a handful of Corn on ſuch another Day; St. Ouen caſt an Archbiſhop of Roan into ſuch a terrible Flux of Urine upon his coming to diſturb his Feaſt, that he was forced to be carried off in that naſty pickle. The People believe theſe fabulous Miracles propoſed to 'em, as undoubted Truths; and whilſt they ſecurely violate the Day Conſecrated to God, they continue in a Superſtitious Lazineſs on the Feaſts of Saints, which they particularly honour.

XIX. It muſt not be denied but that the firſt Chriſtians had ſtill a Veneration for the Sabbath. The Apoſtles || are accuſed of having changed that Day of Reſt into Sunday thro' hatred to the Jews, as if they had no other reaſon for that change than ſo vicious an inducement; but on the contrary, the Chriſtian Church eſpouſed moſt of the Rites of the Synagogue inſtead of rejecting and oppoſing them. There were a great many Churches, which tho' they were perſuaded that Sunday ought to be celebrated in commemoration of Our Saviour's Reſurrection, ſtill preſerved their Reſpect for Saturday, which they conſecrated to God in remembrance of the Creation. This Cuſtom continued even in the IV. Century. Laſtly, the Roman Church ſtill celebrates the Memory of two Solemn Sabbaths, the One is that of the Paſſe-over, called the Great Sabbath, and which is at preſent Holy Saturday. They read on it * the firſt Chapter of Geneſis, In the beginning God created the Heavens and the Earth, and to manifeſt that it is celebrated in Memory of the antient Paſſe-over, as well as of the Creation, they add that place in Exodus which mentions the Victory the Iſraelites obtained in going out of Egypt. The ſecond Sabbath, whereof they ſtill retain ſome foot-ſteps, is that of Pentecoſt; for they read that part of Scripture on that Day which relates to the publication of the Law.

An entire Volume of the Miſnah is taken up with the deſcription of the Feaſts. Maimonides and Bartenora, its Commentators, have added to it a great many Obſervations, particularly about the Day of Propitiations. Laſtly, the Chriſtians have alſo laboured to explain this ſubject.

All theſe Feaſts are Conſecrated to God Almighty; and the Heathens † who liv'd ſince Our Saviour J. CHRIST have abſurdly charg'd them with the Worſhipping of Bacchus; either becauſe the Feaſt of Tabernacles was cebrated at the same time as the Orgies of Bacchus, and Pompey had found a Golden Vine in the Temple of Jerusalem; or rather because of the Merriments and Cups of Wine, which the Father of the Family Consecrated to the Meals of the Sabbath, and of the Solemn Feasts. Plutarch and Petronius have accus'd them of worshipping a Hog, because they would neither eat nor offer this Animal in their Sacrifices. A Monk disputing against the Jews before the Pope, upbraided them also with eluding the Prohibition of a Prince || to worship the Sun, and to have his Image in their Houses, by making two-leav'd Doors, and carving part of the Image of the Sun upon each leaf, because when the Door was half open, but half of the Sun's Image appear'd, and they never shut it but when they saw themselves secure. We can't conjecture from whence the Monk has taken this his Accusation, but 'tis undeniable that the Jews have never worshipped the Sun.

II. The Civil Year begins on the first of September. They believe that God judges all Men that Day, and that they pass before him as a Flock before the Shepherd. To avoid the Judgment of Condemnation, the Zealots spend all the Month of August in Fasting and Acts of Repentance. Others at least dedicate the four last Days thereunto, and especially the Eve of New-Years-Day. They dig a Ditch to Bath in, if they can't have Cold Water conveniently elsewhere. They confess their Sins, and beat their Breasts in proportion to their gradual sinking in the Water. At last they plunge in overHead & Ears, that they may appear clean all over in the sight of God. Not satisfied with these Blows of the Fist, with which they beat their Breasts, they commonly give themselves thirty nine lashes by way of Pennance. Some go the next Day to the Synagogue in the habit they have chosen for their Burial, or else in white, which is the Emblem of Purity. If the Christians should be told, that they have derived their Vigils, and their Whip-cord Discipline, and the Merit annex'd to 'em, from the Jews, they would not be well-pleased; but yet this is most probable. The Trumpet is sounded many Days before the end of the Year, to deafen the Devil, that he may not know the Day of Judgment, for fear he should appear there to accuse the Jews. 'Tis sounded also the first Day of the Year, to advertise the People that God is coming to judge; they repair to the Synagogue, and make a multitude of Prayers, and the rest of the Day is employed in hearing of Sermons, or in some Acts of Devotion; and then departing they salute one another, Be thou written in a good Year, and thus they go and seat themselves at Table, and make Merry.

III. In the mean time God forms his Judgment in Heaven. He opens * three Books; one for the Wicked, which is the Book of Death; another for the Righteous, which is the Book of Life; and the third is that of Men in a middle state, who are neither totally good, nor totally bad. They collect this distinction from Holy Writ; for Moses desired of God to be blotted out of his Book, and David making an Imprecation against the Wicked, says, † Let him be blotted out of the book of the Living, and not be written with the Righteous. There is therefore a book of Life for the Saints. God blots the Wicked out of this Book, and puts them into that of Death; and since the Prophet afterwards speaks of the Righteous whose Names are written, there must needs be a Book for those Righteous who are but indifferently good.

IV. As 'tis natural for a Man easily to entertain a great Opinion of himself, and of his own Repentance, so the Jews fancy that God pardons their Sin when they confess 'em, and wash themselves an strike their Breasts as they go deeper into the Water. However, God observes so strange a method in his Judgment, that a Man can't be assur'd whether he be written in the Book of Life or Death, nor of the Consequences this may have; for a little Sin may absorp great Vertues: On the contrary, one Act of Vertue swallows up a great many Sins. Besides, || God will sometimes punish a Saint in this Life, that he may have nothing to suffer after Death: This depends upon his will, and then God writes that Saint in the book of Death. He must dye the next Year, or have a violent Fit of Sickness, or fall into Poverty. From thence we so often see the Saints Poor, Diseased, or Dying in their Infancy. The contrary may happen; for God, who designs to destroy a wicked Man in the other Life, recompences the good he has done in this, and in order to it, writes his Name in the book of Life the first Day of the Year. He prospers and grows happy, but this avails nothing as to Eternity. There should therefore be one Page in the Books of Life and Death for the present World, and another for the future; for otherwise there would be great Confusion in the Books of God. However it be, this is the way they explain the Prosperity of the Wicked for a certain course of Years. The half-good are written no where; God waits for their Repentance till the Day of Propitiations, and ten Days after, and then he determines of their Fate. This Judgment is transacted in the most Solemn manner; for the Angels are all present because God immitates the method of the antient Sanhedrim; and even whilst Jerusalem stood he sent his Angels thither to know whether that Venerable Council had fix'd the time, or began the Year, that there might be no mistake; and that he might pronounce his Judgment on the Day appointed by the Sanhedrim.

V. The Feast of Propitiations is celebrated nine Days * after the beginning of the Year, that is to say, on the ninth of September; and 'tis looked upon, as one of the most beneficial Solemnities of the Nation, which receives on that Day remission of Sins, as the Fruit of its Repentance.

The Custom † was formerly to separate the High Priest from his Wife seven Days before the Feast. Abstinence was not the Cause of this Separation, as is imagined; but 'twas fear'd he might ignorantly contract some Pollution with her, if she had what Women customarily have. R. Jehuda has determined, that if the High-Priest's Wife died in the space of these seven Days, he should immediately Marry another, to satisfie the Law, which commanded to make the Expiation for himself and for his Wife; but this decision has been rejected, which might have necessitated the High-Priests to have married two or three times in seven Days.

VI. They assign'd to this High Priest some Elders that read before him, and exhorted him to read himself in the Law, in order to see whether he had learn'd to read, or whether he had not forgotten. But this Exhortation was only in use in the second Temple, when the Priest-hood was purchased; for in the first House all the Priests were learned. These Elders also prevented his eating too much on the Feast-Eve, for fear he should fall asleep. He was conducted to the upper Chamber of Abtinez. This Abtinez was heretofore President over those that prepared the Perfume, and gave his Name to that Apartment built upon the Water-gate. 'Tis ſaid that his Family afterwards grew very odious, becauſe it would not communicate the Secret of preparing the Perfume. There the High-Prieſt † was obliged to take an Oath, that he would not offer to change any of the antient Rites. They took this Precaution, becauſe of the Sadduces, who beſides their Doctrines before-mentioned, would have the High-Prieſt ſcatter the Perfume before he enter'd into the moſt holy place, which was contrary to Tradition. Nevertheleſs, as this Oath ſeem'd injurious to the High-Prieſt, he wept in taking it; and the Prieſts wept alſo to be reduced to the Neceſſity of making him Swear. The Night was ſpent in explaining the Law, or in reading ſome Paſſages of Job, Ezra or Daniel. If || the Prieſt was not ingenious enough always to ſpeak, he had young People by him, who plaid on the Flute, or jogg'd him with their Finger to wake him when he ſlept, and who continued in this Exerciſe till the Hour of Sacrifice.

I know not whether theſe Cuſtoms were ever practis'd; for the Talmudiſts make no ſcruple to imagine Rites unknown to their Fathers. Theſe Oaths they made the High Prieſt take, are contrary to the Veneration they had for him, and the Night watches are equally ſuſpected; for the Jews never loved 'em, and even the Criticks from hence draw one of their Conjectures againſt the Book of Judith, the Author whereof makes the Night to be ſpent in the Synagogue, contrary to the Cuſtom of the Nation. Beſides Ananus and Hircanus were Sadducees. The firſt lived a little before the ruin of the ſecond Temple, which do's not agree with the Oaths againſt Sadduciſm, which the High-Prieſt was obliged to take every Year. On the Morning they made it a point of Honour to go and cleanſe the Altar, and remove the Aſhes; and the eagerneſs they ran with, frequently occaſion'd Miſchances; for they puſh'd one another upon the Steps of the Altar, and he that happen'd to fall, ſometimes broke a Leg, and therefore they made new Regulations to hinder this diſorder by dividing the Employs. There were nine Prieſts appointed for the Morning Sacrifice, and eleven for that of the Evening; but in the ſolemn Feaſts, ſuch as the Sabbath and Expiation, they order'd ten in the Morning, and twelve in the Evening, and it would have been criminal to change the Number. They alſo choſe Perſons to make ready the Victims. There were twenty four to a Calf, to each of which was aſſigned one part of the Animal, which he was to Flea, or Prepare.

VII. No body durſt enter upon the Functions of his Miniſtry without waſhing himſelf. The Rabbies ſay * that the High-Prieſt waſhed five times, becauſe he was obliged to change his Habit ſo often, and at every change he was to waſh. His Habits were of fine Linnen, and the Miſnah obſerves, that thoſe he wore in the Morning were of Linnen of Peluſium a City of Egypt, which was extreamly fine:

Et Peluſiaco ſilum componere lino:

but the Evening habits came from the Indies, and were very dear †.

VIII. The High-Prieſt being waſh'd and dreſs'd, he took the Bullock, that was placed in the Porch ||, betwixt the Altar and the holy Place; which Porch was appointed for the Confeſſion and tears of the Prieſt. He laid his hand upon the head of the Sacrifice, confeſſing that he was a Rebel and a Sinner, and begging God to Pardon the Sins of him and of his whole Houſe, and they anſwer'd, Bleſſed be his glorious Reign from Generation to Generation.

IX. He went afterwards into the place where were the two Goats and the Urn, from whence the lot was to be drawn. Theſe Lots were commonly of Wood; but the Son of Gamaa made 'em of Gold. The Kings often made rich Preſents for the day of Propitiations and for the Temple, as King Monobazes, "who would "have all the handles of the Veſſels made uſe of "that Day, to be of Gold. Nicanor alſo brought "from Alexandria two ſtately Gates; but the vio-"lence of a Tempeſt obliged them to throw one "of them into the Sea. They were alſo going to "disburthen the Veſſel of the ſecond; but Nicanor "tied himſelf to it, and ſwore, if they threw it "over Board, they ſhould throw him with it. He "arrived happily at Acco, whither the Sea carried "the Gate that had been loſt.

The High-Prieſt ſhook the Urn, and drew out the Lot: he faſten'd a Scarlet thread to the head of the Goat, that was to be ſent away, and another thread to the head of the Goat that was to be Sacrificed, and afterwards he laid his hands upon its head, and made the ſame Confeſſion he had done before upon the head of the Bullock he had kill'd. He took the Cenſer, which was of the pureſt Gold, and entered with it into the Holy of Holies, which he fill'd with the Smoke of the Perfumes. He deſired of God * a due temper of the Air; that the Scepter might not that Year be extorted from the hands of Judah; that there might be no Famine in Iſrael; and that the Prayers of Strangers might not be heard. The Prayer was very ſhort, for fear of frightening the People; for if the High-Prieſt had continued there too long, they would have thought God had taken away his Life, becauſe of ſome Prophanation. Laſtly, he went out backwards, ſtill looking towards the Ark, or towards the Foundation-Stone, which the Rabbies ſubſtitute in place of the loſt Ark; for they believe, that that Stone had been laid in the middle of the World, to ſerve for its Foundation. At his return, he ſacrificed the Goat, that was to be kill'd, and mingled his Blood with that of the Bullock in a Veſſel. With it he made many ſprinklings near the Vail, and particularly upon the Altar. Afterwards he went and laid his hands upon the other Goat, confeſſing the Sins of the People, who again anſwered, Bleſſed be his glorious Reign from Generation to Generation.

X. The Lay-men as well as the Prieſts had the charge of Conducting the Goat Azael. They ſent him out of Jeruſalem by an elevated Way, or kind of Cauſey made for that purpoſe, and there were ten Stages or Tabernacles from Jeruſalem to the Deſart of Zuc, where he was precipitated. They tell us † that he was not half fallen, before his Limbs were broken. They added this Precipitation to the Law, which only ordered, that they ſhould lead the Goat to the Wilderneſs. But as he ſometimes return'd from thence, and this was taken for an Omen of ſome great Misfortune, they determined to throw him headlong. They had Signals at ſeveral Intervals, the more ſpeedily to inform Jeruſalem that the Execution was over, or elſe they knew it by the whitening of a Scarlet thread, which was hung at the Gate of the Temple, and which changed colour, to ſhew that the Propitiation was compleated according to the Promiſe of God. Tho' your Sins ſhould be red as Scarlet, they ſhall be white as Snow. 'Tis ſaid that this imaginary or true Miracle ceaſed forty Years before the Deſtruction of the ſecond Temple.

They burnt part of the other Goat; and the Sacrifice being ended, the High-Prieſt read the Law, gave the Bleſſing to the People; changed his Habits, and made a great Entertainment to rejoyce upon his eſcaping ſafe and ſound from the Sanctuary, whether, becauſe being lightly dreſs'd, the cold might incommode him, or becauſe it was imagined, there was great danger in entring into the Holy of Holies, in the Preſence of God.

XI. The People ſtrictly faſted during the Feaſt, to which they attributed great Effects; for Repentance, tho' accompany'd with a firm reſolution of Amendment, only ſuſpends the Sin, but the Feaſt of Propitiations aboliſhes it. And thoſe who died before that Day, made an Expiation by their Death.

However * they diſtinguiſhed two ſorts of Sins; thoſe committed againſt God were perfectly aboliſhed by the Day of Propitiation; but Reparation muſt be made for the Injury done to Men, and a Man's enemy appeaſed in order to be reconciled to God, and the Feaſt had no efficacy for theſe ſorts of Sins. Thus it is the Rabbies pretend their Anceſtors celebrated the Propitiation Day; let us now ſee the Ceremonies of the Modern Jews.

XII. They prepare themſelves for this great Feaſt the Day before by Prayers and the Sacrifice of a Cock. They take one of theſe Domeſtick Animals, and give him three blows on the head, ſaying, this Cock † ſhall be my ranſom, ſhall ſuffer the Death that I have deſerved, and make my expiation. To this effect they wring his Neck, ths is a Confeſſion the Sinner makes that he has deſerv'd to loſe his blood and life. They daſh him violently againſt the Ground, becauſe they have deſerv'd to be Stoned, they boil him, becauſe the Sinner deſerves the Fire, and there is no kind of Death, but God has right to inflict, if he would exerciſe his Juſtice rather than his Mercy. Laſtly, they throw the Cock's entrails upon the roof of the Houſe. Some ſay, this is to finiſh the Sacrifice; and others affirm, that as Sin proceeds from the Heart, they ought to deteſt the entrails of the Cock; to expoſe 'em a Prey to the Ravens, who ſeize on 'em, and carry 'em into the Deſart, as they formerly ſent thither the Goat Azael loaden with the Sins of the People. They make a diſtinction between the Cocks. The Red are not fit for this Ceremony, becauſe they are cover'd with Sins. Other Colours may be good; but a White Cock is preferable to all others becauſe of his Purity.. The Women take a Hen; and thoſe that are big with Child, ſacrifice the Cock and Hen. They formerly gave theſe ſorts of Victims to the Poor to regale with; but the Poor complaining that they made 'em eat the Sins of the rich, they changed the Sacrifice into Alms, and preſerv'd the ſacrificed Cock for the Evening Entertainment. Leo of Modena affirms, that ſome Doctors cauſed this Cuſtom to be aboliſh'd in Italy and the Eaſt, becauſe they found Superſtition in it.

XIII. The Expiation being made by the Death of the Cock, they go to the Burying-place to pray to God to pardon 'em in memory of the Saints, that have been bury'd there. They throw themſelves into water, to make an entire ablution of their Sins; they prepare Lights for the next Day; each carries his to the Synagogue, and the Votaries have two, one for the Body and the other for the Soul, which they give it the name of. At Night thoſe that are at Variance with their Neighbour, find him out to ask his Pardon, and oblige him to be reconciled. Upon the firſt refuſal, he takes three Witneſſes; afterwards he brings ten ||, before whom he proteſts, he has done his Duty, and that God can no longer lay this Sin to his charge. They go to the Tombs of the Dead, to ask their Pardon, when they have had the Misfortune to offend them, and not to be reconciled to em, whilſt they lived, and this Satisfaction to the Dead is made in preſence of ten Witneſſes. Afterwards they enter into the Synagogue to make their Confeſſion there; chooſing one of their Friends, with whom they go into a corner, and mutually laſh each other, repeating a Verſe * of the Seventy eighth Pſalm. This Verſe contains thirteen words. At each word they give a laſh, and thrice repeat it. And thus they reckon thirty nine Stripes, according to the antient Cuſtom St. Paul ſubmitted to; for it was then a Civil Puniſhment; of which they have made an Eccleſiaſtical and voluntary Penance. During the Night, they cry to God, "We † have Sinn'd; we have Robb'd; "we have Slandered; we have been Proud; we "have given bad Advice; we have Lied; we have "deſerved forty Stripes, ſudden Death, the four "Puniſhments: We owe thee Sacrifices for Sin; but "have mercy upon us; for the ſake of thy Sanctu-"ary, reveal the Glory of thy Reign." Maimonides || relates a ſhorter Confeſſion which the Penitent makes in theſe words: Lord, I have ſin'd; I have rebell'd, I have done ſuch and ſuch a thing; I repent of it; I bluſh for ſhame, and will never do the like again. This Confeſſion is ſo neceſſary, that the Sin can't be expiated without it: 'tis much more perfect, when 'tis made to many Perſons, or is Publick.

XIV. When the Feaſt commences, they go to the Synagogue; each lights his Candle; and they Sing Hymns with a loud Voice. The Women light at the ſame time their Candles in the Houſe, and from thence draw great Preſages. If the Light be clear, the Sins are certainly forgiven; but if the Tallow or the Wax run, they fear all the Wrath of God, and this fear produces Sighs and torrents of Tears. They enter very early into the Synagogue, and the whole Day is ſpent in the ſevereſt Faſt, without exception of Sex or Age, after they are arrived to the Age of twelve Years. They * read a long Prayer, in which they declare, that all the Oaths and Promiſes, which have not been performed in the courſe of the paſt Year are cancelled, becauſe the Propitiation of Sin is made. They bring the Law; and read what relates to the Feaſt of Propitiations, and the Ceremony of the Goat Azael. Some paſs the Night Standing, in Singing and making new Prayers; but thoſe that return home to aſſwage their hunger, provoked by a Faſt of twenty eight Hours, appear again the Morrow before Day in the Synagogue, for fear the Devil ſhould accuſe them of riſing ſo early the Day before out of Intereſt, becauſe it was the Day of Propitiations, and of ſleeping the next Day, becauſe they expected nothing more from God.

XV. At the end of the Day of Propitiations, the Rabbi gives the Bleſſing to the People with the elevation of his Hands, who are all obliged that moment to put their Hands before their Eyes, and to hide their Face, becauſe it is not lawful to behold the Hands of the Prieſt: Or rather they imagine that God is behind the Prieſt, who looks through his extended Hands, and their reverence for the Almighty, ſuffers 'em not to lift up their Eyes towards him; for no body ſhall ſee God and live. They ſound the Horn, in memory of the Jubilee, which began with the Propitiation-Day. Laſtly they imagine, that a Voice is heard from Heaven informing them, that God has pardoned his People their Sins, and that they may return home with Joy.

XVI. They attribute a great Efficacy to this Ceremony. For the Jews ſay, that Adam repented this Day, and that God preferr'd it before all others, that his People might imitate the firſt Man in his Repentance. The ſame Day Adam was circumciſed; Iſaac bound to be offered in Sacrifice to God, and therefore they pray God to pardon them for the ſake of the binding of Iſaac. Laſtly, 'twas this Day that Moſes deſcended from Sinai with the new Tables of the Law; but this makes a Subject of Diſpute with the Caraites who deny it. They are perſuaded that God was willing to reckon every Year with his People, and to pardon them, for fear that if he ſuffered many Years to ſlip, he ſhould find the account too groſs, and that the meaſure of their Iniquities being full, the World ſhould be deſtroyed. The Heathens had alſo a Feaſt every Year, in which it was neceſſary to purify themſelves.

Februa Romani dixere Piacula Patres.

And doubtleſs 'twas for the ſame reaſon that the Council of Trent ordered Confeſſion at leaſt once a Year; being fearful that the number of Sins would be accumulated and forgotten, and that the Pardon would become more difficult.

XVII. Maimonides * affirms that the Goat Azael expiated both great and little Sins, that were repented of; and that Repentance ſupplying the place of Sacrifice, had at preſent the ſame effect. But he will have this Repentance to be accompanied with Renunciation of Sin: It is perfect, when the opportunity of committing the ſame Crime preſents it ſelf, and is not made uſe of. A young Man, who ſees the Woman he has ſeduced, or living with her commits no more Adultery, is a perfect Penitent. The Perfection grows leſs, when he quits not Vice, till he is Old, or upon the approach of Death. Repentance muſt be accompanied with Alms; and produced by a Motive of love to God and Vertue. The fear of Puniſhment, and the hope of Bleſſings ought to be no Ingredients. They † muſt change their Names, that they may be able to deceive God, and tell him, I am another, and it is not I that committed this Sin. This Repentance they think eaſie, becauſe it depends upon the Man either to become righteous or wicked; and || the Opinion of the vulgar Jew, who maintains that God in the Creation of Man decreed that he ſhould be good or bad, ought to be rejected. Laſtly, it is * of ſaving Efficacy, ſince it draws near to God thoſe that he hated, and reconciles them to him.

I. WE muſt not forget the other Feaſts of the Jews. That of Pentecoſt is one of the moſt Solemn, for that Day the Law was given upon Sinai; and to re-call the Memory of it in a moſt ſenſible manner, they make a very thick Cake compoſed of ſeven layes of Paſte, which they call Sinai; and this Cake puts 'em in Mind not only of Mount Sinai, but of the Seven Heavens, through which they believe God was oblig'd to paſs, to re-aſcend from the eminence of this Mountain to the Empyræum. They exactly reckon all the Days that are paſs'd from the Paſſe-over, that they may not be miſtaken in the Moment, when the Pentecoſt ought to begin, "The King, ſay they, has promis'd a Priſoner his "Liberty, and his Daughter to Wife at ſeven Weeks "end. Is it not juſt, that this Priſoner ſhould reckon "every Day and Hour and Moment till that his Fe-"licity begins?" This King is God, who has promiſed the Jewiſh people their Liberty and Law. They are therefore obliged to compute the term exactly, which he has preſcribed for putting them in Poſſeſſion of it. Notwithſtanding all theſe Calculations, they are ſtill afraid of being deceived, and therefore they celebrate two Feaſt-days. Buxtorf alledges, that they did the ſame thing at the Paſſe-over, and by this means ſolves the difficulty, ariſing from our Lord's eating the Paſchal Lamb a Day before the Jews. There is nothing particular in the Rites of this Feaſt, except that the Law is twice brought out, that five Perſons read it, and that the Synagogue, and Windows of their Houſes are adorn'd with Flowers, and Greens, to inſinuate that every thing was Green about Sinai, tho' this Mountain was in a Deſart of Arabia. They alſo call'd Pentecoſt, the Feaſt of Harveſt, which was then made, and whereof they offered the Firſt-fruits to God.

II. On the fifteenth of September they celebrate the Feaſt of Tabernacles, which laſts nine * Days;

* Buxtorf reckons but eight. Syn. Jud. c. 16.

ſeven

ſeven by order of Moſes, and two by Supererogation. Each Perſon erects an Arbour in his Court, which he covers with Greens, and cloaths with variety of Ornaments, in which he ſpends the Day. They formerly paſs'd whole Nights in 'em; but this Cuſtom has changed, at leaſt in the Weſt, where the Nights are colder. They are obliged to bear the Rain in the Tabernacles; but yet when it is violent they may retire to their Houſes. This Feaſt was inſtituted in remembrance of their Travels into the Deſart, and the watchful care of Providence, which preſerved the Nation for forty Years in barren Plains, without Houſes, and expoſed to the Inclemencies of the Air.

III. I will not ſtand here to deſcribe the Tabernacles, the Figures whereof may be ſeen in great Numbers in the Miſnah *, which Shurenhuſius has ſo well explain'd. He not only has obſerved, the prodigious variety of the Doctors upon this Subject; but he ſhews at one view what we can't expreſs without a great many words. It ſuffices to ſay that the Tabernacle was not to be above twenty Cubits high, nor leſs than ten Hands. The ſafeſt way is to have no Bed in the Tabernacle, when a Man lies there; but yet Judah the Saint permitted it. Eliezer † will have fourteen Meals to be made in it, one by Night and another by Day ſucceſſively: but the Sages maintain that the Number of 'em is not determin'd. The Boughs wherewith they cover the Tabernacle muſt not be dry, and 'tis a Crime to take 'em in an Idolatrous City, or to ſteal 'em. Jehuda will have the Branches which are held in the hand to be bound with ſome Twigs of the ſame Tree; but R. Meir is of another Opinion, for he || allows the uſe of Oſier and Thread. The Inhabitants of Jeruſalem have ſometimes bound them with Gold Twiſt. If the Feaſt happen on a Saturday, they carry the Branches to the Synagogue; where they leave 'em, and fetch 'em the next Morning; but they muſt be gathered together the Eve of the Sabbath, and put in Water-veſſels for fear of withering.

IV. The firſt Day of the Feaſt of Tabernacles they take one Branch of Palm, three of Myrtle, one of Willow bound together, theſe they carry in the Right Hand; in the Left they have a Branch of Citron with its Fruit; they bring them near one another; and turn them about to the four Parts of the World, as thinking God has commanded it, in the twenty third Chapter of Leviticus. Beſides, they find here four great Myſteries. The Palm, that is handſom, and bears an inſipid Fruit, repreſents the Hypocritical Jews, who ſtudy the divine Law, and do no good Works; the Myrtle, which has a grateful Smell, tho' it be barren, repreſents thoſe that do good Works without the Law; The Willow is the Image of the Wicked, who have neither Law nor Virtue; and the Citron with its Fruits denotes the Righteous, who have both the Law and good Works. Whereas they formerly made four Turns about the Altar in the Temple, at preſent they make them about the Reading-Desk, holding theſe Branches, which they go in Queſt of as far as Spain, and ſell very dear in the Places, where theſe Trees grow not without difficulty.

V. They leave 'em the Seventh Day, which is more Holy than the reſt. Then they riſe with the Sun; waſh themſelves and go to the Synagogue; and Sing abundance of Prayers, which they repeat all the Feaſt with a prodigious Rapidity, as ſuppoſing that during their Journey, they were obliged to make haſte even in the Service of God, and the Prayers they made to him. They draw out of the Cheſt ſeven Copies of the Law; if there were twenty, they would produce 'em all: At leaſt this is the Rite of their Poland Synagogues. The Desk is adorned with Flowers; and having read ſomething in every Copy, they carry 'em back one after another, with a great deal of Ceremony.

VI. As Superſtition intrudes every where, they go to conſult the Moon, and fancy, they find the Prediction of all the Events of the Year. To this purpoſe, he that conſults her, examines the ſhadow his Body caſts from the Rays of this Planet. If he diſcovers that the ſhadow wants a Head, it is a ſign of Death; if it wants a Finger, 'tis ominous that he ſhould loſe one of his Friends. The death of a Son is ſignified by the want of the right Hand, and that of a Daughter by the want of the left. All this is founded upon theſe words of Moſes, The Protection of God is withdrawn from them; for 'tis properly in the Original, his ſhadow is withdrawn from 'em. The Authority of the Rabbies, who make great Comments upon theſe words, confirms the Superſtition of the People.

VII. The eighth Day of the Feaſt, they get their Friends together, and give 'em an Entertainment. They finiſh the ninth with reading the Law, according to the order of the Sections. They chooſe this Day two Bridegrooms of the Law, One whereof reads the End, and the Other the Beginning, amidſt the People's Acclamations, who ſhout for Joy; and thus the Ceremony concludes. However as they depart, for good and all, from the Arbours, they beg of God the favour of continuing in the Tabernacle of the Leviathan. They deſire doubtleſs to ſee the Entertainment of the Meſſiah, in which the Leviathan ſhall be ſerved up as a delicious Diſh.

VIII. The New-Moon is alſo one of the Feaſts they celebrate, tho' it be not a Crime to work upon it, and the Idleneſs of this Day is principally reſerved for the Women. The Talmudiſts tell, that the Moon being diſturbed with having a Competitor in the Heaven, repreſented to God, the Impoſſibility of two Heads wearing the ſame Crown. There ought to be but one King in Heaven as on Earth. God being provoked with this Remonſtrance, leſſen'd and ſhrunk the Moon, who pretended to be ſo Proud. Moſes inſinuates the Change that happen'd to this Planet; for he ſays at firſt, that God made two great Lights. They had therefore the ſame luſtre and the ſame Empire; but he added, that one ſhall rule over the Day, and the other leſſer ſhould rule over the Night, which ſhews that he had leſſen'd its Light and Beauty. Diverſe Propoſitions were made to the Moon to comfort her; but ſhe did not accept them, and God being convinced by all her Remonſtrances that he was in the wrong, required a Propitiatory Sacrifice to be made for him every New-Moon, and order'd it alſo to be celebrated. They are much confounded to explain the laſt Part of this Story, in which a Propitiatory Sacrifice is offer'd for God every New-Moon. The Rabbies caſt about every way to acquit their Maſters of the Affront they offer to God; but they can't ſucceed in it. Let us leave them to fatigue themſelves, and return to the Feaſt.

IX. Their Devotion conſiſts in a Faſt, which the Votaries keep in the Evening, and in a certain number of Prayers, which they repeat in the Synagogue the Feaſt-Day, and in a Treat they make afterwards, in which they much divert themſelves. Three days after they meet upon a flat Roof, where they ſtedfaſtly behold the Moon, and bleſs God with a long Prayer for having created her, and for renewing her to teach the Iſraelites, that they ought to become new Creatures. O Moon! bleſſed be thy Creator; bleſſed be he that made thee, and then they leap thrice in the Air as high as they can, and ſay to the Moon, as we leap towards thee, without being able to touch thee, ſo may our Enemies riſe againſt us without reaching us. The terror of the Lord ſhall fall upon them.

X. No reaſon can be given for this Prayer, unleſs they believe the Moon to have influence upon Men. This is an old Opinion, we even find ſome tracks of it in the Goſpel, which often ſpeaks of Lunaticks. The Epileptick Perſon in St. Matthew is call'd Lunatick; Demoniack by St. Luke; Deaf and Dumb by St. Mark. Was it becauſe the Moon began the Diſtemper by her Influences; and the Devil made uſe of 'em to render it more terrible, and deprive him of his Ears and Tongue? Juvencus was of this Opinion:

*Nam * curſus Lunæ natum mihi Dæmonis arte* Torquet.

XI. Eclipſes moreover diſturb them very much; for the Jews doubt not, but they preſage ſome great Calamity. They mortify themſelves, and faſt that Day, and pray God, that the Miſchief that threatens 'em, may fall upon the Head of their Enemies. They have a Pretence of juſtifying this Errour by the Example of the Heathens, and abundance of Chriſtians, who have been terrified thouſands of times by theſe Preſages. Turnebus † has diſcover'd a Poet of Heatheniſh or Chriſtian Antiquity (for theſe Verſes are aſcribed to St. Fulgentius, or Varro) who did not believe the Magicians had power to bring down the Moon from Heaven, and make her froth upon the Herbs, to give 'em greater efficacy, for Witchcraft: He rejected theſe Stories, as haughtily as we do at preſent; but it muſt be confeſs'd, that the true cauſe of this Obſcurity was not known for the Generality, and that this Poet is the only perſon, that has raiſed his Senſe above the Vulgar:

Sed vaſto corpore tellus
Quæ medium tenet ima polum, dum lumina fratris
Detinet umbriferis metis.

XII. The Deliverance obtained by Eſther, when the Deſtruction of the Jews was reſolved upon, and the Maſſacre was going to begin, gives occaſion to another Feaſt. This is a very ſolemn one, and is ſtill celebrated with a great deal of Ceremony. Its Inſtitution is attributed to the Scribes, who added five Precepts to the Law; but it is much more antient. 'Tis even moſt probable, that it was Haggai or Malachi, that ordered it to be celebrated in memory of ſo general a Deliverance. Indeed ſome Rabbies || maintain that of forty eight Prophets and ſeven Propheteſſes, there was not one, that retrench'd or added to the Precepts of the Law, except the order of reading the Hiſtory of Eſther every Year; and Maimonides * averrs, that when the Meſſiah comes, he will aboliſh the Writings of the Prophets, and the Hagiographa; but that he will carefully preſerve the Hiſtory of Eſther, that it may be read to the end of the World. His Brethren have objected this Notion to him as a Crime, as if it favoured the Chriſtians, who affirm that the Old Teſtament † was cancelled by JESUS CHRIST, and as if he had fetched it out of ſome unauthentick Books. We read in the Talmud, that the Feaſt of Purim ſhall not be aboliſhed, and that the memory of it ſhall ſurvive to all Poſterity ||.

XIII. Criticks don't agree about the time, when Eſther lived, nor about the Name of the Prince, whoſe Favourite Haman was. Some * will have it to be Xerxes, whoſe Wife's Name was Ameſtris, or Mother of Eſther; the Heathens having changed her Jewiſh Name, and given her that of Aſtarte, or Venus, who was of ſuch exquiſite Beauty. But the Scripture Aſſuerus † was the Darius of the Greeks, who had married Cyrus's Daughter, and 'twas five hundred and nine Years before J. CHRIST that he order'd the general Maſſacre of the Jews, the Execution whereof was prevented by Eſther. Haman had caſt Lots upon all the Months of the Year, to know which was moſt Unfortunate to the Jews, and the Lot fell upon February, in which they kept no Feaſt. 'Tis in this Month alſo, that they celebrate the Memory of their Deliverance, and call it the Feaſt of Purim or Lots, becauſe Haman had uſed Lottery or Magick to give it the Preference to the reſt.

XIV. They ſometimes celebrate this Faſt twice in the Biſſextile Years, by reaſon of the Intercalation made on the twenty fourth of February, and they had rather have two Rejoicings, than want one. When this happens, they call One the Little, and the Other the Great Purim. 'Twas a great Mortification to the Superſtitious Jews, when in the Year 1634. the great Purim happen'd upon a Day of an Eclipſe of the Moon; they look'd upon this Co-incidence, as an Omen of many Misfortunes, which did not befall them.

XV. They begin the Feaſt with a Faſt, which they religiouſly obſerve. They have ſhorten'd that of Eſther, which laſted three Days; or at leaſt none but a few Zealots enjoyn'd themſelves ſuch a long Mortification; and for the generality, they abſtain from eating one Day. In the Morning they give the Poor Alms neceſſary to buy wherewithal to be merry in the Evening; and they commonly ſend 'em Diſhes from their Table, that they may make the better Chear; they collect the half Shekle, which was formerly paid for the Temple, and divide the Contribution amongſt the Pilgrims to Jeruſalem, where they love to go and be buried, to avoid the trouble of a long Journey at the Day of the Reſurrection, and that they may be nearer at hand to the Valley of Jehoſaphat.

In the Evening they go to the Synagogue to hear the Book of Eſther read, and afterwards explained by the Miniſter, or Chazan. This Book muſt not be printed, but written upon Vellum with a Sacred Ink. The Reader may ſit down, whereas he muſt always ſtand when he reads the Law. Having open'd the Volume, he makes three Prayers to give thanks to God, for having called them to this Ceremony; for having delivered them, and continued them alive till this Feaſt-day. Afterwards he reads all the Hiſtory of Haman and Eſther. There are five places, upon which he raiſes his Voice in ſuch a manner as to ſcare the Women and Children. He endeavours hereby to awaken thoſe that ſleep, or to denote his Joy. He is obliged to read the Names of Haman's ten Children in a Breath. When this Perſecutor's Name is pronounced, they make a terrible noiſe in the Synagogue. Some drum with their Feet and Hands, and the Children have Mallets and other Inſtruments proper to make a Noiſe with. In ſome places they cut Haman's Name in a Stone, and the Moment it is read, they ſtrike it againſt a harder Stone, crying, Let the Name of this wretch rot, and be blotted out. The Reading is concluded with Curſes againſt Haman aud Seres his Wife, with Bleſſings on Mordecai and Eſther, and with the Praiſes of God, who has preſerv'd his People. They depart from the Synagogue to go to their Entertainment. In the Morning they return to hear once more the Hiſtory of Eſther, and ſome other parts of Scripture, after which begins ſuch a great and general Debauch, that this Feaſt has been confounded with the Heathen Bacchanalia. 'Tis ſo enormous a crime to work on this Feaſt, that a Man who had ſow'd Flax in his Field this Day never ſaw the leaſt Blade appear. They drink till they can no longer diſtinguiſh betwixt the Bleſſing of Eſther, and the Curſing of Haman. The Men dreſs themſelves in Women's Cloaths in ſpight of the Law that forbids it. They dance and continue the Debauch for two Days together.

XVI. They have a Cuſtom in ſome Places to erect a Gibbet, and to hang up a Man in effigie, to repreſent Haman condemned to this Puniſhment. The Chriſtians have tax'd them with imagining this repreſentation only to renew the Memory of CHRIST Crucify'd, and to divert themſelves about his Croſs. They have alſo accuſed 'em of taking a Chriſtian and fixing him to the Gallows, in imitation of the unfortunate Haman. Theodoſius Junior forbad the Celebration of this Feaſt, becauſe of the Inſults they gave the Chriſtians; but I don't find any mention of the Murder. This we ſhall examine in the Collection of the Imperial Laws againſt the Jews. Whether Theodoſius's Law was ill executed, or forgotten, the Feaſt of Purim is ſtill kept with the aforeſaid Solemnities.

XVII. Laſtly the Jews have ſtill at this Day a great many other Feaſts, not appointed by Moſes. They celebrate a Faſt in June, becauſe the Tables of the Law, which Moſes brought from Mount Sinai, were broken. They have another in July, becauſe of the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem by Nebuchadnezar, and a great while after by Titus. The firſt of September they ſound a Trumpet, as a ſignal of Joy that Iſaac was not Sacrificed, and ſo there is a complication of Feaſts on that Day. The third they Faſt becauſe Gedaliah was killed. The twenty firſt they have their Feaſt of Branches, in memory of the taking of Jericho. They have alſo this Month the Feaſt of the Collection, which is made to ſupply the Expences of the Sacrifices. The twenty fifth of November they ſolemnize the Dedication of the Altar, made by the Maccabees. The tenth of December, they Faſt on account of the firſt Siege of Jeruſalem by Nebuchadnezar.

I. THE Jews are obliged to riſe by Break of Day. The Wife muſt awake her Husband. The Father of the Family is to take care to call up his Children, becauſe they muſt ſay their Prayers the very Moment the Sun appears upon the Horizon. They ground themſelves upon the example of Ruth, who went very early to glean, and upon the command of David *, who ſays, they ſhall bleſs thee with the Sun. They think this is the time, when God moſt favourably hears the Prayers of thoſe that invoke him, becauſe then the Evil Angels are ſilent, and don't diſturb him; and ſince every body is earneſt and haſty to riſe, when there is any conſiderable profit to be made, they ought for a ſtronger reaſon to ſhake off Sleep, and rouze themſelves to obtain God's Protection and Riches. However, this Law is not always rigorouſly obſerved; and the Caſuiſts allow the Sun three Hours for his Levee, in which time they are permitted to make their firſt Prayers.

II. They ought to be ſorrowful as they riſe, becauſe of the Deſtruction of the Temple. 'Tis alſo a piece of Devotion to ſhed Tears every Morning, becauſe God gathers them into his Bottles, when they are abundant, and uſes them to expunge out of his Book the Evils he had reſolved againſt the Saints. The Jews are Superſtitious in the manner of dreſſing themſelves; but eſpecially they muſt never be naked in their Chamber, nor flatter themſelves, that the obſcurity of the Night conceals their Nakedneſs, or that they have nothing to fear, becauſe they are alone; for the Glory, the Schekinah of God fills the Univerſe. One of the firſt Cares is to diſcharge their Bowels, becauſe David has ſaid, All that is within me praiſe the Lord. It would be a crime to pray to God, or to ſpeak to him before the inward parts were cleanſed; and one of the reaſons that induced God to lengthen R. Sira's Life was, that he never pronounced the Name of God in a filthy place. "What Man, ſays he, having received a preſent of a "fine Veſſel, and knowing the Donor would come, "but would cleanſe it, for fear he ſhould think himſelf "diſhonoured by the dirtineſs that was ſuffer'd upon "his Preſent? Our Bodies are precious Veſſels intruſted to us by God, and ought to be carefully cleanſed. "It would be a crime and render the Perſon abominable, as Moſes ſays, to ſtop a Natural Neceſſity." They had formerly a Prayer to the Guardian Angel to protect them in this Moment; but they no longer uſe it, becauſe they have found the Secret not to expoſe their Nakedneſs †. 'Tis for the ſame reaſon, that they waſh their Faces and Hands. Before they say their Prayers, they take the Thaled, and they must go to the Synagogue with the same Ardour as if they were mounting the Breach of a Besieged Garrison; for David remembred || that he walked into the House of God in company, as to a strong City. God enters the Synagogue as soon as it is opened, and if he finds no body, he is astonished, and provoked, and says with Isaiah, * Wherefore when I came was there no Man? When I called, was there none to answer? They bow themselves as they enter towards the Chest, which contains the Law, saying, † How beautiful are thy Tabernacles O Jacob! Some put a Vail over their Head. They read the Prayers, and such as can't read, answer to the Prayers of others, Amen.

III. They enjoy'd a great liberty in their Prayers, from Moses till Ezra, because the Law expressed the necessity of this Duty in general Terms, and in commanding them to worship God with all their Heart. They contented themselves with praising the Perfections of God; with begging of him things necessary, and concluded with the acknowledgment of the Bounties they had received. Some pray'd once a Day, and others oft'ner. He that had more eloquence, made more frequent and longer Prayers. The Stammerer and the Ignorant were oblig'd to be short; but in the time of the Captivity, when the People was confounded with the Chaldæans, and had learn'd their Language, the confusion encreased, because the generality could not easily make their Prayers in Hebrew, and were necessitated to insert barbarous Terms, that were grown more familiar to them. Ezra, whom God had chosen for the restoration of his service, remedied this Abuse, by composing eighteen Blessings, which every Israelite was obliged to learn and repeat. Besides || he fixed the time when they were to pray. As they offered the Morning and Evening Sacrifice, he ordered that they should have solemn Prayers for both these Seasons. As on Days of Rest and Festivals they added a Sacrifice, he ordered a third Prayer to be then repeated. Because the Evening Sacrifice was consumed in the Night, he instituted a Night Prayer. * Others maintain, that Abraham had long before established the Morning Prayer, Isaac the Afternoon, and Jacob that of the Evening. When Eliezer † Abraham's Servant conducted Rebecca, the Earth danced every Night before him, for fear that being alone with this Bride, he should have to do with her. They both arrived, when Isaac was going to the Field to make the Prayer of Offering. Hoornbeck || thought this was the Prayer that was made before Day, antelucana; but it was that which was made at three a Clock in the Afternnon, when the Sacrifice was offered. They suppose that this was very antient; but when you ask the Rabbies any proof of this Antiquity from Isaac's time, or its institution by Ezra, they offer none. The eighteen Benedictions of Ezra would have been inserted with the rest of his Writings into the Sacred Canon, if he had dictated them as a perpetual Rule for the Service of God. R. Joshua, Chanina's Son, would not have dar'd to maintain against Gamaliel II. the Patriarch and Prince of the Nation, that the Evening Prayers were not necessary; and this Opinion would not have raised him to the Patriarchal Dignity, if he had directly run counter to the Law of Ezra. These Prayers therefore are of a much more novel date.

IV. We * must distinguish betwixt the Prayers of private Persons, and those that make a part of the publick Service. Every private Person is obliged to repeat a hundred Benedictions a Day. Some of'em are pleasant enough; for they praise God for giving the Cock the quality of distinguishing Night and Day, and awaking the Jews every Morning. Bendito † tu A. N. D. R. del Mondo que da al gallo instinto, para distinguir, entre Dia y entre Noché, say the Jews of the Amsterdam Synagogue.

1. The Prayers || of the Synagogues are different. Some repeat these hundred Benedictions all at a time to discharge themselves of them as a task and a toil imposed; but the Doctors censure this fault, because they ought to time every Benediction to the subject it treats of. 2. To these Benedictions they add certain passages of the Psalms proper to endue the Soul with Piety. "They particularly insist on the last "Verses of the CXLV. Psalm. The Germans sing "these Psalms more strongly than others. The "Spaniards and Eastern Jews resemble the singing "of the Turks, and the Italians sing leisurely "and softly." 3. Having sung the Psalms, they read the Schema, by which they mean three different Chapters taken from Deuteronomy and Numbers *. The first begins with these words, Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God. Which is a kind of Confession repeated Evening and Morning acknowledging there is but One God, who has brought his People out of Egypt, and given them his Laws to be observed for ever. These Sections of Scripture are interwoven with Prayers, and Blessings, in which they frequently mention the Unity of One God, in order to confirm the People's Faith against the Heathen Idolatry, and the Christian Religion, which seems to violate this Unity by distinguishing three Persons in one Essence. They conclude the Schema with Blessing God, who redeems Israel. And as they pronounce these last words, they rise and repeat the Prayers and Benedictions left by Ezra to the great Synagogue, to be the Rule of all their Devotions. 4. Having repeated these eighteen Prayers, they sit, bow their Face to the Ground, raise a little their Head, and make their private Prayers. They recite the CXLV. Psalm, and afterwards betake themselves to their Business. They begin again in the Evening much after the same form, at least Maimonides give this account of it, who is the exactest Author of the Jews, and he who is most followed by the Christian Criticks in their Explication.

V. We will only observe three things, 1. That these private Prayers are very long, and full of Repetitions, so that they have not corrected the fault of the long Prayers and Battologies that our Lord objected to the Pharisees. They pretend indeed, that his Censures only affected the Prayers of certain Doctors who gave their Disciples particular and prolix forms; but how do they know this? Our Saviour's Censure is general, and the Remedy he thought so necessary, that he opposed one form of Prayer against all that were in vogue in his time. We have reason therefore to conclude, that this fault was universal. The Pharisees, who were the Teachers of the People, and of the Religion, introduced this long Service into the Synagogue, and afterwards into the Temple; and as most of the Jews are still Pharisees, they have followed the example of their Ancestors. 2. They pray commonly ſitting with their Heads ſtooping to the Ground: but in extraordinary Humiliations, they proſtrate themſelves extending their Hands and Feet, and ſending out vehement Cries; and therefore Our Lord in his Agony in the Garden of Gethſemane, fell upon his Face, and cryed, Father if it be poſſible let this Cup paſs from me. The Rabbies ſay, that a Man ought to be as holy as Joſhua, to have the privilege of praying thus; but 'tis one of their particular Laws. 3. They think theſe Prayers ſupply the place of Sacrifices aboliſhed by the over-throw of the Temple and Altar. They give 'em the ſame Name, and ſay they have the ſame efficacy. Theſe Prayers have very good things in them, and nothing can be condemned but their length, and certain particulars they deſcend into of little importance. In the hundred Benedictions they give to God, beſides the Pſalms, whereof they chuſe the moſt affecting parts, and the Thankſgiving for God's Bounties, which they expreſs very emphatically, they pathetically beg the ſupply of their wants. They not only pray God to ſtop his Anger againſt Jeruſalem, and the Mountain of his Holineſs; but they renounce their own Righteouſneſs. Lord, ſay they, * ſave us; hear me our Soveraign King, when I implore thy Succour; our Father and our King grant us thy Grace, hear us and do it for thy Name's ſake, ſince we have no Righteouſneſs to preſent to thee.

VI. They think the publick Prayers much more effectual than the others: And there are only ſome rigid † Doctors, who maintain, that God only hears thoſe that are made in the Synagogue; and never rejects a Prayer put up by ten Perſons, tho' ſome of 'em be Impenitents. This doubtleſs is the Artifice of the Clergy, to oblige the People to a more frequent attendance on the Temples and their Aſſemblies. And indeed particular Perſons go to the Synagogue to ſay their Prayers before mentioned, tho' they make no part of the publick Service, every one paying their Devotions ſeparately till the Miniſter of the Synagogue appears. They alledge for the reaſon of it, that private Perſons may make Prayers that are uſeful to themſelves, and pernicious to others; whereas the Church only deſires things that are Advantagious to all. They therefore reſtrain the Abuſe by ordering them to pray publickly with the Church, or only to repeat the Prayers that make part of the publick Service. Beſides Particulars ſuffer Wandrings and Diſtraction of thought, and ſeldom keep up their attention from the beginning of the Prayer to the end; but when ten Men || pray in a Temple, one ſupplies the others defect, and the Bleſſing of God falls like a ſhower of Rain upon the Earth. So that the Benediction of God deſtined for the Church ſheds it ſelf upon all that pray with 'em, tho' they don't deſerve it, and ſome of 'em render themſelves unworthy by their Diſtraction and Negligence in their Prayers. This method of ſupplying one another's defects, renders the Devotion more eaſie and convenient. Laſtly, they compare thoſe that pray in the Church to People that make their expences in common, and are leſs incommoded in entering into Society, than when they make a Treaty in particular.

VII. The Miniſter ſuppoſing the People have repeated their Prayers, begins the ſervice of the Day with a Prayer called Kadiſh, becauſe they deſire God to ſanctifie his Name. " * O God, let thy Name be " magnified and ſanctified in the World, which thou " haſt created according to thy good Pleaſure, let " thy Kingdom reign: The Redemption flouriſh, and " the Meſſiah come quickly; let his Name be celebrated, &c." This Prayer is the moſt antient of all the Jews have preſerved; and as they read it in the Chaldee Tongue, we have reaſon to ſuppoſe it was one of the Prayers that were made at the Return from Babylon for the Uſe of the People, who difficultly underſtood Hebrew. They repeat it often in the Service as the moſt important, and the People is oblig'd to anſwer many times, Amen. So that this is properly an Anthem. If the Germans have ſtruck out what relates to the Redemption, the Meſſiah's coming, and the People's Deliverance, 'tis not that they believe the Redeemer to be come; but they are perſuaded that all theſe advantages are included in the coming of God's Kingdom. JESUS CHRIST ſeems to have borrow'd the firſt words of this Prayer ſince he teaches us to ſay, Hallowed be thy Name, thy Kingdom come. This confirms what we have ſaid of its Antiquity.

VIII. After the Anthem, they commonly repeat the Decalogue, which is the Foundation of the Jewiſh Religion; but the Doctors ſay, that they have been obliged to lay aſide this Cuſtom, becauſe of Hereticks or Chriſtians, who maintain, that God gave only thoſe ten Commandments on Mount Sinai. They only at preſent read ſome paſſages of Deuteronomy, which they call Schemah †, becauſe it begins with theſe words, Hear O Iſrael. They not only find an abſtract of their Faith in 'em; (and therefore he that repeats 'em, becomes truly a Jew, and takes upon him the Kingdom of God:) But they moreover diſcover a great Myſtery in theſe words, the Lord is our God, the Lord is one God; compared with thoſe of the Prophet Zachary: And the Lord ſhall be King over all the Earth: in that day ſhall there be one Lord, and his Name one, beauſe theſe two Texts put together, prove that all Nations of the World ſhall be one Day ſubject to God and his People. Some Chriſtians, in imitation of the Rabbies, are perſuaded, that St. Paul had the ſame views, when he taught the Romans that Grace reſpected the Gentile as well as the Jew, ſince there was but one God in the Univerſe, and one Mediator.

IX. The reading the Schemah and the third Benediction being ended, all the Aſſembly riſes, and prays in a low Voice ſtanding. The Miniſter gives the Example, and they continue in that Poſture till the Secret be finiſhed: Then every one makes three Steps backward out of reverence, and the Miniſter repeats the eighteen Prayers, whereof the three firſt contain the Praiſes of God. The Neceſſities of the Church and of Particulars are included in the twelve next, and in the three laſt they make a Confeſſion to God of their Vileneſs and Unworthineſs. Thoſe that have repeated them before the Miniſter came, hear 'em reverently, and anſwer Amen. The others then diſcharge this part of their Duty. At the third Bleſſing they are allowed to reſume their Place; that is to advance three Steps; and when they come to the Prayer called Modim, they muſt bow themſelves a little. They Sit, whilſt the other Prayers are read; they bow their Heads; ſometimes riſe, and raiſe their Voices now and then, repeat the Anthem; together with ſome Prayers and many Pſalms, but eſpecially the forty fifth. The Service concludes with the Anthem as it began, and the Miniſter gives the Bleſſing to the People, who retire ſaying ||, Lord guide me in thy Righteouſneſs, and prepare the way before me, becauſe of mine Enemies. This Service is to be performed every Day. They begin a new One after Noon, and another at Night, and thus the Exercises of Piety are determined in the Synagogues to Mattins, Nones, and Vespers, and the Prayers are all full of the Praises of God, and Motives of Devotion.

X. They ‖ pride themselves at Rome in the Conformity of this Church with the Synagogue about the Canonical Hours, "about the Jews Praying in "a strange Tongue, for as they perform their Ser- "vice in Latin, by Order of the Pope, the Jews "make their Prayers in Hebrew, which is the Lan- "guage appointed by the great Sanhedrim." Not to enter into this Discussion, 'tis certain they overstrain the Parallel in alledging that the Jews perform their Service in an unknown Tongue, and that the Sanhedrim commanded it. Voisin, who is the Author of this Conjecture do's not prove it. Maimonides cited by him, says nothing relating to this Subject; for he only observes the Hours of Prayer. The Sanhedrim's Decree, conformable to the Pope's decision concerning the Language to be used in Divine Service is chimerical, and there was never any such thing. The Jews don't all understand Hebrew; but they have the Forms of Prayer in the Language they understand. There needs but a little use and custom to prevent being mistaken, and to Answer Amen with understanding, as St. Paul requires. The Spaniards have their Orden de las Oraciones cotidianas por estilo, seguido y corriento con las de Hanucah, Purim y Ayuno del solo. Como tambien las tres Pascuas &c. which they read in the Synagogues. Besides *, the understanding of the Hebrew Tongue is not lost, since the Jews at this Day write their Books, and Contracts and Journals in the Language of the Rabbies, and those of the Morea use it generally for every thing.

XI. We have but one Observation more, about the Prayers, which is that of the Tephilim and the Taled. The Jews formerly wore Cloaths of four Lappets, at each of which hung a tuft, which they call Zizit. This Habit seem'd necessary to this People, which was distinguished from all others, and whose Religion extends even to the Stuff and make of their Cloaths; but as this render'd them ridiculous, and drew the Rabble upon 'em, they † have been wiser than the Monks, who have retained their foolish Garb; for they have comply'd with the Custom of the Countries where they live. However they preserve under their Cloaths, a square piece of Stuff, with four Strings, and the hanging tufts, which they call Arban Cafod; and they do it in Memory of God's Commandments. Lastly, when they are at their Synagogue to perform their Devotions, they take a square Veil, with strings and tufts; which they call the Taled, or Cloak; some twist it round their Neck, and others cover their Head with it. The last Custom is the more general.

XII. Afterwards they put on the Frontlets, or the Tephilim, as much as to say the Instruments of Prayer, because they use them in their Devotions. They are thus described: "They ‖ write upon two pieces "of Parchment with Ink made on purpose, and in "square Letters with a great deal of exactness, "these four Passages upon each Piece: The first, Hear, "O Israel, &c. The second, And it shall come to pass, "that if thou obeyest, &c. The third, Sanctify for me "all the first-born: The fourth, And it shall come to pass "when the Lord shall bring thee, &c. These two Parch- "ments are wound up together in fashion of a point- "ed Roll, and included in a black Calve-skin; then "they put it upon a square and hard piece of the "same Skin, from which hangs a Strop of the same "Leather an Inch broad, and a Cubit and a half long, "or thereabouts. They place these Tephilim at the "bending of the Left Arm, and the Strop being "first form'd into a little knot like a Jod, is turned "about the Arm in a spiral Line; and terminates at "the end of the little Finger. This they call Tefil- "la scel jad, that is, the Teffila of the hand. As for "the Other, they write the four Passages before "mentioned upon four several pieces of Vellum, "which by fastning together they make a square of, "upon which they write the letter Schin; then they "put upon it a little square piece of Calve's leather, "as hard as the other, from whence come two Strops "in figure and length like the first. This square is "placed in the middle of the Forehead, and the "Strops going round the Head, make a kind of knot "behind in form of the letter Daleth; from whence "they meet upon the Stomach. They call this Teffila "Scel Rocs, that is the Teffila of the Head." This is the figure of the Tephilim, which they commonly joyn with the Taled in the Morning Devotions. Some also take 'em in the Afternoon; but this is only done by eminent Votaries, and is commonly peculiar to the Chanter.

XIII. The Tephilim are so Sacred, that they fancy God wears them, as well as the Jews; and this is not one of those Allegories, under which the Doctors include Mysteries; for they say, that God promising Moses to shew him his hinder Parts, design'd only to shew him the knot of the String, which fasten'd the Tephilim of his Head, and that the face, which he refused to discover to this Law-giver, was properly, truly, and substantially the Face of God. According to this Idea, which Bartolocci * ascribes to 'em, and has drawn from the Expressions of their Doctors, they must make a corporeal God; but the Jews don't think God to be material. They therefore only meant to ennoble the Origine and excellence of the Tephilim, which could not be more excellent, tho' God should have given 'em the Example.

XIV. 'Tis a question, whether Moses instituted them, or whether they were invented at the Return from the Babylonish Captivity: Or lastly, whether Hillel and Schammai appointed them a little before our Saviour. The first Opinion is founded upon these words of Moses, Thou shalt bind them for a sign upon thine hand, and they shall be as frontlets between thine eyes, and thou shalt write them upon the posts of thy house and on thy gates. If Moses had only said, that the Commandments of God, should be † as frontlets between thine eyes, these words might receive a figurative sense, since Solomon says ‖ that the precepts of the mother shall be a chain about the sons neck. But the Legislator commands them also to be written upon the gates, and bound upon their hands. As they carved certain Precepts upon the Doors of their Houses, in obedience to this Command, 'tis most probable, they also bound 'em upon their hands, and made frontlets with 'em, like to the High-Priest, who wore written upon his Forehead, Holiness to the Lord. The Jewish Religion was so burden'd with these kinds of Ceremonies, that it is no wonder, the Legislator should be particular, even in regulating the Fringes of their Habits. Lastly, the Figure would sound very harsh in the Mouth of God, if he had said, that certain words ought to be engraven upon the doors of the houses, and bound upon the forehead and hands, only to signify their Duty to remember 'em. But he has made use of it, they say since speaking of the necessity of redeeming the First-born in remembrance of the departure from Egypt, he declares, that this Redemption ſhall be a Frontlet betwixt their eyes to make them remember it. But beſides that, the Expreſſions are not perfectly alike, it would be abſurd to ſay, that the Ranſom of a Child ſhould be a frontlet betwixt the eyes, and a ſign upon the hand, if God had not order'd the putting a Memorial on the Forehead or on the Hand; but the uſe of Phylacteries being eſtabliſh'd by Divine Authority, 'tis reaſonable to ſay, that the Ranſome of the Firſt-born ſhall be as a ſign upon the Hand, and as the Frontlets the Iſraelites already wore between their Eyes. This Alluſion to the Tephilim ceaſes to be violent, and becomes as natural as that of Solomon, who draws his Compariſon from Collars or Neck-laces of Silver. Figurative Expreſſions and Compariſons are generally taken from Cuſtoms already received and known by thoſe they are addreſs'd to. And therefore God muſt have eſtabliſh'd the uſe of Memorials or Phylacteries, before he could call the Ranſom of the Eldeſt of the Family, a Sign aud a Frontlet betwixt the Eyes. In fine, the High-Prieſt Eleazar *, whom Ptolemy Philadelphus ſent to for a number of learned Men to tranſlate the Law, explaining the Myſteries of his Religion ſpeaks of the Sentences, that were faſten'd to the Hands by way of Memorial, and at that time referr'd their Inſtitution to Moſes.

XV. Some Criticks, who are convinced of it as well as we, ſay that God ſeeing the Heathens covered with Amulets, as they are loaden with Scapularies in the Church of Rome, to which they aſcribe a miraculous Virtue; and knowing that theſe Amulets were fill'd with the Figures of Priapus and Obſcenities, order'd his People to take Texts of the Law, to bind them on their Forehead and Arms to diſtinguiſh themſelves from the Heathens, and the more eaſily to deſtroy the ill Cuſtom that had been ſo long practiſed in Egypt. And therefore they obſerve that the Hebrew word Totaphot †, which God at firſt uſed to denote the Phylacteries, may ſignify the Pudenda. Beſides the Rabbies ſtill look upon the Phylacteries, as proper Amulets to expel the Devils; and 'tis one of their Orders, that the Phylacteries muſt every Evening be repeated in the Houſe, to drive away the Demons. It ſeems alſo that the Goſpel Term which ſignifies to keep, gives the ſame Idea.

But all theſe Conjectures have too much ſubtilty. Not to ſtand diſputing like Grammarians about the Signification of words, which they violently wreſt, can it be imagin'd that God deſigning to give his People a Memorial of the Law, could call it the Pudenda, to teach 'em, that this was inſtead of the Heathen Amulets? The Idolaters had abundance of different Amulets; and St. Jerome affirms, that the Chaldeans, Perſians, and even Indians wore by way of Devotion ſuch as were like the Jews. Why then will they have God to make preciſe choice of the moſt filthy to call his Law by? Was not this the way to confirm the People in Superſtition, inſtead of curing it, and perſuading this credulous Nation, there was actually ſome Virtue in theſe Billets, to give 'em the name of the Amulets, which the Heathens wore, to defend 'em from impending Dangers? The LXX, who ſhould beſt underſtand the force of Moſes's Expreſſion, have tranſlated it Immoveable, becauſe they had regard to the uſe of the Tephilims, which were bound upon the Forehead; and is it not a new Outrage to correct this Verſion, that by racking their Wit, they may find in it what they think fit? If it be true that God inſtituted the Tephilim, as it is probable, we muſt aſcribe to him a view that is plain and holy, and becoming him. He had no reſpect to the Idolaters, but deſign'd to oblige his People to retain his Law, and have it always preſent to their Eyes and Mind. And therefore ſome have thought, they were commonly fixed to that part of the Head, where we perceive the Motion of the Brain.

XVI. St. Jerome maintains on the contrary, that the Phariſees introduced this Cuſtom into the Synagogue, becauſe they miſtook the words of Moſes, and gave 'em a literal Senſe inſtead of recurring to the figurative which is manifeſt. Many Criticks converſant in theſe Matters follow him, and obſerve that JESUS CHRIST confuted the Phylacteries of the Phariſees; but St. Jerome was ſo little acquainted with the Phylacteries of theſe antient Votaries, that he thought the Ten Commandments of the Law were written on them, whereas we diſcover other Paſſages of Exodus. Beſides, this Father ſays the Phariſees put their Phylacteries upon their Eyes in faſhion of a wavering Crown, which has made ſome believe, that he had a faulty Copy of the Septuagint, in which it was read trembling inſtead of immoveable ||. But it was all his own fault, for he contradicts himſelf preſently after, and has left the ſame Contradiction in the vulgar Verſion which he has corrected, where the Phylacteries are ſometimes call d moveable, and ſometimes immoveable. So that St. Jerome's authority is of no great weight upon the matter.

XVII. Our Lord's cenſure of the Phariſees proves nothing againſt us, ſince theſe Hypocrites Crime conſiſted not in their wearing Phylacteries, but in their enlarging and multiplying them, that the People might the more eaſily diſtinguiſh 'em, and thereby judge of the extent of their Devotion. JESUS CHRIST does not condemn the uſe of Tephilims; but the Pride that was crept into it. We are told that CHRIST himſelf wore 'em, becauſe it was the Cuſtom of the Jews to make their Children repeat their Phylacteries as their Catechiſm; but they can only know from very bold Conjectures what CHRIST did in his Infancy, or whether he obſerved or rejected certain Rites of the Law. St. Epiphanius is more manifeſtly out in explaining our Saviour's words; for he has aſſerted that the Phylacteries were Purple bands, which the Phariſees wore upon their Cloaths, and that the Fringes were Pomgranates, which they faſten'd to the bottom of their Robes, to ſignify, that they preſerved their Virginity. 'Tis in vain to excuſe this Father by ſaying, he had learnt it from ſome Jew of his time. The fault would be ſtill the ſame, but it is not probable that a Jew could be ignorant what the Phylacteries were, the uſe whereof had ſo long continued in his Nation. Beſides, how do they know that St. Epiphanius was abuſed by a Jew? They charge the Enemy of the Chriſtian Name to excuſe a Father of the Church; but Equity forbids ſuch Injuſtices. 'Tis ſtill true that the Phylacteries were in uſe in our Saviour's time, ſince they made 'em Marks of Diſtinction which drew upon 'em his Cenſure. They were even more antient than the Phariſees, ſince the LXX Interpreters mention'd 'em long before as certain Billets immoveably fixed to the Forehead and Hand, which perfectly overthrows St. Jerome's Notion.

XVIII. The old Superſtition for theſe Phylacteries conſiderably increaſes. 1. They Swear by touching theſe Phylacteries, and the better to authorize ſuch Oaths they introduce God ſwearing in this manner.

Whereas the Heathens ſaid of their Jupiter, that he touch'd his Thigh, & totum commovit Olympum, God touches his Tephilim. 2. The repetition of theſe Tephilim is made a great piece of Devotion. It was one of the fine Actions of Gamaliel's Life, to have repeated them his Wedding-night. The Diſciples wondering at this Devotion, repreſented to him, that in his Lectures he had diſcharged the new married People from this trouble at leaſt for a Night; but he was offended with the Remonſtrance, and declared, that he would not interrupt the Kingdom of God ſo much as for one little hour. The Kingdom of God and the repetition of the Tephilim was one and the ſame thing to this Rabby. 3. Laſtly, they attribute miraculous Effects to 'em.

XIX. The Superſtition * chiefly appears in the manner of making the Tephilim. The Parchment muſt be taken from the Skin of a clean Beaſt; and it becomes impure and Profane, if a Chriſtian dreſſes it; but it receives a degree of Excellence, when it has been deſtin'd to this uſe, and it was ſaid in preparing it, I deſign this for the making of Tephilims. This Skin muſt be prepared with great Art, for the leaſt hole and defect makes it uſeleſs.

They write theſe Tephilim ſlowly, and with great circumſpection, that there may not be the leaſt thing wanting to each Letter, and particularly to thoſe that compoſe the Name of God.

They firſt faſten the Tephilim of the Hand, and afterwards that of the Head, for fear they ſhould miſtake. The Strops ſerving to this uſe muſt be good. They muſt not mend or repair 'em, when they are worn and broken.

They can't faſten 'em, till they have pronounced the Bleſſing: Bleſſed be thou our Lord and our God, King of the Earth. After which it is not lawful to ſpeak to any body. They may even paſs by their Maſter and their Rabbi, without ſaluting him, till the Tephilim are taken off. When they take 'em off they put 'em into a Bag, which thereby becomes Sacred, and can't he imploy'd to profane Uſes.

Women and Slaves are not obliged to wear the Tephilim, becauſe 'tis requiſite to have the command of their time, and that theſe two Orders of People live in dependance. However, as the Wife of the Prophet Jonas had as they ſay her Tephilim, there are other Women that imitate her. They ought not to be put on in the Night, but on the Day, excepting the Sabbath, becauſe the Sabbath is called a Sign, and ſerves for a Phylactery.

'Tis not lawful to take 'em till a Man has covered his Nakedneſs, nor to wear 'em in Church-yards, nor to carry a Burthen on their Heads; and eſpecially 'tis a great Crime to commit then the leaſt Indecency. It would be one to take 'em off before a Rabby, and therefore they muſt go a little aſide, to do it with greater Liberty. This ſuffices to judge of the Scruples the Jews make to themſelves upon this Subject.

THE Jews had commonly every one their Table, which Cuſtom was not peculiar to 'em, for Tacitus ſays the ſame thing of the Germans. Ulyſſes in Homer * treating the Deputies of the Iſle of Corfu, ordered ſo many Tables to be ſet as there were Perſons, and cauſed every one to be ſerv'd with his Portion of Wine and Meat. Elkanah gave Hannah whom he loved rather than Peninnah, a worthy † Portion in the meal that follow'd the Sacrifice. The Author of the Vulgar has tranſlated it, a ſorrowful part. Whereas Elkanah on the contrary deſigned to rejoyce Hannah, and to ſhew the diſtinction he made of her. 'Tis in the Original, the part of faces, and we muſt underſtand by it, a notable Portion, which diffuſed Joy upon Hannah's Face. David ſacrificing after he had danced before the Ark, gave the People a Feaſt, in which every one had ‖ his bread and his flagon of wine. 'Tis pretended that the ſame Prophet alluded to this Cuſtom, in ſaying, * the Lord is my portion, as well as our Saviour, in ſaying ‡ that Mary has choſen that good part. This Cuſtom that was uſual at the Meals of the Jews has ceaſed, and they eat at preſent at the ſame Table like the Chriſtians.

II. They faſt often. The Law only ordain'd one ſolemn and publick Faſt, which was to be celebrated on the Day of Propitiations; but they had multiplied 'em to four in Zechary's time ‖, ſince this Prophet promis'd on God's part to his Church, that theſe four ſorrowful Faſts ſhould be changed into ſo many Feaſts, in which they ſhould rejoyce for their deliverance. The firſt of theſe Faſts was inſtituted in memory of Nebuchadnezar's Beſieging Jeruſalem, and the great Conſternation the People were in; it was celebrated and is ſo ſtill in December. They inſtituted another, becauſe on that Day the perpetual Sacrifice had ceaſed. The Tables of the Law were broken by Moſes, becauſe of the Golden Calf, and the Original of this ſame Law was thrown into the Fire. Laſtly, there was an Idol ſet up in the Temple of the living God. This Faſt began the ſeventeenth of June, and the Devout continue it many Days, or at leaſt, are perſuaded, that all the Days to the ninth of July are very Unfortunate. The Jew will not plead in that time, but ſeeks delays to avoid the Proſecutions of Juſtice. Schoolmaſters dare not laſh, or ſeverely uſe their Scholars. The ninth of July is ſtill more ſorrowful than all the reſt. They walk bare-foot, and go to weep in the Cœmiteries; they read Jeremiah's Lamentations, and whatever can open the Flood-gates of Grief, becauſe the two Temples were burnt on this Day by Nebuchadnezar and Titus. Laſtly Gedalia, who commanded the remaining Jews in Judæa after the taking of Jeruſalem, having been kill'd in September, they faſt at that time; and theſe are the four Faſts noted by the Prophet, as deſtined to Grief and Affliction. They have ſince added many others, in Memory of the great Calamities that have befaln the Nation. They faſt the Day that Eli died, and the Ark was taken by the Philiſtines: They faſt alſo in Memory of the Death of Samuel; but this laſt Faſt is not ſo general as the reſt. They celebrate alſo that of Eſther, which was follow'd with ſo glorious a deliverance.

III. Beſides theſe publick Faſts, they have their private Ones. The Rabbies have determined, that they ought never to faſt in March, becauſe this time in which the People came from Egypt, ought to be entirely conſecrated to Gratitude and Joy. However ſome violate this Rule, and faſt the Day that Miriam, Moſes's Siſter died, becauſe then a Fountain being dried up in the Deſart, the People being abſolutely deſtitute of Water, murmured againſt God. JESUS CHRIST introduces a Phariſee faſting twice in the Week, Monday and Thurſday. This Cuſtom muſt have been pretty general at that time, ſince the Talmudiſts * attribute it to all the Nation, and aſſign for a reaſon of this Cuſtom, that Moſes, when he had broken the Tables of the Law, re-aſcended the Mountain the fifth Day of the Week to deſire new ones, and came down again the ſecond after he had appeaſed God; and therefore Ezra ordered the Law to be read theſe two Days. The Germans ſtill faſt Monday and Thurſday; but they do it only on the Weeks after the Feaſts of the Paſſe-over and Tabernacles, becauſe theſe Feaſts having been long, they are afraid, they have offended God by their Jollities.

IV. Private perſons multiply Faſts ad infinitum. If they deſire to have a happy Dream, or the Interpretation of a Dream that diſturbs 'em; they think to obtain it by Abſtinence; and 'tis a Proverb, that the Faſt is for the Dream, as the Fire is for the Tow it kindles. R. Juda order'd a Faſt in favour of Swine, which were ſeized with a Diſtemper. This faſting for Swine is ſurprizing, becauſe the Jews did not eat 'em. It has been thought, that this might ſerve for a Commentary to the Goſpel-Hiſtory in which the Hogs of the Gadarenes were thrown head-long into the Sea by the Devils, becauſe the Jews, who were infinitely covetous, fed 'em for their Advantage; but this Fact related in the Babylonian Talmud proves nothing, becauſe the Jews diſperſed in Chaldea might have theſe Creatures near 'em; and R. Juda was afraid leſt the Diſeaſe might ſpread from one Species to another, and infect the other Animals, which the Jews eat of. If any Man have a particular Diſtemper; if he undertakes a dangerous Voyage; if he be arreſted Priſoner, he faſts to obtain his Deliverance. The Child, who loved his Father tenderly, faſts every Year the Day of his Death. The Magicians alſo faſt to invoke the Demons from Hell, and the Dead from their Graves; from whence the Doctors have drawn this Inference, that if a Necromancer obtains this Viſion by his abſtinence, by a ſtronger reaſon, they may procure the deſcent of the Holy Spirit.

V. They † vary about the Severity of this Abſtinence; for ſome think themſelves obliged to ſay before Sun-riſing, I will faſt to Morrow. They lie upon a Bed harder than ordinary, they leſſen the number of Pillows, change their fine Blankets, and take courſe ones, and eat not till next Day at Evening, and then they pray to God ||, that their Abſtinence may be inſtead of a Sacrifice. Others take the liberty of Eating, till break of Day, and afterwards they obſerve a total Abſtinence till the Stars begin to appear; for that is not a Faſt which the Sun do's not ſet upon. If the Faſts laſt many Days, as that celebrated from the Seventeenth of June to the Tenth of July, they go by Rules much like thoſe of the Roman Catholicks. Meat is forbidden, and they take up with ſome ſort of Garden-ſtuff; for all are not allow'd 'em. They make up this want with Eggs, becauſe an Egg being round and globular is the Image of an afflicted Man. Wine is no leſs forbidden than Fleſh. They celebrate no Marriages, whilſt they faſt. 'Twould be a Crime to Shave, Powder, or bathe themſelves. They avoid whatever may contribute to Pleaſure, or divert their Soul. They throw Aſhes on their Heads:

It ſciſſâ veſte Latinus,
Conjugis attonitus fatis urbiſque ruinâ,
Cãnitiem immundo perfuſam pulvere turpans.

If the Roman Catholicks have their Abſtinences, on the Vigils of great Feaſts, the Jew has ſtill more rigorous ones on the Vigils of the New Moons.

VI. The Jews, who look upon Faſtings as things ſubſtituted for the antient Sacrifices, think 'em very meritorious; for they affirm, that the antient Victims atoned for the Sins of the Offerer, and therefore Tſadoc grew very angry with God, that notwithſtanding the Faſts, wherewith he had macerated his Body for forty Years, he ſhould ſuffer his Temple to be burnt; and ſeeing theſe ſo frequent Abſtinences had not produced the effect he expected from them, not only ceaſed their Continuance; but prayed Titus to lend him his Phyſicians, to repair his diſſipated Strength, and to reſtore the vigour of his Body, which he had ſuffered to be too much impoveriſhed. In the mean time, there are Doctors who teach, that Faſting is indifferent to God, who cares little, whether a Body be fat or lean, and that he is no more pleaſed with the dejection and ſadneſs of Mortifications, than with a Joy that ſparkles on the Sabbaths. Faſting is good or bad, in proportion to its rendring the Body better qualified for Devotion, and all depends upon the obſervation of the Law. Thoſe that argue thus, have a true Notion of corporal Mortifications.

VII. This Nation's Charity is very remarkable, ſince Julian the Apoſtate propoſed them, as well as the Chriſtians, as an Example to the Idolaters, to oblige 'em to ſuffer no Beggar amongſt 'em. 1. There * are in conſiderable Cities many Fraternities, one of which is charged with the Collection of Alms for the Shame-faced Poor; Another collects for the Redemption of Captives; A third provides a Portion for poor Maids, whoſe Poverty never deprives 'em of the deſire of Marriage. 2. There are two Perſons authorized, to make the ordinary Gathering every Saturday. They go from Houſe to Houſe without the power of ſeparating, for fear of being ſuſpected of Diſhoneſty. They call in a third to make the Diſtribution every Saturday Evening. The Parnaſſim or Judges allot to every poor Perſon all that's neceſſary for the Subſiſtence of his Family for the Week. 3. When any Body falls under a preſſing Neceſſity, that exceeds the common Charities, the Chanter goes through the Synagogue, ſaying to every one, God bleſs him who gives for ſuch an Occaſion. They Promiſe the Chanter a Sum, becauſe the Jews touch not Money on Saturday, and afterwards they go to collect it; for the Promiſe is punctually executed. 4. Laſtly, when the Synagogue can't ſupply a Man's Neceſſities, it ſends him to others with a Certificate, by means whereof he is admitted into their Houſes, entertain'd for ſome Days, aſſiſted at his departure, according to the Charity of the Synagogue, and of the private Perſons he addreſſes to, and thus there is no Beggar in Iſrael. And the Satyr of Juvenal, who ſays that the Jewiſh Mothers taught their Children to beg, only related to the ſad and unhappy Times, whilſt Judæa was plunder'd, and its Inhabitants, who were Refugees at Rome and elſewhere, were over-burthen'd with Poor, and themſelves reduced to great Extremities.

VIII. 'Tis a Maxim † of the Talmudiſts, that the Poor ought never to be ſent away empty, tho' you only gave them a Grain of Wheat. They oblige the leſs charitable to pay the tenth part of their Goods, and others to give the fifth Penny, becauſe this is commanded by the Law. 'Tis not enough to relieve the preſent neceſſity of the Poor, but you muſt cloath him ſuitably to his Birth; you muſt buy him a Horſe and a Slave, if he had one before he fell into that lamentable condition. In fine, thoſe that refuſe the Alms demanded of 'em, are chaſtiſed by the Judges, as formerly by the Sanhedrim, who cauſed 'em to be whipp'd till they had paid. And ſometimes || they broke into their Houſes; open'd their Coffers, plunder'd their Goods before their Face, or diſtrain'd ſome Moveable, that might ſerve as a Pawn for the Alms.

IX. As there are ſome unnatural Children, who refuſe Suſtenance to their Father over-whelm'd with Years and Poverty, there are alſo Fathers, who after they have put their Children into the World, think themſelves diſpenc'd from maintaining 'em. The Doctors have tolerated the firſt of theſe faults, as we ſhall ſee * when we treat of Vows and the Corban; but they have judicial Laws againſt the Fathers who refuſe to perform the Duties of Nature; in which they diſtinguiſh the Age of the Children. When they are under ſix Years of Age, the Judge compels † the Father to maintain 'em, whether he be Rich or Poor, willing or unwilling. After this Age the Father is cited, and 'tis repreſented to him that he is crueller than the Savage Beaſts, that provide for their Young. If he yield not to theſe Remonſtrances, an eſtimate is taken of his Goods, and he is obliged to give to his Children an Alms in proportion to the value of his Eſtate, which Charity is employed to breed up the Children. Nor is the diſtinction of Age the only thing remarkable in this Cuſtom, but there are two things more obſervable. Firſt, that the Father is by the Law diſpenced with maintaining his Children after ſix Years old; and he does it afterwards only by way of Alms. Secondly, that the Law of Charity is more extenſive than the Law of Nature, ſince this Father, who is diſpenc'd with maintaining his Son at ſix Years old, is forced by ſtripes to give him an Alms, becauſe 'tis one of the affirmative Precepts, which admits of no Diſtinction of Sex or Age, and for the Performance whereof recourſe may be had to Violence and Scourging.

X. Beſides the aſſiſtance given to private Perſons, they ſend conſiderable Sums into Judæa, for ſuch as have ſettled there, and can't ſubſiſt without their Brethren's Charity. Schickard thought they did this in memory of the half Shekel, which was uſually paid for the reparations of the Temple. The Wiſe Men ſay, that the diſperſed Jews having had a Cuſtom of ſending Alms to Judæa every Year for the ſupport of the Poor in the time of Jubilee, they have continued to do it to this Day. But as God undertook to provide himſelf the neceſſaries of the Jubilee, by multiplying the Fruits of the Earth the preceding Year, I queſtion whether it was the Cuſtom to go a begging every ſeven Years in Foreign Countries, for the ſubſiſtence of the Poor of Judæa. At leaſt we don't here obſerve any track of this Cuſtom, ſince theſe Alms are collected Annually, and without ſeeking for any other Origine, 'tis certain this is done in Devotion to the Holy-Land. The Jews are infected with this Superſtition as well as the Chriſtians; That the Place where the Temple ſtood, and where the habitation of their Anceſtors was, is more holy than all others; and that the Devotions that are paid there, and the Charities that are ſent are more acceptable to God. St. Jerome || ſays, that ſo early as his time the Jews and Chriſtians ſent their Alms, which he received advantage by, ſince he was maintained by them. Vigilantius thought there was Superſtition it; but St. Jerome defended this Cuſtom by St. Paul's Authority, who had long before made Collections for the Churches of Judæa. St. Jerome did not at all touch the queſtion; for Vigilantius did not deny that the Poor ought to be aſſiſted where-ever they were, as was done by St. Paul, becauſe the neceſſity of the Churches was preſſing during the Famine: But he condemn'd a growing Superſtition of ſending Alms to this Place rather than to others, and maintaining particular Perſons, who had retir'd there under a pretence of Devotion. We need only ſee the praiſes he gives the Jews, who were intoxicated with this Superſtition, to be ſatisfied this was his Opinion: 'Tis not, ſaid he, only the Cuſtom of the Chriſtians, but of the Hebrews, that thoſe who ſpend the Night and Day in meditating on the Law, and who have no other portion on the Earth than God, ſhould be fed with the Alms of the Synagogues of all the Earth. The example of the Jews did not authorize the Chriſtians, and there was a great difference betwixt St. Paul's Collections for the afflicted Churches, and thoſe made for St. Jerome and ſome others, who made it a piece of Devotion to go and ſtudy upon Holy-Ground.

XI. They are as hard-hearted to Strangers, as Charitable to the Poor of their Nation; for the Talmudiſts are perſuaded, that none are allow'd by the Law to participate in the Alms, except the Proſelytes of Juſtice; and 'tis properly theſe the Scripture calls Strangers. Nevertheleſs * they permit ſome gratification to the Gentiles, under certain conditions for Peace and Humanity's ſake. As they very ſeldom give to Strangers, 'tis alſo their Opinion that they ought not to receive from them. 'Twas only in reſpect to the Royal Authority, that they received Preſents and Alms from Kings, and private Perſons neither can nor ought to ask of Strangers, except where the Charities diſtributed to them by the Synagogue are not ſufficient for their maintenance. They muſt be publickly receiv'd; but I queſtion whether theſe Talmudick Laws have been obſerv'd. They have ſpoken their own thoughts, inſtead of relating what was their practice; for if they received in the Temple of Jeruſalem the Preſents made by private Idolaters, as well as Kings, for a much ſtronger reaſon, they would have received into the Treaſury and the Poor's Box, Contributions for the Relief of their Neceſſities. How is it that private Perſons could not receive from the Hand of Idolaters, when at Rome their Children were taught to beg in the Streets.

XII. Alms have a great efficacy aſcrib'd to them: And they commonly go by the Name of Juſtice, Zedaca, becauſe 'tis imagin'd they juſtify before God. This is the Notion of the Phariſees, preſerv'd by their Diſciples, who have always made, and ſtill make the greateſt part of the Nation; and the Talmudiſts † ſay, 1. That God preſerves the Alms-giver from Evil.

2. That

2. That his Table is an Altar, upon which his Sins are expiated, as they were by the antient Sacrifices. 3. That he obtains hereby the Life of his Children, and the World to come. 4. Lastly, he that gives a Farthing to the Poor, obtains the blessed Vision of God.

XIII. || St. Paul has been thought to observe the Custom of the Jews, who touch not Money on Saturday, when he order'd the Corinthians to refer their Collections to the first Day of the Week; because the Corinthians observing the Sabbath after the manner of the Jews, and not being able to receive or destribute the Alms this Day, 'twas necessary it should be done the next, on which labour was lawful. This is confirm'd by a passage of Philo, who relates that Augustus having order'd a distribution of Corn every Saturday, had the indulgence to defer it one Day for the Jews, who could neither give nor receive that Day; nor in a word do any thing relating to life or gain. But I question whether there be any reason for this assertion. Leo de Modena observes that the Jews touch not Money on Saturday; and the Talmudists have said, that no Body ought to go upon the Mountain of the Temple with dusty Feet; with his Staff, his Purse, or with Money, which makes it be believ'd to be an antient Custom. In the mean time I question what was Philo's Thought: For he speaks of a distribution of Corn, that could not be receiv'd nor made without labour. He explains his thought by adding that all the services which respected gain or life, were forbidden, Philo therefore seems only to speak of these active or passive distributions, because they caused labour and pains; but can this extend to Alms? and tho' it were an antient Custom of the Synagogue, can it be imagined that St. Paul would have introduced this Superstition into the Christian Church after all the efforts which his Master had made to correct and abolish them? By attempting to make the Apostles the Apish Imitators of the Jews, they make 'em introduce Childish Superstitions into the Christian Church. St. Paul was so far from this design, that on the contrary he endeavour'd to oppose this Custom, referring the Collections to the first Day of the Week, because that was the Day of the Christian Assemblies, which they call'd the Lord's Day; and if the Jews gave nothing on Saturday as it is supposed, he would on the contrary have the Christians give their Alms this Day, to teach 'em that acts of Charity don't interrupt the Sanctification of the Day of Rest, as our Lord had done in healing the Sick.

XIV. Lastly the Jews have their Votaries and Saints They make three different Orders of Saints. The first are those that entirely renouncing Society, go and live in Deserts like John Baptist, They Cloath themselves with Camels or Goats Hair, eat Leaves of Trees, and Roots furnished by the Earth without Tillage. Their Mind is purify'd by their Removal from the World, and continual Meditation. Their Thoughts are defecated, and they become worthy of the Commerce and Society of Angels: They fear not Death, because being arrived to the utmost point of Perfection, nothing remains but to pass into Eternal Life; but they * confess, that tho' this was the state of the Prophets, it is grown very rare, since God has withdrawn his Grace from the Holy-Land, and that at present those that thus fly the Cities and the World, to throw themselves into Solitude, expose the Mind and Body to violent Distempers, which make 'em desire Death. They ask it not then with a desire of felicity; but for uneasiness and impatience caused by the impression of their Miseries. The Jews argue more justly than abundance of Christians, who pretend to imitate the Life of Enoch and Elias, without receiving their Spirit.

XV. In the second Rank, they † place the Chasideans. The Chasidean has always God present to him; whether he lies down or walks, he thinks he sees him; and with infinite respect to the Supreme Being, does nothing that can offend him. The Artist who has made a Mill, and put it in motion, may abandon it; but God has so made Man, that each Limb would cease to act, if he suspended his Providence but a Moment. The Saint, who knows that all his motions don't appertain to him, and that they proceed from God, ascribes to him all the Glory of them. If this Man happen to be in the Holy-Land, he sometimes carries his Sanctity to such a lofty pitch of Perfection, as to come near to that of the Prophets: He sees Angels with his Eyes like the Saints, who lived under the second Temple; he hears also the Daughter of Voice; but he receives all this from the Goodness of God, who has created him, and who watches over all his Actions, to punish or reward them. This Man is very sedulous to pray to God, and to put on his Tephilim when he has exonerated his Body, and to practise the Law. The last Order of Saints is inferiour to that we have been representing. Their Character may be seen in that which was formerly made to the King of Cozar, but it contains nothing in particular.

I. THE Law commands a Man to honour * his Parents, and under this Command includes the Duty of maintaining and comforting them in their necessities, but the Jews authoriz'd by their Masters thought to elude this Precept by Consecrating their Goods to God. They called Corban every gift by whatsoever thou mightest be profited by me, Our Lord has retained the form of Vows which was already in use in his time, and which we find in expres terms in the Talmud. This formulary of a Vow is obscure; and its natural sense is this, I consecrate to

* Matth. 15. Mark 7.

God,

God, whatever might be useful to you, and therefore you can no longer make use of it. There was a two-fold crime in these sorts of Vows, since they eluded the Law about the maintenance of Fathers and Mothers, and also they only made 'em in a transport of Anger, when they hearken'd not to the Dictates of Nature or Reason, and yet the Pharisees and Talmudists their Successors approve them.

II. The Corban signified four things with the Antient Jews. First, The Treasure of the Temple, in which they included all the Oblations made to God. Corban, or Corbonas †, is the sacred Treasure of the Jews. Pilate employ'd it in making Aqueducts, which occasioned a violent Sedition. 2. It was a common Oath with the Jews; the Tyrians expresly forbad swearing by the Corban, because it was an Oath. They supposed the Name of God to be included in this strange Term. Some Criticks from hence conclude, that the Vows mentioned in the Gospel, were usually made with an Oath, and that a Man in a Rage swore by God, that his Father should taste nothing of all that belong'd to him; but this is a mistake; The Corban included not the Name of God, but as the Jews swore by the Gift upon the Altar, they also swore by the things Consecrated to God, which they call'd Corban; and 'twas this Oath that the Tyrians could not allow, since they made it to the Honour of a strange Divinity. 3. The Corban also signified the Persons who were devoted to the service of God and his Temple; as we are told ‖ by Josephus. Baronius *, who had not rightly taken his Notion, imagined that the Nazarenes, who were so famous under the Law, were called Corban. In the mean time the Jewish History † expresly distinguishes them; for it observes that both Men and Women, who, after they had voluntarily consecrated themselves to the Ministry, desired to break their Vow, paid a certain Sum to the High-Priest; and that those who were insolvent, referr'd themselves to the Priest's discretion. Nevertheless the Nazarenes never ransom'd themselves, but by the performance of their Vow. 4. Lastly, the Corban signified the Gifts, or Oblations that are offer'd to God. St. Chrysostome is made to say, that this was not properly a Gift, but what the Latines call an Oblation. They have very little thought who make St. Chrysostome speak in Latin. Besides the distinction pretended to be discovered by St. Matthew's Commentator, who goes by St. Chrysostome's Name, is very subtle; for the Gifts consecrated to God are Oblations made to him, and Offerings are Gifts consecrated to God. 'Twas in this second sense that Our Lord spoke of the Corban, and the Talmudists understand him. A Man that refused to maintain his Father was exempted, provided he said, All my Goods shall be Corban, that is consecrated to God; and as it was not lawful to eat what was given to God, the Father was deprived of the subsistence which his Son might afford him. Philo, who ought to understand the Customs of his Nation, says, that by the Law of Moses, every one was Master of his Estate, unless he consecrated it to God. But if any Vow escaped from him, it was no longer lawful to eat any of the consecrated things. If a Husband consecrates the Food that is due to his Wife, she can no more eat of it, because she thereby loses the possession and right she had to this Food. St. Jerome, who had also learn'd of the Jews the reigning Customs of his time, asserts the same thing. It will be ask'd no doubt, what an unnatural Son, who robb'd his Father of his subsistence, to give it to God, gain'd thereby? 1. Under the pretence of Religion, of a false Piety, he gratified the Instincts of Anger and Revenge. 2. He also satisfied his Avarice, because it sufficed to tell his Father, this was Corban, to him to interdict him the use of it, which he reserv'd for himself without giving it to God. 3. The Priests also hereby satiated their Ravenous Passion, by absorbing of the People's Wealth; since the publick Treasury was often increased by these kinds of Consecrations; for they sometimes gave what they consecrated to God.

III. In order to facilitate the current of this Corruption, the provoked Persons were not desired to pronounce the Vow in all its forms. It signified little to utter the word Corban, tho' it was most used, provided they said something that came near it. And these Vows, which are imperfect in the Expressions, the Talmudists call handles ‖, because as it suffices to take a Vessel by the handle to carry it away entire, 'tis enough to pronounce some words of a Vow, to make it compleat. If any one only said, Let this be to me as the Temple; or as the Altar; or as the Fire, or lastly, as a Victim, this was an indispensable Vow. There were still more easie Vows *. Not satisfied with vacating Children's Charity for their Fathers, they made a violent attack upon evil Justice; for they permitted the Debtors to defraud their Creditors, by consecrating their Debt to God †. Origen relates this Custom of the Jews, which was practised by those of his time, who took Sanctuary in Egypt.

IV. J. CHRIST charges this Abuse upon the Doctors of his Days; but they explain the word otherwise ‖. They say, that the Lord God imposes on Children the necessity of maintaining their Fathers, and that the constant Tradition of the Jews, is perfectly agreeable to the Law, since the Doctors order poor Children to go and beg for their Parents. The Antients could not authorize the violation of a Law so well known by solemn Vows. They think therefore we must understand the Persons who were devoted to the Temple, as Josephus calls Corban; and that these words, whatsoever thou mightest be profited by me, signifie, I can do you no more service by reason of the Ministry I am devoted to; I am Corban; but all that I can do after I have discharged my Function shall be to your profit: But that the Law of providing for Parents is to no purpose alledged, since they did not think it violated by Sacrificing their Goods to God. The Christians for example are agreed, that the Children belong to those that gave them life. But yet it is made a piece of Devotion to rob them of 'em, either to instruct 'em in a Religion which they think better, or to make them Monks. They think they serve God by this, and the same error about Goods reign'd among the Jews in Our Saviour's time. St. Mark * clearly explains these Doctors Notion in adding, And they suffer him no more to do ought for his Father. So that they were not suffer'd to labour for him, after they had discharg'd the Duty of Devotion, or rather a Vow they had made; but they cut off all his subsistence; and if Charity sometimes began to repullulate in Childrens Hearts, they were to recur to some subtilty to elude the Vow. And thus a Son, who repented that he had treated his Father so inhumanely, advised him to sell to him the little he had remaining, upon condition of maintaining him the rest of his Days. Another who † desired to invite his Father to his Wedding, and was hinder'd by the Vow he had made from giving him any thing to eat, made a Feast in his Friend s Name, and paid him. Another

Son

Son desiring also to invite his Father to his Wedding, assign'd the Hall and the Entertainment to one of his Friends, on condition that he and his Father might be invited. The Friend was no sooner put in Possession of the Room and Table, but he consecrated all to God, and made a Vow, that neither the Father nor Son should eat of it. This formed a kind of Law-Suit, and the Wisemen decided against the Son, because no donation can be made to prevent or cancel the Consecration to God.

V. These Vows turn sometimes upon Abstinence from Marriage. A Maid makes a Vow of Virginity among the Jews, as among the Christians, tho that be infinitely more rare. If a Husband says to his Wife, Thou art as my Mother, he is not allow'd any more to touch her. For a stronger reason he is obliged to keep his Vow, when he has declar'd in express terms, that he will know her no more. Inraged Wives do sometimes the same thing; but these sorts of Vows are * at present but little approved, because they are Extravagancies and Curses absurdly mingled with Religion; and tho' it be made a piece of Devotion to accomplish them when they are spoken; yet great Distinctions are allow'd. 1. The Vows of a Maid are voided by the Father's Authority, which he has received from God himself in his Law; because she is under her Father's Power, which being given him by Nature can't be violated. 2. 'Tis for the same reason, that all the Vows that a Woman makes, unknown to her Husband, and against his Interests or Will, become null. A Woman may vow not to obey her Father or Brother, &c. but the Vow she makes not to execute her Husband's orders is null. Some however maintain, that it is necessary for the Husband to vacate it within twenty four Hours, after he knows of it. 3. The Men likewise easily obtain a Dispensation from their Vows. They † only examine, whether the Dispensation be prejudicial to a third Person, who may be concern'd. They also weigh the Reasons upon which it ought to be grounded; but they refer the Judgment to a single Rabbi, or to three Persons, that have neither title nor quality, which makes 'em much easier. Some Doctors are of Opinion, that those, who sport with Vows, by help of some Equivocation, ought to be chastised, and excommunicated. R. Meir determines, that they are obliged to declare the Vow lawful, even when it is equivocal and to open another Gate to those, who have made it, by breaking of it. The || Misnah is full of these Gates to escape through. A Man has made a Vow, that his Neighbour shall receive no Advantage by him. "This Neighbour falls Sick, and the Au-" thor of the Vow might cure him; what must he " do to save his Vow and the Patient? If he be a " Physician, he will visit him without sitting, because " nothing is due to him when he makes his Visit " standing. He may save the Sick Man's life, but he " has no right to increase his Estate, or hinder it from " diminishing. He may lie with him in the same " Bed, provided it be in the Summer; for in Winter " he would do him good by warming him. He may " wash in the same Bath, if it be large, for if it " were little, he would make the Bath-water rise, " which would give some pleasure to his Neighbour, " against his Vow. He may eat at the same Table, " provided it be not on the same Plate; because Ci-" vility might oblige him to leave him, or offer him " a piece of Meat. He may reap in the same Field, " provided it be not in the same Place; for fear he " might relieve him by working more than he." We may judge of the other Distinctions by these we have produced.

VI. They make a great difference betwixt Vows and Oaths; for they are not obliged to perform the latter, when they are contrary to the Law Tradition, and the Service of God; but they must religiously observe their Vows unless they have a Dispensation, and he that breaks 'em, deserves to be scourg'd. Of two Men, One whereof Swears never to wear Phylacteries, and the Other Vows; the first is dispensed from making his Oath good, and the other is obliged. What is the meaning of this? Because he that Swears, makes a resolution not to observe the Precepts of the Law, and every Oath contrary to the Law, does not oblige the Maker of it; but by the Vow, the nature of Objects is chang'd, and that is made unlawful, which was before lawful and permitted. This is a subtile Distinction, and few Casuists will approve it.

VII. After the Return from the Babylonish Captivity, the Veneration they had conceived for the Name of God considerably encreas'd; but that Superstitious Devotion brought forth a great Abuse. Philo, who condemn'd Oaths made in the Name of God, as Prophane and contrary to Religion, allowed swearing by the Universe; by the Stars; by the Sun; by the Earth; and by their Parents. They swore, either by their Head, like the Egyptians; or by Heaven. Some Rabbies have thought, that God himself gave an Example of this. For when Amos * introduces God swearing by his Holiness, that is by himself, Aben Ezra maintains that we must understand Heaven. They think that the same Prophet made God swear by the City Jerusalem, when he swore by the Excellence of Jacob; as if God was not more the Excellence of Jacob than the City Jerusalem. Lastly, they swore by the Temple. There were two other Abuses in these Oaths. 1. The Doctors eluded 'em by subtile Distinctions, maintaining that they were obliged to perform some, and allow'd to break others. They commonly made the validity of Promises depend upon the quality of Objects, which they introduced, and hereby open'd a Gate to Infidelity and Treachery. Lastly, the fear of God no longer restraining Men, and the reverence weakening proportionably to the cheapness or commonness of the Creatures they swore by, Oaths became very frequent amongst Men.

VIII. This Abuse was not general in the Nation. Philo, who allow'd Swearing by the Creatures, nevertheless blamed the frequent use of Oaths, and maintain'd, that the Essenes never swore. In the mean time, the Pharisees, the Corrupters of Morality, and the People that follow'd 'em, were frequently too guilty in this Matter; since they drew our Lord's censure upon them, who taught them three things. 1. That the Name of God enters into every Oath, since Heaven was his Throne, Earth his foot-stool, and Jerusalem was the City of the great King. The Assyrians call'd their Prince the great King. Tobias, who had been in that Country, gave God this title. As Babylon was the City of the great King, Jerusalem took the same Style when it was rebuilt. And therefore, we must refer the Composition of the forty eighth Psalm, in which this title is found, to that time. 2. CHRIST also condemned the Violation of Oaths: And lastly, he endeavour'd to render 'em less frequent by obliging his Disciples to be content with a simple Asseveration, Let your Promise be yea, yea; nay, nay.

Word

Word Amen, which we meet with often in the Goſpel, is an Oath with Holy Writers and the Jews. Indeed the Woman ſuſpected of Adultery, after ſhe had heard the Adjuration and Imprecation of the Prieſt, was obliged to Anſwer *, Amen, Amen. This was an Oath ſhe was obliged to take in Ratification of what the Prieſt had pronounced. The People of Iſrael anſwer'd † Amen to the Curſes pronounced upon Mount Ebal againſt the Breakers of the Law; and it was an Oath made to God to obſerve it under pain of Malediction. The Talmudiſts have follow'd ‖ this Notion; for R. Joſes, Son of Chanina, looks upon the Woman's anſwer, who was accuſed of Adultery, as an Oath: Whoever, ſays alſo R. Samuel, anſwers Amen to the Adjuration made to him, ſwears himſelf. We might add the Obſervation of the Cabbaliſts, who find the two Names of God Adonai and Jehovah in the number of the Letters, which conſtitute the word Amen; and ſome even ſuſpect, that J. CHRIST frequently uſed this word ſecretly to expreſs the Name of God. This is a Viſion: let it rather be obſerved, that when a Perſon is adjured, and he anſwers Amen, it is a true Oath. This was the caſe of the Woman accuſed of Adultery. The Scripture alſo ſays expreſly, that the Prieſt made her ſwear. 'Tis a miſtake therefore to affirm that Amen is never an Oath in Scripture; and Fuller *, who affirms that even the Rabbies did not believe it, had ill read them upon this Point; but when there was no Adjuration, or Malediction, preceding, this term was only a ſtrong Aſſeveration, and in this ſenſe our Lord has oftentimes ſaid Amen. So that they are to blame to make our Lord Swear often, notwithſtanding the ſtrong Cenſures he has left us againſt Oaths. By diſtinguiſhing theſe two things, we reconcile the Jews and the Chriſtians and the Criticks, who have been warm in this Diſpute, which we thought our ſelves obliged to touch upon by the way.

X. It ſeems, they have corrected themſelves ſince that time; for tho' there are ſtill Abuſes among the Jews, about the Nature and Violation of Oaths, yet Rabbi Jona † obſerves, "that they may not ſwear "by the Names of God, ſuch as Æl and Schaddai, "or his Self-ſufficiency, nor by his Attributes, as his "Mercy; nor by his Works, as Heaven and An-"gels. Nor muſt they ſwear by the Law, nor by "Truth; for God is ſometimes called the Truth." This Rabbi carries his Severity higher than J. CHRIST, who often made uſe of this Expreſſion, Verily, verily, I ſay unto you. The Oaths, that were made by the Head, are referr'd to the Egyptians, and they expreſly determine, that this is the Cuſtom of Worldlings; and indeed it was a Cuſtom of the Heathens, to lop off the Head of him that ſwore by his own or another's, and afterwards broke his Oath.

Laſtly, Maimonides gives this Law to his Diſciples, which is the ſame with that of our Lord, that One's Word ought to be kept religiouſly in Promiſes, and that when a Man denies any thing, it ſuffices to ſay, No; and Yes, when he affirms. Plato's Maxim was, That a Man ought never to Swear.

Ὅρκῳ περὶ παντὸς ἀπίσει.

And without going from the Jews School, an antient Author learnt ‖ not to accuſtom his mouth to ſwearing, nor to name the Holy One, becauſe he that ſweareth and nameth God continually ſhall not be faultleſs.

XI. At preſent, they not only forbid ſwearing in Vain, but unneceſſarily pronouncing any of the divine Names; and when a Bargain is concluded, 'tis a full Ratification to touch the Handkerchief, or the Cloaths of the Witneſſes. This is a kind of Oath, which they call Chinian Sudar *, or the Acquiſition of the Stuff, after which there is no retracting.

I. THERE is no Society but has the Privilege of expelling from its Body, thoſe who diſhonour it, or violate the Laws of its Conſtitution. Yet there was no Excommunication in the Jewiſh Church, and Sins againſt the Law, were chaſtiſed by Civil Puniſhments. Ezra and Nehemiah ſtill inflicted theſe Kinds of Puniſhments at the Return from the Captivity. Ezra cut off from the Congregation thoſe that would not ſend away the Strange Wives they had Married; but the Confiſcation of Goods, joyn'd to this Excluſion, proves that it was rather a Civil than Eccleſiaſtical Puniſhment. * Selden had diſcover'd the Book of a Caraite, who confirms this Notion, ſince he affirms, that Excommunication was not invented, till the Nation had loſt the Power of puniſhing the Guilty in the Reign of Infidels. But ſhall we aſcend up as high as Alexander the Great? Shall we place it under the Reign of the Kings of Syria, who were Maſters of Judæa, or under the Romans, who took away the Power of Life and Death. This laſt Conjecture would be abſolutely falſe, and the two others ſeem very uncertain.

II. 'Tis moſt probable that the Sanhedrim being eſtabliſhed by the Macchabees, aſſum'd the cognizance of Eccleſiaſtical Cauſes, and the Puniſhment of the Guilty. Jonathan would make no ſcruple to yield this degree of Power, to the Council of the Nation,

* Selden de Synedr. l. c. 6. 7.

which he often conſulted; and his Succeſſors, were the more obliged to ſcreen themſelves under its Authority, becauſe the People murmur'd at their making themſelves Kings and Prieſts. The mixture of Jews with the Idolatrous Nations, render'd the Exerciſe of this Power more frequent, in order to prevent their Commerce with the Heathens, and the abjuring Judaiſm. The Doctors took Advantage of the Peoples Miſery to reſtrain them by terror, and the mortified People made it a piece of Duty to obey their Leaders with greater ſubmiſſion, and implicitenes; theſe Doctors of the Nation having once taſted the ſweets of Government, have extended them, inſtead of ſuffering any Diminution. The Talmudiſts * have made a great many Regulations, tending to maintain the reverence due to the Church, and Delinquents are ſeverely puniſhed. Thus Excommunication was eſtabliſhed by degrees, after its Inſtitution by the Sanhedrim in the Reign of the Macchabees.

III. Eccleſiaſtical Puniſhments begin with Cenſure. This is made in Secret; but it is rendered Publick, if the culpable do's not repent. The Houſe of Judgment underſtanding that a Woman lives at Variance with her Husband, denounces the Loſs of her Dowry; unleſs ſhe be reconciled with him. This Cenſure is afterwards publiſh'd upon four Sabbaths; but at the ſecond Proclamation, it is ſignified to her, that ſhe has forfeited all her Matrimonial Rights. If a Father refuſe to maintain his Child, 'tis proclaim'd in the Aſſembly, that he is more cruel than the Ravens, who take care of their Young, till they can fly.

IV. This Cuſtom may ſerve for an Explication of what our Lord ſays, that a Man muſt find out his Brother to be reconciled to him, and tell it to the Church, in caſe of refuſal; and if he hear not the Church, let him be to thee as a Heathen. For J. CHRIST would have reconciliation attempted by ſecret Admonitions, as was done in his time; but afterwards, he allows the Publication of the Fault; tell it to the Church. This Church is not therefore a judicial Tribunal, erected to take Cognizance of Eccleſiaſtical Cauſes; but the Aſſembly of the People, to whom the Name and Fault of the Offenders was proclaim'd for four Sabbaths to put 'em to Shame. If they continued irreconcileable, they were look'd upon with the ſame contempt as a Heathen, who had no right to the Covenant of God; and indeed the Excommunicates often turn'd Heathens or Samaritans, imbarking in their Party, rather than bearing the Scandal of theſe Cenſures.

V. After the Cenſure came the Excommunication for impenitent Sinners, and ſuch as had deſerv'd it by an open Rebellion. Bartolocci † diſtinguiſhes three degrees of it, and grounds himſelf upon the Authority of the Talmud, which aſſerts, that the firſt Excommunication Nidui laſts thirty Days; that a Man is obliged to ſeparate from his Wife, and that no body can come near the Excommunicate. The ſecond is the Kerem, or Anathema, by which a Man is expell'd out of the Synagogue with great Imprecations, and deprived of all Civil Commerce. The third is the Schammata, which is publiſh'd with the Sound of four hundred Trumpets, and excludes all hope of returning to the Synagogue. Some Doctors ‖ maintain this Opinion, but don't prove it; and Leo of Modena reckons but two degrees of Excommunication. The Nidui and Schammata are the ſame thing, or the Anathema. The Kerem is the laſt degree of Puniſhment, which is inflicted on Impenitent Sinners.

VI. 'Tis a ſurprize to ſee that J. CHRIST, who undermin'd the Foundations of the Jewiſh Religion, and eſtabliſh'd his Church upon the Ruins of the Synagogue, was never excommunicated. 'Twas not, that this Puniſhment was never in uſe, ſince J. CHRIST foretold his Diſciples, that they ſhould be expell'd from the Synagogues; and that many were afraid to follow him, for fear of being expoſed to this Teſt. We are told that the perſon born Blind, whom our Saviour cured, was excommunicated, ſince * they caſt him out of the Synagogue; but this was an act of violence and fury, rather than a Sentence of Excommunication, pronounced by the common Method of Judicial Proceedings. They tell us alſo, that J. CHRIST eſcaped the violence of the Council, becauſe he followed the antient † Cuſtom of reſpecting not only the Doctors of the Law, but thoſe that profeſſed the Study of it. But this Rule is not ſo infallible, as not to have admitted frequent Exceptions. The Principals of the Synagogue, who feared Excommunication, make it manifeſt enough, that it was thunder'd out againſt them, and that they ſpared not thoſe who ſtudied or taught the Law. J. CHRIST was neither Doctor of the Law nor Student. He had not been brought up at the feet of any other Maſter; he was not of the Sacerdotal Line, nor held ſo conſiderable a Rank, as to hinder his Enemies from making uſe of a Weapon which they had in their hands; and wherewith they could wound him. This Conduct proceeded from hence, that J. CHRIST teaching againſt the Law and its Doctors, made a particular Sect; and it was not then the cuſtom to excommunicate entire Bodies. There were three or four Sects at that time among the Jews, which were tolerated in the Temple without excommunicating. Our Lord, and his little Retinue of Diſciples had the ſame Fate as the Sadduces, and the Eſſenes, the Herodians and Phariſees, who all manifeſtly corrupted ſome part of the Law, and yet communicated with the reſt of the Jews. Hence none of the Apoſtles, who put themſelves at the Head of this growing Body, were excommunicated.

We are told ‖ that the Cuthæans were ſolemnly excommunicated, becauſe they obſtructed the rebuilding of the antient Temple; but beſides that this Example doth not prevail againſt the inſtances of the Eſſenes and Sadduces living in our Saviour's time, thoſe that publiſhed this Form of Excommunication iſſued againſt the Cuthæans, lived too long after the Reſtauration of the Temple, to know whether this was ever done: or rather they have ſpoken of the antient Cuthæans according to the Rites of their own time; for Excommunication was not yet heard of under Nehemiah. And in like manner the ſame Jews maintain, that J. CHRIST was excommunicated, and that his Excommunication was declared with the Sound of four hundred Trumpets. In the mean time Joſhua the Son of Perachia, the Preſident of the great Council, by whom they make this Decree pronounc'd, was dead a hundred Years before our Lord.

VII. One of the principal Cauſes of Excommunication is the pronouncing the Name of God in a Prophane manner, for Hunna one Day hearing a Man take the Name of God in Vain, excommunicated him; but at the ſame time he took off the Excommunication; from whence the Doctors * conclude, that 'tis not lawful to hear the Name of God prophaned without excommunicating the Offender; but it is lawful ſpeedily to Abſolve him. Contempt † expreſs'd for a Doctor dead or alive is another great Cauſe of Excommunication. They alſo added a Fine of a Pound of Gold to the uſe of the living and deſpiſed Doctor.

Some maintain, that there can be no Excommunication upon civil Intereſts. They even cite the example of a Rogue, who coming to rob a Garden of Figs, was excommunicated by the Doctor, who watch'd them. The Robber maintained to the Rabbi, that the Excommunication was not juſt, ſince he ought at moſt to pay the price of the Figs he had eaten, and excommunicated him as he went out. The Cauſe was brought before the Profeſſors, who determined, that the Excommunication pronounced by the Rabbi was null, ſince it was only upon a Point of Intereſt, and he was obliged to addreſs himſelf to the Prince to be freed from the Excommunication pronounced by the Robber.

VIII. Nevertheleſs 'tis very certain, that this Puniſhment is uſed upon civil Caſes, as well as for the Violations of the Law; for moſt of the twenty four * Cauſes deſerving Excommunication turn upon civil Faults. For a Man deſerves Excommunication, when he has a curs'd Dog, that bites and tears Travellers, and when he lends a Ladder half broken, unleſs † he repairs the Damage that ſhall happen; when a Man do's not make trial of his Knife, before he Kills with it; when he ſpeaks ill of a Doctor, that is dead. Henry III. King of England permitted all the Jews of his Kingdom, to excommunicate thoſe, who had promiſed ſome Money to build their Cœmitery at London, and refuſed to pay it. He forbad his Officers to obſtruct the Execution of this Decree, which was given at the requeſt of the Doctors || of the Synagogue. Sometime ſince *, there was a Suit commenced, the Conſequences whereof were extreamly ſcandalous. A Jew of Bologna had depoſited twelve thouſand Livres in a Friend's hand, who afterwards denied he had receiv'd them. The Jew enraged, went to Padua, to conſult a Rabbi of Ments, who taught there with Reputation. Abraham (this was the Doctor's Name) aſſerted the Intereſt of him that conſulted him, and defended his Cauſe by Publick Writings. The War broke out amongſt the circumciſed Doctors, there being others that eſpouſed the cauſe of the accuſed. The Proceſs flew into Poland, where Jacob the Polander wrote violently againſt the Accuſer and his Advocate, and the matter proceeded ſo far, that above a hundred Rabbies excommunicated one another upon the ſcore of this Depoſitum.

IX. The Sentence of the laſt † Excommunication, which they pronounce, abounds with Superſtition and Cruelty. 1. By the Decree of the Cities, and Commandment of the Saints, "they Excommunicate; they "Anathematize; they Curſe with Execrations; they ex- "terminate ſuch a one N. by the Book of the Law, "which he touches; by the ninety three Precepts "which this Book contains; by the Curſe that Jo- "ſhua pronounced againſt Jericho; that Eliſha ut-"ter'd againſt the Children, that mock'd him, whom "the Bears devoured; and by that he gave Gehazi, "who became a Leper, &c." 2. They introduce into this Form I know not how many barbarous Names, which they mingle with thoſe of the Angels and of God, diverſify'd ſeveral ways, ſuch as are thoſe of Metraton, and Sandalipon. 3. They curſe this Man by Heaven; by the Earth; by the Seraphins; by the Orbs; by the holy Animals. If he be born in the Month Niſan, they beg Uriel that preſides over it to curſe him; if he be born in the Month Jiar, which anſwers in part to May, they deſire Tephaniel, and all his Claſſe, that preſides over this Month to curſe him. Laſtly, they deſire every Angel, that preſides over one Day of the Week, to torment him, that there may not be a ſingle Day, wherein he may be happy. 4. The Vows or rather Imprecations they make againſt him are horrible; for they deſire that nothing good may proceed from him; "that his Ruin may be ſpeedy; that the "Creatures may become his Enemies; that a Whirl-"wind may cruſh him; that a Fever and Conſum-"ption, and I know not how many other Diſeaſes, "without excepting Wounds and Stabbing, may ſeize "him before his Death, which ought to be unfore-"ſeen, calamitous, and drive him into Darkneſs." When we read all theſe things, we can't conceive, of what frame Men are made who take upon 'em ſuch bitter Imprecations, inſtead of charitably bewailing and lamenting the loſs of their Brother, and who ſo ardently call down the whole rigour of Divine Juſtice, whilſt themſelves can't be ſaved, but by the infinite efficacy of the Divine Mercy.

X. This Sentence || is publiſhed by Sound of Trumpet. And thus Juda excommunicated a Man, who would buy Meat in the Market of Pundebita before him. They indeed ſpeak of three and four hundred Trumpets, that were ſounded at that inſtant; but this is one of the common Hyperboles of the Talmudiſts. They inflict it at firſt for thirty Days. If the Offender continue his Rebellion, they publiſh it a ſecond time; if he does not repent before the ſixtieth Day, they pronounce the Kerem, or Anathema, which is attended with freſh Maledictions.

XI. In order to prevent * this Impenitence, they ſcourge the Criminal. Our Lord foretold his Diſciples: They ſhall expel you out of the Synagogues, and ſhall ſcourge you. Beza with all his Learning has queſtion'd whether this Expreſſion could have eſcaped our Saviour; becauſe he could not conceive, that they ſcourg'd in the Synagogues, before they expell'd the Criminal; or that the Synagogue is ever taken for the houſe of Judgment, or the place, where the Jews exerciſed Juſtice. Whereas both theſe things are equally true; eſpecially 'tis demonſtratively proved, 'that 'twas the Cuſtom to ſcourge the Contumacious. St. Paul went by Order of the Prieſts to ſearch for the Chriſtians in all the Synagogues, and caus'd them to be ſcourg'd there. Maimonides † affirms, that in the Weſt, they don't excommunicate the Doctors, nor the Prince of the Senate, or of the Captivity, unleſs they have committed the Crime of Jeroboam; but that they ſcourge 'em ſecretly in the Night. Jacob, the Son of Aſhur, ſpeaks of the Penance, that all the Synagogues of Germany, where he was born, practiſed; in which they gave themſelves forty Scourges, and his Commentator has extended the thing to all the Synagogues in the World. I confeſs that the Queſtion there is of a Penance; but if it be true, that the Flagellations are Publick, and given in the Synagogues, there is no farther reaſon to doubt of the truth of what our Saviour ſaid; they will ſcourge you.

XII. St. Paul ſays || that he had been ſcourg'd five times by the Jews, and that he had receiv'd forty ſtripes ſave one. This Apoſtle, as a Roman Citizen, could not be ſcourg'd by the Civil Magiſtrates; for the Porcian Law gave 'em this Privilege; but as he was a Jew, a Deſerter of his Religion; the Rabbies, who caught him teaching in the Synagogues, unmercifully ſcourg'd him *. Thirty nine Stripes were the utmoſt degree of Puniſhment, tho' the Criminal was as ſtrong as Sampſon; but they leſſen'd the number for ſuch as appear'd weak. Moſes at firſt had order'd forty Stripes; but we are told that the Jews making uſe of Scourges inſtead of Rods, they were reduced to thirty nine, becauſe the Executioner held a Scourge compoſed of three braſs wires, and by

ſtriking thirteen times, he fill'd up the number of thirty nine; but he would have given forty two laſhes, had he ſtruck a fourteenth time, and would have broken the Law. This Conjecture, which is Doctor Hammond's Invention * is ſubtile. But yet if we conſult the Rabbies, we ſhall eaſily obſerve, that they alledge other Reaſons for this Cuſtom. For the Authors of the Miſnah †, who ſhould know the Origine of it, ſay that Moſes uſed an Expreſſion ſignifying about forty; and therefore they only give thirty nine. Beſides, by filling up the number forty, they expoſed the Executioner to the violating of the Law, ſince he might ſtrike a blow over, through inadvertency, or before they had reckoned thoſe he had given. Laſtly, Hammond's Sentiment is built upon a bad Foundation ||, ſince the Miſnah * orders the Laſh to be compoſed of two or four Scourges, and ſo the number of thirteen Stripes, which multiply'd by three made preciſely thirty nine, is loſt. 'Tis more probable, that they alluded to the thirty nine Curſes written in the Law. Aben-Ezra likewiſe maintains, that this is a Cabbala, or a conſtant Tradition.

XIII. He that was condemned to the Laſh, was faſtened to a high Pillar; they choſe to ſcourge him a Man skilful in this Art, who was neither Cowardly, nor Weak, nor Vindicative. The Chazan, or the Miniſter of the Synagogue commonly diſcharg'd this Function. He ſtruck firſt three blows upon the Heart, and three upon each Shoulder. This Cuſtom is taken from Deuteronomy, which Maimonides tranſlates otherwiſe than we; for whereas † Moſes orders the Judge to cauſe the Criminal to be ſcourged before || his face; Maimonides and Bartenora conclude, that the blows are to be given him before; that is, upon the Heart, which is the firſt ſource of the Sin.

Whilſt they were Puniſhing the Criminal, the Preſident * read ſome Texts of Scripture; the ſecond Judge reckon'd the blows, and the third exhorted the Executioner to do his Duty. The reading was to end with the blows, and the blows with the reading, and they took meaſures to proportion the one to the other.

XIV. St. Paul † adds, that he was thrice beaten with rods. He diſtinguiſhes this Puniſhment from the Stripes, and it ſeems at firſt ſight, that it muſt have been inflicted by the Romans, ſince they cauſed the Faſces to be carried before the Conſuls, and common Judges to torment Delinquents; for Virga eſt magis in tormento quam ſupplicio. However it is not probable, that the Romans put St. Paul thrice to the Queſtion, or that they ſcourged him ſo often againſt the Laws, ſince he was a Citizen of Rome. In order to explain this Complaint of the Apoſtle, we muſt diſtinguiſh the different Cuſtoms of the Synagogues. Thoſe that were in Judæa ordered Scourging, but the others diſperſed in the Roman Empire had adopted the Puniſhment of their Maſters, and cauſed the Criminals to be baſtinado'd or beaten with rods. The number of blows was not fixed; but it was proportioned to the greatneſs of the Crime. St. Paul did not content himſelf to teach in Judæa; but he ran through all the Provinces of the Empire, to carry the Goſpel into them: he had gone through ſeveral Perſecutions in theſe foreign Synagogues, and amongſt others, he had been beaten with Rods; and there is reaſon to diſtinguiſh this Puniſhment from Scourging, as the Gemariſts do ||, who ſpeak of the different Inſtruments of Puniſhment. The Evangeliſts * do the ſame thing; when they relate that the Officers ſtruck our Saviour with their rods, and he was afterwards ſcourg'd by Pilate's Order. 'Tis imagined that this Puniſhment was not Scandalous among the Jews, becauſe the Talmudiſts ſay it; but is it not known that Scourging was a Preliminary to capital Puniſhment in moſt Nations? Antigonus, King of the Jews was ſcourged, and afterwards hang'd. Alexander the Great, ſays Quintus Curtius, cauſed the Guilty to be ſcourg'd, who were afterwards crucified; and can it be believ'd that the Jews, who ſcourg'd St. Paul, had not a deſign to diſgrace him, and make his Puniſhment a brand of Infamy in the Synagogue? for which reaſon he makes it a ground of boaſting.

XV. 'Tis inquired, whether Excommunication was a deprivation of the Sacraments, of entrance into the Temple and Synagogues, to thoſe that were under its Sentence. Selden † maintains, that it only excluded from civil Society. Indeed this great Man obſerves, 1. That the Excommunicates enter'd the Temple, and took the Left hand, whilſt others went to the Right, and thoſe that met 'em, ſaid to the Excommunicate, the Maſter of this Houſe comfort thee, and give thy Soul what is neceſſary for it; for thus R. Meir has decided it. 2. He imagines, that when the Scripture ſpeaks of driving from the Synagogues, we muſt not underſtand by it the Places of Prayer and Devotion, but the Publick Aſſembly of the People and civil Society קהל from which the Excommunicate were cut off. 3. In the mean time, the Severity againſt theſe Perſons was great, ſince according to the Rabbies, they erected a Cottage for the Excommunicate, in which they ſhut him up, and brought him Neceſſaries; but he that eat with him, or came within four Cubits, or ſix Foot of him, was excommunicated.

But I know not whether Selden has not carried the thing too far. I confeſs, 1. That the Excommunicates ate the Paſchal Lamb with the other Jews; but at the ſame time that this Obſervation is admitted, Selden's muſt fall; for they ate not the Paſchal Lamb, except in a Family, and a ſufficient number to ſpend it intirely. 2. They entered alſo into the Temple; But as the Synagogues were particular Chappels, it can't be believed, that an Excommunicate Perſon was received in them. For if they had ſuch an Abhorrence for this ſort of People, how could they ſuffer 'em to enter a place, where it would be almoſt impoſſible not to be defiled by the touch of 'em, ſince the prodigious number of theſe Chappels at Jeruſalem, and other Cities, neceſſarily rendered them very ſmall? 3. Beſides our Lord foretold his Diſciples, they ſhould be driven from the Synagogue, which word never ſignifies in the Goſpel the general Aſſembly of the Jewiſh People, but certain places deſtin'd to Devotion; and indeed it was not the Sanhedrim, but particular Judges that expelled from the Synagogue. But yet none but the great Council was inveſted with a ſufficient Authority to exclude a Man all Civil Society. In the ſecond Council of Nice, was produc'd the Action of a Jew, who had been expell'd the Synagogue, becauſe the Image of CHRIST had been found in his Houſe. The word and the Circumſtances prove that the Chappel Door had been ſhut againſt him. The Council likewiſe believed it, and affirmed, that this happened in the time of St. Athanaſius *. Laſtly, Leo de Modena aſſerts, that the Excommunicates are expell'd from the Synagogues. 4. JESUS CHRIST ate with Publicans and people of a bad Life. Tho' the Jewiſh Church durſt not excommunicate the Publicans, who were the common Drudges of the Roman Knights, for the gathering of their Impoſts and Taxes, yet it would at leaſt have puniſhed Men publickly Scandalous, and People of bad Life. 'Tis true, they tax'd our Saviour with theſe Entertainments; but if theſe Perſons had been ſeparate from Civil Society, and ſhut up by themſelves in a Cottage, I queſtion whether he would have found 'em out, and convers'd alone with 'em. The Goſpel rather notes Publick Treats, and Splendid Entertainments made by the Rich.

XVI. Death † is a conſequence of Excommunication; for ſay they, Schammatà ſignifies Death, and wherever are the Eyes of the Wiſe, there is Affliction or Death. They alſo cite ſome Examples of People, that after they had been excommunicated by the Rabbies never appear'd again, becauſe Death carried 'em ſuddenly off by a kind of Miracle. The Kerem, which is the great Excommunication enters into a Man by two hundred and forty eight Members, and God knows what Miſchief it makes there. He is actually deprived of all Society; and none but his Wife and Children can come near him. Others are obliged to keep at two Yards diſtance; if he has a Corps in his Houſe, no body muſt bury it, and if a Son be born, he is obliged to circumciſe him himſelf, becauſe no body would give him this aſſiſtance. They Puniſh the Excommunicate even after Death. They lament 'em not, when they die; they Stone their Grave and their Coffin in which their Body is put. The Court of Juſtice ſends a great Stone to be put upon the Grave of him, who dies in Excommunication, either to leave a Monument of Shame and Infamy, or to ſignify, that he ſhall never riſe in Glory. The Jews are not the only Perſons, who over-ſtrain the effects of Excommunication, and extend 'em beyond Death. It were to be wiſh'd, that this Method of reſtraining Sinners had never been abuſed, of which J. CHRIST, and the Fathers of the firſt two Ages have made ſo little uſe.

XVII. The Hiſtory of Acoſta ‖ proves all that we have advanc'd. He was born in Portugal of a Jewiſh Family; but of a Father, who had ſincerely embraced Chriſtianity, and who ſent him to ſtudy Law. In Studying, he doubted of the Truth of the Religion he profeſs'd, and believing the Law of Moſes to be more certain than that of the Chriſtians, he engaged all his Family to quit Portugal, and come to Amſterdam; where he was not long before he was embroil'd with the Rabbies, who were Phariſees and Traditionaries; obſerving ſeveral Defects in the Synagogue, and that they had introduced abundance of Rites different from the Law, he could not be ſilent. But he no ſooner open'd his Mouth, but they cenſured and excommunicated him; his Brothers would not ſpeak to him; the Children threw Dirt and Stones at him; they attack'd him even in his Houſe. Tired with being the object of his Family and his Nations's hatred, he reſolved ſo much the eaſier to diſſemble as he had no other Religion than the natural. He ſubmitted to whatever they pleaſed, in hopes they would not treat him rigorouſly. But he was miſtaken; for to return into Communion, he was obliged to aſcend the Desk of the Synagogue, where the whole Multitude was aſſembled to ſee the Spectacle. There he read a Confeſſion of his Sins, and his frequent lapſes. Coming down, they led him to a corner of the Synagogue; they ſtrip'd him to the Waſt; took off his Shoes; tied his Hands to a Pillar, and unmercifully gave him thirty nine Stripes, according to the antient Tradition. After this rude Penance, he was forced to proſtrate himſelf on the Ground, at the Door, and all that came out, paſs'd over his Body, not excepting the Children, who made a Paſtime of it. So unworthy a Treatment for a Man of Birth made him ſo deſperate that he reſolved to kill his Brother, or his Nephew, who had been one of his moſt cruel Enemies. He fired a Piſtol at him, as he paſs'd along the Street; and at the ſame time he took another Piſtol, which he had charged on purpoſe, and kill'd himſelf. He has himſelf given the Account of his Adventures, except * the laſt, and we may judge, that he ſeem'd violently provoked with the Rabbies of Amſterdam. He do's not ſpare even the Magiſtrates, who give Liberty to exerciſe ſo many Indignities againſt ſuch as deſpiſe a Religion, that is only tolerated.

XVIII. They make a great diſtinction betwixt the Tribunals that excommunicate. The Sentence of a private Perſon is not ſo formidable, as that of a Conjunction of three Rabbies. The Shame is not ſo great, when a Man is excommunicated by a foreign Court of Juſtice, and by a Council of another City, as when he is expell'd from his own Synagogue; but the moſt terrible of all is that which is pronounc'd by the Head of the Captivity. Hence proceed theſe two Maxims, whoever † is excommunicated by his own City, is ſo in all others: but if he be excommunicated in a ſtrange City, he is not in his own. All Iſrael looks upon him to be ſo, who is excommunicated by the Prince. But the Prince do's not conſider as Excommunicates, thoſe that have been excommunicated by all Iſrael.

Private Lay-men have a Power of excommunicating. A Servant Woman ſeeing her Son beaten, excommunicated him that did the Injury, and the Excommunication took place. 'Tis a conſtant Maxim, that Students may excommunicate for any Affront they have received. The Excommunication binds the Criminal as to the People, tho' the Maſter defers not to this Sentence. Laſtly, a Man that Dreams, that he is excommunicated, is truly excommunicated, becauſe they look upon their Dreams as Divine. In the mean time it muſt be confeſſed, that it is generally the Houſe of Judgment, or the Court of Juſtice among the Jews, that takes cognizance of Differences, and Proportions of Puniſhment to the Crime.

XIX. 'Tis alſo this ſame Court, that gives Abſolution to thoſe that deſire it. There are ſeveral caſes, wherein the Preſence and Authority of ten Rabbies is neceſſary; but there are alſo abundance, where three are ſufficient, and even when the number of Nineteen is not eaſie to be found, one ſingle Rabbi may abſolve; and often their Judgment and Abſolution is referr'd to ſome wiſe and experienced Laymen. There is alſo ſomething more remarkable; for a Rabbi excommunicates and abſolves himſelf. Nay, ſome have been ſeen to excommunicate themſelves without any reaſon, before they excommunicated others, and afterwards to give themſelves Abſolution. It would be a very hard matter to find a good reaſon for ſo whimſical a Conduct.

The Abſolution that is given, is very ſimple. They declare that the Sinner is loos'd from the Excommunication; and J. CHRIST ſeems to have borrow'd this Expreſſion from the Jews of his time.

XX. Laſtly, the Synagogue excommunicates even Beaſts. Excommunication has its effect upon Dogs, ſay the Doctors ‖, and they relate, that a Dog having had had the imprudence to gnaw the Shoes of one of their Sages, he excommunicated him in his wrath, and immediately a violent Fire was ſeen to faſten it ſelf to the Dog's Tail, which horribly tormented him. We can't without pity obſerve the Ignorance and Pride of theſe Doctors, who imagine, that Excommunication reſpects Beaſts, and that the fear of Anathema's drives 'em away, or kills 'em. Ptolemy ſaid that a Braſs Table, on which was engraven two Serpents, in the Aſcendant of the ſecond Aſpect of Aries, is capable of expelling Serpents, provided theſe words be added, I bind the Serpents, by means of this Figure, I forbid 'em to hurt any body, and to continue in the places, where this Table ſhall be in the Earth. Gregory of Tours relates, that in digging the Ditches of Paris, they found a piece of Braſs, upon which was found the Figure of a Rat, of a Serpent, and of Fire. They neglected it as a thing, that was uſeleſs and broken; but at the ſame time all the City was fill'd with Rats, becauſe the Figure, which had the vertue of expelling 'em, was removed. Excommunication has no more effect upon Beaſts, than braſs Tables upon Serpents and Rats, 'tis only ſtrange, that ſo much Credulity ſhould be found in all Religions, and that Heathens, Jews, and Chriſtian Biſhops ſo often cited with an Encomium, ſhould vend ſuch ſtupid Fables.

The latter debar themſelves of the Privilege of laughing at the Rabbies Idea of Excommunication, and its extent; ſince they are guilty of the ſame thing. Cœlum ipſum petimus Stultitia. Not to produce Examples drawn from Ages, wherein Superſtition and Credulity reign'd without controul, thoſe that at preſent take Snuſh in St. Peter's Church at Rome, are excommunicated ipſo facto. Is it that St. Peter in Glory has any particular averſion to the ſmell of Snuff? How do they know it? If it be an Irreverence, it ought equally to be puniſhed in all Churches. The Baron de la Hontan * relates that the Biſhop of Quebec excommunicated all the turtle Doves of his Dioceſe, for the diſorders which they cauſed in it. Here are reaſonable Men, Biſhops ſending out Excommunications againſt Brutes; and what is more ſurprizing, is that theſe Creatures deſtitute of reaſon, dread it more than Gun-ſhot or Arſenick. For Theophilus † Raynaud has copied the Sentence given in 1516. by the Official of Troies at the requeſt of a neighbouring City, by which, after a judicial Hearing of Witneſſes, and taking neceſſary informations againſt Caterpillars, which ravaged the Country, he ordered 'em to depart the Dioceſe in three ſhort Days, upon pain of being excommunicated. They were ſo frighted with the Anathema, that they ceaſed to do any farther Miſchief. A Spaniſh Biſhop having alſo excommunicated the Rats of his Biſhoprick, and aſſign'd the Iſland they were to retire to, &c. they were ſeen to go over in a Shoal and confine themſelves to the place appointed. How obedient are Animals! or rather, how extravagant are Men!

XXI. The Rabbies have Compaſſion of thoſe who ſtand not their ground under Violence and Perſecution; but they have no patience with ſuch as voluntarily abandon them to turn Muſſulmans or Chriſtians. The famous Orobio complain'd that in Portugal and Spain, the Convents of Monks and Nuns are full of Perſons of their Nation, who even turn Inquiſitors to preſerve their Eſtates. They call theſe Deſerters Calumniators, becauſe they charge their Brethren with Crimes they never committed; Traitors, becauſe they reveal the Secrets of Religion, that they may be leſs ſuſpected. They ſay in their Prayers on the Sabbath-day, A los Renegados no ſea eſperance. They even think it lawful to carry 'em off and kill 'em, which is much more terrible than Excommunication.

I. THE Jews are obliged to Marry, becauſe God's Precept to the firſt Man of Peopling the Earth, Increaſe and multiply, ſtill continues in all its force. Wo to the Man who lives in a Houſe without a Wife. They come not under this Law, till they are twenty Years of Age; but then they muſt Marry, otherwiſe they Sin againſt God and his Ordinance. They become Murderers; they deſtroy the Image of the firſt Man; and cauſe the Holy Spirit to withdraw himſelf from Iſrael. 'Tis a Queſtion in the Talmud, who is he that proſtitutes his Daughter? And the Anſwer is, the Father that keeps her too long at home, or Marries her to an Old Man. The Jews don't generally wait twenty Years. They make Contracts betwixt their Children betimes, and execute 'em as ſoon as poſſible. In the mean time, a Daughter Married by her Father before ſhe is twelve Years old and an half, has the Privilege of ſeparating upon a ſimple diſguſt at her Husband, becauſe ſhe was not then at the Age of Chuſing.

II. Polygamy is ſtill permitted. The Talmudiſts * ſay, that the King could Marry but eighteen Wives. They even aſſert, that the Kings ought not much to exceed this number, tho' they were ſo many Abigails, becauſe there is ſtill danger of their corrupting the Head and Heart of the Prince; but the antient Kings were not acquainted with theſe Rules, or had not a ſufficient eſteem for 'em, to make any ſcruple of violating them.

* Ex Gemara c. 1x. S. 1. Coch. duo Tit. Thalm. p. 290.

They

They likewiſe maintain that the High-Prieſt could have but one Wife. Tertullian made uſe of this Notion to condemn ſecond Marriages; but his Error is manifeſt, there being a great difference betwixt ſecond Marriages and Polygamy; the firſt were never forbidden the High-Prieſt; on the contrary, if his Wife died before the Day of Propitiations he often took another. But as the Scripture never ſpeaks but of one Wife of the High-Prieſt, and that not an inſtance can be produc'd of a High-Prieſt that had two; it is very probable that Polygamy was forbidden him, and the Sanctity of his Office ſeem'd ſo much the rather to require it, becauſe he was the Type of JESUS CHRIST, who has but one Church for his Spouſe, which alſo is the Opinion of the Jewiſh Doctors. That paſſage of the Chronicles * is objected where it is ſaid, that † Jehoiadah took for him two Wives, and he begat Sons and Daughters; for the Talmudiſts underſtand this of the High-Prieſt. They ſeek at the ſame time vain Subtilties to diſcover how he might have two Wives. They ſay that he had married one after the Death of the other, or that he divorced one every Year, to celebrate the Feaſt of Propitiation. This proves their Ignorance in their own Hiſtory; for Jehoiadah, who was at leaſt a hundred Years old when theſe Marriages were made, was not likely to take two Wives for himſelf, beſides the Daughter of Joram, whom he had married long before, and who was ſtill alive. But he gave theſe two Wives to Joaſh, whom he had raiſed to the Throne, and thus Joſephus relates it.

III. The High-Prieſt ought to marry none but a Virgin: And therefore he was never called ‖ to pluck off his Shoe, becauſe the Law forbad him to take a Widow. However there was an exception to the Law; for Joſhua * the Son of Gamaliel had married a Widow before Agrippa II. had made him High-Prieſt, and he ſtill kept her. But according to the common practice the High-Prieſt's Wife ought not to have attain'd the Age of Puberty, which began at twelve Years and a half.

Grotius † ſays that the Prieſts are ſubject to the ſame Law, and that they are forbidden to marry Widows not only by Moſes ‖ but by Ezekiel *, who ſays, that the Prieſts ſhall not take for their Wives a Widow. He adds, that Joſephus has mentioned this Cuſtom †, which remained in his time, and has been changed ſince. But this great Man is miſtaken in two things: 1. Becauſe there is nothing in Law forbidding Prieſts to marry Widows; it ſo clearly diſtinguiſhes the Ordinances common to all Prieſts from thoſe that were peculiar to the High-Prieſt, that it is impoſſible to confound them, without ſpoiling the Text, and inverting the Order of the Verſes. 2. Joſephus inſtead of authorizing this Cuſtom, only ſpeaks of it ‖ to diſtinguiſh the High-Prieſt from the reſt, on whom alone he impoſes the neceſſity of marrying a Virgin. So that only the paſſage of Ezekiel gives us any conſiderable difficulty. Kimki removes it by aſſerting that the Prophet has given the deſcription of an imaginary Temple, which was to be purer and holier than that which Solomon had built, namely that which was to be ſeen in the Reign of the Meſſiah.

IV. As to private Perſons, 'tis a Maxim generally received, that they may have as many Wives as they can keep. Only 'tis a Prudential Conſideration with 'em not to multiply 'em beyond four, and this is alſo done by the Mahometans, becauſe 'tis difficult to ſatisfie the occaſions, and deſires of ſo many Women. The Talmudiſts have reduced this number to two, one whereof they pretend ſerved for Procreation, and the other was reſerved for Pleaſure; and that ſhe may preſerve her Duty, they endeavour to make her Barren by ſome Potion; but theſe are common Tales of the Doctors.

Gamaliel had ſeverely Condemn'd Polygamy; and has been alſo followed by ſome Rabbies, maintaining that it was forbidden by the Words of the Law; You ſhall not take a Wife with her Siſter. But Gamaliel's Prohibition does not appear. 'Tis own'd it was never followed. They ſay that it was to end with the firſt Millennium, that is, in the Year 1240. of the Chriſtian Æra. His Diſciples have been look'd upon as Hereticks; and it is maintain'd, that the Law ſpeaks only of marrying two Siſters, which was not allow'd tho' Jacob had given an Example of it. The multitude of Rabbies have therefore been for Polygamy: And there are Laws in the Miſnah * upon this head. However, Gerſon has oppos'd the Doctors; and obſerving that the Rights of Children grew uncertain by the Plurality of Wives, pretended this antient Cuſtom ought to be aboliſh'd, and order'd the Jews upon pain of Excommunication to be contented with a ſingle Wife. Buxtorf aſſerts, that his opinion has prevail'd, and thoſe that have two Wives are obliged to ſend away one of them upon pain of Excommunication; but his Authority ought not to prevail againſt that of Leo of Modena †, who makes three diſtinctions. 1. The Jews that are in the Weſt mingled with Chriſtians, and that have Children, take not a ſecond Wife; but the reaſon is manifeſt, becauſe the condition of the Children, aud of the Portion it ſelf would be conteſted. They muſt ſubmit to the Laws of Chriſtians, and the Cuſtom of Places where they live; and ſo this Abſtinence can't be concluded to be voluntary. 2. Thoſe that have been long married and have no Children, diſpenſe with the Law, and take another Wife, particularly in Italy. They pretend even that the Pope gave them a Diſpenſation from the Goſpel Law, and authoriz'd ſecond Marriages. Leo of Modena had aſſerted it in the firſt Edition of his Tract of the Jewiſh Ceremonies. But whether he was miſtaken, or that the Pope would not ſuffer a Diſpenſation ſo little to his honour to be publiſhed, this Article was expung'd in all the following Editions. 3. Laſtly, he ſays poſitively that every Jew is allowed to have many Wives, according to what the Scripture ſays in ſeveral places, and this is practiſed by the Levantines. The Jews therefore conform to the Cuſtom of the Countries where they live. Polygamy is practiſed in the Eaſt, where the Mahometans allow 'em to have many Wives, and it has been long laid aſide in the Weſt, becauſe Chriſtian Princes will not authorize it.

V. By the Law it was ordained, that Brothers-in-law ſhould marry their Siſter-in-law, when ſhe was left a Widow without Children. This Cuſtom is almoſt vaniſh'd among the Jews ‖ ptrticularly in the Weſt, where theſe Marriages are not allow'd by Chriſtian Princes. Yet we ſtill ſee ſome Inſtances hereof in the Holy-Land, and particularly in the Eaſt, amongſt Perſons pretending to an exact Devotion. Beſides we find in the * Miſnah, and the Doctors that have commenced it, ſeveral Laws upon this ſubject which it is neceſſary to explain.

VI. The firſt of 'em relates to Perſons, who ought or who ought not to marry their Siſter-in-law. He that is born after the Death of his Brother, is not ſubject

ſubject to the Law, becauſe it will have the Brothers to live together. Reuben dying without Children before the Birth of Levi, Simeon his Brother marrying his Widow, and dying alſo without Children, Levi was not obliged to marry his Siſter-in-law, tho' he was born during Simeon's Marriage, becauſe he had marryed her on account of her former Widow-hood during which he was not in the World. If a Husband leaves many Wives, a Man's obliged to marry but one, becauſe the Law ſays, he ſhall raiſe up his Fathers Houſe, and 'tis in the Original one Houſe.

If the Widow be a near Relation to her Brother-in-law; if ſhe be his Daughter, or Wife's Siſter, he is diſpenc'd from the Law, becauſe the Marriage would be inceſtuous. The Wife's Barrenneſs, and the Husband's Impotence are alſo Diſpenſations. The Doctors, without excepting Maimonides, note the Characters, by which we may judge of theſe defects, and enter into ſuch particularities, as often make a Man bluſh. Laſtly, Proſelytes are not ſubject to this Law, which only reſpects thoſe who are Born of Jewiſh Parents.

VII. The ſecond Law fixes the number and qualification of the Judges, before whom the Contract ought to be made. The Miſnah † only ſpeaks of three Judges, or witneſſes; even tho' they were Ignorant Fellows, it ſuffices if they can read the neceſſary Writings in Hebrew. Some think the Kindred of one of theſe Judges made the Action null; but Jochanan and Simeon have determin'd, that it remains good. It has happen'd that a Brother-in law and Siſter-in-law being in Priſon, renounc'd their Marriages by pulling off their Shoes; and Akiba decided that the Action was valid, tho' there was no Witneſs ||; but they are grown more rigorous, for Maimonides and Bartenora will have the Ceremony to be made in preſence of five Witneſſes, that it may be more publick.

VIII. The laſt thing we ſhall obſerve is the Ceremony of plucking off the Shoe. The Widow and her Brother-in-law offer themſelves before the Judges, who give their Opinions, whether it be expedient they ſhould marry, or ſhould pluck off their Shoe, when the Brother-in law refuſes Marriage. They are taught to pronounce ſlowly in Hebrew theſe three words: He will not perform the * Law of the Brother in-law. After reading, the Brother-in-law takes a Shoe, faſtens it to his Right Foot, and preſents it to his Siſter-in-law, who pronounces theſe Words: N. refuſes to raiſe up Seed to his Brother, and to perform the Law of the Brother-in-law. The Brother-in-law declares he will not marry N: Then the Siſter-in-law pulls off the Shoe, throws it in the preſence of the Witneſſes, ſpits on the Ground, reading theſe words in Hebrew, So ſhall it be done unto that Man that will not build up his Brothers Houſe; and his Name ſhall be called in Iſrael, The Houſe of him that hath his Shoe looſed. The Spectators cry thrice, the Shoe looſed, the Shoe looſed, the Shoe looſed, to ſignify the Shame that is annex'd to his Action. The Widow has an Authentick Certificate for what is paſſed, by vertue whereof ſhe is allowed to marry whom ſhe pleaſes. The Doctors examine, whether the Action be valid, when the Shoe is too big or too little, when it is ſow'd with Shoe-makers Thread againſt the Cuſtom; whether it be ſufficient to pronounce the Words without looſing the Shoe; or to looſe the Shoe without pronouncing the words; but theſe are the common little quirks, with which we will not burthen this Hiſtory. Let us rather examine the ordinary Marriages.

IX. The Promiſe of Marriage is made in preſence of ſome Witneſſes, ſaying, be thou my Wife; and at the ſame time the Bridegroom gave a piece of Money, for which they have ſince ſubſtituted a Ring. In the mean time this laſt uſage is neither antient nor generally receiv'd; we never find it in the Talmud, and † Leo of Modena ſays, that neither the Germans nor Italians practiſe it, tho' it be obſerved in other places. Formerly theſe words were read in his Manuſcript: || Alcuni uſono al' hora porgli un anello en dito, e ſpoſarla, ma per lo più non la fanno. Much pains * has been taken to prove, that the Ring which Joſeph gave the Virgin was found by a Merchant at the end of the tenth Century, and brought to Perouſe, where 'tis preciouſly preſerved. But we ought not to judge of the Rites of the Jews by thoſe of the Chriſtians and Heathens; by conſulting the Rabbies, it might be learnt that the Preſent of a Ring was unknown, and that if ſome have imitated the Chriſtians in latter Ages, this was not done in Our Saviour's time. Hillel and Schamma had a violent diſpute about the value of the piece of Money which the Bridegroom gave to the Bride; but neither they nor their Diſciples, who wrote the Miſnah, nor the Talmudiſts ever ſpoke of Rings.

X. They draw up a Writing, in which the Husband promiſes a Sum of Money for a Portion; and he engages all his Goods for it even to his Cloak; but it can't be demanded till after his Death.

Whereas according to the common Rule, the Maid brings a Portion to the Husband, the contrary is practiſed among the Jews; and the Husband promiſes a Portion to his Wife. 'Tis equal for all Maids rich and poor, and the Doctors have fixed it to the value of fifty Crowns, or two hundred Zuſes. They think by this equality to facilitate the Marriage of poor Girls, and to prevent the diſorder which the difference of conditions cauſes in Alliances, but they are miſtaken, ſince the Husband over and above the Portion he promiſes his Wife, commonly adds a Sum proportion'd to his Eſtate. The Cuſtom follow'd by the Jews is antient; for Sichem ſubmitted to the conditions which they would impoſe on him, provided they would let him marry Dinah, and Saul demanded three hundred Fore skins of the Philiſtines of David for Michal's Portion. However, † the Wife brings to her Husband her Cloaths, her Moveables, and all that belongs to her, with the right to her Parents Succeſſion. What ſhe brings with her is valued, and ſometimes ſold, in order to buy Immoveables, and to reſtore it in caſe of Widow-hood, retrenching a part from the juſt value, to help the Husband to defray the Expences of the Wedding. This is the Moveable Gift; and the Gift that is made to the Bride not being paid till after Death, may be look'd upon as a Jointure, in which the Widow has the Propriety.

XI. When the Parties have given their Conſent to the Contract of Marriage, a ſhort Bleſſing is pronounced to the Praiſe of God, who has forbidden Inceſt and permitted Marriage. The young People who aſſiſt at the Ceremony break their Water-pots againſt the Ground, imagining 'tis a preſage of Proſperity and Abundance.

The Day of betrothing the Husbands alſo take a common Veſſel, in which they drink ſome drops of Wine; they throw the reſt upon the Ground, and break it after they have drunk. Hereby they mean to ſignify, the Community of Goods, and their fragility. Buxtorf will have the Veſſel broke in memory of the Temple that was ruined, and for the ſame reaſon, they throw Aſhes upon the married People, to put 'em in Mind that the ſecond Houſe was burnt. Arcudius is ſtrangely perplex'd, becauſe he has found the ſame Cuſtom among the Greeks. He has imagined, that this Wine was ſubſtituted for the Communion, for ſuch as married in the Afternoon. He draws his Argument from a Manuſcript, where mention is made of the pre-ſanctified Gifts that are in the Veſſel. But he did not take notice, that there are two Veſſels upon the Table, one of which contains the pre-ſanctified Gifts, for ſuch as will Communicate, and who are not deny'd em; and the other only contains the Wine, which is given to the Bridegrooms. And therefore it is called in the Manuſcript a common Veſſel. To think of finding the Ablution in it, ſo well known among the Latins, is to deceive one's ſelf, ſince it is not in uſe with the Greeks. We muſt return to the Jews, from whom this Rite is borrowed; and obſerve that the Greeks break the Veſſel, from a Superſtitious Motive, ſince they will not have it ſerve to other Purpoſes, after it has been employ'd in the Betrothing.

XII. || They commonly ſuffer a great deal of time to paſs betwixt this Ceremony and Marriage. Some wait ſix Months, others a Year, according as it is agreed upon. In this time they aſſign the Wife's Portion, and chooſe a Day to lead her to the Wedding-houſe. All Days are not proper: It can't be done on the Sabbath, nor on the Paſſe-over Week, nor on that of the Tabernacles; for fear of violating the Feaſt. They commonly chooſe a Day when the New Moon is on Wedneſday, becauſe if the Husband entertain'd any ſuſpicion concerning his Bride's Virginity, he might conveniently bring his Complaints before the Judges, who are commanded by Ezra to meet the next Day. Before ſhe is brought to the Synagogue, ſhe is ſumptuouſly apparell'd, and her hair is curled; by which they fancy they imitate God, who perform'd this Service for Eve, and with his own hands compoſed the Canopy, under which ſhe received the Benediction, and brought down the Angels to form a Conſort of Muſick; for God brought Eve to Adam, and he would not have Married her without all the uſual Ceremonies.

XIII. The antient Jews crown'd the married People. The Husband wore a Crown compoſed of Salt and Sulphur, the Salt was as tranſparent as Chryſtal, and with the Sulphur ſeveral Figures were drawn upon it. In the mean time as this Cuſtom was extraordinary, 'tis hard to diſcover the reaſon of it. * 'Tis ſaid, that this reminded the Husband of the Sin of Sodom, whoſe Impurities and Adulteries have been ſeverely puniſh'd, ſince that Land was changed into Salt and Sulphur, and 'twas an excellent Leſſon, which taught him to cleave to his Wife, without running after fooliſh Amours.

The bridal Crowns were commonly of Gold, made in form of a Tower, almoſt, as Cybele the Mother of the Gods is repreſented, and a great many Empreſſes in Medals. This Cuſtom is very antient among the Heathens from whom the Chriſtians have borrowed it.

and the Coronation of the Bridegroom is at preſent one of the principal Ceremonies of Marriage among the Greeks. The Sacred Writers have often mention'd it. || Go forth, O ye Daughters of Zion, and behold King Solomon with the Crown, wherewith his Mother crowned him in the day of his Eſpouſals. And 'tis very probable, that when Iſaiah rejoices, that God had covered him with a Robe of Righteouſneſs as a Bridegroom decketh himſelf with Ornaments, and as a Bride adorneth her ſelf with her Jewels, we ought to underſtand a Crown inſtead of Ornaments. Since the LXX. Interpreters, who muſt have known the uſe of the Expreſſion have tranſlated it, *he has * put a mitre upon my head as on a Bridegroom.* They have ſince changed; at leaſt we read in the Miſnah †, that this cuſtom of Crowns was aboliſhed for the Bridegrooms, when the War began under Veſpaſian, and that of Crowns for the Brides when Titus beſieg'd the City. Tertullian || has therefore, according to his cuſtom, over ſhot himſelf in ſaying the People of God never uſed Crowns as a publick Indication of their Joy. This was true in his time, when the Rabbies had aboliſh'd this ſign of rejoicing; but he had ill read the Scripture, which ſo often ſpeaks of the Crown, worn by married People. Beſides, the Doctors are divided; for if the Brides be abſolutely denied Crowns of Gold, ſome permit 'em to wear Roſes and Myrtles. R. Simeon reduces 'em to Reed and Bulruſh R. Levi pretends they are all forbidden. The Rabbies ſpeak much of four Crowns: they generally have 'em impreſs'd in the Front of the Books they Print, particularly at Venice, that of the Law, of the King, of the Prieſt, and of a good Name, which are more excellent than the reſt.

XIV. The Bride is led in Pomp to the Wedding-houſe. Selden thinks that the antient Cuſtom has been changed, and that they go to the Synagogue to receive the Benediction; but this is commonly done at home, or in ſome Garden. They place the Bride under a Canopy, ſupported by four Youths, and adorned with Jewels according to the quality of the married Perſons, and all the Company cries, Bleſſed is he that comes. They Sing about 'em with Torches in their hands. The Bride makes three turns round her Husband, becauſe Jeremy * has ſaid, The woman ſhall compaſs the man, and the Bridegroom makes two about her.

XV. In the next place they throw ſome Grains of Wheat upon the Married Couple, crying, Increaſe and multiply. The Relations throw ſome pieces of Money for the Poor to ſcramble for. In ſome places they put ſome time before hand, Barley in a Pot full of Earth, which is brought to the new-married People when it ſhoots, to ſhew 'em by this Symbol, that they ought to multiply ſpeedily like Barley.

XVI. The Bride takes the right hand, becauſe the Pſalmiſt ſays †, upon thy right hand did ſtand thy Queen. She turns towards the South; and they put the Thaled on her head. Buxtorf ſays, that the Bridegroom takes out his Thaled, and covers his Spouſe with it, to imitate the manner of Ruth's Marriage, who ſaid to Boaz, Spread thy ſkirt over thine handmaid. The Rabbi or the Chanter of the Synagogue, or even a Relation takes a Glaſs of Wine, preſents it to the Bridegroom, bleſſing God for having created Man and Woman, and forbidden Inceſt, and ordain'd Marriage. 'Tis pretended, that this form of Benediction was given by Ezra, particularly for Betrothings. However as it was often recited without ſcruple in this firſt Ceremony, the Modern Rabbies never fail to repeat it in that of Marriage. After he has drunk, he puts a Ring without a Stone upon his Bride's finger, ſaying, Behold thou art my Spouſe, according to the Rite of Moſes and of Iſrael, There muſt be two or three Witneſſes when theſe words are pronounced; and they commonly chooſe Rabbies, tho' this is not abſolutely neceſſary. Wine is brought a ſecond time in a new Veſſel, the Mouth whereof is narrow, if it be a Maid, and larger if it be a Widow. They chant ſix Benedictions; the Husbands drink, and throw about the reſt of the Wine, as a mark of Joy and Plenty.

XVII. The Entertainment follows the Ceremony. An antient Biſhop * of Breſcia ſays, it was the Cuſtom to chooſe in theſe Entertainments, a Governour of the Feaſt of Sacerdotal race, who had the ſuper-Intendency over the Diſhes and the Wine, and obliged the Gueſts to obſerve all the Decorums which Religion requires. We can't tell, whence he drew this Tradition, which he derived from our Saviour's time, and perhaps he only believed it, to have the Pleaſure of ſaying, that Moſes, was the Steward, who formerly ſerved God at the Wedding he made with the Jewiſh Church, which he divorced, and preſided ſtill in that, where CHRIST was preſent, and which he celebrated with Infidels in Galilee of the Gentiles. All theſe thoughts were ſubtile and falſe. But he was at leaſt to give 'em ſome ſhadow of Solidity, and to this effect he imagined, that all the Major-domo's, that ſerved at Marriages in our Saviour's time were Levites. All that is true in the matter is, that they read ſeven Benedictions during the Feaſt: which they begin gravely, becauſe of the Deſolation of Jeruſalem; but ſorrow quickly vaniſhes. The firſt Meſs that is ſerved up to the Bride, is a Hen with an Egg. The Hen is tore to pieces, the very moment ſhe has taſted of it, and the Egg is thrown at the Noſe of a Chriſtian, if there be any one there to ſee the Ceremony.

XVIII 'Tis the Paranymph's care to lead the Bridegrooms to their Chamber. They ſay, that theſe Bride-men continued in the Chamber, to prevent the Commiſſion of any Fraud, but that they had another Cuſtom in Galilee. 'Tis ſaid alſo, that John Baptiſt alluded to this Cuſtom of Judæa, in ſaying, the friend of the Bridegroom ſtandeth and rejoiceth, when he hears his Voice. The Sabbath following, the whole Wedding goes in Pomp to the Synagogue; where the Bridegroom is called to the Desk to read the Law; but this is an honour to be purchaſed by great Alms, which he and his retinue generally make.

XIX. When † the Marriage is conſummated, the Bridegroom muſt leave the Bed, and not come near his Wife for a certain time. There are five Days in every Month, in which the Wife muſt advertiſe her Husband, that it is not lawful to touch her, and then he dares not ſit near her, nor eat upon the ſame Plate, nor drink in the ſame Glaſs. Afterwards, ſhe muſt bathe in running Water, and the Bath would be invalid, if ſhe wore ſo much as a Ring, that hindered the Water from touching any Part of her Body, for ſhe ought to be waſhed from Head to Foot. There are ſome, who ſuper-intend theſe ſorts of Baths, to ſee if the Woman be over head and ears in Water.

XX. The Doctors have not failed to regulate the married Peoples Duties. 1. There are Laws about the change of Habitation, which is not eaſily allow'd of, becauſe the Body is fatigued by Travel and Removal of Goods. R. Simeon Son of Gamaliel did not permit the going from a little City to a great one, nor from an unhealthy place to another, that would be more convenient. But others who are leſs ſevere, allow of Changes, when they are advantagious. There are only two Caſes, where they are wholly at liberty, when a Man marries a Wife of another City, or another Country; for then the Wife is obliged to follow her Husband, who contracted not but with that tacit condition. Beſides, a Wife is obliged to go, when it is to remove into Judæa, becauſe they make || every body aſcend to the Land of Iſrael; that is, that all the Family is obliged to follow him, that will go and ſettle there, and the Woman that refuſes, loſes her Portion. 2. 'Tis a queſtion, whether, ſhe can diſcharge her ſelf, from ſervile and painful Works; But at leaſt, ſhe is * obliged to labour in woollen Manufacture to avoid Idleneſs, which is a ſource of Luxury. If ſhe fails to obey her Husband, he leſſens every Day a Penny of her Portion; and when it is abſorbed by her frequent Rebellions, he may take the Overplus upon the Succeſſion that falls to him. The Husband only pays half the Fine when he abuſes his Wife. 3. Laſtly, they omit not to regulate Conjugal Duties. R. Eliezer has hereupon made Laws, which are burdenſome to Husbands, eſpecially to the idle, that is ſuch as live without Imploy, and the Wives Complaints againſt their Husbands muſt be very common.

I. ADultery was puniſhed with Death. * Philo affirms, that all Nations, whoſe Cuſtoms were ſo different from thoſe of his own, yet agreed with it in this Article, and not only condemned the Adulterer to Death, but licenſed the Killing of him when he was caught. 'Tis certain they gave the Husband a Power of revenging the Affront he had received. A Law of the twelve Tables indemnified him, that kill'd an Adulterer ſurprized in the very Act; and Solon permitted the Husband to puniſh him pro arbitrio. Juſtinian authoriz'd the ſame thing by a Law, that † was current among the Chriſtians. They tolerated the Conſequences of a reſentment that ſeemed juſt. In the mean time, 'twas abandoning the Criminal to the Judgment of an enraged Man, and the Iniquity of the Law ſeem'd ſo much the Greater, in as much as the Adulterer was not condemned to Death when the Husband complain'd of it to the Courts. Philo affirms it; but he is miſtaken. In Eyypt likewiſe where he lived, the antient Law of Seſoſtris, which burnt Adulterers alive, was aboliſhed; and in his time they only ſcourged the Man, and cut off the Woman's Noſe. The Greeks * left the choice of the Puniſhment to the diſcretion of the Judges; but they excepted Death, and the Romans were content with Baniſhment. 'Tis ſtrange that ſo ingenious an Author as Philo ſhould be ignorant of Laws ſo well known.

* Philo de Joſeph. † Authent. Coll. 8. Tit. 18. c. 15.

II. They brought to CHRIST a Woman guilty of Adultery, to know, if ſhe ought to be ſtoned. What was the Snare the Phariſees laid for him, ſince the Law condemned this Woman to Death? Some remove the difficulty by rejecting the Story, becauſe it was not originally in St. John's Goſpel, and Papias † took it from that of the Nazarenes. It was not yet received in Euſebius's time; and therefore is not found in the moſt antient Manuſcripts. Others ſay, that St. John had not inſerted this Action of our Saviour in his Goſpel; but as the Apoſtles had been often heard to repeat it, it paſs'd for Authentick, and was placed in the Sacred Hiſtory. It has been receiv'd for a great many Ages; for it is read not only in very antient Manuſcripts, but alſo St. Jerom, and St. Auſtin have explain'd it, and the Univerſal Church has approved it. 'Tis therefore neceſſary to examine it.

A Learned Man || has obſerved in the Cuſtoms of the Jews, that the Husband was obliged to forbid his Wife before two Witneſſes, from having any commerce with the Gallant he ſuſpected; and the defect of this formality was a ſufficient reaſon to ſecure the accuſed from Death. Maimonides expreſly teaches it; and according to this Rule, the Phariſees laid a very ſubtile Snare for our Saviour, by obliging him to declare in favour of the Law againſt Tradition, or elſe in favour of the Fathers againſt the Law, which condemned the Adultereſs to Death. Thou, what ſayeſt thou; Wilt thou condemn her to death according to the Law, or abſolve her according to the Doctors? But is it neceſſary to have recourſe to Maimonides or Raſchi to explain the Goſpel; eſpecially ſince the Miſnah they have commented, only exempts from Death * the Guilty that confeſs'd their Crime, and requires not Admonition as a thing abſolutely neceſſary for Stoning We need only attend to the condition, the Jews were in, in our Saviour's time, to find the Knot of the Difficulty. They had loſt the power of Life and Death. In the mean time, the Law condemned Adulterers to be ſtoned. This Woman had been caught in the very Fact. J. CHRIST muſt therefore determine againſt the Law, which inflicted Death; or againſt the Romans, who ſuffered them not to put any body to Death, and who would have ſtill leſs permitted it for ſuch a Crime as Adultery, which was not capital among them. St. Chryſoſtom † leads us to this thought; for he obſerves that the Phariſees had tempted our Saviour by asking him, whether they ought to pay Tribute to Cæſar, and ſtone the Adultereſs? Both the Temptations were of the ſame kind; and expoſed our Lord to the cenſure of the Jews, zealous for the Law, or to the authority of the Romans, who would have treated him as a Rebel.

Inſtead of declaring, he drew ſome Figures upon the Ground or rather upon the Duſt, which the numbers of Goers and Comers left upon the Pavement. This is one of the great Objections that is made againſt this Story; becauſe the Temple was paved with great ſquare Stones, it could not be ſaid that J. CHRIST writ upon the Sand or the Ground, as if there was no Duſt upon Marble and Stones. Indeed they took from the Tabernacle the Duſt that was thrown into the Waters of Jealouſy; and if they ſometimes fetch'd it elſewhere, becauſe there was none, it was very ſeldom.

We read in an antient Manuſcript, that the Redeemer of the World wrote down the Sins of each of the Accuſers. St. Jerome || hyperbolizes the Matter, in ſaying that he wrote the Sins of the Accuſers, and of all Mortals to accompliſh the ſaying * of Jeremy, they that depart from thee ſhall be written in the Earth. Some accuſe St. Jerome of being the Author of this Tradition, and they ſay the Greeks drew it from his Works. But it is more plain in the Greek Manuſcript; and 'tis very probable that this is the Original. St. Jerome is only the Copier, who has added the words of the Prophet, and the ſins of all men to thoſe of the Accuſers. Be it how it will, J. CHRIST neceſſitated the Accuſers to pronounce themſelves, and to take upon 'em all the odium of the deciſion; and if he condemn'd not the Adultereſs to Death, when he was alone with her, he thereby teaches us to ſubmit to the Civil Laws of the places where we live, and not under pretence of Religion to uſurp upon the Authority of Sovereigns.

III. When an Adultereſs confeſs'd her diſloyalty, all that was done, was to break the Contract of her Portion; and having reſtored her what ſhe brought, ſhe was driven from the houſe of her Husband, to be ſtoned. If ſhe deny'd the Crime, ſhe was led to the Eaſtern-gate of the Temple, there ſhe was made to drink the bitter Waters. This Ceremony was peculiar to the Jews †, and this Miracle, which muſt have been common among 'em deſerves to be explained.

IV. Artemidorus relates ||, that a Husband having dream'd, that he fell from off a Ram, the horns of this Animal ſhewed him, that his Wife made him horns. Andronicus Comnenes cauſed ſome to be faſten'd to the Beds of all the Husbands, whoſe Wives he had corrupted, as ſo many Trophies of his Victory. The Jews alſo had a Proverbial ſaying, he has a horned face; Jealous Husbands, or ſuch as theſe Ralleries ſtung in the Point of Honour, were obliged to remedy their Misfortune, and to lay in Precautions for the future. To this purpoſe * a Man choſe two Witneſſes, before whom he forbad his Wife to ſee N. The Suſpicions fell upon Relations as well as Strangers, and a correſpondence of Brothers in Law, Brothers and Fathers was ſometimes forbidden. The Rabbies tell † in jeſt, that the Jews vex'd that God gave the Devil the liberty of doing Miſchief, in order to exerciſe their Vertue, and to recompence them afterwards with the Victories they obtain'd over him, conſented to be deprived of the glory of the Triumph, provided he would deliver 'em from this evil Genius. They faſted to obtain this favour of God, which he granted 'em. The Devil was deliver'd up to 'em, and they ſhut him up in a great leaden Kettle. From that time the Jews never fell into Idolatry; becauſe it was this evil Genius, that drove 'em to it. They quickly perceiv'd that the Victory was not entire; becauſe there was another Devil, that carried them to Impurity. God gave up this impure Genius to their Hands; but when they were preparing to give him the fatal Blow, a Prophet admoniſhed 'em that they were going to put an end to Humane race, becauſe there would be no more Generation. A Wiſe man, that fell Sick, had occaſion for an Egg, but not one could be found, the Hens laid no more, becauſe this Dæmon preſided over the Generations of Birds and Beaſts as well as of Men. This confirmed the Prediction of the Prophet. And therefore they contented themſelves with putting out the evil Genius's Eyes, that he might do leſs Miſchief; but from hence proceeded a great diſorder, for being blind he ſometimes unites the Brother with the Siſter, and produces Inceſts, and therefore the Doctors, who know it, make no Exception, and permit the Husband to diſcharge the ſuſpected Wife, from ſeeing her neareſt Relations. This is the Fable of Cupid, who wears a Cloath over his Eyes, which they have turned into a leſs polite and gallant form.

V. When the Prohibition is made authentick, by the preſence of two Witneſſes, the Wife is no longer allowed to be alone with the Perſon deſcribed; but is reputed Guilty, if ſhe be ſhut up with him *, as long as you are boiling an Egg, or ſwallowing three. Then the Husband may expel her from his Houſe by giving her her Portion, tho' he learnt the matter only by a Bird that flies; that is, by an uncertain and light rumour. The more Wiſe authoriz'd the Husband to do it, when † the Women that ſpin by Moon-ſhine, reproach'd him; but he had need of Witneſſes to proſecute his Wife judicially. One was enough to convict her. The Relations and Domeſticks were not received againſt their Miſtreſs. Juſtinian || was not ſo ſevere; but yet he ordered the Marriage to be diſſolved, when the Wife ſhould be convicted of making Entertainments, or going to bathe with Strangers.

VI. The Proceſs * was begun before the Judges of the Place, who took the Examinations, and ſent 'em with the Parties to Jeruſalem, becauſe the Sanhedrim alone could decide the Queſtion, and judge the Cauſe. The great Council cauſed the Accuſed to be brought to the Gate of the Temple called Nicanor. Thoſe † who implicitely follow the Rabbies, know the Original of this Name; for theſe great Doctors ſay, that Nicanor, the General of the Greeks, having been kill'd by the Aſmonæans, they faſten'd his Feet and Hands to one of the Gates of Jeruſalem. Another affirms, that Nicanor || was a Jew of Alexandria, who brought this ſtately Gate; which was caſt into the Sea in a Tempeſt, and was miraculouſly found again: But beſide the diverſity of thoſe two Relations, Joſephus *, who affirms that Nicanor was kill'd in a Battle againſt Judas Macchabeus far from Jeruſalem, and who ſpeaks largely of the Gates of the Temple, do's not ſay that one of them was call'd Nicanor. They † ſtill celebrate a Feaſt in memory of the Victory obtain'd over this Perſecutor; but it do's not follow, that his Name was given to one of the Gates of the Temple, or that they faſten'd his Feet and Hands to that of Jeruſalem.

VII. When the Woman was arrived at the entrance of the Temple, a Prieſt violently pull'd off her Cloaths, and ty'd 'em to her Throat, with a Cord that came from Egypt, to put her in mind of the Miracles, that God had wrought in that Country. They diſchevell'd her Hairs, becauſe 'tis a Diſgrace particularly to the Jewiſh Women to be diſchevell'd. In the mean time, R. Juda has decided, that when the Adultereſs had a handſom head of Hair and Neck, they were to be concealed. The Husband brought an Oblation for his Wife. It was compos'd of Meal of Barley, without Salt and Incenſe, becauſe, ſay the Doctors, as ſhe had committed a beſtial action, ſhe ought to preſent nothing but what the Beaſts eat. The Prieſt took a new Vial, fill'd it with a Gallon of Water, taken from the brazen Sea, becauſe it was to be holy. In it he put the duſt, that was taken in the Temple. If there was none there ||, it was lawful to fetch it from without. The quantity of this Duſt was not regulated; It was ſufficient to ſee part of it ſwim upon the Surface of the Water, to be perfectly aſſured that there was ſome in it. The Prieſt afterwards took a piece of Vellum, upon which he wrote with great circumſpection the Accuſation of Adultery, the Adjuration he made to the accuſed, and a Malediction conceived in theſe terms of the Law; The Lord make thee a Curſe, and this Water that cauſeth the Curſe ſhall go into thy Bowels to make thy Belly to ſwell, and thy Thigh to rot, and the accuſed Perſon anſwer'd twice Amen, Amen; the one to ſhew that ſhe Swore, and the other to ratify the Curſe. After the Oath *, he put upon the Altar a part of the Oblation of the accuſed, and the Prieſt ſeized the reſt. This was the Order, which God had given in his Law; but it has been inverted in the Miſnah †; for there ſhe is made to drink the bitter Waters before the burning of the Oblation, and the Commentators know not whether they ought to determine for the Scripture or Tradition.

VIII. || The accuſed Perſon was left at liberty to ſay, I will not drink, till the words of the Curſe ſhould be blotted out from the Parchment. Then the Writing was folded up, and the Oblation caſt into the hole, where they put the Aſhes of the Altar; but when the Writing was blotted out, it was no longer allow'd her to confeſs her Crime, and the Ceremony being over, ſhe was forced to undergo the Puniſhment. For ſcarce had ſhe begun to drink, but her Veins ſwelled, her Face grew livid, and her Eyes ſtarted out of her Head. They cried, Away with her * hence quickly, leſt ſhe pollute the Court, † becauſe ſhe was like to dye. They call'd theſe bitter Waters, and the Doctors examine from whence their bitterneſs proceeded. The Antients have concluded, that they mingled Wormwood, which gave 'em this taſt; but Nachmanides affirms, that they began not to be bitter except in the Mouth of the Guilty. 'Tis ask'd farther, whether they always had ſuddenly their effect. The generality of Doctors think this depended upon the merit of the Perſon; for when ſhe had done good Works, or had learnt to read the Law, ſhe might make love with ſome Security, becauſe the merit ſuſpended the effect of the Puniſhment for Years together. There was another caſe in which the Miracle had no place, when the Husband was found guilty of ſome Unfaithfulneſs. At leaſt the Rabbies ſay ſo, who are back'd || by ſome Chriſtians, who think, that God the Supreme Judge hereby provided for the Chaſtity of Marriage; for Humane Laws averr *, that the Judge who condemns a Woman for Adultery, ought to make an inqueſt into the Life and Manners of the Husband, ſince it would not be juſt, that one of the Criminals ſhould be abſolved, whilſt the other was puniſhed. In the mean time, the Law only reſpects the Wife, and has no regard to the manners of the Husband. The Wife's condition has always in that reſpect been more Unfortunate than that of the Men. Modeſty, which is the Ornament of their Sex, impoſes upon 'em the Neceſſity of a more exact and ſevere Conduct. If there be any Injuſtice in the Men, who have made the Laws, 'tis too antient to retrieve it. 'Tis certain that God did not inſtitute any Miracle againſt guilty Husbands, and the Rabbies, who aſſert, that the bitter Waters which the Woman drank, extended their vertue upon the Adulterer in whatever part of the World he was, and made him rot in a moment, advance a Fact, of which they can give no inſtance. R. Simeon ſays that it is deſtroying the Miracle, and robbing chaſt Women of the Glory of their Innocence, to aſſert that the Puniſhment was ſuſpended or vacated by any other Cauſe. We are told * alſo, that two Siſters attempted once to deceive the Judges by their reſemblance. The innocent drank the bitter Waters for the guilty Siſter. The latter going to reſume her Cloaths, and kiſs her Siſter by way of Gratitude, ſmelt the odour of the bitter Waters, which poiſon'd and kill'd her upon the ſpot. When the Woman was innocent, her beauty increaſed, and ſhe return'd with honour to her houſe.

IX. If the Husband died before the end of the Proceſs, the Woman was diſpens'd from † drinking, and received her Portion, becauſe her Crime was not proved. Schammay had decided it in this manner; but Hillel deprived the accuſed Perſon of her Portion, and thinks 'twas favour enough for her to be diſpens'd from drinking.

When the too indulgent Husband ſuffer'd his Wife to be Guilty, or to ſpread Reports againſt his Honour, the Magiſtrate took the Husband's place, and made the Proſecution.

" However there are fifteen different || Caſes, in " which the Wives are exempt from the Magiſtrate's " and Husband's Juriſdiction; for the Wife and Hus- " band ought to be ſound in Body and Mind. A deaf, " a dumb, or a lame Man has no right." A minor Young Woman is not ſubject to the Inqueſt, becauſe the Law appoints it only againſt a Woman, and ſhe is not reputed ſuch tho' married, till ſhe is come to the Age of Majority.

X. It would be in vain to explain what God did in favour of Jealous Husbands. It ſuffices to ſay that this was a Miracle, to ceaſe ſearching after Natural Reaſons, which we ſhall never find in a water mingled with Duſt. Aben Ezra ſays, that God wrought ſuch another Miracle by the Duſt of the Golden Calf, which Moſes made the Iſraelites to ſwallow, ſince without this, the Levites could not have diſtinguiſhed them from Idolaters; but he has not ventur'd to determine, of what Nature this Miracle was, for fear of being miſtaken. A Chriſtian * Poet has done it; for he thinks the Beards of all the Worſhippers of the Golden Calf, became gilt or red, and that they were known by this Character:

Aurum quod fudit Aaron, deſcendit eorum
In barbas tantùm qui coluere Bovem:
Nequitiæ plumbum barbæ monſtratur in auro:
Et culpæ pondus aurea barba notat.

Selden adds, that the Poſterity of theſe Idolaters had a red Beard. We ought not to multiply Miracles. This is an imaginary one; but the bitter Waters diſcovered the Women guilty of Adultery; and God vindicated the Husband's honour by a ſupernatural Operation, ſince the Scripture ſays it.

XI. This Miracle ceaſed but a few Years before the Deſtruction of the Temple. At leaſt † the Rabbies affirm, that there was ſuch a multitude of debauch'd Women in Judæa, and of Husbands as bad as their Wives, that Jochanan Saccaides, who was then Patriarch of the Nation || cauſed this Cuſtom to be aboliſh'd by the Sanhedrim's Authority. Others affirm, that God would no longer give any vertue to the Water. In the mean time, this vertue was never more neceſſary than when the Crime, and the number of the Guilty was multiply'd. The fear of Puniſhment would have check'd many Wives, which impunity render'd Wantons. Some have imagined that the Romans, when they became Arbiters of Judgments and Decrees of Death, aboliſh'd this Cuſtom; but the Miracle had ceaſed with all the reſt, from the time of the Captivity, and no inſtance was ſeen of it afterwards.

XII. And therefore Divorces become frequent, whilſt the ſecond Temple ſtood. The Rabbies have two very different Traditions upon this Subject, which perhaps are equally falſe. One ſays that all the Soldiers, that went to the Army, gave at their departure a Letter of Divorce to their Wives, that they might Marry again at three Years end, if they remained Priſoners with the Enemy. St. Jerome ſpeaks of this Tradition received among the Jewiſh Doctors, who thus explain'd the words of Jeſſe to David, run * to thy brethren and take their pledge, that is their Letters of Divorce. The Rabbies add that Uriah gave a Letter of Divorce to his Wife, that ſhe might marry again, in caſe he was kill'd in the War; and that David gave Orders to deſtroy him during the Siege, to excuſe himſelf from the Adultery he had committed, becauſe the Letter of Divorce having its effect from the Day that Uriah gave it, in caſe of his Death, David became innocent.

XIII. There is a ſecond Tradition, that no Divorces were ſeen, whilſt the Republick flouriſhed, becauſe they were not permitted; they prove it by the Example of David, who having occaſion for a young Maid to warm him in his Bed, took Abiſhag without Marrying her. The Doctors ſay, he durſt not divorce any of his Wives, becauſe it was a Crime, nor increaſe the number beyond Eighteen; but this Tradition is more evidently falſe than the other. Divorces were at the beginning more rare, without being forbidden for the cauſe of Adultery; and the frequent Alluſions, that Iſaiah † and Jeremy make to the Letters of Divorce, by repreſenting God giving 'em to the Churches of Iſrael and Judah for their Whoredoms, ſufficiently prove they were in uſe in their time; for Metaphors are drawn only from received Cuſtoms.

XIV. The Doctors, who lived after the Captivity, grew ſtrangely looſe upon this Subject. The Law permitted the divorcing a Wife, when any filthy Action was found in her. It was eaſie hereby to underſtand Adultery negotium impudicum, as Tertullian ſpeaks; but becauſe the Hebrew word || ſignifies a Word as well as an Action, the Caſuiſts abuſing this Ambiguity, began to maintain that a word was ſufficient to break the Matrimonial Union, and to give the Letter of Divorce.

Hillel and Schammay had a warm diſpute upon this matter, as upon many others. The latter aſſerted that Adultery alone diſſolv'd the Marriage; and Hillel maintained, that it was ſufficient, if a Wife had over-dreſs'd the Dinner. The famous Akiba carried the liberty ſtill further; and decided that when a Man found a Woman that was more handſome and agreeable, it was lawful to leave his Wife that had not thoſe Advantages.

Such a looſe Morality was entertain'd with delight. Philo, tho' pretending to Devotion, yet eſpouſed Hillel's Maxims; and as the Adultereſs was to be puniſhed with Death, he imagined that the Letter of Divorce, permitted by Moſes, ſignified nothing, unleſs it extended to other Caſes.

XV. The Women took the ſame liberty as the Men, and in their turn divorced their Jealous and diſagreeable Husbands. Herod's Siſter ſent a Letter of divorce to her Husband Coſtobarus, and married again. Joſephus obſerves, that this was done againſt the Laws of the Country; and he maintain'd the Husband's Authority againſt the Uſurpation of the Wives. Scaliger is miſtaken here; for he imagin'd that Salome only Sin'd, becauſe ſhe married again, before ſhe had obtain'd Coſtobarus's permiſſion, and that this permiſſion was neceſſary to capacitate her to contract a new Marriage. But this is not Joſephus's notion. 'Tis true, the clauſe of having power to marry another is commonly inſerted in the Letter of Divorce the Husband gives the Wife; but it is not abſolutely neceſſary; for when all the Bonds of Marriage are broken, the Perſon returns to primitive Liberty. Salome's Crime therefore, according to Joſephus * did not conſiſt in her marrying again; but in her breaking with him before he had ſeparated from her. It was then thought that the Husband had only the power of Divorcing, and he had not ſent her away. Salome's Example was follow'd by Herodias, who deſerted her Husband to marry Herod; Berenice, Agrippa's Siſter, did the ſame thing; for after having obliged Polemon, King of Lycia, to turn Jew to marry her, ſhe divorced him. Prophane Hiſtorians only ſay, that ſhe left him in the lurch, and forſook him to ramble elſewhere; but it is moſt probable, that ſhe made uſe of the liberty that was then enjoy'd, and of which ſhe had ſo many inſtances in her Family, to give a Letter of Divorce to a Man ſhe did not like.

XVI. Divorces are become much more unfrequent among the Jews, ſince they have been diſperſed among the Nations which allow not the Diſſolution of Marriages for light Cauſes. The Civil Law † having great influence upon theſe ſorts of engagements, they can neither be made nor broken, without running the risk of Law-ſuits, and throwing Confuſion into a Man's Family. Nevertheleſs we ſee ſome of 'em at this Day. A jealous Husband at firſt forbids his Wife to ſee the Man that gives him umbrage. If ſhe continues, and the Evidence is manifeſt, the Rabbies order him to forſake her, even tho' he be unwilling. They have even liberty of making their Complaints upon Caſes infinitely leſs momentous than Adultery, according to Hillel's Tradition, which is ſtill in force; but then the Rabbies, who are the Judges, ſpin out the Trial || by abundance of formalities to give time to the Parties to make an accommodation.

XVII. When the Reconciliation is deſpair'd of, a Woman, a Deaf-man, or a Notary draws up the Letter of Divorce. He writes it on Parchment in the preſence of many Rabbies that preſide, that twelve Lines only may be put in ſquare Letters. A hundred Punctilio's are obſerved in the faſhion of the Characters. The Letter of Divorce contains theſe words: * Such a Day, Month, Year, and Place I, N. divorce you voluntarily; I ſeparate you, I give you your liberty. You N. who have been hitherto my Wife, are permitted by me to marry whom you pleaſe. Ten Perſons are preſent at this Act, beſides the four witneſſes, two of which ſign the Ghett, and the other two the Date. There is a diſpute about the qualification of Witneſſes. Some would have 'em † to be Jews, others ſay that one of the two may be a Cuthean, or an Idolater. Gamaliel has decided, that they might be both ſo; but this deciſion is thought to be founded upon the Circumſtance of time in which he lived. The Rabbi, after he had read the Act, and interrogated the Husband to be fully convinced of his intentions, he orders the Woman to open her Hands, and to bring 'em near to one another, for fear that the Inſtrument ſhould fall; and after having queſtioned her, the Husband puts the Parchment into her Hand; ſhe reſtores it to the Rabbi, who reads it a ſecond time, and from that Moment ſhe reſumes her liberty.

XVIII. After this Ceremony, the Perſons divorced are not allow'd to be together in any place. They have the right to marry again, provided the Wife marries not him who gave jealouſie to her Husband, and that ſhe contract not till after three Months end, for fear ſhe be with Child.

Of Purity, and the manner of Waſhing.

I. Death is a great Defilement. II. On what the Holineſs of Places depends. III. The Purity of Veſſels. IV. Of Meats. V. Of Cloaths and Shoes. VI. The quality of the Water in which they waſh. VII. The difference betwixt Lotion and Immerſion.

I. MOSES has laid down very intricate Laws about Purity; for the touch of unclean things defiles, and theſe things make a large Catalogue; but yet the Rabbies have multiply'd 'em, and hereby render'd the Law ſtill more heavy. The ſixth Volume of the Miſnah * is fully imploy'd in regulating the different Caſes of Conſcience, that may ariſe upon this Subject. Of all Creatures, none but Man can defile and be defiled whilſt he lives: but Death is a Fountain of Impurity, and of all Impurities, the greateſt † is that of a dead Man.

II. Places are holy in proportion, as admittance is forbidden to the Dead, the Lepers, or defiled Perſons. Thus Judea is the holieſt of all Lands. The walled Cities of the Holy-Land, are ſtill more pure, becauſe the Lepers can't enter them. The Mountain upon which the Temple was built, was more Holy ſtill ||, becauſe impure Perſons were excluded from

it.

it. The Holy Place and the Altar were ſo in proportion.

III. They eſpecially regulate what relates to the Veſſels *, from whence the Water is drawn, and in which they prepare their Food, and they not only are cautious that they have not belonged to Strangers, for fear they have dreſs'd forbidden Meats in 'em; but they carry their ſcruple much farther, for a thouſand Circumſtances render the Veſſels †, the Staves, the Casks and Chariots unclean. 'Tis a great queſtion among the Doctors, whether a Veſſel, on whoſe Cover is enchaſed a Looking-glaſs, be || pure or unclean. R. Jehudah maintains that it is pure. The Wiſe Men are of a contrary Opinion; but we muſt diſtinguiſh, whether the Veſſel be pure, whether the Glaſs be broken, or whether it be not large enough to repreſent the whole Face, otherwiſe it is unclean.

IV. There is a diſtinction of Meats noted by Leviticus; but to the antient Prohibition they have added new ones. * They carefully take off all the Fat from the Creatures they eat, and even in Italy and Germany. Moſt Jews never eat the hind Quarters, becauſe of the Sinews and Fat. They leave the Meat an hour in Salt before it is boyled, to drain all the Blood out of it. They kill the Beaſt deſign'd for eating with a very ſharp Knife, that the Blood may quickly run out, and without interruption, and they cover it with Aſhes or Earth. Every Body is not qualify'd for this Action, it requires Ingenuity and Experience to kill the Beaſt, and to take the proper time. All Knives are not fit for it, and they don't uſually imploy thoſe that have belong'd to Strangers. They don't eat Meat and Milk or Cheeſe at the ſame Meal, becauſe the Law † forbids boiling the Kid in the Mothers Milk. They are leſs cautious about Fiſh than Meat, becauſe they are not forbidden to eat the Blood of 'em. They were formerly very nice about Wine, becauſe the Rabbies had forbidden the Drinking that which was made or touch'd by Strangers. The Orientals and Germans ſtill obſerve this Law; but the Italians elude it, and have no regard to it.

V. There are Laws || to regulate the Cloaths and the Purſe which becomes impure, when the Strings are broken, or a piece of Cloath is ſewed to it. A Shoe, whoſe Latchet is torn or unſew'd, grows unclean. We ſhould never end, ſhould we relate all the regulations about this matter.

VI. They muſt waſh frequently, but they are much perplexed about the meaſure and quality of the Waters they are to make uſe of. There are Waters which are never defiled, even tho' a Carkaſs be thrown into 'em, or an unclean Perſon drinks of 'em, becauſe there was no intention to defile 'em. There are others which muſt be repaired by Rain, and muſt run, otherwiſe they become unclean.

If Ink *, Gum or any thing fall into 'em, which alters their Nature, they ceaſe to be pure. If any one has waſh'd a Veſſel in 'em, that has been employed; if the Baker drops a Cake into them, they become Impure.

VII. They waſh themſelves in the Morning before they touch any thing, and throw not the Water on the Ground, becauſe it would be a crime to go over it. They repeat ſome Benedictions as they are wiping their Hands; but they begin to waſh again when they are to ſit at Table and eat Bread. Some do the ſame thing when they eat unclean Fruits, but this is in Oſtentation. This waſhing is not ſufficient, when the Queſtion is about eating things ſacred; for then Immerſion is neceſſary. Maimonides ſays, that they waſh the Hands when they ſhed the Water they have drawn in a Veſſel; but for Immerſion, they muſt plunge themſelves into a Ciſtern of Water that ought to contain a certain quantity.

I. WHEN a Jew is dying he ſends for ten Perſons with a Rabbi, before whom he repeats the Confeſſion of his Sins, which is compoſed in an Alphabetical Order; each Letter of the Alphabet containing one of the Sins which are uſually committed. As this Confeſſion is only made for the Ignorant, and for common uſe; thoſe that have a more lively Senſe of their Faults, and a more comprehenſive Knowledge, enter into the particulars of their Sins, after the manner of Penitent Chriſtians. The Sick Perſon alſo prays God to reſtore him his health, or to take care of his Soul; and eſpecially he begs that Death may ſerve for an Expiation. His Friends go to the Synagogue to pray to God for the Sick under another Name, to ſignifie that he has changed his Life.

II. Thoſe that continue in the Chamber wait the Moment when the Soul muſt ſeparate from the Body, and leave the Earth. They make it a particular piece of of Devotion to be present, and they think also to reap great benefit by it, especially when 'tis a Person eminent for his Learning and Piety; for David hath said * that he should not see Corruption, for he sees that Wise Men die. The Intention of the Prophet was on the contrary to teach, that no Body could secure himself from the Grave, since the Wise and Righteous died as well as Fools. Some kiss the dying Persons. The use is very antient; for Philo relating Jacob's Complaints upon the unexpected Death of his Son, makes him say, that he shall not have the Comfort of closing his Eyes, and giving him the last Kiss. As this was the last Farewel, and a Sign of Affection given to those that leave us for Eternity, this Opinion is found dispersed among the Heathens, who pleased themselves with receiving the last Breath of Persons that were dear to 'em, and this they call'd the Soul of the Dying; for they were not so foolish as to imagine, that the Spirit which had animated them, came into their Bodies, tho' they gave it this Name:

Sospite † te Saltem Moriar, Nero, tu mea conde
Lumina, & excipias hanc animam ore pio.

Herentemque || animam non tristis in ora mariti
Transtulit.

III. When the Person expires, one of the Assistants is obliged to tear his Cloaths in some place or other. This was moreover an antient Custom:

*It * Scissa veste Latinus*
Conjugis Attonitus fatis.

But above all the Hebrews fail'd not to rent their Cloaths upon all sorrowful Events. The Messenger who told Eli of the taking of the Ark, did it. Hezechiah's Envoys to Rabsheka returned with their Cloaths rent; but this custom was so general for the Dead, that God was obliged to forbid it the High-Priest, who never tore his Robe but out of Zeal, when he heard Blasphemy. At present we see but a faint track of this antient Custom; for they only cut some part of their Garment to shew they are afflicted.

IV. 'Tis pretended that there is another antient Custom, which is, to throw all the Water into the Street that is found in the House and in the Neighbourhood; but it is peculiar to the Modern Jews, and we don't find that the Antients practised it. The design of those that do it is to give notice, that there is a Person dead in that place, that he may be regretted and lamented, and this is what is found in Antiquity; for God threatned Jehoiakim as with a terrible Curse that no Body should lament him at the Hour of his Death, saying, Ah † my Brother, or ah my Sister; Ah Lord, or ah his Glory, he shall be buried with the Burial of an Ass.

V. After Death they lay out the Body upon a Cloth on the Earth with the Face cover'd; it being no longer lawful to see it. They bend the Thumb into the Hand, which they tye with the Strings of his Thaled, because the Thumb having the figure of the Name of God Schaddai, the Devil dares no more come near it. The rest of the Hand remains open, to signifie that he abandons all, whereas Children come into the World with their Hands clutched, to shew, say they, that God has put all the Riches of the Earth into their HANDS. They wash the dead Body, which is a Custom difficult to give a reason of; for what occasion is there of cleansing a Carcass which is going to be the Prey of Worms? It can't be said that the Dead desire it, to appear more neat, like Augustus, who order'd a Looking-glass to be brought to him, and his Hair to be comb'd, when he was going to dye. Few People have the like Curiosity; but yet the Jews have always done it. St. Jerome and some learned Men, his Followers, have thought that God threatned as with a Curse such as should be stoned for Witchcraft, because they should not be washed after Death; for the Scripture says ||, that their Blood shall be upon them. This Expression only signifies, that they would have justly deserved Death. The notion of the Jews is, that the Body ought to be clean, when it shall appear before God. The Heathens wash'd as well as the Jews; but they * had two different Reasons for it. First, They believ'd that the animal Spirits might be recall'd by hot Water, if the Soul was still there: Secondly, The Perfumes enter'd more easily into the Pores, when open'd by hot Water:

Tarquinii Corpus bona fœmina lavit & unxit.

VI. The Women also perform'd this Office amongst the Jews. Baronius † denies it: He also cites a passage which Rabbi Jacob took from Maimonides, by which it appears that the Men buried the Men, and that the Women took care of the Women's Sepulture. Besides the Evangelists observe, that the two Maries look'd where they laid JESUS CHRIST, because they had not the privilege of burying him, and this Office only belong'd to the Men. Lastly, Surius || relating the Virgin's discourse to Joseph, concerning the burying of her Son, introduces her saying, you shall take care of burying him, and embalming him with Myrrh, because she could not do it her self: But these Remarks are false. The Women wash'd the Dead among the Hebrews, as among the Latins, and this Custom still remains in the Nations, where they make it an Act of Devotion and Charity. 'Tis no wonder that the two Maries should not go to take the Body of Our Saviour, who had been put to Death. It required a Man of Authority, as Joseph of Arimathea, to obtain the liberty of Pilate, to take down the Body from the Cross, and to bury him in his Tomb. These timorous Women were contented to behold afar off, and fear hinder'd them from paying this last Duty to JESUS CHRIST. This Virgin's Discourse related by Surius is evidently contrary to the Gospel, which makes Our Lord's Body to be put into Joseph's Hands by Pilate's Officers. Among the Christians, Women undertake the laying out the Men, and the Jewish Women are no more scrupulous as Leo of Modena testifies *.

VII. They † formerly embalm'd the Bodies; for Joseph || after he had fell upon his Father and kiss'd him, commanded his Servants, the Physicians, to embalm him. Considerable Persons had Physicians among their Slaves, and the Physicians embalm'd in Egypt *. Every Disease had its particular Doctors, and there was one Order appointed to embalm the Dead. They scoop'd out the Brain with a bent Iron, and threw in Medicaments to fill up the vacuum; they also drew out the Entrails, putting in Myrrh, and whatever was proper to dry up the Humours, and preserve the Body. This Science related rather to Physicians than to others. There is some difficulty in the Eighty eight Psalm †, where David asks of God whether he will shew wonders to the Dead, and whether the Physicians shall rise again. Thus the LXX. and the Author of the Vulgar have translated it, and 'tis thought the Prophet alluded to the Seasoners, as Diodorus Siculus calls 'em, and to the Physicians, who in Judea, as in Egypt, were charged with Embalming the Dead, and that David asks whether these People † with all the Secrets of their Art, shall be able to raise any one again? Some Interpreters have translated it, Shall the Giants rise again? because the word in the Original is Rephaim. This is a mistake, for this title was only given to the Giants, because they made the Hands and Courage of those that saw them fail. It signifies properly, Men humbled, and laid in the dust, as it is in the Chaldee Paraphrase. David therefore alludes not to Physicians Embalmers; but he asks God whether he will do Miracles for the Dead, and whether those who are dejected and laid in the dust, shall rise again, which is much more Natural. However it be, it was || a Shame, and a kind of Curse for the Kings of Judah not to be embalm'd, nor have Perfumes burnt for 'em. Private Persons as well as Kings were at prodigious Expences on this account. Joseph of Arimathea spared no rich Spices for our Lord, who had been condemned to Death; and the devout Women, who feared lest there was not enough, went to carry more to the Grave, which shews a great Devotion to this Ceremony. The Jews practise it still in the East, where Perfumes are more common, and not so dear; but in Italy they are contented to put dry Roses, and Chamomil in the Water, with which they use to wash the dead Body.

VIII. When the Body is washed, it is shrowded. In most places they only put on a Pair of Drawers and a white Shift. It seems that this also was the Custom of the Christians. Abravanel affirms that Samuel was buried with the Cloak, wherewith he cover'd himself as a Prophet; but this Conjecture is only founded upon the Sorcery of the Pythoness, who shew'd Saul Samuel's Apparition with his Mantle, which is very suspected. Others say *, that they sumptuously apparell'd the Dead, and that the funeral Expences grew so excessive, that they were sometimes forced to fly and abandon the Corps; but Gamaliel the Old restrained this abuse; by ordering them only to cover their dead Body with a linnen Cloth, without any distinction of Conditions, which was executed. 'Tis said, his Friends and Disciples were disturbed at this Reformation, and with Grief beheld so great a Doctor buried without Pomp; But, 1. It was not the antient Custom to dress up the Dead. They wrapp'd them up with Fillets, as is observed in the Egyptian Mummies, and the History of Lazarus whom JESUS raised again. 2. I question, † whether this Rabbie's thought has been well understood; for he speaks not of Gamaliel's Friends, nor the Grief his funeral Reformation gave 'em. He insinuates rather, that the funeral Expences, which were excessive before Gamaliel, afflicted the Family more, than the loss of their Dead. Indeed this Doctor's Reformation was approved, instead of being condemned or lamented, and the Nation has followed this Example.

'Tis no wonder People should run into Excesses about habiting the Dead, however ridiculous the Customs be, which carries Vanity and Pride into the bosom of Corruption and Nothing. Pope Utychianus's Decree forbidding the interring the Martyrs without the Dalmatick, which was a white Robe, with Scarlet Bands, is false and spurious. The Martyrs were not usually clad with sumptuous Cloaths in their Graves. A Roman Senator, call'd Asturius took the Body of a Martyr of Cæsarea, and cloath'd it || with a white and precious Robe, and buried it very richly. However these Examples were rare, and 'twas not till after-times, that they display'd so much Cost upon the Dead; and the Impostor who forged Eutychianus's Decree, spoke conformably to the Age he lived in.

IX. There is a Controversy among the Rabbies about the kind of Habits they are to put upon the Dead. Some are persuaded that they may bury 'em in a Cloth mingled with Wooll, Thread, or Silk. 'Twould be a Crime in the Living to wear such, because they are forbidden by the Law; but they believe that Death dispenses with its Observation, and they add the words of David, * who complained, that he was free among the Dead. Others maintain, that if it be lawful to cloath the Dead with Linsey-woolsey habits, it can only be for the time they are exposed in the Coffin, and that they must be divested of 'em, when they are carried to the Grave. The devout cause themselves to be buried in the Cloaths they wore in their Life-time. Is it out of Simplicity, and do they think every thing ought to rot with 'em, or imagine, there is some vertue inherent in these Cloaths, as some Christians make it a Point of Devotion to die in a Franciscan habit? This last Superstition prevails, since they prefer the Dress they wore on the Day of Propitiations. Some add to the Habit, or to the Shift a kind of Rochet of very fine Linnen. Lastly, they put the Thaled over it, or the piece of Cloth, from which hang the four tufts we have already spoken of; and put a white Cap upon the Head.

X. They light a Candle, which always burns. Some place it at the Feet of the Dead; but Leo of Modena puts it near his Head. Some have imagined that this Light was ordered to enlighten the Soul, that returns to visit its Body, and to facilitate its entrance. But this Objection having been made to the Jews in a Conference held before the Pope in 1412. they † rejected the Accusation, and answer'd, that this very antient Custom among 'em had been established only to ridicule the Sorcerers, who maintain'd that the lighting a Wax Candle near the Dead Body, was sufficient to cause violent Pains in the separate Soul. I know not why these Christians made this Objection, because they also light a Taper, that burns constantly by the Dead. We find || too, that Constantine's Body clad in his Royal Habit was carried into the Temple, where he continued for some time, surrounded with Lamps and Torches.

XI. Lastly, they place him in the Coffin. This Coffin was formerly a kind of Bed so made that the Body laid upon it might be easily carried. The History of the Kings tells us * that Asa being dead, they laid him in the bed which was filled with sweet Odours. Josephus describing the Funeral of Herod the Great, says that his Bed was adorned with precious stones; that his Body rested under a purple Covering; that he had a Diadem and a Crown of Gold upon his Head; a Scepter in his Hand, and that all his house followed the bed. Lastly, R. Simon the Son of Eliezer says that great Lamentation is made for those that are carried on beds. A learned Man † has thought that the Christians caused many Beds to be carried to their Funeral like the Heathens, who multiplied 'em as so many marks of Honour and Dignity. He confesses he can't conjecture what determined the Christians thus to multiply the number of the funeral Beds; but he submits himself to the Authority of St. Epiphanius ||, who says, that George the Usurper of the Alexandrian See, had fixed the number of Beds the Christians were to carry at their Funerals. The errour is gross; for St. Epiphanius speaks not of Beds, but of those that made them; and instead of praising George of Alexandria for repressing the Luxury, he censures his Avarice, because he imposed a Tax upon those that made the beds, to carry the Corps, and established Offices form them which none were allow'd to exercise, but such as paid him a Tribute. Notker * makes St. Stephen's Body to be carried away in a Vessel, to be put into the hands of Gamaliel:

Poscit Cristicolas pia rapinâ
Corpus tollere dentibus leonum
Vectum navicula quod ipse sumit.

Gamaliel's Name inserted in this Account sufficiently discovers it to be a Fable. They carried the Bodies upon Beds, and these Beds were of Ivory, or of some other rich Materials, in proportion to their loving Luxury and Pomp. Those who loved to make a Figure in the eyes of the Publick, affected a distinction even in the Grave; but the vertuous man raised himself above these impertinences:

Nec mihi tunc fulcro sternatur lectus eburno,
Nec sit in Attalico mors mea nixa thoro.

The Coffin of the Modern Jews is peeked, when the Man dies rich. They load his Bed with Books, when 'tis a Rabbi, or a Man of Letters. They † cover their Coffin with black, and carry it out of the House, where all the People meet: Thus speaks Leo of Modena; but he curtails the Ceremony; for the Bodies were exposed, before they were carried to the Grave. When Tabitha was dead and wash'd, they laid her in an upper Chamber. The Romans commonly placed them in the Porch of the Houses: as was done by Augustus. The exposing the Bodies thus was necessary, to certify their natural Death; but some Christians do it to engage the Passengers to pray for the Dead. Gregory of Tours relates in his time, that Pelagia prayed her Son not to bury her till the fourth Day, that her Servants might have time to see her and pray for her.

XII. When all the Ceremonies are performed || to the dead Body, they take it out of the House, and all the Company gather round it. The Relations and Friends fail not to be present. Thus when Joseph buried his Father, the servants of Pharaoh, the Elders of his house, and all the Elders of the Land of Egypt, and all the house of Joseph, and his brethren, and his father's house followed the Corps to do honour to this Patriarch. Among the Heathens the Enemies to a Family were excluded from the Interment; and 'tis believed the same thing was observed among the Jews, since David * forbids the Death of Jonathan to be told in Gath, and published in Ascalon, for fear the Daughters of the uncircumcised should rejoice. But this is not the meaning of David's words, who spoke not of the Funeral † of Saul and his Son, whose Bodies were carried away by the Philistins after the Victory, and who were buried and burn'd without Pomp by the Inhabitants of Jabesh. 'Tis a Song, wherein he Poetically deplores the Fate of Unfortunate Princes, and the Shame that redounded upon Israel. He would not have the Heathens insult the People of God upon so Tragical a Death, and so Scandalous a Defeat. The Proof alledg'd is a wretched one. The Talmudists say, that Jacob commanded his Children to hinder an uncircumcised Man from touching his Coffin, lest that touch should drive away God. The Fact is false, and this Command of Jacob imaginary; for on the contrary, the House of Pharaoh, and the great Lords of Egypt honour'd his Burial. Nor is it to be imagined, what this presence of God, in a Coffin is, that is lost by the touch of an Infidel: But however there is reason to conclude from this Testimony of the Talmudists ||; that this was their Opinion. So that tho' the Jews don't fear the insulting the Manes of the Dead, they distinguish the Persons, that ought to make up the funeral Train. Women were assistant as well as Men; for Naim's Widow was at the Burial of her Son. The Christians did the same thing in St. Jerom's time, who censures his friend Paula, because she fainted away at her Daughter's Funeral.

XIII. The Burial was made in the Day-time; and Tobias's example, who carried the Dead Bodies of his Country-men to bury them in the Night is of no consequence; since he speaks of a time of Persecution, when the Sepulture of the Dead was made a Crime. We are told *, that they carried the Corps in Procession into all the Streets and Publick places, since JESUS CHRIST found the Herse at the gate of the City, where the great Streets and Markets met. This is purely a Conjecture; but 'tis almost a general received Custom to make a Procession, tho' of this mournful Object. The Christians have always done it. The Streets and Porches were crowded with People at St. Basil's Funeral, and even the Roofs of the Houses were filled at that of Fabiola, described by St. Jerome. The Modern Jews have renounced these Pomps, because they are not in Places, where they enjoy a full Liberty; but when they represent to us the funeral Pomps of the Rabbies, we see that they have out-done all other Nations. Some recommended the passing of their Procession into the great Cities, that all the Country might be moved, and drawn out to this Spectacle, and the Crowd of those that followed the funeral Train of these great Doctors is represented to us as infinite.

XIV. Besides the Witnesses and Spectators, there are two sorts of People necessary to Funerals, hired Weepers and Bearers.

The Prophet Amos representing a great Mourning, says † they shall cry in the Streets, Alas, alas, they shall call for such as are skilful of Lamention. Ezekiel || representing the fall of the City Tyre, under the Emblem of Death, and the Funeral of a Man, enters into a greater detail of Ceremonies, The Mariners shall cry bitterly, and shall cast up dust upon their heads, they shall wallow themselves in the ashes, and they shall make themselves utterly bald for thee, and gird them with sackcloth, and they shall weep for thee with bitterness of heart, and bitter wailing. Here you have an Abstract of the Acts of Grief, that were publickly express'd; upon which it must be observed, that they violated thereby the Law of God, which prohibited cutting themselves, and plucking off the Hairs; And the Jews continued a long time in this breach of the Law; since St. Jerome observes in his time, that some among them cut and mangled their Skin, and made themselves bald by plucking off their Hairs, which they sacrificed to the Dead in imitation of the Heathens; but at present they are grown wiser, and have left off both these Customs. Tears and Publick Lamentations are allow'd only for those that die within the Pale of the Synagogue, and of a natural Death; for the Rabbies have determined that a Man may afflict himself for the death of a person condemned by the Sanhedrim; but it is not lawful to lament over him. They distinguish betwixt Affliction of the Heart, and Lamentation, which breaks out in Tears and Publick Ejulations. They alledge for a reason of this Decision, that the Contempt express'd for the Condemned, serves for an expiation of their Crime. Tho' * this Decision be read in the Doctors, it is not so antient as they pretend, since the Daughters of Jerusalem, who saw J. CHRIST, condemned by the Sanhedrim, pass along in his way to Mount Calvary, open'd the Sluces of their Grief, instead of confining it.

XV. The accompanying a dead Body, and carrying it to the Grave † is look'd upon as a good Action; and therefore they all carry it by turns upon their Shoulders, and make it a point of honour to perform this Duty. They ascribe this Devotion to the Patriarchs and Saints of the Jewish Church, because the Scripture observes, that they buried || their Relations, that is, they carried 'em to the Grave. But this is wresting the Text; for the Sacred Writers mean by Burial all the Offices paid and caused to be paid to the Dead. They were the Christians rather, that adopted this Superstition; for tho' there were Bearers, ex officio, as appears by Justinian's Laws, yet sometimes Kings have been seen to assist in carrying a dead Body; at least Usuard * relates it of Theodorick. St. Basil was carried to the Ground by the hands of the Saints. They were Bishops, who bowed their Necks and Heads under Paula's Coffin, and carried her with their hands. St. Jerom's words are ambiguous; for did they carry the Coffin upon their heads or with their hands? or rather, did they not carry it on their Shoulders like the Jews? no great stress is to be laid upon what Metaphrastes says, that the Apostles carried the Virgin upon their Shoulders: But however, he described her funeral Pomp according to the Custom of his time. And it must be confess'd, that this was the most ordinary Custom. It was likewise practised by the Heathens; for Persius ridiculed the freed Men, who bore the Body of their Benefactor:

Illum
Hesterni capite induto subiere Quirites.

He calls 'em Quirites of a Day, because they had but just received their liberty, and he makes 'em cover their Heads, because they wore a Cap which was the sign of it. All the Spaniards and Macedonians that were at Rome, would needs carry the bed of Paulus Æmilius, when he was buried, to testify their Gratitude for the benefits they had received from him. The Tribunes carried Germanicus's Ashes upon their Shoulders. It only appears from a Verse of Horace, that the Shoulders which bore this burden were naked:

Cadaver
Unctum oleo largo nudis humeris tulit hæres.

But this Custom was peculiar to the Romans, and never came among the Jews or Christians.

XVI. In some places † they carried lighted Torches with the Corps, and sang doleful Ditties. But it does not appear || from any passage of Scripture, that the antient Jews carried Torches in their Funerals in the Day-time: and those that cite Josephus * for their Voucher, as if he had lighted Lamps and Fires at Herod the Great's Funeral are mistaken; for he makes no mention of it. 'Tis also very vainly observed that they buried in Shady Groves; for besides that this was not always done, they might have a Lamp to lighten the Grove without making an useless Illumination. And the Christians themselves laughed at this Custom when it began. But yet in St. Jerome's time, the Priests, who assisted at Paula's Funeral, held Lamps and lighted Tapers. The same was practised in the Greek Church in St. Chrysostom's time. The Christians had borrow'd this from the Heathens, after they had long insulted them for burning Lamps by Day-light. The Modern Jews, that are mingled with the Christians, have imitated them in the places where they have had a Liberty to do it.

XVII. David sang an Epicedium upon the Funeral of Abner, whose Death afflicted him. It appears also by the Gospel, that they not only had Songsters, but hired Musicians; for J. CHRIST found Minstrils making a great noise at the Gate of a Nobleman, whose Daughter he raised from the Dead. Her death no doubt had drawn 'em thither:

Tibia cui teneros suetum deducere manes.

Yet it must be confess'd, that this Custom has often varied in the Synagogue; for a Council † of Narbonne held in the Sixth Century observes that the Jews formerly carried their Dead to the Grave peaceably without Instruments of Musick; and it charges upon 'em as a Novelty the introducing, for some Years past, the use of Hymns. It forbids the doing it for the future, and condemns to a Fine of Six Ounces payable to the Lord of the Place such as shall act contrary to the Prohibition of the Council. Maimonides says, that the poorest Jew is obliged to hire two Players upon the Flute, and a Weeper for the Burying of his Wife, and that the rich ought to increase the Number in proportion to their Estates. The Talmudists forbid weeping at the sound of Flutes, which an Idolater has brought on a Sabbath-day, tho' they be design'd for Funerals. Lastly, Leo of Modena says, that they sing Lamentations; but this must be understood only of Places, where the Jews have a full Liberty.

XVIII. The Cœmeteries were commonly out of the Cities, and pretty far remote. Jerusalem alone made an Exception to the general Rule; for it contained many Tombs, as of David and Solomon, who were buried in the City of Sion. There were publick and common ones. The Priests bought a Field out of Jerusalem to bury Strangers in. They meant doubtless by this the Roman Idolaters, who then came frequently to Jerusalem, and who had Troops there, whose Bodies they would not confound with those of the common Jews. There were also private ones. And as the places about Jerusalem were full of Rocks and Caves, Men bought them for their Burying-places, or else they dug new ones. Abraham bought of Ephraim the Hethian the Field and Cave of Machpelah to bury his Wife: where his Children and himself were put after their Death. I know not why the Interpreters torture themselves about the description of this Cave, as if there were two of 'em; one above for the Men, and another below for the Women. 'Tis true, the Septuagint and Vulgar have translated the Name Machpelah, by the word double. The ‖ Jewish Doctors maintain that this Cave was called double, by Adam, who fearing, lest his Body and Bones should be carried away to be worshipped, caused himself to be buried a great depth, and therefore dug in the Rock a Cave within a Cave, which gave it the name of double or Machpelah. Some * Christian Doctors have followed 'em; for they believe that there was a little Cave in a great one, or * rather that there were two different places hollow'd to place the Dead in; as is the Cuſtom in great Sepulchres.

XIX. Benjamin of Tudela † relates, that being in a Valley near Hebron, he found this double Cave, of which he gives a Deſcription. "Here, ſays he, is "a Temple that bears the Name of Abraham, and "was formerly a Synagogue. The Chriſtians have "built ſix Sepulchres, to which they have given the "Names of Abraham and Sarah, of Iſaac and Re-"becca, of Jacob and Leah, and they ſhew them to "Travellers for Money; but when a Jew comes "there, the Porter, after he is paid, opens an Iron "Gate, which was made in the time of the Pa-"triarchs. The Jew enters in with a Wax-candle "in his Hand, paſſes the firſt and ſecond Cave with-"out finding any thing, but in the third are the "Sepulchres of the Patriarch's diſtinguiſh'd by their "Names. Theſe Tombs have a Lamp continually "burning by 'em. There are alſo great Casks full "of dry Bones, becauſe the Iſraelites continue to "carry their dead Bodies thither. At the end of "the Field of Machpelah is Abraham's Houſe, and "a Fountain before it." No other Edifice is raiſed here out of Veneration for this Patriarch.

Benjamin ſpeaks of three Caves inſtead of two; but 'tis manifeſt enough, that this is a work of the Chriſtians, who to get Money out of Strangers, make 'em believe that they ſee the Tombs of the Patriarchs and their Wives. This Iron Gate fabricated in the Patriarch's time, and this Houſe of Abraham are Chimerical, and ſo is the Privilege of the Jew of entering by the Iron Gate, but they abuſed his credulity, to draw the more Money from him. How did they permit the dead Bodies of all the Iſraelites to be carried into Abraham's Tomb, ſince they durſt not build a Houſe, in the ſame place where his was ſituate. If ſome People have been willing to be buried in the Sepulchre of the Prophets, it is ſtill more common to build Houſes near thoſe they formerly inhabited. So that this Veneration for Abraham's Houſe, which for a great many Ages has diſappeared, was imagined to delude Travellers. Abraham dwelt in Hebron, and his Houſe was not at the end of the Plain of Machpelah, which was below Mamre. Benjamin did not know that Adam ought to be buried with the Patriarchs, and for this reaſon Hebron was formerly called Kiriath-Arbah, that is the City of the four Men, Adam, Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob, who had been buried near it. Perhaps this Notion was not yet come among the Chriſtians of his time. But at leaſt he ought not to have paſſed under ſilence the fear, which Adam had of being worſhipped, and the precaution that he took to prevent this Idolatry; for it makes for the honour of the firſt Man, and the Jewiſh Doctors have divulged the Story. As there is nothing more uncertain than Etymologies, and the Tales they tell of the firſt Men, we ſhall not inſiſt upon 'em. It ſuffices to obſerve that Machpelah was not barely a Cave; but a conſiderable Diſtrict, ſince it coſt four hundred Silver Shekels, which was a conſiderable Sum at that time. There was a Field and a Wood. The Patriarchs were buried there with their Wives, without any diſtinction of Caves that is known. J. CHRIST was laid in a new Sepulchre, which Joſeph of Arimathea had made in the Rock. This Sepulture was preferr'd in Judæa before all others; but at preſent the Jews are obliged to take up with a Field, which the Chriſtians and Muſſulmans allot 'em in ſome uſeleſs place, as at Conſtantinople, Venice, and Amſterdam: It lies within the Walls of the City of Rome.

XX. The Sepulchre ſhou'd be called the Houſe of the Dead; but on the contrary they give it the title of the Houſe of the Living, or Houſe of the Age; and they imagin that theſe Names were invented by the Phariſees, who would teach their Enemies the Sadduces, that the Immortal Soul lived after its ſeparation from the Body, and that the Body ſhall riſe in the World to come. The Heathens called their Tombs a little Houſe.

Et domus exilis Plutonia.

Berthius corrects the Text, and would have it read the houſe of Exile ||, and that Hell be meant by it, where the Souls are in eternal Exile, and Mr. Le Moine defended this Conjecture. 'Tis taking a great deal of Pains to authorize falſe Ideas; for Hell with the Heathens was the Habitation of Souls after Death, and it was not looked upon as a place of Exile, but a fixed Abode. Pluto was the God of the Dead, and the dead ſhut up in the Grave, poſſeſs'd but a little Houſe, ſuch was the Sepulchre of that Man of Mantua, who was call'd Heaven, and who had lived in prodigious State and Grandure.

Tres pateat Cœli ſpatium non amplius ulnas.

XXII. The Rabbies * give an exact Deſcription of Sepulchres. They make the Door of them very narrow; for generally a Stone, which they rowl'd † upon the Mouth of the Sepulchre, ſufficed to ſhut it. They left a great void ſpace, where the Bearers enter'd, and reſted the Coffin, before they placed it. On the ſides, and at the end, they hollowed a certain number || of Nitches, in which they placed the dead Bodies of each Family. Theſe Nitches were alſo very common in the Catacombs of Rome, Naples, and Sicily. In the mean time, I know not how the Doctors deſcription of the Sepulchres can conſiſt with the Sacred Hiſtory.

XXII. For the Women that went to Joſeph of Arimathea's Sepulchre to embalm the Body of JESUS, found the Stone rowled away, becauſe it was ſhut with a Stone; and theſe Women violated the Rabbinical Law, which forbids the opening a Grave, when it is ſhut; for they deſign'd to open it to beſtow the Perfumes they had brought. But this Law was unknown, and hath not the Antiquity which is aſſign'd to it; theſe Women ſtooping their heads and looking down, perceived that the Body of JESUS was not there. Their Action proves, that 'twas ſufficient to look into the Sepulchre, to ſee the Situation of the Dead, and therefore they were not placed in Niches.

We find another Example in the Old Teſtament; for the dead Perſon that revived upon touching Eliſha's Bones, could not have gathered this vertue from his dead Body, if it had been placed alone in a Nich of ſome Cubits, as the Doctors ſay. A double Cave in the hollow of a Rock was dug, in which they rank'd the dead Bodies one by another. There were only ſome of 'em in which they contrived Niches, and Apartments on the ſides to contain the greater number; and thus the Doctors may be reconciled with the Holy Scripture.

duct or a High-way, nor to gather Wood there, nor to lead Flocks to Paſture. They formerly placed 'em upon the great Roads to awaken the Curioſity of the Travellers, and preſerve the Memory of the Dead. Thus Jacob not being able to carry Rachel to Machpelah, buried her in the High-way of Bethlehem. This Patriarch placed upon his Wife's Tomb, a Pillar that continued a long time. But they have ſince put their Tombs in Caves, and the hollows of Rocks and Mountains. Laſtly, they have placed 'em in Gardens, and at the entrance of the Synagogues, or rather they have taken up a Cuſtom of building Synagogues near the Tombs of Saints and Great Men, we ſhall ſpeak in the Sequel of thoſe that were built near the Sepulchre of Ezekiel. The ſame honour has been done to Eſther and Mordecai. The Jews meet in Multitudes on their Feſtivals, and having read the Hiſtory of their Deliverance, they revel it out, juſt as the Chriſtians do about the Churches on the Feſtivals of the Saints, to whoſe honour they were built.

XXIV. The Prophet Zechary * had a Synagogue near his Tomb, where the Jews being threaten'd with a Maſſacre, becauſe the Muſſulmans accuſed 'em of cauſing a Drought, which deſtroyed the Country, went to beg Rain of God. They had but three Days granted 'em to obtain it, and they all reſolved to kill one another, if it did not Rain at the end of the third Day, to deprive the Heathens of the Pleaſure of murthering them; but being aſſembled about Zechary's Tomb, and having faſted and prayed, God cauſed it to Rain the ſame Day.

Indeed 'tis one of the Jewiſh Superſtitions, to go and Pray by the Tombs of the Saints, to whom they attribute a Power of ſuccouring their Sollicitors. Thus † Caleb eſcaped from the hands of his Perſecutors, becauſe he went to the Tomb of his Anceſtors, to pray 'em to intercede for his Safety. They alledge four different Reaſons of this Cuſtom. 1. They believe that the Souls return, and hover about the Tombs, where their Bodies are buried. 2. They imagine that there is a ſenſitive vertue in it, which being made active by the Prayer of the Devout, goes and wakes the Soul in Heaven, and admoniſhes it to Pray. 3. They are alſo perſuaded, that the Divine Influences are communicated to Men, by the Bones of the Dead. 4. R. Levi the Son of Schammay, aſſerts that they only go to the Sepulchres, to learn more preſſing Motives of Humility, and he proves || his Opinion from the Cuſtom of praying by the Tombs of Infidels, from which nothing can be expected, as well as near the Aſhes and Bones of the Saints of Iſrael. He thinks that this Leſſon naturally ariſes from the Sepulchre, you are all dead like theſe unleſs you be converted. We have ſaid enough of Sepulchres, and the Holineſs they annex to 'em.

I. TOſtatus * Biſhop of Avila, who is followed by many Interpreters, affirms, that they burnt the Bodies of the Jewiſh Kings, and only preſerved their Bones, whilſt the Fleſh was reduced to Aſhes, becauſe, as Kimki ſays, they were afraid it would rot. They produce the Example of Saul and his Children, who were burnt by the Inhabitants of Jabeſh. Jeremy † aſſures Zedechias, that they ſhall burn him as they did his Fathers: and on the contrary, it was a Malediction on Joram not to be burnt after his death. Nor ought we to be perplexed about what the Scripture ſo often ſays, that the Jews buried their Dead; for they alſo buried the Aſhes and Bones of thoſe they burnt among the Heathens. Beſides, we are to diſtinguiſh betwixt the Vulgar and Perſons of Quality. The Bodies of the former were buried, but thoſe of Princes and Kings were burnt.

But by this we ſee that there is nothing ſo clear but may be darken'd; for the Scripture never ſpeaks of the funeral Piles, of Urns, or of Ceremonies ſo well known and at the ſame time ſo neceſſary, when they burnt Bodies. But this ſilence is no obſtruction to the carrying on their Conjecture. The Example of Saul is the only one, and 'tis eaſie to gueſs the reaſon of ſo extraordinary an Event. The Inhabitants of Jabeſh were afraid that the Philiſtines would take their turn to paſs over Jordan, and carry away the Bodies of Saul, and his Children, as they had done themſelves, and to expoſe 'em a ſecond time to the Mob. To prevent an Enterprize that they could not have hinder'd, they burnt their Bodies contrary to common Cuſtom; but they carried away the other Bodies, which it was eaſie to preſerve. 'Twas only therefore out of neceſſary Precaution, that they burnt thoſe of theſe Princes, and therefore David commended it: But a general conſequence is not to be drawn from hence to all the Kings. Beſides, they impertinently perplex themſelves with the Examples of Joram and Zedekias, for the Scripture ſpeaks not of burning * their Bodies; but Perfumes, which were burnt before the Corps, according to the Cuſtom of the Jews. They ſtill bury their Dead, and never burnt 'em.

II. Coming to the Burying-place, a Speech is made to the Dead: "Bleſſed, ſay they † be God, who "has formed thee, fed thee, maintain'd thee, and "taken away thy Life. O Dead! he knows your "Numbers, and ſhall one Day reſtore your Life: "Bleſſed be he that takes away life and reſtores it." They put the Coffin in the Ground, and if it be a Perſon of Merit, they make his Elogy. It ſeems that Job || alluded to this Cuſtom, when he conſiders it as a Curſe to the wicked whoſe root ſhall be dried up, and his branch cut off, his remembrance ſhall periſh from the Earth, and he ſhall have no name in the ſtreet. It ſeems alſo, that David, when he had the News of Jonathan's Death, made a kind of funeral Oration for his Friend. But theſe Proofs are very weak; for Job ſpeaks of the reputation, which is loſt after Death, and the Street do's not ſignify a Cœmetery. David did not aſſiſt at the Funeral of Saul and Jonathan. He only made a Song of Lamentation upon the loſs of the Battle, and the death of the Princes that were kill'd in it. 'Tis much more probable, that the Vanity of the Rabbies, and afterwards that of the People have produced this Cuſtom; for we find no inſtance of it in Scripture. Some Chriſtians affirm, that this Cuſtom commenced among 'em, by the Bleſſed Virgin, at whoſe Funeral the Apoſtles teſtified a holy Emulation to make her Panegyrick, and they compare her to thoſe Roman Ladies, to whom the honour of Funeral Orations, which were before peculiar to the Men, was granted becauſe they ſacrificed their Ornaments to the Safety of the State, either to deliver the City in the War of the Veij, or to pay the Soldiers in that of the Gauls. The Virgin having furniſhed her Gold, that is her Son, for the Redemption of Men, it was fit, that the firſt Funeral Oration among Chriſtians ſhould be made for her. But this Cuſtom was not known in the firſt Ages of the Church; it was left to the Heathens, as a mark of their Pride and Vanity; the Chriſtians at laſt fell into the ſame exceſs as the Jews, who in the begining deſpiſed theſe Encomiums, and at preſent purchaſe them.

III. After the Encomium they make a Prayer, which they call the Righteouſneſs of Judgment, becauſe they give Thanks to God for having pronounced an equitable Sentence upon the Dead; and it begins with theſe words of Deuteronomy *, he is the Rock, his work is perfect. It has been imagin'd that all Nations bury'd their Dead with their Face towards the Eaſt, and this has been thought to be an Univerſal Teſtimony of the hope of the Reſurrection. But not to ſpeak of innumerable Heathens that burnt their Dead Bodies, the Athenians had a Law importing †, that the Dead ſhall be buried with their Face towards the Weſt. Nor is is certain, as is ſaid, that the Jews imitate the Chriſtians in the ſituation they give their Dead: They only turn their Face towards Heaven, crying ||, Go in Peace: Thoſe that moſt ſcrupulouſly obſerve the Rites of the Talmudiſts ſay, Go to Peace; becauſe the firſt of theſe Benedictions was given by David * to Abſalom, who remain'd hung in the Foreſt by his Hair, and the other was given to Moſes by Jethro his Father-in-law †, whoſe Journey was proſperous ||.

They * lay a little Bag of Earth upon the Head of the Dead; nail up the Coffin, if it be Man. Ten Perſons turn ſeven times round it, and ſay a Prayer for the Soul of the deceaſed; but this is not done in all places. Their neareſt Relation tears a corner off his Cloaths, and laſtly they lay the Body into the Grave.

IV. As they let down the Coffin, they muſt take care that there be not another, becauſe they will not have two Bodies laid upon one another. To this they apply what is ſaid in the Hiſtory of the Acts †, that Judas went into his own place, and that he purchaſed a Field by his Iniquity, Judas did not purchaſe the Field, which was afterwards called Aceldama. St. Peter therefore meant, that all that remain'd of his Treaſon, was a particular Sepulchre, and the place where he was buried; but this Explication was ſtrain'd. St. Peter ſays, that Judas had purchaſed a Field by his Iniquity, becauſe he had furniſhed the High-Prieſt with an opportunity, and Money to purchaſe this Field of Blood. And thus it is written, that the believing Wife ſhall ſave the unbelieving Husband; that is, ſhall furniſh him with opportunities and means of ſaving him. Beſides, neither the Field nor the Place mentioned by St. Luke ſignifie the Nich of a Sepulchre. Laſtly, 'tis eaſie to reconcile the Evangeliſt with St. Peter, without burying Judas in a particular place. I queſtion too whether they were ſo ſcrupulous at that time as not to ſuffer one Body to touch another, for the ſituation of Joſeph of Arimathea's Sepulchre, in which our Lord was buried, evidently proves the contrary.

V. Baronius || ſpeaks of one Canaparius a Monk, who, conceited with the ſame Superſtition as the Jews, anathematiz'd thoſe who durſt lay a Dead Body upon his:

Nemo ſuum vel alienum cadaver ſuper me mittat. Si quis hoc præſumpſerit, ſit maledictus & in perpetuum anathemate conſtrictus.

A Man muſt be very fond of Anathema's and Curſes, to pronounce them upon ſuch light ſubjects, and to make 'em Eternal. 'Tis ſtrange that a Monk ſhould aſſume ſo great an Authority; for in reality this mighty Superſtition was not general among the Chriſtians. Father Montfaucon * ſpeaks of three Coffins which he ſaw at Arles laid upon one another, in which there happens a perpetual Miracle, To the Honour of St. Concord; for they always ſee Water in that of the middle one, which ebbs and flows with a flux and reflux. This ingenious Traveller has reaſon to refer the Prodigy to the credit of Relators. 'Tis not the Miracle which we are in ſearch of; but we ſee that the Chriſtians have not been in all places ſo ſuperſtitious as the Monk Canaparius, ſince there were three Sepulchres laid upon one another.

VI. However let it not be forgotten that both Heathens and Chriſtians have often refuſed burying Strangers in their Tombs. † Sir George Wheler has brought Lyſimachus's Epitaph from Greece, which forbids, under the Penalty of Five Hundred Pence, the burying any one in his Tomb, and we find a like inſcription in Gruterus ||.

VII. The Relations of the Dead are the first that throw Earth upon their Coffin. Each of those present throw in handfuls, or with a Shovel, till the Grave be fill'd. Before they leave the Cœmetery, each plucks up Grass three times, and throws it behind him, saying, * they shall flourish like Grass of the Earth, and this in hopes of the Resurrection, which shall restore the Bodies, or to teach that all Flesh is like Grass, and the Glory of Man is like the Flower of the Field. They † also put dust upon their Heads to remember, that they are Dust, and they shall return to Dust. Some add, as taking farewel of the Dead, we shall follow thee as the order of Nature shall require. They wash, sit down, and rise nine times, saying, He || that dwelleth in the secret places of the most High, and at last the Company departs.

VIII. They distinguish the Age of the Children that die. If the Child expires thirteen Days after his Birth, a Woman carries it in her Lap; if it be a little older, they make it a Coffin, but they don't carry it on their Shoulders like bigger Corps: One or two Women make the Funeral Pomp. It is not lawful to alter this Order, because if there were two Women and one Man, they might both yield to be corrupted, whereas two Men don't so easily agree to debauch one Woman. At least this is the Notion of the Rabbies, which is founded upon the great distance of the Cœmeteries from the Cities, which gives opportunity of Temptation by the way. In the mean time *, they tell, that a Woman carrying her Child to the Burying-place, under pretence that it was Dead, tho' it was still alive, to find an opportunity of committing Adultery with him that accompanied her, suffer'd her self to be dishonour'd by ten Men, that follow'd her. This extraordinary Event shews they had reason to take Precautions, for the maintaining a Decorum, and preventing the Disorders, occasion'd by the weakness of Women.

IX. They mark'd the number of the Tombs with Chalk, and whited 'em every Year in February, that they might be known, for fear of defiling themselves in passing by. 'Tis thought that our Saviour † alluded to this Custom when he compared the Pharisees to whited Sepulchres, but yet I must doubt of it, since he speaks of an Ornament set round the Tombs to beautify 'em, and to note the respect they had for the Dead, rather than a Precaution to prevent Defilement. JESUS CHRIST || uses a very different Comparison; for he taxes the Scribes and Pharisees with being like disappearing Sepulchres, over which Men walk without perceiving the Stench and Bones they contain. They were the hidden Tombs the Doctors ought to whiten, rather than those that were visible, if they meant to avoid the stink and pollution. Nevertheless they did not do it in our Saviour's time, since he draws his comparison from obscure or conceal'd Sepulchres. To say that they were obscure, because they had no Epitaph or Name, is an overstretch of Subtilty. These Tombs were those that were dug in the heart of Rocks and Mountains; the Grass grew over 'em, and it was not perceived, that there were stinking Carkasses within. Thus the Pharisees so artfully concealed their Corruption, that it was difficultly discovered; and so it is the same thought that CHRIST diversifies in St. Luke and St. Matthew; but this Diversity serves to prove, there were two sorts of Sepulchres, some of which were adorned and whited, whilst others were unknown and concealed. 'Tis not therefore true, that it was a general Custom to chalk 'em over.

X. Epitaphs were yet in use among the antient Jews. Benjamin * of Tudela travelling into Judæa, read the Inscriptions of the Tombs of the Patriarchs, that were buried at Machpelah. This is the Sepulchre of Abraham our blessed Father. But the Christians, who for a long time had the Custody of these Tombs, had made these Inscriptions to deceive devout Travellers, and to get the more Money by 'em. The Holy Scripture says, † that Jacob having buried Rachel in the way to Bethlehem, set a Pillar there. The Author of the Vulgar has translated it a Title, and hence it has been concluded, that it was an Epitaph, since the Heathens engraved some Verses upon the Tombs of the Dead, and these Verses were called Titles. We find an antient Inscription with these words.

Corpus habet tellus, & saxum nomen inane.

Gutherius || observes that we must not hereby understand, a Cœnotaphium, but a Stone that became useless, because no Epitaph was cut upon it. But I question whether he has rightly understood the Poet's thought; for the Name of the Dead was engraven upon this Stone, as the Earth had his Body. But he calls it a vain Name, because indeed it is a vain Imagination, to think of conveying a Man's Name to Posterity by such sort of Monuments. However it be, Jacob engraved no Epitaph upon Rachel's Tomb, as the Author of the Vulgar insinuates; but he raised a heap of Stones, and thus the Monuments Christians raised upon the Tombs of Martyrs were call'd Titles. And therefore of all that vast number of * titular Churches, that are seen at Rome, there is not one, but is consecrated to some Martyr, who had suffer'd in that City.

XI. Benjamin of Tudela † relates, that five hundred Paces from Bethlehem, he saw Rachel's Sepulcher, upon which was a Pillar composed of twelve Stones with reference to Jacob's twelve Children, which is covered with a Vault supported by four Pillars; and all the Jews that travel thither engrave their Names upon one of the twelve Stones. Nachmanides says also, that it was also a thousand Paces from Rachel's Statue in Bethlehem, we must not quarrel with these two Jews upon some little difference that may be found in the distance from the place where Rachel was buried. They have come nearer to the mark than St. Jerome ||, who going to subtilize upon the Hebrew word, thought it ought to be translated, that Jacob enter'd Ephrata at Bethlehem, at the choice time of the Earth, and that by choice time we must understand the Spring, when the Flowers spring from the Earth, and Travellers fill their hands with Nosegays. There is nothing but falshood in this Explication; for Jacob who pass'd the Euphrates, whilst Laban was gone to Shear his Sheep, could not arrive in Judæa till towards Autumn, and the Hebrew word does not signify what St. Jerome makes it. Besides these Rabbies, who as well as the LXX. know best the use of words, own that it was a stone Monument, that Jacob erected upon his Wife's Grave; Indeed it was the antient Custom of the Orientals, and particularly of the Egyptians to raise Pyramids upon their Sepulchres:

Pyramides claudant indignaque Mausolæa.

Absalom

Abſalom * deſirous to render his Memory immortal, ſupplied the want of Children by a Pillar, which he ſet up in the Valley of the King, and which remain'd a long time.

XII. But tho' Epitaphs are not ſo antient as the Patriarch David or Abſalom; yet the Jews have long ſince received this Cuſtom. We may read thoſe produced by Buxtorf: I have ſet this Stone for a Monument over the Head of the Venerable R. Eliakim deceaſed,——God grant he may repoſe in the Garden of Eden, with the reſt of the Saints of the Earth, Amen, Amen, Selah. Here is the Elogy of a Maid: I have erected this Statue †, on the head of the moſt holy, moſt chaſt, and moſt excellent Rebecca, Daughter to the Holy Rabbi Samuel the Levite; who has lived in good Reputation, and who died the Eighth of December in the Year 135. (that is in the Year 1375.) Let her Soul be bound in the Garden of Eden. We find another for R. Baruch, who deſcended towards thoſe who are among the Cedars, and God is prayed to, that his Soul may be in the bundle of Life. It would be uſeleſs to multiply theſe Inſcriptions, which may be ſeen elſewhere.

XIII. Bozius thought he had diſcovered the Jews Cœmetery at Rome by Candleſticks with ſeven branches, and ſome Inſcriptions, amongſt which was the word Synagogue. As it was of the greateſt importance to make this Diſcovery, they have dug in the Janicle beyond the Tyber, and coming from the Gate have found Tombs with Candleſticks with theſe words, Here lies in peace, and the title of Synagogue. But, as this ſtill appear'd dubious, they have call'd in the Teſtimony of Benjamin to their aſſiſtance, who coming to Rome, diſcovered on the Banks of the Tyber, a Cave, where ten juſt Perſons reſted, who had been kill'd under the Reign of the Tyrants.

XIV. But the antient Jews did not dwell on the Janicle, as is ſuppoſed without any Proof, their Dwelling being in the Vatican, near St. Angelo. I will demonſtratively prove it by an antient Author, which Father Montfaucon has lately publiſhed upon his return from Italy. Here alſo they had their Tombs and their Burial-place. For Lampridius affirms, that Heliogabalus went to exerciſe ſome Elephants upon the Vatican Mount, and for that purpoſe they were obliged to level the Tombs that were there, and which hinder'd this exerciſe. Whoſe Tombs were theſe raiſed above the Ground, that hinder'd the Elephants from marching in Order? They were not thoſe of the Roman Lords, ſince their Bodies were burnt; nor were they thoſe of the Vulgar, ſince the Wells in which they were thrown to rot, were in a place very remote from hence, near Mecœnas's Gardens upon Mount Eſquilius:

Huc || prius anguſtis ciceta cadavera Cellis
Conſervus vili portanda locabat in Arca;
Hoc miſeræ plebi ſtabat commune ſepulcrum.

Nor can it be ſaid that theſe numerous Tombs raiſed above the Ground that ſtopp'd Heliogabalus's carreer were thoſe of the Chriſtians; for there were not yet a ſufficient number of Martyrs at Rome. They carried off their Bodies and conceal'd them, inſtead of erecting Publick Monuments; but they were thoſe of the Jews, whoſe Religion had been long permitted, and who had their Settlements and Burying-place in the Vatican. Here therefore we muſt look for their Epitaphs.

XV. Beſides, if the Jews had their Epitaphs, they engraved them in Hebrew Characters, ſince that was the Holy Tongue, which they preferr'd before all others. Indeed if we believe Maimonides, the Jews neglected Epitaphs, becauſe there is no Monument more beautiful than that which ariſes from vertuous and good Actions, the Memorial whereof remains. However they did not deſpiſe the marks of honour, till they were denied the liberty of enjoying them. When the Cœmetery of the Jews was opened in one of the Suburbs of Bâle, they there diſcovered abundance of Hebrew Epitaphs, two of which we have produced preſerved by Buxtorf. We may be convinced of it by reading Father Montfaucon's Travels. This Monk coming to Venice entered into the Cœmetery of the Jews ſituate near the Benedictin's Monaſtery; and tho' they have been ſo long ſettled at Venice, as to ſpeak the Language of the Country, and French is ſpoke as commonly at preſent, as Greek formerly at Rome, yet he diſcovered upon his entrance this Inſcription, engraven on Marble in Hebrew Characters:

Death * ſhall ſtill devour Men; but God ſhall wipe off the Tears of every Man. He ſhall take away the reproach from his People over all the Earth, for the Lord hath ſpoken it.

This Inſcription is accompanied with a great many others that are ſeen on the Tombs of the Dead. If he had entered into the Cœmetery of the Jews at Rome, as he did into that of Venice, he would have obſerved as manifeſt Characters of Judaiſm, whereas all thoſe that are related prove nothing at all.

XVI. We can't conjecture, why they look upon the Candleſtick with ſeven branches as a particular Character of Judaiſm. The reaſon alledged, that the Jews place a Lamp at the head of the Dead ſeven Days together is falſe; for Leo of Modena † aſſerts that this Lamp is not placed in the Tomb; but at the Bolſter of the Bed of the deceaſed, and that it burns there ſeven Days. Benjamin of Tudela ||, ſpeaks of a burning Lamp he ſaw in Abraham's Sepulchre, but this Sepulchre was then in the hands of Chriſtians, who had already adopted the Heathen Cuſtom of honouring Altars, and inſenſible Objects with burning Lamps. The Diſcoveries Fabretti * has added to thoſe of Bozius and Aringhus, prove the contrary to what he pretends; for we find no Character of Judaiſm in that Seal; which has a Candleſtick, with a Palm-tree and theſe Letters:

N. ONI. RUF.

On the contrary the Palm is appropriated to the Chriſtians, and would rather be the mark of a Martyr. He † has produced another Candleſtick with ſeven Branches, with ſeven Lamps with theſe words:

CALEVIUS BENDIDIT. AVI
LUCIUS IN PACE.

But at the ſame time we find Lazarus coming out of his Tomb, and the Monogram of JESUS CHRIST; which ſhews that a Chriſtian made this Monument. 'Tis ſo true, that the Chriſtians have often taken a Candleſtick as it can't be denied. Bonani || puts one amongſt the Medals of Pope Urban VII. There the Pontiff is repreſented by the Figure of a Candleſtick with this Exhortation to imitate him. Let your light ſo ſhine: Sic luceat lux veſtra.

to Heathens and Christians as well as Jews. We see at Rome the Tomb of one Zosimus a Jew, upon which we read this Epitaph: Here lies Zosimus, who was whilst he lived a Member of the Synagogue of the Agrippesians *; he rests in Peace. These last words make Mr. Spon believe that Zosimus was a Christian Merchant of Cologne, who came to Rome for the sake of Trade, and died there. The Error is manifest; for why should a Merchant of Cologne desire to have his Epitaph in Greek? Besides the Inscription does not import that the Merchant was of Agrippina. All these Difficulties are removed by observing that Zosimus was a Greek by Birth, who came from a City named Agrippa, which was in Bithynia, and where there was many Jews. And therefore we read another Epitaph of a Jew of this Country: The Son of Julian President of the Synagogue of Agrippa. This therefore is the Tomb of a Jew, and these words he rests in Peace, ought not to startle any body, since they still say to the Dead, in their Burial place, Go in Peace. Let it be only observed here, that there is no Candlestick upon this Jewish Tomb.

XVIII. Benjamin's Narrative †, who discovered on the Banks of the Tyber the Cave of ten Martyrs of Judaism, ought not to give us any trouble; for he makes no Proof of it. On the contrary, this Cave situate on the Banks of the Tyber was in the Vatican, near the Palace of the Lateran, as we have already observed. Besides, 'tis a hard matter to discover these Martyrs of Judaism, Nor is it any wonder, since this Author is guilty of gross Ignorance in speaking of Rome. For he affirms, that three hundred Senators would not receive Titus, because they had ordered him to employ but two Years in the Siege of Jerusalem, and he took it not till the third Year. He asserts, that they reckoned a Succession of eighty Emperors, who had constantly reigned from Tarquin to Pepin, the Father of Charlemagne, who had each of them their Louvre. Amongst these Emperors, he reckons one Galbinus, in whose Palace there were three hundred and sixty Halls, to equal the Number of the Days of the Year. Perhaps he was better acquainted with the Martyrs of his Religion, than with the Heathen or Christian Emperors; but not to examine, the Confusion some Learned Men fall into ||, who attempt to dis-entangle this part of his Work, there is nothing more known, than the ten Righteous * he designed to speak of; for they are celebrated by the Rabbies. Two of these Martyrs suffered in Judæa at the time of the Ruin of the Temple: how came they to to be buried at Rome. The great Akiba perished under Adrian, in his Country where he had raised Rebellion. Juda the Son of Bava had his Body pierced with three hundred holes like a Sieve, because he had cast five Doctors upon the Floor to revenge himself of 'em. The sixth called Ananias, was burnt with the Book of the Law. Isibab, the Scribe was cast to the Dogs, and remained unburied. The tenth is hardly known, whom some call † Judah the Son of Thima, and others Eleazar, the Son of Dama. A third Party confounds these two Names, and gives 'em to one and the same Martyr. But how could Benjamin have seen at Rome the Tomb of these ten Just, some of which had been burnt, others remain'd unburied, and others were buried in Judæa?

XIX. In the last Age the Body of the Empress Mary, the Wife of Honorius || was pretended to be discovered; and to raise this Princesse's glory, 'tis asserted, that she and her Sister, both Daughters of Stilicon, having been surprized by an unexpected Death, preserved their Virginity. Mary was buried in the Vatican, in the Triumphal Street, where the Church of St. Lewis is at present. In the Year 1644. was found part of her Body with a great number of precious Stones; Rings; and Necklaces. Upon an Emerald was a Head representing Honorius; there was a Seal with these words, Our most flourishing Mary; a Plate of Gold having in Greek Characters the Names of Michael, Gabriel, Raphael, Uriel; Lastly, there was a Bodkin * of Gold, with these words upon it, To our † Lord Honorius; and on the other side, Our Lady Mary. From these Ornaments and Inscriptions they conclude, that this was the Tomb of the Empress Mary, who died a married Virgin, and thereby deserves to be put in the Catalogue of Saints.

XX. 'Tis true Jornandes || says, that Honorius having successively married two Sisters, God commanded 'em to depart the World without being known; and St. Chrysostome in his Exhortations to a young Widow, endeavours to move her by the Example of the Empresses, one whereof had a Husband, attack'd by abundance of Enemies, and who was impotent to act. But the weakness St. Chrysostom attributes to the Emperor only related to State-Management, because indeed he was too young to support a shaken and tottering Monarchy. Besides, we can't tell what Jornandes means, by the command God gave the two Sisters to continue Virgins. Was this impotence on the Emperor's part, or was it a miraculous Revelation; or lastly, was it an exemplary Punishment for his marrying two Sisters? Claudian on the contrary says the Marriage was consummated:

*Castumque * cubile*
Aggreditur, Tyrio quo fusus Honorius ostro
Carpebat teneros Maria cum Conjuge somnos.
Hic uterus crescat Mariæ; sic natus in astra
Parvus Honoriades genibus considat auctis.
Aurea sic videat similes Harmantia Tædas.

Philostorgius † moreover insinuates that a Child proceeded from this Marriage, and 'tis one of the Crimes he charges upon Stilico, to have endeavoured to deprive his Grandson of the Empire, to give it his Son Eucherius. Thus you have Mary's Virginity, and the Foundation of her Saintship overturn'd.

Besides we don't discover the Emperor Honorius here, and the face observed upon an Emerald might be that of a private Husband as well as of an Emperor, to whom they gave not the bare Title of Lord or Dominus. They gave him the Name of Dominus Rerum, Dominus Orbis, and the Name of our most flourishing Lady, given to Mary, does not sute with an Empress. The Jewels might have belonged to some rich or noble Person as well as to an Empress. Lastly, we observe the tracks of a gross Superstition; for the Names of the Angels Michael, Gabriel, Raphael and Uriel are not the Characters of Christianity or Devotion. Adelbert was condemned || in a Council of Rome, for invoking the Angel Uriel, and many others, whose Names are not sufficiently known; and this Superstition was not in use, in the Empress Marie's time, Either this Tomb, which is reverenced for its Antiquity is new; or else it must be restored to the Jews, who had their Cœmetery there, and who often put Wealth and Jewels into the Sepulchres as into that of David. Besides the Angels, to

XXI. The Feaſt follows the Burying, The Heathens made many Collations in this Ceremony. They brought Meat and Wine to the Tombs, as if the Dead could be repleniſhed with 'em; and 'tis † imagined that the Jews had eſpouſed ſo ridiculous a Cuſtom, becauſe the Author of Eccleſiaſticus || ſays, that Delicates poured upon a mouth ſhut up, are as meſſes of meat ſet upon a grave; but the Author does not attribute to his Nation the Cuſtom of ſetting Diſhes upon the Graves, but only alludes to that of the Heathens, which is no wonder; for then the Jews mingled with the Greeks could not be ignorant of their Practices.

Secondly, the Gentiles invited their Friends and Relations to eat upon the Sepulchre of the Dead, where they made a Feaſt. One would think that this Cuſtom had come among the Jews, ſince Tobias * adviſed a man to pour out his bread on the burial of the Juſt. God threatens his People by the Prophet Jeremy, as with a great Calamity † that Men ſhall not give them the cup of conſolation to drink for their father or their mother. Joſephus || obſerves, that Archelaus after he had lamented Herod the Great ſeven Days, gave a magnificent Treat to the People, and that that Cuſtom ruined moſt of the Jews, who were not able to bear the expence of thoſe Feaſts: and yet they would have been thought Atheiſts if they had not done it. Gregory Nazianzen alludes to it, when he introduces the Mother of the Macchabees, ſaying that ſhe did not call the Companions of her Grief, and preſented not the bread of Affliction, rejoycing at the Victory her Children obtained by Martyrdom, ſhe would not obſerve the common Ceremonies of Mourning, nor make the Feaſt of Affliction. The Chriſtians themſelves followed this Cuſtom, ſince St. Chryſoſtome taxes them with not inviting the Poor. They thought by this to celebrate the Memory of the Dead. However it does not appear, that they prepared a Table in the Church-Yards, but the Entertainment was rather made by the Relations at Home.

XXII. St. Jerome relates another Cuſtom of the Jews of his time, who roll'd themſelves in Aſhes, and in imitation of the Phariſees, they at firſt ate Lentils, to remember that they had loſt their Birth-right. At preſent the Relations * of the Dead being returned Home ſit upon the Ground, and having taken off their Shoes, Bread and Wine and hard Eggs are brought 'em, and they eat and drink †, Give ſtrong drink unto him that is ready to periſh, and Wine to thoſe that be of heavy hearts. He that ſays the common Grace to the Meat is uſed to add ſome word of Conſolation. In the Levant, and in many other places the Friends and Relations have uſed to ſend in, for ſeven days together Night and Morning to the near Kindred of the Dead, Proviſions for great and ſumptuous Entertainments; and alſo go and eat with them to comfort 'em.

XXIII. As ſoon || as the Dead is carried out of doors they double up the Quilts, and roll up the Coverings which they leave upon the Mat: then they light a Lamp at the Head-board, which burns uninterruptedly for ſeven Days.

XXIV. They alſo take down all the Beds of the Houſe. Some * ſay this is done the very Moment the Dead is carried out; but Rabbi Joſhua orders it to be done, when the Grave is ſhut up; and the Controverſy is ſo nice, that the Talmudiſts have left it undecided. The reaſon Jochanan aſſigns for this Cuſtom is, that the Friends of Job ſate with him near the Earth. They did not lie upon the Floor, but near the Earth. However R. Aſher is of Opinion, that all that come to the Burial-houſe to comfort the afflicted, ought to lie upon the Floor. And this laſt Cuſtom muſt have prevailed. For Leo of Modena † aſſerts, that the Relations of the Dead continue in the houſe ſeven Days, ſitting on the Ground, and eat in this poſture.

XXV. The Rabbies reckon thirty Days of Affliction for a dead Perſon. The three firſt are given up to Tears and Grief, and the ſeven following they lament his Fate. But yet the common Term is ſeven Days. The Heathens had the ſame Number of Days: At leaſt Ovid ſays, that Orpheus lamented his Wife ſeven Days without Eating:

Septem tamen ille diebus
Squalidus in ripa Cereris ſine munere ſedit.
Cura dolorque animi lachrymæq; alimenta fuere.

This is what David ſays, my tears have been my meat day and night.; who faſted till Evening for Abner's Death. During this time, they ſalute no body; they can do no ſort of Work, nor bathe, nor lie with their Wives, nor put on a new or white Habit. Ten Perſons || come Evening and Morning to Pray with the Afflicted; they read the XLIX Pſalm, pray for the Soul of the Dead, diſtribute their Comforts in proportion to the loſs; but no body opens his mouth, till the afflicted Perſon has ſpoke, becauſe Job ſpoke before his Friends. If he ſhakes his Head, 'tis a ſign that he comforts himſelf, and wants not the comfort of his Friends; if he continues at reſt, they ſpeak to him. Four famous Rabbies once went to viſit R. Iſhmael, who had loſt his Children; Tarphon, who was the Chief of 'em, admoniſhed his Companions as they entered not to interrupt one another in their Diſcourſes, becauſe their Buſineſs was with a learned and ingenious Man: Iſhmael ſpoke, as ſoon as they were enter'd and ſaid, Iniquities are multiplied, and troubles have ſurrounded me. The Comforters hereby obtained the liberty of ſpeaking. Tarphon having firſt cited ſome words of Leviticus * ſaid they ought to argue from the leſs to the greater; and that if they regretted Nadab and Abihu, who had but once performed the Service; for a ſtronger reaſon they ought to lament the Children of Iſhmael. Joſes, who was the next, took the ſame Method, and concluding from the leſs to the greater, ſaid, that if Abijah the Son of Jeroboam was lamented, who had only done one good work, they ought much more to lament the Children of Iſhmael. The Comforters often make the Elogy of the Dead, &c.

XXVI. They dreſs themſelves † in Mourning according to the Cuſtom of the Country where they live, without being obliged to it by any Commandment. At the ſeven Days end, they come out of Doors to go to the Synagogue, where many cauſe Lamps to be lighted, Prayers to be ſaid, and promiſe Alms for the Soul of the Dead, which they repeat again at the end of the Month and the Year. If the Dead be a Rabbi, or ſome conſiderable Perſon, they make on theſe Days the Eſped, that is his Funeral Oration and Elogy. The Son was uſed to ſay every Day night and morning in the Synagogue his Prayer || Cadiſc for the Soul of his Father or Mother; and this for eleven Months together: and ſome faſt every Year on the Day that one or the other of 'em died.

XXVII. On other Publick or Private Afflictions, the Jews faſted; threw Aſhes upon their Heads; put on Sack-cloth, beat their Breaſts and Thighs. Theſe * Rites are well known; and therefore we will only make ſome Obſervations which will help to explain the Scripture.

Firſt, 'Tis a Miſtake to make the Pious Perſons of the Old Teſtament pluck off their Hairs, and to maintain that this was lawful. They impertinently cite the Author of the Additions to Eſther. For beſides that this Book is Apocryphal, it does not agree with the true Hiſtory of this Princeſs who ſpeaks but of one Faſt of three Days; and without ſuſpecting him of inſincerity, we may ſay, he has made one of thoſe Hyperboles ſo common with the Orientals in repreſenting Eſther † going to fill with her curled Locks all the places where ſhe had taken pleaſure. This behaviour literally taken would be ridiculous. The falſe Eſdras likewiſe relates, that he pluck'd off his Hair and his Beard, when he underſtood, that the Jews who were returned from the Captivity, had married ſtrange Wives; but there is only mention of a Faſt in the true Hiſtory of the Reſtorer of the Jewiſh Diſcipline and Religion. The Extravagances of the Heathens ought not to be fathered upon the Jews: who were content with throwing Aſhes upon their Heads, and ſuffering their Beards to grow, which Cuſtom ſtill continues amongſt 'em; for 'tis not lawful to be ſhaved during the Days of Mourning.

Secondly, they put on Sack-cloth; and faſted upon Sack-cloth and Aſhes. They ſay, that theſe Sack-cloths made of Camels Hair, like John Baptiſt's Cloathing, were not deſigned to expreſs Sorrow but Repentance ‖, and they were worn to merit of God the Pardon of their Sins, by their ſevere treatment of the Fleſh: even when they put it upon their Cloaths, it ſtill continued to make an act of Penance, becauſe it denoted the Debaſement and Humiliation of the Soul. This was only imagined to give a more venerable Antiquity to the Hair ſhirts of the Chriſtian Hermits. 'Tis certain theſe Sack-cloths were made of harſh and courſe Materials; but it is only conjecture to affirm they were of Camel's hair, like John Baptiſt's Garment. Jacob put on Sack-cloth, when he had loſt his Son Joſeph; and ſo did David, when his Enemies purſued him. Shall we ſay, that this was not Affliction, but a Notion of ſatisfying Divine Juſtice, which made them cloath themſelves in this manner? On the contrary, they knew not the uſe of Sack-cloth for Penance, but it was common in Mourning, and in great Afflictions.

Laſtly, they beat the Breaſt and Thigh. The Prophet Nahum ſays *, that the Queen being a Priſoner, her Maids accompanied her as with the voice of doves, tabring upon their breaſts. This Paſſage has been thought obſcure. To make the Queen march with the ſound of Tabers, as many Interpreters ſay, is a ſign of Joy rather than Grief. 'Tis therefore more natural to aſcribe to theſe Maids, who followed their Princeſs in her Captivity the mourning of doves, and to make 'em beat their Breaſts with the ſame vehemence as a Taber is beaten. Sometimes they laid their Hand upon their Head, as well as upon the Thigh. Jeremy mentions both theſe Cuſtoms: Thou † ſhalt go forth from him, and thine hands upon thy head, for the Lord hath rejected thy confidences, and thou ſhalt not proſper in them. I have laid my hand upon my thigh, ſays he in another place: And this Cuſtom has continued to this Day.

XXVIII. The Jews have another which is very peculiar to them. As the Deſolation of Jeruſalem is a ſubject of conſtant and perpetual Grief; that they may always remember it, and ſhew the Devotion they continue for this City, they leave a place in their Houſes of ſix Foot ſquare without Lime.

Precautions againſt the Impurity of the Dead, of Lepers and Idolaters.

I. Any part of the Dead ſuffices to defile. II. Tombs impure. How Houſes become ſo. III. The uſe that deſerted Cœmeteries may be put to. IV. Diſputes about the kinds of Leproſie. V. Difficulties about the Leproſie of Cloaths and Houſes, VI. The Examination of a leprous Houſe. VII. The Purification of the Leper. VIII. Whether the Treatiſe concerning ſtrange Worſhip, and that of Idolatry reſpect the Chriſtians. I. DEAD Bodies * defile and render thoſe that touch them Unclean; but the Impurity is not contracted, till the Soul is perfectly ſeparate from the Body, and there remains no Motion. Then a Piece of a dead Body no bigger than an Olive; a Nut-ſhell full of Aſhes; any part of a Bone; a little quantity of Blood, are ſufficient to propagate the Contagion.

II. Some doubt is raiſed about the Gate and Pales that ſhut up or encompaſs the Tombs. Some allow the carrying them, and † maintain that they can't defile, except when ſome Aſhes, or Particles of a dead Body are obſerved upon them. Others, that are more rigid, will have every touch of the Sepulchral Stones or Planks to be impure. They are divided alſo about the manner of Houſes becoming unclean. Some think that a ſpoonful of Corruption diſperſed, is enough to make 'em ſo; but R. Simeon is of a contrary Opinion. If the hairs of the Dead ‖ are withinſide of the Door, tho' the Body lies without, the Houſe is Unclean. If all the Doors are ſhut the Houſe is conſidered as a Sepulchre, and conſequently is defiled; but when one Door is open, the Impurity goes out, becauſe they ſuppoſe * a deſign of carrying the Body through that paſſage, even tho' it be ſo little, that it could not go through without Mutilation.

III. When they plow up a Burial-place, they may plant Trees and ſow Grain in it, which is mow'd

and

and reap'd; but 'tis not lawful to ſow ſuch * as is pluck'd up, becauſe the root carries with it Duſt and Bones with the Earth; at leaſt, the Grain that has been thus gathered muſt be twice ſifted, to avoid contracting Impurity. In order to purify the Burial places, they add new Earth to 'em, or take a certain quantity from 'em; but the ſureſt way is to cover 'em with great Tables of Stone faſten'd together, for fear that by moving them in walking, a pretty large quantity of Bones or Duſt may fly out and defile.

IV. Lepers † defile as well as the Dead, and therefore the Doctors according to the antient Ordinance of God, take great Precautions againſt them. They diſtinguiſh ſeveral kinds of this Diſeaſe. Chanina reckoned but ſixteen. R. Doza thirty ſix; but Akiba has multiply'd 'em to ſeventy two. One is known by a Puſtula that is white like ſnow; and is the moſt dangerous, becauſe it penetrates through every thing. Another is of a darker white. The third is of a reddiſh colour, and produces no Puſtula. The difference of Puſtula's raiſes new Subjects of Controverſy between Akiba || and the other Caſuiſts.

V. One of the greateſt Difficulties that ariſes upon this Subject, relates to the Leproſie of Houſes and Cloaths. Indeed 'tis no wonder to ſee this Diſtemper reigning amongſt Men, whoſe Blood is eaſily corrupted, but how is it communicated to inſenſible Objects? R. Levi the Son of Gerſon, thought that a foreign heat paſſing into Cloaths, corrupted natural heat, and a certain humour that contributes to the preſervation of the Stuff, which is intirely deſtroy'd. And therefore God ordered theſe Cloaths to be burnt. Moſes Nachmanides has recourſe to the Divine Vengeance, that puniſhed the Iſraelites by a miraculous Scourge, which ſhew'd that God withdrew himſelf from a Perſon; but he only exerciſed this Vengeance in the Holy Land; for he ſays, When ye ſhall be come to the Land. Others imagine that this was only a threat, that God made uſe of to terrify the People, and to induce 'em to Purity and Sanctification, of which the Purity of their Cloaths is an Image and Figure. Abravanel * thought to ſolve the Difficulty by ſaying, that the Cloaths which a Man wears, contract ſomething of his Qualities and the Miſeries that afflict him. This appears, ſays he, by the red and green Stains obſerved upon the Cloaths of the Leprous; and as drops of Sweat paſs from the Body to the Garments that touch it, the qualities of the Leproſie † may alſo be diffuſed and communicated. As to the Leproſie of Houſes, it was miraculous; for the corruption of the Blood can't be communicated to Wood and Stone. God hereby admoniſhed Sinners to be Converted; the Stones cried out, and the Wood preach'd Repentance. "In "general, there was ſomething Supernatural in this "Diſtemper, which was not cured by Blood-letting "or Remedies, and for which they were to preſent "Oblations, and make diverſe Aſperſions."

VI. When the Leproſie is ſuſpected to be in a Houſe, they go and acquaint the Prieſt with it, to whom the judgment of this Diſtemper belongs. It is not allow'd the wiſe Men themſelves to determine that there is a Leproſie: They are to ſpeak in a very dubious manner. Methinks there is there as it were a kind of Leproſie. The Prieſt examines the || Wall; and if he thinks there is an actual Leproſie, he ſhuts up the Houſe; ſeven Days after he returns; and if the marks be multiplied, he cauſes the Stones to be moved and carried out of the City into an unclean place. Others are brought, and the Wall is plaiſtered; he returns at a Week's end; and if the Leproſie continues, they pull down the Houſe, and caſt the Materials out of the City.

VII. The manner of Purifying the Leper is regulated by the Law. The Miſnah * notwithſtanding adds that the blood of a Bird ought to be mingled with a certain quantity of Water, that the two Birds ought to be perfectly equal, and muſt be kill'd upon an Earthen Veſſel. Beſides they have multiply'd Caſes of Conſcience upon this Article, as upon all the reſt. They determine for inſtance that a Houſe becomes impure, when only any unclean Object to the bigneſs of an Olive is put into it. Putting one's Head and part of the Body into a Leprous Houſe ſuffices to contract its Impurity; but theſe Regulations particularly relate to the Holy Land, where the Doctors think that Leproſie was more common than in other places.

VIII. Laſtly, they take great Precautions againſt Idolatry, which carries a much greater Contagion of Impurity, than the touch of a Carkaſs or a Leper. We find in the Miſnah † a Treatiſe of ſtrange Worſhip, which contains many Laws upon this Matter. || Peringerus who tranſlated it, was ſcrupulous of publiſhing it, becauſe he apprehended the Chriſtians would be ſcandalized at it. In the mean time, he thought the Chriſtian Religion was not formidable enough to Juda the Saint, who compoſed the Miſnah, to deſerve his notice, and be the object of his Laws. Beſides he quotes an authentick Confeſſion of the Jews, who acknowledge the Chriſtians at preſent not to be addicted to the worſhip of Idols. Laſtly, he excuſes himſelf, becauſe the Tract only relates to Heatheniſh Idols. This laſt reaſon was the only one, that could determine him; for the Rabbies pun upon the word Idol, when they ſay that the Chriſtians don't worſhip it. They look upon them all as Idolaters; ſome becauſe they worſhip a Man, whom their Fathers crucified; and others becauſe they pay religious Worſhip to Saints and their Images. It ſuffices to know the Principles of their Religion, which confines Adoration to God alone, to perceive that their Accuſation of Idolatry falls upon the Chriſtians. Beſides Judah the Saint muſt have fear'd the Chriſtian Religion more than Heatheniſm. ſince it cited his own, was its Rival, and had its Temples partly filled with the Deſerters of the Synagogue; but he did not ſpeak of the Worſhip of Saints and Images, becauſe it was not eſtabliſhed in his time, and the Idolatry that then prevailed was that of Heatheniſm. For we find a Dialogue betwixt the Romans and Jews, wherein the firſt ask why God doth not aboliſh Idols, if they diſpleaſe him; and he is anſwer'd, that the Sun and Moon, which are worſhipped are neceſſary to Mankind, and that if God deſtroyed the other Objects of Heathen Worſhip, he would thereby confirm the Worſhip of the Stars, which he would have ſpar'd. Proculus the Son of a Philoſopher is introduced, who ſtrangely puzzled Gamaliel, becauſe he had bath'd in a Bath, where the Statue of Venus was. Gamaliel anſwer d, that the Statue of the Goddeſs, was only placed there to adorn the Bath, ſince inſtead of worſhipping her, the moſt fulſom Indecencies were committed before her face. Laſtly, the Emperor Adrian's Clay * is there condemned. 'Tis a ridiculous Story, which yet ſerves to prove, that the Heathen Idolatry was the thing in view. 'Tis ſuppoſed, that this Prince had the Art of mixing Earth with Wine: He had this mixture dried, and when he was in his Army, he diluted these Earthen Vessels with Water, and the Wine came out of 'em, So that he never wanted any during the Campaign.

Maimonides *, who a long time after wrote a Treatise of Idolatry, had no interest to attack a Worship that was abolish'd. But on the contrary, he ought to have turn'd his Pen against the Christians of his Age, who were great Worshippers of Images and Saints; but yet he has not done it; but it is no wonder, since he has only Paraphras'd the Treatise of Judah the Saint; and both of 'em have believed, that by prescribing several Rules against Idolaters, they sufficiently condemn'd the Worship of any Creature whatsoever. And yet Maimonides speaks oftner of Images of different Kinds; and relates this common Argument as one of those of the antient Idolaters: "That as Kings will be honoured by their "Favourites, which is their Glory, God will also "be glorified in his Saints, which he has raised to "honour."

IX. Be it how it will, it is forbidden † to Purchase, Sell, Borrow or Lend to Idolaters, three days before their Feast, and some have extended their Law till three days after. Jehudah permitted the receiving a Payment of them, because the Payment of a Debt afflicts the Payer; but the Doctors have revolted against their Master, because 'tis a Joy to a Creditor to be acquitted, and to owe no more.

X. It is not lawful for a Jew to go into the place ||, where the Feast is kept, unless the way absolutely terminates there, and leads no farther, lest he should be suspected of joyning with Idolaters: when he goes under a Tree consecrated to Idols, or passes by a Statue, he may not pluck a thorn out of his foot, lest it should be imagined that he bows to worship the Idol. Lastly, it is not lawful to rest himself under the Shadow of a Tree consecrated to Idols. 'Tis a question whether Workmen are permitted to labour and make Ornaments for Idols. Some * deny it; but Eliezer is of a contrary opinion, provided a Man be well Paid.

XI. Their Severity against Idolaters is screw'd to the height. Maimonides speaks of nothing less than Stoning, and Death for those of his Nation, who give themselves up to this Sin; and the Seducers † are condemned to the same Punishment. He forbids making any Alliance with 'em, without distinguishing the Canaanites from other Nations. He is for having them all either converted or killed, because it is written, Ye shall have no pity on 'em. If an Idolater is a Drowning, he must not be drawn from the Water nor assisted; and the only favour that is shew'd him, is not to push him down a Precipice or into a Well; whereas those that forsake Judaism, to turn Epicureans or Idolaters, ought to be persecuted to Hell.

XII. Great care is to be taken || how to converse with 'em; A Man must not leave his Bottle upon the Table, where an Idolater eats, lest he should mix it, whilst he goes out. Grapes must not be gather'd with 'em, tho' it may be lawful to tread in the same Press. Horses must not be left in their Stable, for fear they should abuse them. A Woman * would be to blame, to remain alone with an Infidel; because they are suspected of loving Lewdness. Nor must she serve Idolaters, as a Midwife, because the Child will be educated in Idolatry. Meir would not have Medicines prepared by them to be made use of. They only ask the Physician's Advice, and the manner, how the Medicine ought to be prepar'd. But in spite of the Authority of Meir and the Misnah, their practice is quite contrary. In the mean time we see by this, the Jews abhorrence for Idolatry.

I. NOtwithſtanding the drineſs and barrenneſs of the Hiſtory we are upon, yet it offers to the Publick View an Object worthy of admiration; and the greateſt Prodigy imaginable, is the preſervation of the Jewiſh Nation in the midſt of all the Calamities they have run through for Seventeen Hundred Years. Religions depend upon temporal Proſperity; they triumph under the Protection of a Conquering Prince; and fall and languiſh with decaying Monarchies. The old Heatheniſm, that over-flow'd the Earth, is ſunk and vaniſh'd. The Chriſtian Church, ſo renown'd and glorious for its Martyrs, has yet been conſiderably diminiſh'd by the Perſecutions: And the breaches that have been made by violence, could not eaſily be repaired. However, we ſhall here ſee a Church, that has been hated and perſecuted for Seventeen Hundred Years, ſubſiſting and ſtill numerous. Kings have often employ'd the ſeverity of Edicts, and the Hand of the Executioner to deſtroy it. The ſeditious Multitude has perform'd Maſſacres and Executions infinitely more tragical than the Princes. Both Kings and People, Heathens, Chriſtians and Mahometans, who are oppoſite in ſo many Things, have united in the Deſign of ruining this Nation, and have not been able to effect it. The Buſh of Moſes ſurrounded with Flames, has always burnt without conſuming. The Jews have been driven from all Places of the World, which has only ſerv'd to diſperſe them into all the Parts of the Univerſe. They have from Age to Age run through Miſery and Perſecution, and Torrents of their own Blood. They ſtill live in ſpight of the Disgrace and Hatred that attends them in all Places, whilst nothing remains of the greatest Monarchies but the Name.

II. Their present Misery has its particular Characters. In the other Captivities, God pointed out a Time in which he would be reconciled, and break the Yoak of Tyrants, and restore his People to their Liberty. The longest, which was that of Egypt, lasted but a few Ages. From Babylon, they returned at Seventy Years end, and Antiochus's Persecution was to terminate after three Years and ten Days: But God fixes no Term to the duration of the Jewish Misery, and we know more clearly by our Gospels, that they must be re-called, than they can see it in the Writings of the Prophets. God comforted them in their other Calamities by Heroes, or Men Divinely Inspired. Ezekiel propheſied at Babylon, and Daniel shewed at a distance the Messiah that was to come. The Macchabees raised again the Glory of the Nation against the Kings of Syria; but in their present State, we have seen nothing but pretended Messiah's, who have added fresh Weight to the Yoak of the Nation, by attempting to shake it off. The Race of Prophets is extinct, and not one of 'em is to be seen, that promises the end of a Calamity, which has already lasted such a vast number of Ages.

Moreover, when God delivered up his People to the Infidels, he was careful to preserve the Nation in a Body, by conveying it into the same place. It was all united together in the Plains of Goshen, when it was to depart from Egypt. Cyrus was at no great trouble to re-unite the Tribes of Judah and Benjamin, to send 'em back to Jerusalem. One part of the Nation inhabited the same Cities, and the Israelites peopled both the Banks of the River Chaboras; but at the Destruction of Jerusalem, and afterwards in the War of Adrian, the Nation weaken'd by unheard of Massacres was dispersed into all the Provinces of the Empire. The dispersion is as great as ever it was; and 'tis a hard matter to find some straggling remainders of the Ten Tribes in the East, where they were formerly very numerous and considerable.

The Romans, when they made themselves Masters of Judæa, left its Inhabitants a publick Worship, and the exercise of their Laws. The Synagogues, as those of Damascus, unappealably determin'd the Affairs of Religion, even where the Christians were concern'd. The High-Priest had an eminent Power. They had their Judges even in Chaldea, as appears from the History of Susanna, tho' it be a Romance. But at present they have no shadow of Supream Authority remaining; nevertheless the Nation still subsists, and is numbered by Millions.

III. The Chastisements God has inflicted upon this Nation, are the most terrible in the World; as having involved both the Men, and their Religion, and the Land they inhabited. The Ceremonies, essential to their Worship, can no longer be observed. All that pompous Train of Rites, which raised the Renown of the Jewish Worship, and struck the Heathens with that Veneration, as to cause them to send presents and Victims to Jerusalem, is absolutely lost; for they have neither Temples nor Altars, nor Sacrifices. Why did God annex their Religion to one place, and a particular Temple, if he was not resolved it should for ever stand? And why has he suffered it to fall, if he designed the Sacrifices should be Eternal.

Nor has their Religion been the only Sufferers; but the Professors of it were Massacred: Such as had escaped the Rage of War and Soldiers, were sold in the Market. They were dispersed over all the Universe, and this Dispersion continues to this Day. Lastly, It seems, that the Land it self is loaded with an everlasting Curse. The Heathens, Christians, Mahometans; in a word, most Nations have made themselves Masters of Jerusalem, one after another. How many Revolutions have happened to States in so long a succession of Ages? And yet the Jews are the only People to whom God has denied the Possession of this little Spot of Ground, which is infinitely necessary to them, since they must Worship upon this Mountain, and they never have met with so favourable a Conjuncture, as could give them the full enjoyment of it. Julian de Toledo [a] alledged, that it had been a long time; since any Professor of Judaism was seen about Jerusalem, and scarce at this Day can they purchase in it six Foot of Ground for a Grave.

IV. There is no exaggaration in it. I content my self with pointing to notorious Facts, and so far am I from designing to render the Nation odious by its Misery, that I conclude, that it ought to be looked upon as one of those Wonders we admire, without fathoming the depth of 'em, since in spite of so long a train of Miseries, and a so long tried Patience, the Jewish Nation is still kept up, and preserved by Providence. The Jews ought to be tired with waiting for a Messiah, who after he has fed 'em for so many Years and Ages with the vain hopes of Prosperity, leaves 'em still grovelling in Misery; and the Christians ought to quicken their Regard and Charity for Men whom God so long preserves, notwithstanding the Miseries which would have quite sunk and buried any other People.

V. The Author [b] of the Apostolical Constitutions thought that God to aggravate the Punishment of so great a Dispersion, had forbidden them the reading of the Law out of the Holy Land. St. Chrysostome [c] has followed him, and these two ancient Authors bottom their Assertion upon the Prophet Amos, who has condemned the Jews for reading the Law without; but the first of these Writers has betrayed himself by this Reflection; and we can't give him the Antiquity he pretends to, since the great Dispersion of the Jews did not arrive till Adrian's Reign. Then it was, that not being able to live any longer in the adjacent Parts, they were forced to read the Law without. But this is a pure Vision; for Amos [d] exhorts the Jews to offer a Sacrifice of Thanksgiving with Leaven, instead of censuring them for reading the Law without, which has no manner of Sense in it. The Author of the Apostolical Constitutions, as well as St. Chrysostome, have been misled by the Greek Version, which is called the Septuagint. If they could not consult the Hebrew, good Sense should have taught 'em, that there had been Prophets, as Ezekiel and Daniel, who read the Law without a Crime out of the bounds of Judæa. These ancient Authors therefore Father upon Moses a Law which he never made; upon the Prophet Amos, a Notion he never had; and add a degree of Misery to the Jews, which they never knew. We read [e] in the Works of a Jew, who turned Christian, that there had been such direful Times, that those who read the Law, were torn to pieces with Combs of Iron; and it was a Crime attended with Death, or a moſt heavy Puniſhment to teach Children the Myſteries of the Paſſover or Circumciſion. But this does not juſtifie the two Authors before-mentioned; for the Buſineſs here was a cruel Perſecution; whereas the Prohibition to read the Law out of Judæa, is imputed to Moſes and the Prophet Amos: Beſides, we can't gueſs at what time the Perſecution happened, which the Jews ſpeaks of. He adds alſo, that Chriſtian Princes commanded the Jewiſh young Women, who were Married, to be brought to the Governour of the Province, that he might have their Virginity, which render'd Marriages very rare, unleſs a Man was ſo happy as to meet with a Widow. This Story ſeems to be fabulous, and renders the Perſecution dubious. The Jews have real Miſeries enough, without loading them with imaginary ones, like St. Chryſoſtome and this Proſelyte.

Iron;

VI. Joſephus, [e] who only ſaw the beginnings of this Deſolation, could not forbear to obſerve the Hand of God in it; but he attributes this Chaſtiſement to the impiety of the Zealots, who had ſo often prophaned the Temple, by ſhedding in it the Blood of their Enemies. Some Doctors have followed him, thinking that the ruine of Jeruſalem was cauſed by the Diſorders which the Impious and Prophane carried to the higheſt degree. However, there was at that time no Idolatry in the Temple; and for a Man to bring the Golden Calf among the Cauſes of the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem, is to own, that he has nothing to ſay to the purpoſe. Beſides, the Rabbins can no longer aſcribe their Miſery upon the Sins of that time, ſince they boaſt to us the Virtues of many Wonder-working Saints who were then alive. God governed the whole World only for the ſake of Ananias the Son of Doza; and one Day, that he and his Wife faſted, their Oven was found full of Bread. Hunna, who flouriſhed then, ſeeing a deſolating Drought, ſwore by the Name of God, that he would not come out of a Circle, which he had drawn about him, till it had Rain'd. The Miracle came to paſs, as in Elias's time, and there was a very abundant Harveſt. There was not ſo much as a ſingle Bird who durſt fly over the Head of John the Son of Zachai, whilſt he taught; for God cauſed 'em to fall down dead. Laſtly, Gamaliel lived in this time. It will be ſaid, that theſe Miracles, and perhaps the Doctors are imaginary, and that 'tis better to follow Joſephus, who repreſents the Corruption of the Nation extreamly great. I own it, but 'tis not amiſs to ſhew, that the Modern Doctors oppoſe the old. Beſides, we ſee, that to raiſe the Glory of their pretended Maſters, they throw themſelves into an inextricable Difficulty.

VII. Others believe, that the Law they love, renders 'em odious to other Nations, and that this was ſignified by the place where it was given; for Sinai ſignifies Hatred. They add, that their Prayers have never been heard ſince the ruin of the Temple; becauſe tho' God has left the Gate of Repentance ever open, yet he has ſhut up the Gate of Prayer. To this they apply the words of the Prophet Jeremy, who ſays, that God has rejected their Prayer. They add, that God ordered Ezekiel to put a Plate of Iron on his Side, to be an impenetrable Wall betwixt Jeruſalem and him. Repentance is a Sea wherein every Man may waſh, and dive when he pleaſes; but 'tis not poſſible for a Man to pierce through a Plate of Iron. All Moments are Opportunities of Converſion; but a Man cannot always make his Prayer effectual. They reaſon abſurdly; for they maintain that Prayer remains uſeleſs and ineffectual, even tho' the Repentance be ſincere.

VIII. They own, that they love fair Women, tho' they be Chriſtians, which has drawn upon 'em a double misfortune; for the Husband jealous of the Adulterous Jew, often kills him, and makes the Nation bear the Puniſhment of a private Perſon. Beſides, the Children proceeding from this Criminal Conjunction, are Chriſtians, which kindles the Wrath of God. The Jews are as fond of Money as Beauty; and as they undermine the Commerce of Chriſtians, and render themſelves odious by exceſſive Uſuries, they frequently incur exemplary Chaſtiſements. In order to enrich themſelves, they take falſe Oaths; which were ſo common, that Aben-Ezra has thought 'em a ſufficient Cauſe for perpetuating their Miſery. The Rabbins charge them alſo with an inſatiable Ambition, of which they gave ſuch ſtrong Symptoms in their Synagogue in Spain, the ſame Year, they were expell'd by Ferdinand, that this was thought to have drawn this new Baniſhment upon 'em.

IX. A Rabbin, who inſtructed the King of Cozar, attempting to lay open the Fountain of theſe Miſeries, alledged to this Prince, that his innocent Nation ſuffered for the Sins of all the Nations of the World. His Nation, he ſaid, [f] was in the Univerſe, what the Heart is in Humane Body: As the Heart ſuffers from the weakneſs of Conſtitution, from the abundance of Humours, from bad Digeſtion, and the Paſſions; the Jews ſuffer for all the Sins that are committed. All the parts, ſaid he, diſcharge themſelves in the Heart. Thus the Jews, who are in the midſt of all the Nations, are oppreſſed with their Sins, and grow diſtempered by their Communication with them; which is what David foretold, [g] by notifying, that they ſhould be mingled among the Heathen, and ſhould learn their Works. Whilſt they are in Trouble and Diſeaſes, the World enjoys a profound Tranquility. However, as an Impoſthumation is not formed in the Heart, ſo Sin does not reſt among the Jews, but among the Infidel Nations. Afflictions ſhall one Day be the cauſes of the Reſtoration of the Law, and of the ſeparation of the Wheat from the Chaff; and 'tis only to purifie 'em, that God preſerves the World. In a word, they look upon themſelves as the principle of the Happineſs of all other Creatures; as the Heart, tho' often decay'd, is the principle of Life and Motion diſperſed over the whole Body.

Therefore in ſpite of all the Afflictions and Miſery they ſuffer, they ſtill overlook all Nations, and conſider themſelves as the Favourites of Heaven. They ſay, [h] farther, that God having two Patients to govern, one whereof is deſperate, and the other curable, he permits the firſt the uſe of Wine and Delicacies, which he forbids the ſecond, for fear the Fever ſhould re-double, and he ſhould Periſh. The Gentiles and Chriſtians are the ſick Perſon, whoſe recovery is deſpair'd of, and whom God permits the uſe of Pleaſures, and a worldly Proſperity, whilſt he limits the Jews to a certain Diet, leſt they ſhould be debauched and damned. This is rather colouring their Miſery than juſtifying it.

X. They make a Collection of the whole Nation, and of all the Sins of it; and maintain, that as they make up but one Body with their Anceſtors, in whatever Age they lived, they have all their ſhare in their paſt Iniquities, as they have in the Fruits of the Covenant, which God contracted with 'em: And as the Saints and the Faithful, who liv'd in the time of the Babyloniſh Captivity, were confounded with the Wicked, and led to Slavery in Aſſyria; 'tis no wonder that the Good that remain at preſent in the Nation, and are the Salt of it, partake in the Exile and Poverty of the reſt. They add, that the return from the Captivity, was only a Trial, which God made, to ſee whether the Chaſtiſement of Seventy Years was ſufficient to ſave 'em: But that finding they perſevered in the ill Courſes of their Fathers, he ſaw that there was no way to ſave 'em, but by deſtroying 'em.

XI. They [i] ſay alſo, that the Death of Jeſus the Nazarene, is one of the Sources of the Oppreſſion under which they groan:

——Judæus patra de ſede revulſus,
Supplicium pro cæde luit Chriſtique negati
Sanguine conſperſus, commiſſa piacula ſolvit.

But this is only by accident; and becauſe the Chriſtians have retain'd an irreconcileable Hatred for thoſe who put their God to Death, and who becoming Maſters of one part of the World, take cruel Revenge upon 'em, for what their Anceſtors did. Laſtly, They accuſe themſelves of Idolatry; not that they pay any ſort of Worſhip to the Creature, but they believe, that God revenges upon 'em the deſertion, or diſſimulation of the Jews, who make Profeſſion of Chriſtianity; who frequent their Temples, and proſtrate themſelves before their Images, whether or no they embrace this Worſhip in earneſt, or only in pretence.

XII. To all theſe Reaſons may be added, the Hatred which the difference of Religions kindles betwixt the Jews and Chriſtians. Chriſtianity was erected upon the ruines of the Temple. And what a Subject of Grief and Rage muſt this be to a Nation, priding its ſelf in its Privileges, and confident that God hath made an Alliance with it! The Chriſtian Church was at firſt compoſed of Jews that forſook their Religion, and believed Chriſt to be the Meſſiah. 'Twas in vain to think of ſoothing their Spirits, and to give the Synagogue an honourable Sepulture; Chriſtianity was obliged to condemn its Rites, and to bury them. The Jews incens'd with this Affront, omitted nothing to excite a Perſecution againſt a growing Church, and to blow it up in the places where it was kindled. The Chriſtians provok'd by the Death of Jeſus Chriſt, and the Evils they have ſuffered from the Synagogue, have thought that they might juſtly retaliate them in the Places and Times wherein they have been Maſters. Tryphon confeſs'd to Juſtin Martyr, [k] that the Doctors forbad their Diſciples to have any Society, and eſpecially Diſputes with the Chriſtians, becauſe the latter blaſphem'd, by comparing Chriſt with Moſes. The Chriſtians, on their part, interdicted Diſputes with the Jews, who curſed Chriſt; whereas Moſes was only a Prophet, whom the Chriſtians Honour as well as they. And thus the Hatred was kept up betwixt the growing and the falling Church.

XIII. This Hatred was increaſed inſtead of abating. On one Hand the Chriſtians, prompt by a falſe Zeal, have thought it an Act of Religion, to ſacrifice the remoteſt Poſterity of Chriſt's Murderers to their fury. And hence have proceeded cruel Maſſacres and Perſecutions, as we ſhall ſee in this Hiſtory. Nor muſt it be diſſembled, that the Jews has often mutined under the Yoke, and that they preſerve a baneful Hatred againſt the Chriſtians. A Prayer againſt the Chriſtians, is attributed to Samuel the Little; which Prayer is repeated in the Synagogues, and paſſes for the moſt ancient Monument they have preſerved: Becauſe Samuel was Cotemporary with the Apoſtles, ſome have even taken him for the Apoſtle St. Paul before his Converſion. Juſtin [l] Martyr long ſince taxed them with loading the Chriſtians with their Curſes, whilſt the latter bleſs'd them, and prayed to God for their Converſion in their Aſſemblies. In the Inſtallation of a Prince of the Captivity, they pray'd God to reſtore Judah at that time. This Prayer might be innocent; but the Jewiſh Hiſtorians add, that this Head of the Captivity taking poſſeſſion of the Dignity, concluded the Prayer with other things, which he ſpoke in a low Voice, for fear any Stranger ſhould go and accuſe him of his wiſhing Deſtruction to the State in which he lived. Beſides, we read in the Thalmud, that They ought to kill the beſt Man that lived among the Nations; which Nations are not only the Idolatrous, but the Chriſtians. A Monk, who had deſerted the Synagogue, having preſs'd the Rabbins upon this Maxim of the Thalmud, they were forc'd to diſtinguiſh the Gloſs from the Text; and to alledge, that tho' they had great Veneration for the Thalmud, they rejected the Additions that were made to it. Salomon [m] the Son of Jarchi, having determin'd, that a Woman's Head ought to be cruſhed like the Head of a Serpent, explains his Thought, and confines it to Chriſtian Women, Maimonides is tax'd [n] with ſaying, they ought to throw head-long ſuch as they found upon the Rocks; to tumble into a Well ſuch as ſtood upon the brink of it; to ſtop it afterwards with a Stone, or to take away the Ladder if there was one. This relates rather to the Deſerters of the Synagogue than the Chriſtians. [o]

XIV. Laſtly, If the Chriſtians load the Jews with Abuſes, they don't ſpare the Chriſtians, whom they call [p] Hereticks, Nazarens, Idumeans, and a Baſtard Nation. Some Chriſtians have rather choſe to ſuffer Pain, and expoſe themſelves to Death, than be relieved by a Jewiſh Phyſician's Hand. Schickard brings an Inſtance of a Man, who ſeeing his Nephew dying by the bite of a Serpent, and who obſtinately refuſed the aſſiſtance of John Stephanetis, who would undertake his Cure, applied to him theſe words of Salomon, whoſo breaketh an Hedge a Serpent ſhall bite him. He congratulated himſelf, that the Partition had not been broken by the charitable Union of the Chriſtian and his Nephew. They maintain, that the four Perſecutions they have ſuffered, are ſignified by the four impure Animals of Leviticus. [q] The Camel denotes the Babylonian Empire; the Hare, that of the Medes and Perſians; the Cony, that of the Greeks and Romans, under which they have long groaned; but the Swine, which they infinitely deteſt, repreſented the Chriſtians, under whom they ſuffer more than under Idolaters. Alphonſo King of Spain, accuſed them, that at the time they lived peaceably in his Kingdom, they desired of God in their Synagogues, [r] That the proud Reign might quickly be destroyed: For which they gave no other Excuse, than that they meant the Kingdom of the Amalekites, whom God commanded 'em to destroy by the way of an Interdict.

XV. Not to penetrate farther into the Sources of their Misery, we shall relate the principal Circumstances of it. We'll begin with the Jews, that have been dispersed in the East, and will conclude with those of the West; but as the East and West are often differently divided, and the Jews of Egypt and Judæa, were heretofore called Occidentals, in opposition to those who had been carried to Babylon, and the Plains of Assyria, 'tis necessary to observe, that we follow a more Modern Idea, and call those Eastern Jews, which are not only dispersed in Irack, but in Egypt, Judæa and Greece, and all the Eastern Empire, and shall only comprize under the West, the Jews of Italy, Spain, Germany, England and France; where they have had considerable Settlements.

I. THE Ten Tribes carried by Salmanasar into the Cities of the Medes, established themselves there, and preserved their Settlements for many Ages. Some Greek Fathers, as Cyrill of Alexandria, and Theodoret have imagined, that they returned again with Ezra, and that this was necessary to the accomplishing many Prophecies. Besides, 'tis observed, that Ezra offered Twelve Sacrifices for the Twelve Tribes, which must be returned, because they had a share in the Sacrifice. Lastly, There were Persons of all the Tribes in Judæa in our Saviour's time, since Anna was of the Tribe of Asher. There were four different Tribes in Galilee, from whence the Apostles were taken. St. Chrysostome adds, that there were Pharisees scattered in every Tribe; and that the most dangerous dwelt at Jerusalem. In fine, Picus de Mirandola [t] is made to say, that the Jewish Doctors asserted the return of the Ten Tribes: But this Count only says, that they rejected what the spurious Josephus relates concerning it, and the Thalmadists are so far from acknowledging this Fact, that they maintain, that none but the dregs of the People followed Ezra. All the Nobility, and particularly the House of David, remained in Chaldea; and for this reason they bestow so great Encomiums upon the City of Babylon, which they exalt sometimes above the Holy Land; as we shall see in the sequel.

II. He must withstand the Scriptures, and ancient Tradition, who goes to maintain that the Ten Tribes were restored; for Ezra reckons but Twelve Thousand Families, besides those of Benjamin and Judah, which amounted not perhaps to the fifth part of the Refugee Nation in this Country. It is not even certain, that the Families, whose Heads are not noted, were of the Ten Tribes, rather than of that of Judah, who might have lost their Genealogy. If Ezra offer'd Twelve Sacrifices, it was to maintain an Union with the Body of the dispersed Nation, which came afterwards to strengthen it, by their annual Worship at Jerusalem. Josephus [u] affirms, that none but the Tribes of Benjamin and Judah resumed their Possession of the Holy Land. This did not hinder but some of all the Tribes might be there in our Saviour's time; because some who had escaped Salmanasar's fury, remain'd, and some Families returned with Esdras, or took advantage of the Revolutions of the Empire, and of the frequent Journies they made to Jerusalem, to Re-people the Country of their Ancestors; but the Body of the dispersed Tribes continued in the East, where it still remains.

III. A great number of these Orientals appeared at Jerusalem, at the Feast of Pentecost, when the Apostles began to preach the Gospel there after our Saviour's Ascension, and during this Festival. It must not be imagined, that these were nothing but Proselytes, which the Jews of the Dispersion had converted. Most of 'em were Jews, who came to Sacrifice at Jerusalem, according to the Law. By St. Luke's Enumeration of 'em, it appears, that there were Relicks of the Tribes among the Medes where

where they had been ſettled a long time ago, among the Parthians, in Meſopotamia, in Cappadocia, in Pontus and Aſſia Minor.

IV. Philo, [u] who lived at the ſame time, repreſented to Caligula, that Jeruſalem ought not to be conſidered only as the Metropolis of Judea; but as the Center of a Nation diſperſed in infinite Places; but who appeared from time to time, and were able to ſupply him with potent Succours for his Defence. He reckoned among the Places, that were well ſtor'd with Jews, the Iſles of Cyprus and Candia, Egypt, Macedonia and Bithynia. To which he added the Empire of the Perſians, and all the Cities of the Eaſt, except that of Babylon, from whence they were then expell'd. Here therefore it was, that the Ten Tribes tranſplanted by Salmanaſar ſtill reſided: And here they kept themſelves up, notwithſtanding the various Revolutions that befel the Perſian Monarchy. Here we find them at this Day, and I know not why the Jews maintain that they are loſt. The Prophets had foretold them, that Ephraim ſhould be no more a People, and that the Land of their Enemies ſhould conſume them. This has happened; for they no longer make a National Body. There is great Confuſion in their Genealogies; and the Tribes thus confounded, don't make that Figure, which they bore, when the Kings and Califs permitted them to have a Head of the Captivity. Their numbers are leſſen'd by Perſecutions, and the Revolutions of Government. The Land of their Enemies has conſumed them; but yet ſince there are Jews ſtill to be ſeen in the great Cities of Perſia and Media, we may ſay that thoſe are the Poſterity of the Ten Tribes, who have remained and ſtill ſubſiſt there; which we ſhall evidently prove in the Series of their Hiſtory.

V. 'Tis a Viſion, tho' of very ancient Date, that a great bulk of theſe Ten Tribes was ſent into unknown Countries. "The Counterfeit Eſdras [x] "affirms, that Salmanaſar, having tranſplanted "the Ten Tribes beyond the River, they enter'd "upon a Reſolution of quitting the Gentiles, and "retiring to a Place where they might religiouſly "obſerve the Law, becauſe they had been ſeverely "puniſhed for the breach of it." And this Hiſtorian gives four Characters to the Country they went to inhabit. 1. No Body had ever lived there; and therefore it was an unknown Country which they went to diſcover. 2. It was a Year and a half's March to come at it. 3. They paſſed the Euphrates; where God wrought a Miracle for the Jews of the Diſperſion. He ſtopt the Sources of this great River, and dried up its Channel till they had paſſed over; and the Author believes, that God will work the ſame Miracle, when they ſhall return in the laſt Days. Laſtly, He calls this Country Arſareth. But how could People under the Yoke of haughty Maſters have been able to conſpire, to retreat in a Body out of the Lands of their Governours, to ſet up a particular Kingdom in another place? This muſt have happened in the Thirty Firſt Year of the Captivity. Nevertheleſs the genuine Eſdras affirms, that the Jews were ſtill in all the Places where Salmanaſar had conveyed them. Religion it ſeems was the Motive of this Enterprize; but the Jews of the Diſperſion had at that time ſo little Zeal for the Law, that they eſpouſed the Worſhip and Cuſtoms of the Heathens. Laſtly, Arſareth is a City of Media, ſituate beyond the River Araxes. 'Tis believed alſo, that the Jews gave it this Name, and if it be meant, that it is a Place at a great diſtance from Media, where the Ten Tribes were, this Country is unknown; and tho' we examine into its Name, or the Road the Refugees take to come to it, we can't gueſs at the Place whither they retired. And therefore, thoſe who were for ſending them into China, and Tartary, and the Indies, or have imagined a new River Sabbation, equally make uſe of the Authority of the falſe Eſdras. Which is the more to be ſuſpected, becauſe it does not appear by the Hiſtory of Tobit, that they made ſo long a Peregrination, nor that they conſtituted a ſeparate Body from the Nations, to obſerve their Laws. On the contrary, they were then diſperſed at Suſa, Ecbatana, Raguez, and other Cities of the Medes and Aſſyrians on the Banks of the Tigris and Euphrates.

VI. There are a great many, who conſider the ſpurious Eſdras, as an Author that is Venerable for his Antiquity, and that ought to be believed in things relating to his Nation, ſince he could not but know the Hiſtory and Rites of it. St. Ambroſe has often quoted him. The Roman Church, tho' ſhe does not receive him into her Canon, yet admits him into the Celebration of her greateſt Myſteries; for 'tis ſaid [y] in a Maſs, which is celebrated in Whitſun-Week, Receive the joyfulneſs of your Glory, by giving Thanks unto him that hath called you unto the Heavenly Kingdom. And elſewhere the Martyrs are crowned by the Mouth and Words of Eſdras. In fine, Picus de Mirandola [z] received him as a genuine Piece, and that was divinely inſpired.

But for all this, it can't be denied, 1. That this Eſdras was an Impoſtor: For the true Eſdras declares, he was deſcended from Aaron by Fourteen Generations. He has alſo inſerted into his Hiſtory, the Names of his Anceſtors, who were to be reckoned in that Genealogy; whereas the Suppoſitious Eſdras counts Nineteen Generations, and is evidently miſtaken. 2. 'Tis a Man that vents his crude Imaginations with the ſame Aſſurance, as if they were dictated by God. He boaſts of a Divine Inſpiration, which he had not; he pretends to have acquired it by drinking a Fire-colour'd Liquour, by the help whereof, he dictated Two Hundred and four Books; he had the liberty to ſhew the firſt to the Worthy and Unworthy; but the Seventy latter were reſerved for the Wiſe among the People: for in them was the Spring of Underſtanding, the Fountains of Wiſdom, and the Stream of Knowledge. Picus de Mirandola, [a] affirms, that theſe Seventy Volumes of a ſecret Science contained the Cabbala. He pretended alſo, that theſe Books comprehending exact Metaphyſicks, began to be Publiſhed in Latin, by order of Pope——IV. He bought 'em at a dear rate, and found the Doctrine of it entirely Chriſtian. Another Critick cenſures him, becauſe he would be impoſed upon by ſuppoſititious Pieces; and affirms in his turn, that the Seventy Books praiſed by Eſdras, was the Verſion of the Seventy which were read almoſt every where; and from thence he draws a manifeſt proof of the pretended Eſdras's Impoſture, ſince he that brought back the Jews from the Captivity, could not make an honourable mention of a Verſion, which was not made [b] till a long time after. Both theſe Conjectures are equally naught. The Cabbala could not be there treated of; for the Traditions of the Jews, and their ſubtile Metaphyſicks, were not compoſed till towards the end of the ſecond Century; and Judah the Saint is thought to be the firſt, who made a Collection of the Decisions of the Ancient Doctors. If there had been Seventy Volumes of the Cabbala written after Esdras, how could they have remained buried, till the Count of Mirandola's Time, whose Fondness for this Esdras cost him dear, besides the Shame of being deceived. Nor is it the Version of the Seventy that is spoken of, since the false Esdras must have been the Author of it, because he says he wrote these Seventy Volumes. There were Seventy Interpreters; but they did not reckon so many Volumes. Lastly the Volumes, that the Seventy's Version consisted of, were not to be concealed, nor reserved only for the Wise, as this Impostor says. Is it not doing him too much Honour to pretend to guess at his Meaning? and is it not plain that he was a Visionary [c], who went to deceive the Publick by boasting to have dictated to five Persons in forty Days, two hundred and four Volumes, which he never wrote or published?

3. This Author [d] appears to have known Christianity; he says that the World shall perish when the Blood shall drop out of Wood. 'Tis in vain to say, 'tis impossible to guess at his Meaning; nor is it necessary to have recourse to the Blood, which is made to flow miraculously from Wooden Images and Crucifixes. He alludes to the true Cross, from which the Blood of Jesus Christ has flow'd; and he follows the prevailing Opinion of his Time; that is, of the Second Century of the Christian Church, that the World should quickly be at an end.

4. He explains the Manifestation of Jesus the Son of God. He notes the Time and Manner he was to appear in; for this Man came out of the Sea, that is, from an impenetrable Abyss; was hewn from a Mountain; but the Place could not be seen from whence he was hewen. "The "Princes and People, tho' trembling at his Sight, "ventured to make War upon him. He held "neither Lance nor any Instrument of War: but "from his Mouth proceeded Fire; and when he had "consumed those that withstood him, he called "a more peaceable Multitude. This peaceable Multitude were the Jews of the Ten Tribes, who had been dispersed in the East, and whose Travels he relates, and which we are examining.

5. If any Consequence may be drawn from these Four Observations, I shall conclude that this Man was actually born a Jew, and bred up in Chaldea; and that he had formed his Style upon that of Daniel, from whom he borrows his Method, Style, and Prophetical Expressions.

6. He was desirous to flatter that Part of his Nation, which he thought was to be recall'd by the Messiah; and indeed they were the Jews of the Dispersion, Parthians, Medes, and Elamites, who embraced Christianity at the first Preaching of St. Peter. The Author, who had seen or known this Miracle, hoped it would have great Consequences; and that the rest of the peaceable Nation, that is, which did not make War against Christ like those of Jerusalem, should come and constitute the Church.

7. He was actually a Christian; for he speaks often of Jesus the Son of God, but he had still a great Respect for Traditions, and the Jewish Cabbala, which was much esteem'd in our Saviour's Time.

8. He seems also to have followed this Prejudice, or not to have been well acquainted with the Persian Monarchy; since he has shorten'd it, and made Esdras to say, that Jesus shall appear four hundred Years after his Prediction. He was therefore a Jew, turned Christian, who still preserved a Love for Traditions, and the Visions so customary with his Masters.

9. He wrote in the Beginning of Christianity. Since St. Irenæus, Clemens Alexandrinus, and Tertullian have espous'd his Vision concerning the Restoration of Scripture, we must place him at the End of the First, or Beginning of the Second Century of the Christian Church.

10. But his Visions, his Fondness for uncertain Traditions, his Impostures about Divine Inspiration, which he boasts of; and the Time in which he lived, will not suffer us to give any Credit to what he says concerning the Dispersion of the Ten Tribes in unknown Lands. This Writer's Authority vanishes from the very Moment we are acquainted with him; and that of the Fathers, who have followed him, ought not to ingage any body in the same Error.

VII. In fine Josephus observes, that Ezra having obtained Leave to bring back the Jews to their Country, many came from Media to Babylon to follow him, but that abundance preferr'd the Settlements they had in that Country to the Trouble of making new ones. And the Jews say at this Day, that a great many Families of Benjamin and Judah refused to return to Judæa; and that from these Families, whose Posterity was preserved in the East, they were used to take the Prince of the Captivity, who was always of the House of David. It must therefore be owned, that the Ten Tribes were to be sought in Media, since they there remained in the Time of Ezra.

VIII. Josephus [e] asserts, that those who remained in the East, amounted to many thousands; and he makes Ahasuerus's Edict to reach to a hundred and twenty seven Provinces, quite from Ethiopia to the Indies, as if there were Jews in all these Dominions. Orosius [f] and many Christians have followed Josephus; But the Modern Jews who are much more credulous or fabulous than the Ancient, have added Facts to Josephus's Story that seem incredible. However we can't wave relating 'em since we are giving their History.

The Hebrew [g] Joseph pretends to have Copied a Book, Intituled, The Generations of Alexander the Great, and Composed by the Egyptian Magi immediately after this Prince's Death. He had read that Alexander the Great, having gone over a vast Extent of Ground, arrived at last to the gloomy Mountains חשר Choschec. From thence he meant to pass to a Place inhabited by the Children of Jonathan and Rechab, who lived beyond these Mountains. He took thirteen hundred Choice Men to accompany him; but he had not so much as a Ray of Light; and the Ground on which he march'd was nothing but Dirt. He only heard Birds that spoke Greek, one of which cried to him, In vain Alexander, thou attempteſt to penetrate into the House of God, and the Habitation of his Servants, the Children of Abraham. Another admonish'd him to go to the Indies, where he should conquer Porus, which made him retire, and return to his Army to push his Conquests towards the Indies.

tereſted themſelves in writing the Hiſtory of the Ten Tribes: He proceeded from that of Dan. He has been thought [i] to have lived in the Thirteenth Century, and to have ſent the Spaniſh Jews the Memoirs we are going to ſpeak of; but others place him four hundred Years ſooner [k]. He ſays that in Jeroboam's Time, the Tribe of Dan being unwilling to ſhed their Brethren's Blood, and to fight againſt 'em, took a Reſolution of leaving their Country and going into Ethiopia, where they made a ſort of an Alliance with the Inhabitants of the Place, who became their Tributaries. 'Tis eaſie to perceive, that he ſtumbles the very firſt Step, for this Tribe did not leave Judæa upon the Account of Jeroboam. God did not remove it till a long time after. But further it muſt be obſerved, that by the Ethiopia he ſpeaks of, muſt not be meant the Kingdom of the Abyſſins, in which hereafter we ſhall find the Jews very potent; but ſince he traces up the Piſon to this Tribe, he means Chaldea, where Nimrod the Son of Chus Reigned, and which is often call'd Ethiopia in the Scripture. He only falls into a groſs Miſtake in imagining the Inhabitants of this Country were black as Crows, of a Gigantick Stature, and that they ate Humane Fleſh; for the firſt of theſe Characters agrees with the Abyſſins, and can't be apply'd to the Chaldeans.

X. He pretends, that the Tribes of Nephtali, Gad and Aſher followed that of Dan into this Country; that they paſſed beyond the Rivers of Ethiopia, feeding their Flocks and dwelling in Tents. They were headed by a King deſcended from Oliab, and they obſerved the principal Ordinances of the Law. Their Prince could muſter a hundred and twenty thouſand Horſe, and a hundred thouſand Foot. Theſe Four united Tribes divided betwix't 'em the Four Quarters of the Year; each of 'em made War for three Months, and brought their Booty to the King, who equally divided it amongſt the reſt. This ſecond Article comes ſomewhat nearer the Truth; for 'tis certain from the Holy Story that Tiglath Pileſer obliged theſe Three Tribes with that of Reuben, and the half of Manaſſeh, to go and ſettle in this Country. They might live there, and wage War with the Neighbouring Nations; but 'tis not probable that the Kings of Aſſyria permitted them to have a King of their own.

XI. To theſe Four Tribes Eldad adds a Fifth, altogether unknown; which is that of Moſes, which, ſays he, was Idolatrous, and being converted, went and ſettled in thoſe Places, and built ſtately Palaces. The Author maintains, that they had ſtill in his Time admirable Gardens and Paradiſes; but the Bleſſing of Heaven was ſo ſhowred amongſt 'em, that the Children never died before their Fathers; and that the latter lived ſix-ſcore Years. Gold and Silver abounded there, and the Numbers of the Men were ſo great as to exceed the Children of Iſrael that came out of Egypt. Genebrard, tranſlating this Letter, has metamorphoſed the Men into Habits like thoſe of the Egyptians; but he did not underſtand the Author's Meaning, who ſpeaks of the Number of Perſons, this new Tribe was compoſed of. It only ſpoke Hebrew, and religiouſly obſerved the Law; but it knew neither the Amoraiim, nor the Gaons (Authors of Traditions) becauſe they lived under the Second Temple. The Author probably was ignorant, that theſe Doctors all lived ſince the Deſtruction of the Second Temple. Beſides, we know not what he means by this Tribe of Moſes, unleſs it be the Family and Deſcendants of Jethro, who had gone thither, and had left their Idolatry. Some Chriſtian Interpreters have thought, he deſigned to ſpeak of Jonathan, the Grandſon of Moſes by Gerſhom, who was a Levite in the Tribe of Dan, and by this means engaged himſelf in the Idol-Service, by carrying away Micah's Teraphims. They eſpouſe the Rabbins Conjecture, who ſay, that in the Hiſtory of the Judges, where Jonathan the Son of Manaſſeh is mentioned, the N [l] remains ſuſpended, ſo that we may read Moſes as well as Manaſſeh; becauſe on one hand, this Levite was Moſes's Grandſon, on the other he had eſpouſed Manaſſeh's Idolatry. But I don't know how Jonathan can be made the Son of Gerſhom, and Grandſon of Moſes, ſince there were above three hundred Years betwixt Moſes and his Grandſon Jonathan. We muſt therefore refer this Chimerical Tribe to Eldad's Imagination.

XII. Having thus diſpoſed of the Five Tribes, he makes that of Iſſachar ſubject to the Medes and Perſians; and only obſerves, that ſome of them worſhipped the Fire, and married their Siſters, according to the Laws of that Country. The Children of Zabulon extended from the Mountain Pharan to the Euphrates. Thoſe of the Tribe of Reuben, dwelt behind Mount Pharan, and ſpoke Arabick. Ephraim, and the half of Manaſſeh were thrown upon the Southern Coaſt, they lived only upon Theft and Robbery; and were as wicked as thoſe of the Firſt Tribes were good and holy. Simeon and Judah were numberleſs in the Kingdom of Chozar, of which we ſhall ſpeak hereafter, and brought twenty five Neighbouring Kingdoms under Tribute. What he adds concerning the Saracens being their Tributaries manifeſts the falſe and hyperbolical manner of his treating of this Tribe's Power. This is the Firſt Deſcription.

XIII. A famous [m] Traveller of the Twelfth Century [n], and who ſeems to have undertaken his Voyage only to diſcover the State of his diſperſed Nation in all Parts of the World, aſſigns to it large and ſpacious Countries; and his Teſtimony ſeems to be the more Authentick, becauſe he ſpeaks as an Eye-witneſs, and relates what he had ſeen. 'Tis fit we ſhould examine what he ſays upon this Matter. Firſt, as he took his Journey to the North of Babylon, and run over a Deſart for one and twenty Days, he arrived at the Kingdom of the Rechabites. This Kingdom was then divided betwixt two Brothers Deſcendants of the Houſe of David, and who had proved the Line of their Pedigree by Books and very exact Extracts. Thema was the Capital City, where Annas Reign'd. There were a great many other Cities, Caſtles, and Fortreſſes, and an Extent of Country that could not be travelled over under ſixteen Days. The Rechabites, his Subjects, enrich'd themſelves with the Spoils of their Neighbours, and particularly of the Arabians. They had their Academies and Doctors, to whom the People paid Tythes. They alſo charitably maintained ſome People, reſembling Monks, clad in Black, who never drank Wine, and lived retired and in Caves, ſpending all their Days in lamenting the Calamities of Jeruſalem, and of the Diſperſion. They alſo annually made Supplications for forty Days for the Fugitives.

Salmon Annas's Brother reckoned alſo in his Dominions forty Cities, two hundred Boroughs, and a hundred Caſtles. Three hundred Thouſand Subjects all of the ſame Nation, peopled this great Kingdom; of which Tanai which had a hundred thouſand Inhabitants was the Capital. As many were reckoned at Tilimaſa, a very ſtrong City ſituate between two Mountains, where the Prince made his Reſidence. Here then you have a great Country of nothing but Jews, 'Tis Pity it has always continued unknown, and that the Traveller who ſays he was there, is ſo groſly miſtaken in its Situation; for the Arabia he mentions is not on the North of Babylon; and ſo groſs a Blunder at his firſt ſetting out, makes it reaſonably be feared, that he lightly took upon Truſt what was told him of a Country which he never ſaw, and that agreeably flattered the Pride of his Nation: But he does not ſtop there.

XIV. He places the Tribes of Reuben, Gad and Manaſſeh at Cebar, three Days Journey from Tilimaſa, which ſingle City contained fifty thouſand Jews that made War againſt the Babylonians and Arabians: Beyond it is a hideous and unpaſſable Deſart of eighteen Days Journey; and here the Tribes that were vaſtly potent have large and fine Cities, and Armies numerous enough to make War with all the Neighbouring Kindoms. It muſt be obſerved that the Author did not viſit all the Places he ſpeaks of. He often built upon the Accounts of ſome People he met by the way, and there was not a ſurer Means to be deceived, than to believe what was told him of certain miraculous Places without Examination. Inviſible Countries are always the fineſt in the World; they contain a thouſand Prodigies and unheard of Curioſities. Beſides, this Jewiſh Traveller deſcribes ſo ill the Situation of certain Places where he ought to have paſs'd, that a Man is tempted to believe, he ſav'd himſelf the Labour of going thither even when he ſays he did. He ſpeaks for Inſtance of an Iſland which muſt be at the Mouth of the Tigris, where the Indian and Perſian Merchants came to Traffick; and of the Katif in which they fiſh for Pearls. However, 'tis certain that the Ormus, which he means, is very far from the Tigris; for it lies near the Streights of Baſſora; and a Traveller who is ſo egregiouſly miſtaken in the diſtance of the Places he hath ſeen, ought to be more cautiouſly credited in the reſt. What he ſays concerning the Way how Pearls are made, is ridiculous. He had probably heard, that Pearls were formed of drops of Dew. Upon this Chimera he grounds, that the Inhabitants of the Neighbouring Banks go and gather upon the Surface of the water the Rain that falls the twenty-fourth of March, and ſhutting it up, they throw it to the Bottom of the Sea, where it reſts till the Month of September, at which time Skilful Fiſhermen go in ſearch of theſe Water-Veſſels, wherein they find Reptiles, which they diſſect, and draw the Pearls from. If Benjamin [n] had viſited the Places, would he have talked at this rate of Oyſters, from which they gather Pearls?

XV. 'Twas the Cuſtom of the Oriental Jews to build Synagogues near the Tombs of the Prophets. They affirm, that Eſdras's Tomb was on the Frontiers of Perſia, where he went to wait upon Artaxerxes. That on one Side of it there was a Synagogue, where fifteen hundred Jews came to pay their Devotions; and that on the other the Mahometans, who love Eſdras, had built an Oratory. The Tomb of the Prophet Daniel was alſo ſeen in a City ſituate upon the Banks of the Tigris, in the Province of the Elamites. The River ran through the City which was Peopled with Jews. On the one Side lived the rich, on the other the poor. The latter imagined, that Daniel's Tomb occaſioned the Bleſſing of their Neighbours. They made their Complaints, and from Complaints came to Blows to get Poſſeſſion of this Tomb, which became a Source of Wealth. After many Battels, 'twas agreed, that the Tomb ſhould be removed every Year from one Part of the City to the other, that each might have its Share in the Benediction. The Treaty was honeſtly executed for ſome Years; but Benjamin ſays, that Seniger, King of Perſia, who had forty-five Kings for his Vaſſals, ſeeing the Prophet's Tomb paſs backwards and forwards, and being concerned for his Honour, ordered it to be placed at an equal Diſtance from the two Quarters of the City, and to be hung up by a Chain, which was accordingly done. Afterwards a Synagogue was built in this Place, where every body goes to make their Prayers, and the King forbad to fiſh a Mile above or below this Place, in Honour to the Prophet. A Man muſt be fond of Fables and Popular Errors to relate this in earneſt. 'Tis ſtill leſs ſurprizing than what he ſays [o] concerning the Turks having two Holes in their Face inſtead of a Noſe.

XVI. He alſo places the Tribes of Dan, of Zabulon, and of Aſher and Nepthali, upon the Banks of the River Gozan, and in the Mountains of Nisbor, which Mountains and River are equally unknown. Eldad and Peritſul [p] who have deſigned to Copy Benjamin's Narration, widely depart from him; for one of 'em ſends us in queſt of this Chain of Mountains to the Indies upon the Banks of the Ganges; and the other places the ſame Tribes, excepting one, upon the Banks of the River Sabbation, which we ſhall ſpeak of hereafter. The Gozan at preſent is not to be found in the Lands of the Parthians and Perſians, where it ought to flow, according to the Road [q] our Traveller took; But let us however march after him into theſe imaginary Lands, to ſee what Pains he takes to raiſe the Glory of his Nation, and to diſcover the Ten Tribes we are in ſearch of. The Account he gives, is this.

XVII. The King of Perſia being enraged at the Turks, who have two Holes in the midſt of their Face inſtead of a Noſe, for having plundered a City of his Kingdom, reſolved to purſue them. He was forced to have a Guide to ſeek 'em out, beyond a long and frightful Wilderneſs, which ſeparated them from Perſia. The Guide loſt his Way after fifteen Days March, and the Army was very near periſhing with Hunger; but at laſt it approached the Mountains of Nisbor. It refreſh'd it ſelf upon the Banks of Gozan at the Jews Expence, who had planted fine Orchards there. The King of Perſia ſurprized to find upon theſe Mountains, Cities, Fortreſſes, and a Country ſo well Peopled, ſent to enquire what unknown Nation this was. He was willing to enter into Alliance with it, after he had learnt that it was Jewish, and to treat for Provisions. At first they refused him, but upon his threatning to murder all the Jews of his Empire, the Treaty was concluded, and at the same Time, Intelligence was given of all that pass'd to the Turks, their Allies and Neighbours, who waiting for the Persians at the Pass of the Mountains, beat them, and obliged the King to return home with a small Retinue. Benjamin learnt this History from a Person of his Nation called Moses, whom a Persian Officer had brought with him from that Expedition, and who was grown a great Lord in Persia. He added, that all the Nation secured within its Mountains, acknowledged no King. 'Tis difficult to receive these Narratives upon the Credit of a private Person, who has the Precaution to throw a Desart of twenty Days March before the Nation and the Country he speaks of; or rather it would be impossible, but that Travellers should since that Time have found out so potent a Kingdom, which yet they have not done.

XVIII. Another Jew[r] of Ferrara, who lived not two hundred Years ago, giving the Description of all the Parts of the Earth, assigns a much vaster Extent to his Nation, since there is hardly any Place in the World, but where he gives it a glorious Establishment. He invents a large Country shut up by unknown Mountains, and bounded by Assyria, of which he makes a Kingdom called Perricha, containing a vast Multitude of Jews. He places others of 'em in the Desart of Chabor, who live there after the manner of the Ancient Rechabites, without Houses, without Sowing, and the Use of Wine; and that it may not be imagined, that he vents a Chimera, he gives a Chart of the Road that leads to this Desart. You must pass the Cape of Good Hope, enter into the Indian Sea, set Foot upon Land and you find Chabor; nevertheless no body has yet found it. He assigns them potent Kings in the Desarts of Arabia, through which you pass in the way to Meccha. They inrich themselves with Spices and the Pepper they sell, and are as numerous in these Parts as the Sand of the Sea. He enters into the Indies, and Peoples the Banks of the Ganges, the Isles of Bengala, the Philippins, &c. with Jews. Lastly he finds the famous Prester John there, whose Letter shews they had in that Country a Potent King called Daniel, on whom three other Kings depended; and that the Power of this Nation was so great, that they would become Masters of the Country, were they not prevented by numerous Troops. Not to examine the Truth of what is said by this modern Jew, Son of another Jew of Avignon, we must observe that he is impertinently taxed with making Prester John (the King of the Abyssines) write his Letter from the Indies; for if there was ever any King of this Name, he might sooner be found in the Indies than in Ethiopia. Besides it were to be wished, that these three famous Authors had produced the Proofs of what they advance for the Glory of the Nation.

I. THERE are chiefly Two Opinions, that have been currant with the Jews, and even with the Christians: One, that the Ten Tribes went into Tartary, in which are still observed some Tracks of Ancient Judaism; the other that they have penetrated into America. They make the Holy Spirit their Voucher, and quote several Passages of Scripture denoting this Transmigration: Which is what we must examine.

Menasseh, who was one of the Wisest Doctors of the Nation, has nevertheless in the last Century asserted the Transmigration of the Ten Tribes into Tartary, where he assigned his Nation a great Province called Thabor, which he confounded with Chabor, mention'd by the Prophet Isaiah, and situate upon the Frontiers of Media. He would also have his Brethren, passing over the Great Wall that divides the Tartars from the Chineses, to have settled themselves in this Country; and as he found all this in the Scripture, he applied the Words of Isaiah[s] to this Passage, who foretold that the People shall return from the land of Sinim, that is from China; but he had not observed, that Sin, which with the Arabians signifies Clay[t], was the City Pelusium so famous in Egypt.

II. Menasseh is not the only Person that has had this Notion: Postel, who had it before him, and derived the Turks from Judaism, trusted to the Authority of an Armenian Historian, who said the same thing, which has imposed upon abundance of People. Ortelius, [u] that ingenious Geographer, giving the Description of Tartary, notes, 1. The Kingdom of Arsareth, where the Ten Tribes retiring, succeeded the Scythian Inhabitants, and took the Name of Gauthei, because they were very jealous of the Glory of God; from whence came the Kingdom of Bathai. 2. In another place he found the Nepthalites, which had their Hord there. We are told that this word is borrowed from the Hebrews, with whom Morad signifies a Descent. 3. He discovered the Tribe of Dan in the North, which has preserved its Name of Danois or Danites. 4. There is another Kingdom called by the Tartars, Thabor. The Jews have still kept up there, tho' they have lost the sacred Books. The Country has received its Name from them; for it is the middle of Tartary, which is called Thabor from a Hebrew Word which signifies the [x] Navel. From hence it was, that the famous Jew came, who having pass'd into Portugal, and seduced one of the Officers of the Court, got so much Reputation in Italy, that Charles V. had a [y] mind to see him, and engage in a Conference with him at Mantua. 5. They add, that the very Name of Totares, for so we ought to call 'em, is Hebrew, and signifies Remains; which perfectly agrees with the Tribes dispersed in the North, which were the Remains of of ancient Israel. 6. No reason can be given why the Remains of this Nation are so numerous in Muscovy and Poland, except we fix their Habitation in Tartary, from whence they pass'd into the the Neighbouring Places. 7. We find among them the Footsteps of ancient Judaism, as the Circumcision of Children. Whether then we examine the Name of the Tartars, their Languages, or that of the Jews, their Tribes, or their Religion, we easily observe the one to be descended of the other. And 'tis no wonder to find the Ten Tribes dispersed there, since it was no great way to go from Assyria, whither they were transplanted, having only Armenia betwixt them.

III. From Tartary they are conveyed into America. Sir William Pen [z] thinks he has discover'd 'em in his New Republick, and finds their Faces so very much resembling the Jews, "and especially "their Children, that when you look upon 'em, you "would think your self in the Jews Quarter at "London. Their Eyes are little and black, like "the Jews. Moreover, they reckon by Moons; "they offer the first Fruits; and have a kind of "Feast of Tabernacles. 'Tis said, their Altar "stands upon twelve Stones. Their Mourning lasts "a Year. The Customs of their Women are like "those of the Jews. Their Languages Masculine, Short, Concise, and full of Energy, in "which it much resembles the Hebrew. One word "serves for three, and the rest is supply'd by the "understanding of the Hearers. Lastly, They "were to go into a Country which was neither "Planted nor known; and he that imposed this "Condition on 'em, was well able to level their "Passage thither; for we may go from the Eastern "Extremities of Asia, to the Western Extremities of America.

Pen is not the only Person, for 'tis not much more that fifty Years, since R. Menasseh Printed [a] the Hope of Israel, founded upon the Number and Power of the Jews in America. He dedicated his Book to the English Parliament, and was favourably received by Cromwel, which made some say, that they took him for the Messiah. Menasseh had been misguided by Montesini's relation, who reported, that he had found a great many Jews concealed behind the Mountains Cordilleras, which run all along Chily in America. The Fact was thus, Montesini travelling in the Province of Quif, with an Indian, was overtaken with a violent Storm, which occasioned the Indian, called Francis, to exclaim against the Spaniards, whose Cruelty and Sins drew down upon 'em these effects of the Divine Vengeance. Montesini arriving at Carthagena, was seiz'd by the Inquisition, where he had leisure to make Reflexions. He imagined that the Indians were Jews, and revolved it often in his Mind; and as this Notion hath made a great Impression upon him, the first thing he did when he came out of the Inquisition, was to seek for his Indian, and be more amply instructed in the matter. In effect he found this Indian to be a Jew, that his God was Adonai, and that he acknowledged Abraham, Isaac and Jacob for his Ancestors. Curiosity [b] engaging him to pursue his Voyage, he arrived upon the Banks of a River, and upon giving the Signal, People appeared, who pronounced these words of Deuteronomy, SCHEMAH ISRAEL ADONAI ELOHENU ADONAI EHAD. Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God is one Lord. They looked upon Abraham, Isaac and Jacob as their Fathers, and pretended to descend from 'em by Reuben. They told how Providence had placed them there by incredible Miracles; that the Indians had treated 'em with the same Cruelty, that the Spaniards had exercised upon them; that at the instigation of the Magi, they had thrice declared War against 'em; but God protecting his People against the Idolaters, these latter had been so beaten, that there was not a Man remaining of all their Armies. Some Magi, who had escaped by a secret of their Art, had declared, that the God of the Israelites was the true God, and that this Nation should become the Mistress of the World at the Consummation of Ages. Montesini left 'em, with a persuasion that his Brethren should one Day see themselves the Masters of the Universe. Menasseh believed him upon his sincerity, and took the Pains to trace out the Road, which had led the Tribe of Ruben into the West-Indies. He found a Prediction in the Prophet Isaiah, which informed him of it; for he says, the Isles shall wait upon the Lord. Here then you have Islands of America, that Worship the true God. He imagined farther, that Asia and America were one Continent; and that God divided them afterwards by the Straits of Anian. But before this separation, the Jews had travelled to America by Land, and canton'd themselves against the Native Inhabitants of the Country. A Man has since [c] given himself the trouble to confute this Notion and Relation of Montesini. It seems that there was no need of Reasoning to discover the falshood; but yet there are Christians that corroborate it with their Conjectures.

IV. We are [d] told, that the Jews have left many manifest signs of their Passage into this part of the World which discover 'em there; and that these People have a Notion of the Deluge, tho' they relate it in a different manner: For those of Peru tell, that [e] their Land being overflowed, the Men were obliged to shut themselves up in Caves, and to stop up the Entrance of 'em. After they had waited there ſome time, they ſent out Dogs, who returning very wet, without being loden with Mud and Dirt, they concluded the Earth was ſtill covered with the Waters; but making a ſecond trial with the ſame Dogs, who returned dirty, they came out of the Caves, and fell to Re-peopling of the Country. The ſending out the Dogs has pretty much affinity with that of the Raven and Dove, which acquainted Noah with the ſinking of the Waters.

Others ſay, [f] that all the Inhabitants of the Country were buried under the Waters, except Viracocha, who came out of a great Lake, and fixed his Habitation at firſt, in a place where the Ruins of ſome great Buildings appeared; afterwards he came to the City Cuſco, where he began to renew the Stock of Humane Race. Laſtly, There are a third ſort, who ſay, that only ſix Men were preſerv'd, who came out of the Cave through a Hole or a Window, and were the Source of Humane Kind, and they called the Place where they ſettled Pacari Tampo. The Tampo's, or Inhabitants of this Place, are thought to be the moſt ancient dwellers on the Earth. From them proceeded Mango Campa, the Head of the Inchas, who have made War and ſubdued many Provinces, pretending they of right belong to them, ſince their Anceſtors had Peopled 'em, and had eſtabliſh'd Religion there, which they had received from Heaven.

They ſpeak alſo of Giants, who were fought by a Man deſcended from Heaven, who flung upon them Torrents of Fire. A [g] Spaniſh Captain, who heard 'em tell this Story, had the Curioſity to dig in the place where the Battle was fought, where he found Bones enough to make a Skeleton, the Teeth whereof are four Inches long, and two broad. Acoſta relates, that another much larger was diſcovered at Mexico; for one of his Grinders was as big as a Man's Fiſt, and the other Parts of the Body in proportion. Laſtly, other Bodies were found there three times bigger than the ordinary Indians.

V. Some ſay, [h] that Noah, who continued three Hundred and Fifty Years after the Deluge did not live upon the Earth in a careleſs manner, and without thoughts of Re-peopling the World, ſince God had intruſted the Care of it to him. He could not be ignorant, that there was a great Continent in the Weſt ſince he was Divinely inſpired. He was too experienced in the Art of Navigation and building of Ships, to be ignorant of the means of going or ſending to the Weſt-Indies; and it was much eaſier for him to make this Voyage, than to ſail from the end of the Mediteranean Sea to the Tiber, and build upon Mount Janiculus; or to paſs from the Streights to New France, and from Cape Verd to Braſile, than to ſend his Children to Japan. Solomon, who ſent his Fleet upon a three Years Voyage for Gold, was not ſo ingenious. If it was true, that America had been Peopled in Noah's time, it would be no wonder, that its Inhabitants ſhould know the Hiſtory of the Deluge, and find among them the Relicks of the Giants. But who will believe any thing of this Colony of Noah?

VI. And therefore the Jews maintain it was their Anceſtors, rather than the Children of the Patriarch, that convey'd theſe Stories thither, ſince we diſcover other Footſteps of their Religion, which do not ſute with the Noachides: For the Americans affirm, they eſcaped from the Sea, becauſe the Iſraelites paſs'd through the Red Sea, and they have preſerved Circumciſion, which is one of the Characters of the Jewiſh Religion: They offer their firſt Fruits to their Idol, which they muſt have borrowed from the Jews; they eat the Paſchal Lamb, at leaſt in Peru; they kill a white Lamb every Year, whoſe Blood they mingle with Meal, and diſtribute it to the People, who piouſly believe, they eat the Blood of their God, who came down from Heaven. Laſtly, [i] They believe the Reſurrection; and therefore they cauſe their Wives and Slaves to be buried with 'em, that they may appear with an Equipage worthy of 'em, when they ſhall riſe from their Graves; and upon this ſcore, when the Spaniards plunder'd the Tombs, for the Gold that was buried in 'em, they beg'd of 'em to be ſo kind as not to diſperſe the Bones, that they might the eaſier muſter them up at the Reſurrection.

VII. But firſt, the origine of the Americans is unknown; which is what creates ſo vaſt a variety of Opinions. One [k] would have them to be the Poſterity of Cham, expell'd by Joſhua, who taking Shipping were driven by a Tempeſt upon ſo remote a Coaſt. He proves it from this, that the Canaanites eat the Fleſh of their Enemies, like moſt of the Americans. This [l] cruelty is abſurdly imputed to the Canaanites; but however, they made their Children paſs through the Fire, and the Americans dance and paſs over the Fire, when they invoke their Dæmons.

Another [m] will not have America to be peopled before Jeſus Chriſt. For as the Impiety of the Builders of Babel cauſed God to diſperſe 'em into ſeveral Places; the Infidelity of thoſe that rejected the Goſpel drew upon 'em the like Puniſhment, and God ſent 'em into remote Iſlands, where they might live like Beaſts, becauſe they would not live like Gods by embracing Chriſtanity.

Grotius [n] would have the firſt Inhabitants of the New World to be conveyed thither from Greenland. And for an Argument to prove it, he alledges ſome Conformity of Language betwixt the Germans and the Northern Americans. One of their firſt Territories is called Eſtotiland, which is a German Name. The Name of a Lamb is Lam, and the Name of God is Theut. The Germans Thoth is ſufficiently known; but 'tis obſerved, that the Americans have no general Term to ſignifie the Divinity; and therefore ſince the Spaniards came there, they have borrowed of 'em the word Dios. Si queremos, ſays Acoſta, who muſt know it, in linque de Indios Hallar vocable que reſponde a eſte, Dios no ce halla en la lengua del Cuzco, ni en la lengua de Mexico per donde los que Predicen o eſcrivon para Indios uſan elmiſimo noſtro Eſpanol Dios. So that Grotius's laſt Obſervation is evidently falſe. One of the American Kings was called Theuch, whom this learned Critick probably miſtook for a God they Worſhipped. Some will have the Inhabitants of America to be tranſplanted from all the Parts of the World; for ſome bring 'em from Ethopia, from whence Seamen were unexpectedly driven by the Winds that blow directly upon this Country. Others will have 'em to be Tartars, who left their Deſarts to People a gentler Climate. In order to facilitate the Paſſage of Beaſts as well as Men, they ſeek for a ſlip of Ground, that connects the New World with the Old. All the Neighbouring Banks are viſited to examine whether the Paſſage was made. Hence Ireland becomes Subject of Conjectures. As ſome Plants and even Animals, like thoſe of America, are found in this Country, they ſuppoſe, that if theſe Lands have not been united, yet at leaſt the Paſſage betwixt 'em was neither long nor difficult. We read alſo in the Hiſtory of Wales, that in the Year 1170. Madoc ſeeing his Brethren at War for the Succeſſion and Kingdom of their Father, went on Board ſome Ships, truſted himſelf to the Sea, landed upon unknown Coaſts, and left his Crew there. Being charmed with the Country he had diſcover'd, he returned to England, and laughed at his Brethren, who fought ſo furiouſly for a barren and ungrateful Soil, whilſt a fertile Country might be poſſeſſed without any trouble. He returned again with Shipping, and we are told, that theſe are the true Americans, that came from Wales. The Poets [o] as well as the Hiſtorians, have celebrated Madoc's Voyages, who preferr'd the Sea to the Land; nor ought the prodigious number of Inhabitants found in the Weſt-Indies, be any Objection; as if Madoc could not have produced ſo great a People; for four Hundred Years were ſufficient to have ſtock'd the Country. Men may ſay what they pleaſe, when they pretend to determine concerning an uncertain Fact; at leaſt, they have the ſatisfaction to confute their Adverſary ſucceſsfully, and the Pleaſure riſes in proportion to the Reputation, which the Perſon confuted has in the World. 'Tis therefore no wonder, that there are Criticks, who maintain, that the firſt Americans were Jews of Tartary; for if this Conjecture be uncertain, ſo are the others too. They ruine one another, which is ſufficient for us, ſince we have nothing certain to offer about the Origine of the Americans.

are

VIII. Secondly, the Scripture Paſſages, quoted in favour of the Jews, prove nothing. The Doctors alledge for inſtance Obadiah's [p] Prophecy, which promiſes, That the Captivity of the Children of Iſrael ſhall poſſeſs the Land of the Canaanites, even unto Zarephath, and the Captivity of Jeruſalem, which is in Sepharad, ſhall poſſeſs the Cities of the South. The Rabbins ſay, that Sarepta or Zarphad is in France, that Sepharad is Spain, and that the Jews which came from theſe two Kingdoms went over to America. Others from this Paſſage have drawn an Argument of the Americans being Converted by the Spaniards and French. But is not this trifling with Scripture? Sarepta, a City of the Sidonians, is well enough known; why then muſt the word Zarphad be ſubſtituted for it, and interpreted by France, as if the Jews were ever to reign there. Sepharad is leſs known. St. Jerome would have it to be the Boſphorus, and we can ſee no Foundation for this Conjecture. The Rabbins, with as little Foundation, gave Spain this Name. The LXX. have tranſlated it as far as Ephrata: Might we not read in their Verſion Ephratis [q]? And ſo the Prophecy would be clear; for the Prophet meant by it, the Comagena, which the Greeks call Ephrates; or rather we may read it Euphrates, which is a known River. The Jews would have theſe by a vaſt extent of Country, from Sarepta on the Maritime Coaſt, quite to the Euphrates; and on the other hand, they wou'd ſtretch themſelves towards Arabia, which Obadiah calls the Country of Nageb, or the South. They muſt be bounded by the Sea on the Weſt, by Euphrates on the Eaſt, and Arabia on the South; which would give a vaſt reach to their Country, and fulfill the Oracle, which God pronounced by Moſes, that they ſhould carry their Conqueſts as far as Euphrates. But at the ſame time we loſe ſight of America, France and Spain, and the Jews that were to poſſeſs them.

IX. In the Third place, the Author of the Second Book of Eſdras affirms, that the Ten Tribes were carred into a place, where no Body ever lived; which not being to be underſtood of Europe or Aſia, has occaſioned many Interpreters to believe, they were tranſplanted into America, which then wanted Inhabitants. But beſides, the different Falſhoods we have already obſerved in this pretended Tranſmigration, ſince the ſpurious Eſdras expreſſes himſelf only in general Terms about the inhabited Place he ſpeaks of; it can't be concluded from thence, that the Ten Tribes were rather carried into America, than into a Deſart of Africa, or even into ſome place of Aſia, which was not very well Peopled. Whether then we examine the Holy Scripture, and the Apocryphal Books, or aſcend up to the Origine of the Americans, we can't determine, that the Ten Tribes paſſed into this Country.

X. In the Fourth Place, it is not ſufficient to find amongſt theſe barbarous People, ſome Tracts of Judaiſm; becauſe there are a great many Rites that have been common to the Idolatrous Nations and the Jews. Thoſe who give too much to the Devil, have for a long time complain'd of his mimicking God, and attempting to make his Myſteries and Worſhip perfectly like thoſe of the Supreme Being. But not to draw the Devil out of Hell, humane Mind being all of one and the ſame Make, has frequently the ſame Opinions about the Matter of Worſhip. There is no need that Idolaters ſhould go and fetch all their Ceremonies from the true Church. How many Idolaters who never knew one another, had the ſame Ideas of their Gods, and paid 'em almoſt the ſame Homages? Without leaving the Subject we are upon, the Americans have no more concerted with the Manichees, than with the old Egyptians, concerning the two Principles. Nevertheleſs they ſay in Peru, that a powerful Man called Con, had formed Men; but that another more potent Principle, called Pachacama, the Son of the Sun and Moon, metamorphoſed them into Apes, Parrots and Bears, and made the Indians. They Worſhip [r] theſe two Principles, and the laſt has moſt Adorers, becauſe they are afraid of his doing Miſchief, and transforming Men into Beaſts. In like manner, the Americans might imitate the Jews without any Commerce with 'em. The Altar raiſed upon Twelve Stones, the Oblation of the firſt Fruits, and the reckoning by Moons, may have been imagined in all Countries. Circumciſion makes a more ſpeaking Character; but the Fact is very uncertain. Peter Martyr [s] ſays it. They Sacrifice their Children to the honour of their Idols, and are Circumciſed. Gomara ſays, that ſome of 'em are Circumciſed; but not all, Retaianſe a junque no todos. But Acoſta, who had much ſtudied this Country, obſerves, that the Americans can't be Jews, becauſe they never Circumcis'd their Children, nor do it now; and tho' they ſhould be Circumciſed, how many other Nations are ſo too? We muſt not therefore inſiſt upon ſome Shadow of Reſemblance, nor raſhly found Concluſions upon ſome Conformity of Religion, as if the one muſt neceſſarily be deſcended from the other.

XI. For indeed, [t] the Chriſtians have had the ſame Imaginations as the Jews, and have thought they have found Croſſes in America. Towards Darien, they have diſcover'd People, that Baptize their Children in form of a Croſs, and made a kind of Ceremony like that of the Euchariſt. It appear'd alſo, that they had ſome Notion of the Trinity; and they ſaid, a ſtranger had left them all theſe Cuſtoms. It would be eaſie to find almoſt a perfect Correſpondence with the Church of Rome. The Prieſts never approach their Idols without a white Linnen in their Hand, as thoſe of Rome never Officiate without a Surplice; and as the Women had formerly their Dominical or white Linnen, with which they covered their Hand, when they were to communicate. They [u] preſent to the Idols an Image of the Things they deſire to obtain, which little Image is of Silver or Gold, as is done to our Lady of Loretto. Every Trade has its particular Gods. Fiſhermen and Huntſmen have their Patrons, as each has his Saints in the Romiſh Church. The Prieſts ſpeak to the Idols in a Language which others don't underſtand; as the Service of Rome is performed in Latin, to make themſelves more acceptable to the God they Worſhip. They faſt; they ſeparate from the Society of Men and Women, by which Retirement and Mortifications, they obtain Viſions and Revelations. They adorn their Idols with a Croſs and a Mitre, and therefore when the Peruvians ſaw a Biſhop Officiate in his Pontificalibus, they asked, whether he was the Guaca of the Chriſtians. There is nothing even to the word Pope, but is found among the Americans, to ſignifie the Chief Prieſt. Laſtly, [x] In Mexico, ſome Virgins conſecrated to the Service of Idols, made an Effigies of Paſte and Honey, which they conſecrate with a great deal of Ceremony, and afterwards diſtribute it to the People, who believe they eat the Body of their God. Is not this the Myſtery of Tranſubſtantiation? 'Tis alſo very expreſly concluded, that Chriſtianity was brought there in the Apoſtles Days by St. Thomas. And therefore at Braſil they preſerve the Memory of a miraculous Man, called Meire Humane, of whom they report the ſame things, that are told in the Eaſt-Indies of St. Thomas the Apoſtle: It may alſo be ſaid, that this was his Name; for Meire with the Americans ſignifies a Stranger, a Man that wears a Beard, and Humane is the ſame thing with Thomas. In the Mines has been found [y] a Medal of Auguſtus, which perhaps was brought there in that time; and there is a Valley called Imperial C. Auten, becauſe we find in moſt Houſes the Imperial Eagle, which proves that the Chriſtians have had conſiderable Settlements in this Country. It ſeems likewiſe, that without this we can't ſalve the Decree of God, and the Credit of our Saviour and his Apoſtles, ſince the one commanded the Goſpel to be Preached to all Nations, and the others affirm it has been declared to every Creature under Heaven. How could this be true, if the vaſt numbers of Inhabitants that people America, had never heard mention of the Goſpel?

XII. Nevertheleſs America was not known in the Apoſtles times. 'Tis in vain to ſeek it in Plato's Iſle of Atlantis, the Story whereof is mixed with Fables. How ſhall we find it in Virgil's Verſes, who is thought to have given the Deſcription of it?

——Jacet [z] extra ſidera tellus,
Extra anni ſolitq; vias, ubi cælifer Atlas
Axem humeris torquet ſtellis ardentibus aptum.

Don't we ſee, that this is a Poetical Flight, and that there is no Land uncovered by the Heaven and ſituate beyond the Stars? And if we would underſtand any thing hereby, it muſt be Æthiopia, or rather Mauritania, the common Reſidence of Atlas, and of which a Poet ſpeaks thus,

—Æthiopumque [a] ſolum quod non premeretur ab ulla,
Signiferi regione Poli niſi poplite lapſo
Ultima curvati procederet ungula Tauri.

The Prophecies of the Old and New Teſtament have their different Degrees of Accompliſhment. The Apoſtles began to carry the Goſpel into one part of the World, as Jeſus Chriſt had commanded; but they could not finiſh their Undertaking. Perſia received not the Knowledge of the Truth, till a long time after they were Dead. The Churches of Carthage, and of all that part of Africa, were not founded by the Apoſtles. From whence the Donatiſts drew an imaginary advantage, becauſe the Scripture has ſaid, The firſt ſhall be laſt. None of the Diſciples penetrated into Ethiopia, and 'twas in Conſtantine's Reign, that the Kings of the Earth and Nations Worſhipped Jeſus Chriſt. We muſt not therefore lay too great a Streſs upon theſe Expreſſions, that the Goſpel has been Preached to every Creature under Heaven, and that it ought to be Preached to all Nations; for the Scripture often uſes ſuch ſort of Terms only to denote a great extent of Country. Nebuchadnezar wrote [b] Unto all People, Nations and Languages that dwell in all the Earth; and his Dominion reached to the end of the Earth. Whereas he had not carried his Conqueſts into America, nor was Europe ſubject to him, and abundance of Nations never heard of his Edict. It muſt always be remember'd, the Writers of the Old and New Teſtament were Orientals, and that they followed the Genius and Stile of the Nation, in which they lived. We muſt not therefore take their Expreſſions literally, which are often Metaphorical and Hyperbolical. It was ſufficient to the Execution of our Saviour's Order, and St. Paul's thought, that a great part of the World had already heard of the Meſſiah, and of the advantages procured by his Death, without ſending his Diſciples from Place to Place, and Nation to Nation, as far as America.

XIII. Beſides, the Footſteps of Chriſtianity obſerved in America, are too faint to make a proof of its being known. The Church of Rome having a prodigious number of Ceremonies of humane Invention, and tack'd to one another, 'tis impoſſible but they ſhould be often found correſpondent to thoſe of Idolaters. They are invented by the ſame Genius, and inſtituted for the ſame end; I venture to ſay it without deſigning thereby an Affront. All Nations have the ſame Idea of the Deity, and think God would be Worſhipped by the Intervention of Sacrifices, and numerous Rites like the Kings of the Earth. Is it any wonder, that theſe Ceremonies which are purely humane, ſhould be the ſame in different Places, tho' inſtituted for different Objects? The Heathens had their Ablutions and Sacrifices like the Jews. The Guebres Zeroaſters, Diſciples and Deſcendants of the ancient Perſians have their Baptiſm; by which they pretend that all the Stains of the Soul are waſhed away; but they celebrate it with Urine. They have their Confeſſion which they make in the Prieſt's Ear, who acquits them from all Puniſhment, provided they ſatisfie the Deity themſelves by Repentance or ſome Alms-deeds. Have they borrowed all this from the Christian and Roman Church? Fasting and Retirement necessary to converse with God; Abstinence from Women; White Linnen, the Symbol of Purity; the Effigies of Gold and Silver presented to the Idols to obtain any thing of 'em, are Superstitions common to the Generality of Men. The Cross laid upon the Tombs of the dead, might be a more sensible Sign of Christianity; and some have imagined, that the Spaniards expell'd by the Moors under Rodrigo came thither, and brought with 'em this Badge of their Religion. But Lopez de Gomara, who had enquired into the matter, did not believe it; because no Cross is to be found in all the Islands, which must necessarily be touch'd upon before they came thither. No los Creo pues no las ayen las Islas que nombrado ave mos es Alguna de las quales es necessario y aun forcoso tocar antes de slegar alli. The Stakes the Indians lay upon the Grave have been taken for Crosses, because they sometimes place them a-cross; for a great many People have never seen these Crosses.

XIV. Lastly, tho' more manifest Tracks of Christianity or Judaism could be found in America; yet we could not reasonably conclude that the Gospel was brought thither by the Apostles, or that the first Inhabitants of the Country were the Posterity of the Ten Tribes. 'Tis sufficient, that a Vessel driven thither by a Tempest had landed some Jews; who had left some Marks of their Religion among the Inhabitants of the Country, without having Peopled it themselves. 'Tis the true Character of Judaism to continue separate from other Nations. Tho' for Seventeen Hundred Years, they have been mixed with Christians, and many Ages before with the Eastern Idolaters, yet they have preserved, in the midst of 'em, their Books and Rites, and Notion of a Messiah, as a particular People which God has reserved for himself. Would America be the only Place wherein they had lost their Ancient Character, and were so confounded with the Idolaters, as to have none of their Sacred Books, or Hebrew Letters, the Distinction of Meats, of Sabbaths and New Moons; nor the Hopes of that great Deliverer, who is to make 'em reign over all the World?

The Truth is, all these Nations to which they would give a Tincture of Judaism are excessively Idolatrous. Some have in their Temples Two Statutes of Black Goats, before which they burn Wood of a pleasant Smell. They Worship also the Figures of Serpents, and Reverence Heifers and Oxen. Others pay their Homages to the Sun. They invoke the Devils; they Sacrifice their Children to them, and their Worship consists of an heap of extravagant and barbarous Ceremonies. 'Tis no great Honour for the Jews to be the Fathers of this People, if their Posterity has so degenerated, and nothing remains but the Physiognomy of their Ancestors. This is the Character which Pen knew 'em by; but what is more changeable than Physiognomy? Acosta maintains on the contrary, that they could not be the Descendants of this covetous Race, because the Americans despise Riches, which Two Reasons have an equal Solidity.

XV. 'Tis still easier to prove that the Ten Tribes are not the Fathers of the Tartars or Turks. 1. The Scythians, who inhabited Tartary were a very Ancient People. Justin relates the Dispute they had with the Egyptians upon this Subject; and he affirms, that the latter were forced to yield Antiquity to the Scythians. How then could the Ten Tribes, who passed through Media into this Country find it desolate and uninhabited. This is not probable; for besides what Justin relates of their Original, this Part of the North was soon Peopled by the Posterity of Japhet. 'Tis still less probable, that a handful of Fugitives, who left their Families and Treasures with the Medes should be able to conquer and expel the Scythians, a People terrible for their Fierceness and Expence in War. What a Whimsie would it be to leave a tolerable good Country, to go and make Conquests upon the Scythians! 2. This Part of the Ten Tribes, which must have gone thither, ought to give themselves the Name of Totares, because it was the Remains or the Overplus of the Nation. Fuller[c] thought this Name might be given the Scythians by the Syrians, because of the prodigious Multitude of People their Country abounded with; but those who have examined the matter more narrowly say[d] that this Country has a River and a Province called Tatar, from whence the People have taken that of Tatares, which has no Relation to the Transmigration and Superfluity of the Ten Tribes. 3. 'Tis strange, that so ingenious a Man as Ortelius should find here the Names of the Tribes of Dan and Nepthali. There were actually Daces and Danois, who inhabited the North; but how are these Danois to be turned into Danites? We might for the same Reason find the same Tribe in Danemark, and fix their Abode there. There were also Ephtalites, who derived their Name from one King Ephtalanus, whom Procopius places in the North of Persia; but neither this Prince[e] nor his Nation, nor the Euthalites had any thing in common with the Jews. 4. The Tartars have their Hordes, which some multiply to Seven, but this Word is not borrowed from the Hebrews, it signifies a Camp, or an Assembly of People, a Canton of Tartars. 5. 'Tis ridiculous to seek the Glory of God in the Kingdom of Cathay, as if the Ten Tribes who posted there, gave it this Name to shew their Zeal for the Glory of God, who had conducted 'em. For, not to examine the Origin of this Name, they have always been extremely Idolatrous in this Kingdom. "We "see there, says the Historian[f], that Postel had "Copied such a vast Number of Sects, as could "not be reckoned. Some adored Idols made of "Metal. Others made Gods of the Oxen that "Plough their Land; others prostrate themselves "before great Trees, the Sun, and Moon, and "Stars; others live like Beasts and are without "God in the World." All this affords us no Footstep of Judaism. An Ingenious Man, who spent Seventeen Years at the Cham of Tartary's Court, says they have been always Heathens; that their Great God was called Natagai; that the Wife and Children of this Deity were Gods of a Second Rank; and that the Tartars have so great a Veneration for 'em, that there is not a House to be found without their Images. They don't eat without rubbing their Mouths with Grease. 'Tis true, they have altered since that time, and Mahomet's Religion having spread so far, they at present receive Circumcision, and practise some Ceremonies of the Law conformably to the Books of Moses. But the Mussulmans communicated these Rites to the Tartars; and it ought not to be aſcribed to the Jews. 6. 'Tis true theſe latter are numerous in Poland and Muſcovy; but there is no need of aſcending to an Imaginary Conveyance of the Ten Tribes into Scythia, to diſcover the Reaſon of it. There is a natural one, taken from the Tranquility and Privileges which the Kings of theſe Nations have granted the Jews, as we ſhall ſee hereafter.

Rites

XVI. Moreover, the Ten Tribes are convey'd into the Eaſt-Indies and China; which Conjecture is much more likely than thoſe we have been confuting. For Solomon having made an Alliance with the King of Tyre, theſe two Princes ſent their Fleets to Ophir, to fetch Gold and Ivory. Mr. Bochart [g] has diſtinguiſh'd two very different Places, which went by the Name of Ophir, becauſe of their Abundance: One known in Job's time, was ſituate in Arabia, where Gold was ſo common, that it was taken without trouble from the Bowels of the Earth. They exchanged it with the Neighbouring Nations, for Iron and Braſs; and as if theſe Metals had been of an equal Value they gave Weight for Weight; and ſometimes the Sabæans out of a haughty Pride refuſed to give 'em their Braſs, but for double and treble Weight of Gold. This Place was called Caſſanitis, from a Hebrew Word ſignifying Treaſure [h], as when Solomon ſays in his Proverbs [i], In the houſe of the righteous is much treaſure. David knew this Province, and ſpoke of the Gold of Ophir; but his Son's Fleets went to another Place.

Thoſe that are concerned for the Peopling of America, will have the Mines of Peru to be the Sources of Solomon's great Riches, which made Gold at Jeruſalem as plenteous as Stones. But they don't obſerve that the Navigation would have been very difficult, whether they had ſteer'd on the Coaſt of China and Japan, or whether they had doubled the Cape of Good Hope, and coaſted along Africa, whereas the Iſle of Tapobranes, ſo famous with the Ancients, was not very far from the Red Sea and the Gulf of Arabia, from whence the Ships of the King of Tyre and Solomon ſet out.

The Iſle of Tapobranes was that of Ceilan, a Similitude of Names has been obſerved betwixt theſe two Iſlands. It has been ſuppoſed that Tapobranes had been called Simunda, and they change Simunda or Sumænda into Sumatra. 'Tis true this Word is found in a famous Geographer [k]; but there was a Fault in the Manuſcript, and it ought to be read Palæ Simunda, which is the Name the Ancients gave the Iſland Tapobranes. It has changed ſince and been called Sales, from whence came Ceilan, which is the Iſle we ſeek for, and from which Solomon drew his Treaſures. Thoſe that doubt of it may conſult the Learned Mr. Bochart [l], who has found one and twenty Correſpondences betwixt the Ceilan of the Moderns, and the Ancients Tapobranes. It had abundance of Ivory, ſince the Elephants are numerous and of a prodigious Bulk. Precious Stones abound there; it only ſeems that the Navigation could not laſt Three Years, ſince Ceilan is not far from the Red Sea. Strabo ſays, that it was formerly believed this Iſland was Twenty Days Voyage from Land, but it was found that it was no more than Seven. Without examining this, the Length of the Voyage proceeded from their ſending Veſſels that were ill equipp'd and Paper Veſſels. Iſaiah ſays alſo, that the Egyptians ſent Veſſels of Paper to the Maritime Cities, to acquaint them that Oſiris was found again. What do theſe Veſſels of Paper expoſed to the Rage of the Sea, and ſent to the Iſland of Ceilan mean. We muſt underſtand by 'em, the Sails that were then made of Paper and taken from a Book. Theſe Sails were very bad, and therefore the Navigation was tedious. Strabo explains his Thought; for he ſays that the Ships that went for Tapobranes, were bad Sailors, or had bad Sails. Navigation was ſtill leſs known in Solomon's Time. Perhaps too inſtead of Sailing directly they coaſted along Arabia, and the other Shores, which required a great deal of Time.

Since Solomon [m] ſent into this Country, ſome Jews went thither with the Fleet, but they were only particular Perſons, who made no conſiderable Settlements. Benjamin ſays, that he ſaw in this Place a kind of Abyſs, which the Interpreter, tho' very Learned, took for a God, Alhauta; that they daily kindled a great Fire, and that the Inhabitants made their Children paſs through it; but this comes nearer to the Cuſtoms of the Canaanites and Tyrians, who Sail'd thither, than to thoſe of the Jews.

XVII. Claudien ſeems to inſinuate in his Verſes, againſt Eutropia's, that the Jews were ſettled in the Eaſt-Indies.

——— Jam frugibus aptum
Æquor, & aſſuetum ſylvis delphina videbo;
Jam cocleis hominis junctos & quidquid inane
Nutrit Judaicis quæ pingitur India velis.

Why was the Indians Groteſque Figures found more particularly in the Tapeſtries of the Jews, than in thoſe of other Nations? Is it that they had greater Commerce, and lived amongſt them? To change the Text, and reſtore the Name of Attalus [n], inſtead of that of the Jews; to ſeek here the Veil of Solomon's Temple, to maintain that the Jews are here taken for the Babylonians, whoſe Tapeſtries were much cried up, as Juvenal [o] calls the Jews the Soothſayers of the Chaldæans, is to ramble after vain Imaginations; and even Juvenal's Example which is quoted, is not juſt, ſince he accuſes not the Chaldæans, but the Jews, of profeſſing Divination. It ought rather to be obſerved, that it is not the Eaſt-Indies, but Ethiopia that is ſpoken of to which the Church-Hiſtorians frequently give this Name, as when they ſay that Ædeſius and Frumentius carried the Goſpel to the Indies. The Jews are numerous in Ethiopia, as we ſhall ſee in the Sequel, and there they wrought the Tapeſtries we ſpeak of. And indeed it ought not to be ſaid that theſe Sails or Tapeſtries were called Judaick, becauſe there were a great many rich Perſons in the Nation in Theodoſius's Reign, who adorned their Houſes with 'em. Nor is it to any purpoſe to quote for a Proof Theodoſius's Laws, his favourable Orders to the Jews, directed to Claudian, Count of the Eaſt, who is confounded with the Poet. Theſe Tapeſtries took their Name from the Artiſts that work'd them. The Jews of Ethiopia got their Living by this ſort of Work. They delighted to put Antick Figures in 'em, becauſe they bordered upon Egypt, which was fertile in Monſters, and eſpecially, ſince Images were ſeverely forbidden them; they ſcrupled the making the

Figure of a Man or of the Sun, which the Heathen might worship. Instead of Humane Figures they contrived those of Animals, or Men growing out of a Sea-shell, which render'd these Pictures ridiculous, and pleasant to be look'd upon. Claudian therefore speaks of Ethiopia, and Jewish Workmen, who diverted themselves in working Monsters and uncouth Figures into their Tapestries.

XVIII. Benjamin of Tudela [p] says, that in his Travells in the Indies, he found a great many People of his Nation. He met with a hundred of 'em in the Island of Ceilan, where White Pepper and Ginger grow. Sailing thence to the Islands, which are probably those of Java and Sumatra, which is thought to be the ancient Charsonesus, he was inform'd, there were Twenty Thousand People of his Religion mingled with Idolaters, who Worshipped the Fire, and often made a Vow to burn themselves in honour of it. Lastly, having pass'd through China into a City of the Indians called Adan, or Baadan, he discover'd a Nation of Jews there, who dwelt upon the tops of the Mountains, and had built them Towers and Cities. They were govern'd by their own peculiar Laws, without depending on any Prince. They made War against all the other Nations, and no body durst attack them. One would think, there could be no disputing against a Man, who has travelled into a Country, and relates what he saw: But yet we can't forbear doing it. 1. Because Benjamin mixes his Narratives with ridiculous Stories and Fables, which manifest the falsity of them. The Customs [q] he attributes to most Nations, where he ought to have been, are falsly imagined. 2. He should at least be certain of the Places, through which he passed. Nevertheless he is often out in these. He here tells us of the Lybia, which is in Egypt, and very remote from the Road he took: And yet it seems, that it was very adjacent, and a few Days would have brought him to it in his return from the Indies, which is ridiculous. 3. He affects to confound the Names of the Cities and Places, where he gives his Nation any Sovereignty, and a prodigious number of People. The City Adan or Eden, he speaks of, is not known, and the Country of Telassar, where it was seated, is less known. What occasion of this so frequent Affectation, unless it be to shelter himself from the imputation of Error or Design? As no Body has known these Multitudes of Jews in the Indies, we may well believe they did not spread thither till the last Centuries, and that they have neither Principality nor Kingdom with Governours of their own.

XIX. Indeed it can't be denied, but there are at present Jews in China; for [r] Trigaut tells the Story of a Man of that Nation, who was of the Province of Honan, and who one Day coming into the Jesuits Church, was amazed to see upon the Altar a Woman with a Child in her Arms, and before her a Man prostrate, and four other Persons at the four Corners of the Altar. He imagin'd, that the Woman was Rebecca with her Sons Esau and Jacob. He asked the Jesuit whether the other Men he saw were not the Children of these? and Father Ricci answered, yes; immediately the Jew prostrated himself before all these Images, which he thought represented the Patriarchs of his Nation. The Jesuit laugh'd to see a Man thus Worship the Virgin, Jesus Christ, and the Evangelists, as taking them for so many Saints of his Nation, tho' he would have abominated them, if he had known them. Ricci abused the Simplicity of the Man, who demanded, whether the four Evangelists were the Children of Jacob, or of those he saw; for they were the Children of the Virgin Mary, and of Jesus Christ only in a Spiritual manner; but Equivocations are lawful with them, even when they are used to damn Men at pleasure, by putting them upon Acts of Idolatry. Trigaut speaks also of three other Jews of China, who once ignorantly Worshipped the Image of Jesus Christ. These Jesuitical Tricks acquaint us, that there are many Jews in China. But they don't make a considerable Body. They have neither Kingdom nor a Government different from the Chineses, as Benjamin of Tudela affirms. Lastly, They are not the Descendants of the Ten Tribes we seek for.

XX. We must not forget the River Sabbation, on whose Banks, we are also told, there have been for a long time vast numbers of Jews. Josephus [s] is the first who has mentioned this River, which derived is Name from its ceasing to flow on Saturday. Some suspect, there is a Fault in this Historian; who says, that the Course of the River was interrupted for six Days, and that it began to run again on Saturday; and it seems as if he meant the quite contrary; since otherwise it would not have represented the rest to be observed on the Sabbath. And therefore Criticks have corrected this Historians Text, to give it a more natural Sense; and this Correction, tho' it be somewhat strain'd, appears the more necessary, because Pliny, who perhaps took his account of this River from Josephus, makes it rest on Saturday. The Jewish Historian has clearly fix'd its Situation, by placing it in the Kingdom of Agrippa, betwixt the City Arcen, which belong'd to the Tribe of Asher and Raphanes, a little City depending on the Government of Syria. The Latin Interpreter, who has placed these two Cities in the Kingdom of Agrippa, has been mistaken by the wrong pointing. There are only two things surprizing in Josephus's Account; one, that this River is not found in the place noted by him. To say with some Criticks, that the Sabbath being abolished, the Miracle of the River ought to cease with it, since it only flow'd so, to be an Emblem of the observation of the Sabbath, is to delight in vain Imaginations. A young Traveller has seem'd to confirm the Testimony of Josephus, by asserting, that having stopp'd there on Friday in the Evening, he did not see the River flow; and that coming away on Saturday, he could not satisfy himself about the return of the Waters after the Sabbath: but he had learnt from the Country People, that the the thing was certain. If this Traveller had himself seen the Prodigy, his Testimony would be worth something; but as he only produces the Story of the Country, which perhaps he lightly enquired into, his Evidence can't over-rule the general Tradition, which says, that this River is no longer visible. Besides there is another River there, called Eleutherus, in which this Miracle was never observed. All that can be said in favour of Josephus and Pliny, is, that this was a Torrent that descended from Mount Libanus, which sometimes was dried up on Saturday. This having happened sometimes, was a sufficient ground for popular Reports; and, like other Torrents, it was at last intirely dried up, or else had changed its Channel. As its Course was not long, it can't be said that the Jews had placed themſelves there for a retreat. Nor is this the River of which they ſay ſuch mighty things.

XXI. They have imagined another River of this Name, which they have not borrowed from Joſephus, as is ſaid of 'em; for this Hiſtorian of the Nation was hardly known by the Thalmudiſts, moſt whereof were ignorant of Greek. Beſides, they have changed its Situation; and convey'd it from the Frontiers of Syria to Media. Jonathan [t] who was before Joſephus, and whoſe Paraphraſes are in ſuch eſteem, has mentioned it; for he introduces God promiſing his People to work Miracles, even when he ſhall carry them beyond the Rivers of Babylon, and make them dwell beyond the River Sambation. Here then is the River Sambation beyond Babylon, from which they draw great advantages. Some [u] make uſe of it to convince the Unbelievers, that the obſervation of the Sabbath is ſtill in force. The River teaches you, ſay the Jews, with the ſame aſſurance, as if they could demonſtrate, that there was ſuch a one in the World. Others complain, that this River running with ſo much rapidity, and rolling abundance of Stones with its Stream, makes it impoſſible to croſs it without violating the reſt of the Saturday, which retains the Jews beyond it in a great Captivity. Preſter John in the Letter aſcribed to him, adds, that he was forc'd to place great Garriſons upon the Banks of this River, to hinder the Jews from paſſing it, and diſperſing themſelves elſewhere. Laſtly, The Jews have plac'd upon its Banks imaginary Kings, and abundance of Subjects and People of the ſame Nation and Religion with them. This River is unknown to all Travellers; but it concerns the Glory of their Nation to maintain, that it is real. And thus they have alſo invented a new Kingdom of Cozar, from whence they have produced Letters to perſuade the Remains of the diſperſed Nation, that it is ſtill Potent in certain Places; but we ſhall ſpeak of this Kingdom, when we examine the Converſion of the King of Cozar, which the Jews place in the Eighth Century.

I. WE more eaſily diſcover the true Situation of the Ten Tribes, taking the Holy Scripture for our Guide, than by following the Accounts of the Thalmudiſts, and the Modern Criticks. The Scripture ſays, [x] that The King of Aſſyria carried away the Jews unto Aſſyria, and put them in Halak and Habor, by the River of Gozan, and in the Cities of the Medes. There is ſome little difference betwixt the Interpreters concerning the Situation of theſe Places; for the famous Mr. Bochart [y] affirms, that Chalac is Ptolemy's Chalacena, ſituate on the North of Aſſyria. Habor is the Chaboras, or rather the Choatras, a Mountain well enough known. In the Mid-way betwixt this Mountain and the Caſpian Sea, ſtands the City Gozan, which gave its Name to the Province and the River, which was called Cyrus, after the Perſians made themſelves Maſters of this Country.

But there is a difficulty in this Opinion; becauſe it changes a River into a Mountain, and the very Name of this Mountain. 'Tis true, the Scripture expreſſes it ſelf in an ambiguous manner, and Gozan may be called a River as well as Habor; but ſince there is no River to be found of this Name, and 'tis only ſuppoſed there was one before Cyrus, 'tis more natural to place the Iſraelites on both ſides of the River Chaboras. 2. It ſeems to me, that People have not given ſufficient attention to a thing that is evident. Which is, that the Scripture diſtinguiſhes two places, into which the Jews were carried; and indeed they were numerous enough to make two different Colonies. The ſacred Writer places one of theſe Colonies in Aſſyria, and intimates the Cities of this Province which were aſſigned to it. Chaboras, Gozan and Chalcitis; and afterwards he adds, that he placed them [z] alſo in the Cities of Media. We muſt ſeek 'em therefore in theſe two Provinces, which the Chaldee Paraphraſt has diſtinguiſhed as well as the Original Hebrew. We find the places noted, in Aſſyria. We ſee there that River, which the Arabian Geographer [a] calls Alchabor, which proceeds from the Mountains, and running through Meſopotamia, falls into the Euphrates.

phrates. Gozan is a City and a Province, ſituate on one of theſe Banks, which the Iſraelites poſſeſſed, and Halak is Ptolomy's Chalcitis, which is found on the other ſide of the Chaboras. So that the Ten Tribes were ſeated in the two Provinces, which ſtretch'd along both ſides of this River. This was a happy Situation for 'em, ſince all theſe Tribes were ſeparated only by a River, which watered the Cities that were aſſign'd to them.

III. We are more in the dark [b] as to the Cities of the Medes, becauſe the Sacred Hiſtorian does not ſpecifie any; but we ought to preſume that the ſecond Colony was placed in Mountainous Media, which was leſs Peopled than the other. Eſdras inſinuates the thing, for he ſays the Jews were carried into the Province of Hara. This was an ancient Name of Media; for Herodotus calls the Medes Harians, Ἄριοι. 'Twas Mountainous Media that had this Name, which in Hebrew ſignifies a Mountain. 'Tis not to be wonder'd, that they convey'd the Jews thither; for theſe Provinces wanted Inhabitants, and if we believe Strabo, [c] they were Peopled by Strangers, or Colonies ſent into them. The truth is, the Ancients have cried up Media, as a very happy Country. Ecbatana, where its Kings kept their Reſidence in Summer, was one of the fineſt and largeſt Cities in the World. Suſa, where they ſpent the Winter, was alſo very conſiderable; but on the North ſide ſtood high Mountains. There was good Paſturage, ſince the Perſians drew abundance of Horſes from hence, which were much valued. But to this purpoſe, there was need of People, that were uſed to Tillage; and the Jews, who had made it their principal Buſineſs in the Holy Land, which abounded with Hills, were fitter for it than other People.

Indeed the Thalmudiſts [d] ſeat their Brethren in Media; for they ſay, that Akibah preached at Ginzak, which they think the Scripture Gozan; but they add, that they inhabited Chemdam, and its aſſociate Cities, which they call Muſak, Hidki, and Domki. None of theſe Places are to be found, the Names whereof may be ſtrangly diſguiſed by the difference of Languages; but it ſuffices to obſerve, that they are are all placed among the Medes. Benjamin of Tudela, [e] who lived in the Twelfth Century, reckons ſtill fifty Thouſand Perſons of his Nation at Madai, a City of Mountainous Media, which took its Name from the Provine, which the Ancients called Medena, and continued it ſo long, that the Author of the Vulgar ſometimes calls it by it. 'Tis difficult at preſent to mark out the Bounds of this Province, which have been often remov'd. Algebal, which contains one part of Mountainous Media, is very ſmall; and on the contrary, the Perſian Irack reaches far beyond the antient Media. But it ſuffices to know, that the Ten Tribes were ſituate in Mountainous Media, and in Aſſyria, upon the Banks of the River Chaboras, which iſſues from the Mountains, and throws it ſelf into the Euphrates, whoſe Neighbourhood gave them afterwards Opportunities and Means of making conſiderable Settlements.

IV. They not only poſſeſſed Media, where they had been carried by Salmanaſar, but they ſtretch'd upon the Right into the Provinces bordering upon the Caſpian Sea, at preſent called Gorgian and Tabareſtan. St. Hierome relates, [f] that Artaxerxes Ochus having taken Apodaſmus in Judea, conveyed the Inhabitants into Hyrcania, near the Caſpian Sea. There are two palpable Faults in this Account of St. Hierome; for 1. He has taken Apodaſmus for a City which Artaxerxes took, and ſent away the Inhabitants; whereas this Greek word explained by Syncellus ſignifies a part. 2. He thinks they were the Inhabitants of this City, or of Judæa, that Artaxerxes ſent into Hyrcania, whereas they were the Jews that he found in Egypt, that underwent this wretched Fate. And indeed it is not probable, that this Prince, who made the Greeks ſuch a noble Recompenſe for attending him in this Expedition, would have ill rewarded the Services of the Jews.

Artaxerxes Ochus, carrying the War into Egypt, marched through Judea, took Jericho, and ſome other Cities. He afterwards beat the Egyptians, and made himſelf Maſter of their Places, in which having found a great many Jews, to whom the defence of 'em was truſted, he ſent part of 'em into Hyrcania, in the Neighbourhood of the Country, which the Tribes, already Tranſlated, inhabited, and left the reſt at Babylon. The Greek Hiſtorians, [g] ſays Africanus, affirm they were ſtill there in his time.

V. Africanus's Teſtimony is corroborated with that of Hecatæus, [h] as if he ſaid the ſame thing; but this Author, who is much ancienter, obſerves only that the Kings of Perſia, had tranſplanted a great number of Jews to Babylon, which can be no more apply'd to Artaxerxes, than to his Predeceſſors. Oroſius ſays, that the Jews who were carried to the Banks of the Caſpian Sea, were much multiplied there in his time, and that they hoped one time or other to return, and Re-people the Holy Land. But, I fear he was miſled by the Author of the Second of Eſdras, [i] who ſays, that the Jews have dwelt there even to the laſt times, and that the Sovereign, who ſhall one Day re-call 'em, ſhall once more ſtop the Streams of Euphrates, that they may re-paſs it. As the Modern Writers ſtill out-ſtretch the Ancients, we are told, [k] that Alexander the Great, who puſh'd his Conqueſts to the Indies, having found the Jews in Hyrcania, ſhut them up in the Caſpian Gates; that is, in the Mountains of this Country. For our part, who don't believe, that the numbers of Authors living at a diſtance from the times they ſpeak of, confirm the truth of a Fact, we only depend upon the Teſtimony of Africanus, who places one part of the Jews in Hyrcania. This is the more probable, becauſe it was uſual for Artaxerxes to remove the Inhabitants of a Place into Deſart Provinces, and he placed theſe new Jews near the reſt, who already Peopled a great part of the ancient Country of the Medes.

VI. I queſtion whether Fuller [l] has ſo much reaſon to drive one part of this Nation from the other ſide of the Caſpian Sea to the Banks of the River Araxes, where he pretends they took the Name of Caduſians and Geles; for he only bottoms upon the reſemblance of Names; which is not ſufficient to eſtabliſh this Colony. This Learned Man maintains, "That the Name of Geles is Chaldaick, and "ſignifies Strangers or Fugitives, and that this "Title ſuited with the Jews, whom God had ex-"expelled their Country for their Sins. The Cadu-"ſians had a little altered the word Cadoſchim, "which ſignifies Saints, which Title was affected "by the Jews, who called themſelves the Holy Na-"tion. Laſtly, Arſareth [m] the moſt famous of all " the Cities, built upon the Araxes, had a Hebrew " Name, ſignifying the City of Relicks, or of the " Remains of Iſrael. 'Tis no Wonder that the " Jews were mixed there with the Medes upon " the Frontiers of the Country to defend it a- " gainſt the frequent Inſults of the Enemy.

VII. If theſe Conjectures were well-grounded, the Jews muſt have taken up a vaſt Tract of Ground. They muſt alſo have been very potent, ſince they changed the Ancient Names of Cities and Countries, to give 'em thoſe of Fugitives, Relicks, and Saints. How is it, that they have not changed the Names of the River Chaboras, and Gozan on the other ſide of the Media, where they were ſtill more numerous? If their Power and Numbers were ſo conſiderable as to abſorb the Inhabitants of the Country, how comes it that they have not been known there? Without relying upon all theſe Reflections, there is one deciſive one which ſuffices; for the Caduſians were People much ancienter than the Jews, that were carried into Media, ſince Ninus reckoned 'em among his Subjects. The War broke out afterwards betwixt theſe People and the Medes; and Parſorius, one of their Leaders, beat the King of the Medes, who invaded them with Fourſcore Thouſand Men. They were ſubject to the Perſians in Cyrus's Reign. We muſt therefore take from the Ancient Jews, that were diſpers'd, the River Eraſh, the City of Arſareth, and the Country of the Geles and Caduſians, which are abſurdly given to them.

Allatius, who had judiciouſly placed them upon the Banks of Chaboras, would alſo at once have Iberia and Colchis Peopled by them. He founds this laſt Conjecture upon the Teſtimony of Herodotus, who thought that theſe People came from Egypt or Ethiopia, becauſe they were Circumciſed; and the firſt is founded upon the Authority of Conſtantine Porphyrogenitas, who ſays that the People inhabiting betwixt Colchis and Media, deduce their Pedigree from the Jews, and pretended to be the Deſcendants of David. Theſe are Conjectures, that don't ſhock Probability, becauſe 'tis not impoſſible, but the Jews might branch out from Media into other Provinces. However, I ſhall obſerve that Allatius's Teſtimonies are uncertain. Herodotus ſpeaks only of the Circumciſion common to many Nations; and Conſtantine only relates the Imagination of People who were very jealous for the Glory of their Extraction near Two Thouſand Years after their Eſtabliſhment [n], which muſt be a very uncertain Ground for us to go upon. We ſtand by Allatius's firſt Conjecture, which is more ſolid, without embelliſhing it with new Notions, which might render it ſuſpicious.

VIII. 'Tis well known that the Jews were numerous at Nineveh and Babylon. Beſides thoſe, that were carried thither at the time of the Captivity, we have ſeen, that Artaxerxes ſent over a new Colony of the Nation, which muſt render it ſtill more conſiderable. They had the Courage to reſiſt Alexander the Great, the Maſter and Conqueror of ſo many Nations, when he went to rebuild a Temple of Belus at Babylon; for whilſt all the other People were eager to furniſh and carry the Materials neceſſary to this Building, the Jews alone refuſed this Task, as thinking it had ſome Strain of Idolatry, which render'd 'em odious, and expoſed 'em to the Inſults of the People. Hecateus [o] inſinuate Two Things; 1. That this Multitude of Workmen who reſiſted Alexander the Great, did not live at Babylon, but they had their Country, or their Canton, from whence they were ſent for to work upon the Temple; and 'tis very probable, they were ſent for from Aſſyria and the Banks of Chaboras, where we have fix'd 'em becauſe this Province was not very remote from Euphrates and Babylon. 2. That this Province was large, ſince it contained many Satrapæ; for when the Jews, who were called to Babylon were returned home, they demoliſhed all the Temples and Altars Conſecrated to Idols; but theſe Satrapæ paid a Fine for ſome, and obtained Pardon for the reſt.

IX. Antiochus the Great conſiderably leſſen'd the Numbers of thoſe who dwelt at Babylon; for, underſtanding there were ſome Commotions in Lydia and Phrygia, he order'd Zeuxis, one of the Generals of his Army, to draw out Two Thouſand Jewiſh Families from Babylon and Meſopotamia, and ſend them into this Country, becauſe their Fidelity was well-tried. He ordered, that they ſhould be tranſplanted with their Effects; Lands ſhould be aſſign'd to them, and Materials furniſhed them to build with; and that they ſhould be permitted to live according to their Law. And thus they have ſpread themſelves from Babylon to Aſia, where Seleucus had already invited them by the Privileges which he granted them.

X. The Parthians having taken Babylon from the Macedonians, Vardanes, one of their Kings, built Cteſiphon, ſome Leagues from Seleucia, and drew thither the Inhabitants of both thoſe Cities. Babylon began to be evacuated in Strabo's Time, and was much more ſo in Veſpaſian and Titus's Reign; for Pliny, who wrote at that time, repreſents it as a great and vaſt Solitude. Criticks diſpute, whether St. Peter, to whom Jeſus Chriſt committed the Converſion of the Jews came hither to execute his Commiſſion. One, the more confidently to deny that this Apoſtle ever went to Rome, maintains that there were great Number of Jews at Babylon which required his Preſence, and that the little Number of thoſe who were fled to Rome did not deſerve his Care. And therefore he paſſed from Antioch into the Eaſt, from whence he wrote his Epiſtle, and continued there till his Death. Another on the contrary, who exaggerates the Solitude of Babylon aſſerts [q], that the Jews were retired from thence; and that ſince we can't give the Name of Babylon to Rome, we muſt underſtand that of Egypt, whither St. Peter travelled after he had founded the Church of Alexandria, becauſe there were a great Multitude of Jews to be Converted.

XI. We are no ways concern'd to maintain St. Peter's Voyage to Rome; but we ſhall obſerve 1. That it does not appear that this Apoſtle went into Egypt to found the Churches of Babylon and Alexandria. It can't therefore be ſaid, that he dated his Epiſtle from Egyptian Babylon, ſince nothing is ſaid to prove it. It was much more natural for this Apoſtle to paſs from Antioch, where he had made a large Stay, into the Eaſt, where there were ſuch Multitudes of Jews of the Ten Tribes, who were better diſpoſed than the reſt to embrace the Goſpel. The Experiment and happy Succeſs which St. Peter had made upon them at Jeruſalem by one ſingle Sermon, was Encouragement enough for undertaking this Journey. St. Epiphanius ſays, that St. Peter had often ſeen Pontus and Bithynia; and

St. Jerom's Errour in placing this Voyage in the Second Year of Claudius, do's not abſolutely deſtroy his Teſtimony. But not to reſt upon theſe Authorities, St. Peter's Epiſtle addreſſed to the Churches of Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Aſia and Bithynia, is a Proof of his having founded them; for he ſpeaks of their Temptations and their Joy, which could not have been well known to him, but by his converſing with them. As he was near the Euphrates, 'twas natural to viſit the Ten Tribes diſperſed thereabouts: It's of little Importance to know what Number of Inhabitants Babylon then contained: It was ſtill of Nineteen Hours Circuit, and it might ſeem deſerted to the Geographers, tho' there were ſtill above a Hundred Thouſand Perſons in this great City. Beſides, did St. Peter go into the Places where there was a great Multitude of Jews? Criticks here run into two Exceſſes; one in ſwelling up their Number at Babylon to hinder St. Peter from leaving it, to go to Rome; the other in leſſening it to make him prefer the Egyptian Babylon before that of Euphrates. It was ſufficient to invite St. Peter there; that there were in his Time Jews enough to make a Chriſtian Church: And indeed the Jews were diſperſed and numerous in theſe Parts. This Babylon was alſo better known than that of Egypt; and ſince he ſimply names it, we ought not to caſt our Thoughts on the other ſide. He ranks the Churches he wrote to in an Order, which ſufficiently manifeſts he was in the Eaſt; for he firſt addreſſes himſelf to thoſe that were neareſt Babylon, and concludes with thoſe that are fartheſt off. Laſtly, ſome think they obſerve ſome Characters of the Babyloniſh Language in his Second Epiſtle [r], which was written from thence as well as the firſt; for he calls Balaam the Son of Boſor. The Author of the Vulgar thought Boſor was a City. And Grotius [s] comes pretty near him, in pretending that the Syrians changed Pethora into Boſor; but the Conjecture is ſtrain'd, and the Change unaccountable. A much more natural one is made by obſerving that the Chaldæans put the S for the Gnaiin, ש inſtead of ע [t], and then we find Boſor in this Language inſtead of Beor, who was the Father of Balaam. St. Peter not only went to Babylon, but continued there a long time, ſince he adopted its Idioms, and wrote his Two Letters thence. He was willing to convert theſe Jews, whoſe Miniſter he was, and of which there were great Numbers there; for Philo, who muſt know 'em, ſays, they were the Maſters of this great City, which the Heathens had deſerted, to go and make their Court at Seleucia and Cteſiphon.

XII. Criticks demand alſo, whether St. James directed his Epiſtle to the diſperſed Tribes in the Eaſt. Torniel [u] denies it, and imagines that he wrote to thoſe Twelve Tribes, which had been expell'd out of Jeruſalem upon the Beginning of the Perſecution after St. Stephen's Martyrdom. He bottoms his Conjecture upon this, that St. James wrote to the Twelve Tribes of Iſrael, whereas there were only Ten in the Eaſt. This Reaſon is not ſound; for all the Tribes had been carried beyond Euphrates; and tho' Part of thoſe of Judah and Benjamin returned with Ezra, yet ſome had preferred their Eſtabliſhments in the Eaſt before their own Country. Laſtly, ſome particular Perſons only were diſpers'd by the Perſecution at Jeruſalem, and it is not probable they were of the Twelve Tribes, nor that St. James addreſſed his Letter to them. Shall it be ſaid that this Apoſtle wrote to the Twelve Tribes who were then in Judæa, and returned? Scaliger maintains, that there was not any of the Ten Tribes in Judæa. Theſe are Two Extremes to be avoided. The Ten Tribes never returned; but ſome of 'em remained in Judæa when Salmanaſar carried away the principal Inhabitants. Private Perſons often came and reſettled themſelves, when they had the Liberty, by reaſon of the great Revolutions that befel the Perſian and Grecian Monarchies. Hence alſo the Hiſtorian of Judith, tho' an Impoſtor, has followed the received Notion of his Time, in placing a great Number of Jews at Bethulia, which was of the Tribe of Nephtali. Ariſtæus, another Impoſtor, durſt not have ſaid, that Doctors of each Tribe were ſent into Egypt, if it had not been believed as a Certainty in his Time, that there were Remains of theſe Tribes, who had re-peopled their Ancient Inheritance. Galilee, which contained Four of theſe Tribes, was well inhabited, and 'twas from theſe different Tribes, that our Saviour choſe his Apoſtles. However, I believe a Third Concluſion is to be made concerning the Inſcription of St. James's Epiſtle, which was neither addreſs'd to the Twelve Tribes, which remained in Judæa; nor to the Ten, the greateſt Part whereof remained in the Eaſt. But this Apoſtle equally addreſſed himſelf to thoſe Two Bodies of the Nation, where-ever ſcattered or diſperſed.

XIII. One Part of the Nation was eſtabliſhed in the other Cities, ſituate on the Banks of Euphrates; for we find from the Hiſtory of the Goſpel and the Acts, that they came from thence to Worſhip at Jeruſalem. They were ſo numerous there in Caligula's Time, that Petronius, who commanded then in Judæa, was aſtoniſhed at their Numbers, when he ſaw them come to Celebrate the Feaſt of the Paſſover; and as he did not doubt but a potent Succour might come from thence to thoſe that were in Judæa, this ſtagger'd him about placing the Emperor's Statue in the Temple at Jeruſalem. Philo ſays, that they were then Maſters of Babylon, and of many Provinces. They had alſo a conſiderable Eſtabliſhment at Nahardea, another City ſituate on the Banks of Euphrates. From whence it was, that the Two Brothers came, who were abuſed by their Maſter, who cauſed ſuch great Diſorders, and coſt the Nation ſo much Blood.

XIV. Theſe Two Brothers Names [x] were Aſinæus and Anilæus, Mechanicks of Nahardea; being diſcontented with their Maſter, they left him, and retired to a Wood to ſet up the Trade of Robbing. Their Company was increaſed with all the Rogues of the Neighbourhood. They made ſucceſsful Inroads upon the Parthians; and Artaban their King ſending a great Army againſt 'em, it had the Misfortune to be beaten, by People that fought like deſperate Men. He deſired to enter into a Negotiation with 'em. They went to Court upon his Word, and this Prince was ſo affected with their Valour, that inſtead of abuſing their Confidence and puniſhing 'em, he honourably diſmiſs'd them. They continued plundering and beating their Enemies, when Love came to diſturb them. Anilæus being ſtruck with a Parthian General's Wife, reſolved to ſatisfie his Paſſion, and to Conquer him. He declared War with the Husband; defeated him; killed him; carried away his Wife, who brought her Gods and Religion among the Jews. People murmured to ſee ſtrange Gods Worſhipped, and the Law openly invaded. Aſineus ſpoke haughtily of it to his Brother, who fearing they would deprive him of his Beloved Spouſe, and give her up to the enraged Multitude, reſolved to poiſon his Brother, and to ſeek his own Security in his Death. He executed his Deſign; But being lull'd a-ſleep by Love, he put himſelf at the Head of his Forces, and fell upon the Lands of Mithridates, a Great Lord among the Parthians, and Artaban's Son in Law. Mithridates muſter'd up his Vaſſals, and made 'em take up Arms; but being beaten, he fell into his Enemies Hands, who releaſed him only upon Condition, that he would Negotiate a Peace between the Parthians and Jews. He deſigned honeſtly to execute his Promiſe; but the Princeſs, his Wife, being exaſperated, upbraided him with his Cowardiſe, and obliged him to waſh off his Diſgrace with the Blood of the Jews. He ſuddenly muſter'd up all the Troops he could find, ſurprized his Enemies in a Deſart, where he made a horrible Slaughter of 'em. Anilæus was not diſcouraged; but march'd towards Babylon with the reſt of the Robbers. The Babylonians enraged to ſee their Country pillaged, ſent to demand Anileus's Head, which was refuſed them. Hereupon they armed at Babylon, which was then in the Hands of the Parthians; and Anilæus being forſaken by Fortune, was beaten and knock'd on the Head with Part of his People. But Revenge did not ſtop there. There was nothing more to be feared, now Anilæus was dead. But to prevent ſuch another Diſorder, they fell upon all the Jews round about, and put 'em to Death. Thoſe that were wiſeſt retired to Seleucia. The Reſidence of the Greeks in this City make ſome think that it was a City of Syria; Yet 'tis hard to concieve how the Jews fled from thence to Cteſiphon. The Seleucia built by Nicanor, ſeems much fitter for it. The Jews lived quietly there Five Years. But being increas'd by their Brethren who left Babylon becauſe the Plague rag'd in that Place, and who brought along with them a Murdering and Seditious Temper. They joined at firſt with the Syrians to oppreſs the Greeks, who were then rich and numerous in that City; but the Idolaters being all re-united againſt the Jews, fell upon 'em with ſo much Fury, that they kill'd Fifty Thouſand in that Expedition, and no body eſcaped but thoſe that had faithful Friends to ſkreen 'em from Popular Fury.

XV. Their Numbers were conſiderably leſſen'd by ſuch a horrible Slaughter. Such as could eſcape being maſſacred, fled to Cteſiphon on the Banks of the Tigris, which was then the Capital of the Country, and Reſidence of the Kings; becauſe Babylon was already decay'd, and much depopulated. Hither the Idolaters purſued 'em, and forced them to ſeek their Retreat at Niſibe and Nahardea, from whence ſome of 'em had come before the Incurſions of Anilæus. The Situation of theſe Places ſecured them from the Attempts of a mutinous People. They found there many Families which they had left, ſince Agrippa, who Reigned a little after this Misfortune; repreſents the Number of the Jews, that lived in Subjection to the Parthians as very conſiderable.

XVI. A remarkable Thing alſo happened in Adiabene, a Kingdom which conſtituted Part of the Parthians, and lay along the Banks of the Tigris. Ammianus Marcellinus ſays, that the Ancients gave it this Name becauſe it was difficult to go through it[y], by reaſon of a great many Rivers that were in this Province; but he thought the Two Rivers, Diavas and Adiavas[z] had lent it their Name. The Thalmudiſts lean on the other ſide, believing that the Chabor[a] mentioned in the Scripture was the River Diavas; and that their Relations were carried by Sennacherib into Adiabene. If this Conjecture was good, the Jews would have a great Antiquity in this Province; But yet it does not appear, that their Religion was known there in the Time of Izatus. Monobazus who was King of this Country, preferr'd Izatus to the Succeſſion of his Throne, before a great many other of his Children, leſt the Jealouſie occaſioned by this Preference at his Court, ſhould expoſe him to his Brother's Fury, he ſent him to Caraſpaſin, a little Country ſituate on the Banks of the Tigris towards the Perſian Gulf, where Abenneric Reigned. There were at that Time Jews, who thruſted themſelves into all Places both at Court and Country. Ananias had great Credit at the Court of Abenneric. He had even taught this Prince's Wives to Judaize; and he had ſo won upon the Temper of Izatus during his Stay in this Country, as to get a perfect Aſcendant over him, and to inſpire in him an Inclination for Moſes's Religion, which never died with him. Izatus became King a little after, of ſome Part of Armenia, if it be true, that the Remains of Noah's Ark are ſeen in this Place; for this Tradition ſeems to me uncertain, and Armenia was too remote from Adiabene, to think that Monobazus could eſtabliſh his Son there. Izatus did not continue there long, being recall'd by his Father's Death, who had made him his Heir. He found, that his Mother had Proclaim'd him King of Adiabene, purſuant to her Husband's Laſt Will; but nevertheleſs had Crowned Monobazus, having firſt ſecured all her other Children. Izatus aſcended the Throne of his Father as peaceably as if Monobazus had not been Crowned. His firſt Care was to get rid of his other Brothers, who were more reſtleſs and invidious. To do it with the better Grace, he ſent part of 'em as Hoſtages to Artabanus King of the Parthians, on whom he depended, and the other to the Emperor Claudius. Finding himſelf in an uncontroll'd Poſſeſſion, he reſolved openly to profeſs Judaiſm, which he had embraced in his Heart. He ſent for Ananias to Court, and would be Circumciſed; but Ananias, who was a Court-Doctor, fearing the Parthians would knock out his Brains, if he Circumciſed their King, perſwaded him that this Character of Judaiſm was not neceſſary, provided he obſerved the other Commands of God. He was ſupported by Helena, Izatus's Mother, who had alſo been inſtructed in the Jewiſh Religion; but who feared that a Publick Profeſſion of it would create a Rebellion. Izatus, who was very ſollicitous concerning his Salvation, ſent for one Eleazer from Galilee, whom he conſulted upon his Caſe of Conſcience. Eleazer gave his Opinion ſtoutly for Circumciſion; and conferr'd it on the Prince, which ſtrangely aſtoniſhed his Mother, and his former Caſuiſt, when he acquainted 'em, that the thing was done.

XVII. The King immediately applied himself to the making of Proselytes, and he gained some Courtiers, and his Brother Monobazus; and this made a noise. His Subjects allarm'd at this change of Religion, rebell'd, and call'd in Abia King of the Arabians. They deserted their Prince in the Battle, and took Post in the Enemies Camp; but one part of 'em continuing faithful, the Arabians were beaten the next Day. Vologesus [b] King of Parthia, came to the assistance of the Rebels; but Izatus routed his numerous Army, and by these two Victories established the Tranquility of his Kingdom. Helena was long since retired to Jerusalem, where she had her Palace. She also built her Monument there, which was reckoned one of the Wonders of the World; and she exercised great Charities in feeding the People during the Famine; but understanding that her Son was dead, she returned [c] to Adiabene. She found Monobazus on the Throne, whom his Brother had preferr'd to twenty four Children he had left behind him, hereby designing to recompence his Moderation in permitting the Execution of his Father's Will. Monobazus persevered in Judaism, and sent his Children to Jerusalem to be instructed in all the Mysteries of Religion. They were still there when the City was taken by Titus, who carried 'em Prisoners to Rome. The Christians envying the Jews, the Glory of this Conversion, have attempted to rob 'em of it. They maintain, that Helena was a Christian, and that Izatus was converted also. [d] But how is this Christianity to be reconciled with that number of Wives and twenty four Sons he left without reckoning Daughters? Besides they have no Authority except that of Orosius, who offers no Arguments to prove it.

XVIII. The Thalmudists say, there were also Jews at Mæson; but they look upon those who were settled there as Bastards: And hence they say, that Mæson is dead. [e] This Mæson is a little Province inclosed in Mesopotamia, and absurdly confounded [f] with it. For Mesopotamia, of a much vaster extent, was included betwixt the two great Rivers Tigris and Euphrates; but the Mesene was an Island formed by the two Arms of the Tigris, which, when they met again, it took the Name of Pastigris; [g] that is, the whole Tigris. Here stood the City Apamea [h] sirnamed Mesene, which must not be confounded with the Cities of Syria and Persia of the same Name. 'Tis said, that the Jews were at Mesene, from the time that Salmanasar carried away the Ten Tribes; but they send these Ten Tribes into too many places at once. 'Tis more probable, that they came and settled in this Country, when Seleucia became a Capital City, the Trade whereof obliged 'em to approach it, when they left Babylon.

XIX. Pliny [i] speaks also of a Neighbouring Province, whose Capital built by the Greeks, was called Sitta; but the Province was also named Palestine, in which was the City Sabbata, or Sabbatica. 'Tis probable that the Jews, who were numerous in this little Province, during the decay of the Grecian Empire might give these Names of their Country, and their principal Feast. It must not be dissembled, that we read [k] in some Manuscripts Calestine instead of Palestine; but the former Name is much more unknown than the latter, which is found in all the Prints, and in a Manuscript of the French King's Library.

XX. Lastly, This Nation was spread into Osrhoena, of which Edessa, where Abgarus Reigned, was Metropolis. The Notitia Imperii speaks of some Cavalry, which received Orders from the Governour of this Province, which Panvinius will have to be the same with Adiabene. This Cavalry was garrisoned at Sina of the Jews, Sina Judæorum. This was not Mount Sinai, upon which the Law was Published, but another in Mesopotamia, to which the Jews, who inhabited it, gave this Name, as they called the Sittacene Province Palestine. There were therefore Jews there; but we can't conjecture at what time they were placed there. There is no need of recurring to the Colonies brought from Judæa by Salmanasar; but we may say, that this dispersed People seized on all the favourable Opportunities to spread themselves in the East, and to inhabit all the Places, where they might live at Peace.

XXI. Their Numbers still increased by the Desolation of Jerusalem; for 'twas natural for these poor Wretches to go and seek for a Settlement among their Brethren: They even grew very powerful there in the following Age, since the Heads of the Captivity set up a kind of Sovereignty, by taking advantage of the sinking Authority of most of the Eastern Kings. They erected Academies, which became famous; one at Nahardea, and another at Sora, upon the two Banks of Euphrates. A third was founded at Pundebita, two Hundred Years after the ruin of Jerusalem. They called them the Academies of Babylon, because they were upon its Frontiers. There were also Courts of Justice in these Cities, which proves that the Jews were very numerous in these Places.

I. THE Jews ancient hatred of the Egyptians was extinguiſhed by Neceſſity, and theſe two Nations were often ſeen to unite their Forces to reſiſt the King of Aſſyria, who deſigned to conquer them. Ariſtæus even relates, that before this Neceſſity had united 'em, abundance of Jews had already gone to Egypt, to help Pſammetichus to conquer the Æthopians, who made War againſt him. But this firſt Tranſmigration is much ſuſpected, becauſe we can't ſee what Relation the Jews could then have with the Egyptians to ſend thither Auxiliary Troops. 1. They were ſome Souldiers of Ionai and Caria, that according to the Prophecy appear'd on the Banks of Egypt, as Men of Braſs, becauſe they had Breaſt-Plates, who lent Pſammetichus their aſſiſtance to vanquiſh the other Kings of Egypt, and theſe, ſays Herodotus [l], were the firſt that began to introduce a Foreign Language in Egypt; for Fathers ſent 'em their Children to learn of them to ſpeak Greek. Diodorus [m] joins ſome Arabian Soldiers with the Greeks, but Ariſtæus is the only Perſon that ſpeaks of the Jews. 2. It does not appear that Pſammetichus had penetrated into Æthopia; for on the contrary, the conquered People choſe inacceſſible Places for their retreat, and theſe Fugitives made themſelves a conſiderable Settlement under the Government of a Queen. All this has nothing to do with Judæa. 3. On the contrary, Pſammetichus beſieg'd Aſhdod or Azotus; and tho' Eſarhaddon had taken it from the Jews ſome time before, yet as he had not unpeopled it, they were theſe old Inhabitants that maintained a Twenty Nine Years Siege [n] againſt the King of Egypt; and ſince they were never ſuccoured by the Kings of Aſſyria, they muſt needs be the Neighbouring Jews, that ſupplied the place with Proviſions, and ſent their Troops for its Defence. So that the Jews were a long while at War with Pſammetichus inſtead of ſerving in his Armies as Auxiliary Troops, and all that could be ſaid, is, that after the taking of Aſhdod, he convey'd ſome of its Inhabitants into Egypt, which does not agree with Ariſteus's Account. Laſtly, Philadelphus does not ſpeak of this Colony tranſplanted by Pſammetichus. He confines himſelf to that which was made by the Kings of Perſia, when they were Maſters of Egypt, and the other of his Father, Ptolomy Soter. 'Tis true, this is making Ptolomy contradict Ariſtæus; but we ſhall ſee there is reaſon for it.

After the firſt Deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and the Murder of Gedaliah, who was left Governour of Judea, Jochanan went in ſearch of a Sanctuary in Egypt againſt Iſhmael's Cruelty. He carried all away, and even the Prophet Jeremy, who exclaim'd againſt this Violence, and had foretold the Miſeries that ſhould accompany the Refugees in Egypt. For Nebuchadnezar taking advantage of the Diviſion betwixt Apries and Amaſis (who had put himſelf at the Head of the Rebels inſtead of fighting them) enter'd Egypt, and conquer'd it by the Defeat of Apries. He followed the Cuſtom of that time of carrying away the Inhabitants of conquer'd Countries to prevent future Commotions. The Jews that fled into Egypt had the ſame fate with the natural Inhabitants. Nebuchadnezar made 'em change their Habitation once more: Nevertheleſs ſome remained in that Country, whoſe Families ſpread conſiderably.

II. Alexander the Great, reſolving to fill Alexandria, ſent a ſecond Colony of the Jews thither, and granted them the ſame Privileges as the Macedonians. We are told that the Egyptians [o] appear'd before this Conqueror to plead againſt the Jews, and to re-demand of them the Gold, and Silver, and Precious Stones, which their Anceſtors had robb'd them of, when they left Egypt in Moſes's Time. The Jews conſented to the Reſtitution, provided they were paid what was due to them for their four Hundred Years Service. Alexander rejected the Petition of the Plantiffs, and diſcharg'd the Jews from the Debt. The Jews think this Fact ſo certain, that they ſtill celebrate a Feaſt for it annually in March. Ptolomy Lagus, one of his Generals, having ſeized on Egypt, made Incurſions into Judæa, brought off a Hundred Thouſand Inhabitants, which he ſold as ſo many Slaves to the Egyptians, who were afterwards reſtored to their Liberty by Ptolomy Philadelphus.

Ariſteus relates the Fact, as if he had taken it from Ptolomy's Original Letters, but his Authority is conteſted, and ſeveral Circumſtances he has produced. We pretend not to defend this Impoſtor, who was a Jew, and who has diſguiſed himſelf under the Name of a Heathen, whom his Maſter had ſent to Jeruſalem. Beſides, the difference obſervable betwixt the Letters of Ptolomy Philodelphus, which Josephus relates, and those of Aristæus, shews, that he had not the Originals. But tho' we don't defend the Imposture, yet we will clear up the Fact as much as possible, against those, who running into two different extreams, find difficulties in it, or imbellish it with many Circumstances, which are evidently false.

III. First, It is thought, that the false Aristæus is mistaken, in saying, that it was Ptolomy the Son of Lagus, who carried the Jews into Egypt, because this Translation was made two Years after the Death of Alexander the Great, in the first Syrian Expedition, in which Ptolomy did not assist, since Diodorus Seculus observes, that he sent Nicanor, one of his Generals, who in a little time subdued all the Cities of Syria. Diodorus's Authority is great, but Hecatæus's, [p] a Cotemporary Author, who was perfectly acquainted with the Jews, is much greater. In the mean time this Historian relates, that Ptolomy took Jerusalem during the Sabbath. He was therefore present in the first Syrian Expedition. We must therefore vindicate the pretended Aristæus from this imaginary Fault, and reconcile the Historians, by saying, that Ptolomy gave the Command of part of his Army to Nicanor, whilst he headed the rest; or else that Nicanor having marched first, Ptolomy, upon notice of his happy Success, followed him, and took Jerusalem, and carried away its Inhabitants into Egypt.

I find indeed the World somewhat inclined to reject Hecatæus's Piece as suspicious, because an Ancient has said, [q] that He suffered himself to be prejudiced by the Jews, even to dote on their Opinions, or that the Work that goeth by his Name is not his. Scaliger [r] has even expresly determined on the side of the Imposture; but Herennius's Alternative proves on the contrary, that he was very desirous to rob Hecatæus of the Book that goes by his Name, but durst not do it. And tho' he should have expressed himself clearly, yet his decision would not have sufficed, unless he had produced other Reason besides his Indignation to see that he countenanced the Jews. This Historian, who was in Ptolemy's Train, and lived at his Court, is an Eye-witness, whose Suffrage ought to out-weigh the silence of others. It can't then be doubted, but Ptolomy was in the Syrian Expedition, that was made two Years after Alexander's Death, since he took Jerusalem, and brought off great numbers of Prisoners.

IV. Some have said, [s] that Ptolomy exposing them to Sale, found Merchants of all Nations to purchase 'em, which caused a horrible Dispersion of the Jews into all the Parts of the World; to which St. Luke alludes in saying, There were at Jerusalem Jews of every Nation under Heaven; but the Error is manifest, since the Jews were dispersed in the East, and in the Asian Cities, by another Method than Ptolomy's Sale. This Prince left some of them in Phœnicia, which perhaps wanted Inhabitants. He took Thirty Thousand of 'em which he thought fit to bear Arms, and put them in Garrison in the strong Places of Cyrene; and from hence came the Jews of Cyrene, mentioned in Scripture. Lastly, He sold the rest.

V. Ptolomy went a second time into Judæa, Ten Years after, and by his Gentleness prevailed with abundance of Jews to come and People his Kingdom. This is also one of the Contradictions that is observed in the false Aristæus, because they think it impossible that this Prince, who had sold such numbers of Slaves, should afterwards induce the Jews to a voluntary Settlement in the same place where their Brethren had been sold. But there is no Contradiction in it. Conquerors at first treat a subdued Nation with some severity; but afterwards they take gracious and attractive Methods. Ptolomy had expressed his Confidence in the Jews, by giving them the Custody of his Cities. There were others of 'em settled at Alexandria, who made their Fortune there, and who being well pleased with the indulgence of the Government, might invite their Brethren, already inclined, by the Kindness and Promises which Ptolomy had expressed to 'em in his second Expedition.

VI. Philadelphus did more than his Father; for he ransomed the Slaves that his Father had made, and restor'd 'em their Liberty. Many returned to Judæa, which they loved as their Native Country; but doubtless many of 'em remained in a place where they had time to take Root; and Scaliger has reason to say, that these were the People that constituted in part those numerous Synagogues of the Hellenist Jews. There is some Diversity betwixt Josephus and the false Aristæus about the Price, which Philodelphus paid for the Ransom of these Slaves. But is this sufficient to destroy the Fact? Nevertheless if any one will say, that the Jews, who were sold by the Father, continued Slaves in the Reign of the Son, and that the true Josephus is mistaken as well as the false Aristæus, I shall not contradict him. However, it must be acknowledged, that this Nation then injoyed a great Liberty, since it composed that famous Version of the LXX. and perhaps the first Greek Translation that was made of the Books of Moses.

VII. The method of making this Version is much disputed, and neither the Jews nor Christians can agree about this Event. Three very ingenious [t] Criticks have lately written all at once upon the same Subject, without being able to Copy one another. The last imagines, that the false Aristæus is impugned through Interest, to give a blow to the Version of the LXX. whose Authority would appear to him much greater, if the High Priest was introduced in it; but the Historian of the LXX. may be attack'd without destroying the Authority of their Version, which grows never the greater for the High-Priest's having chosen the Interpreters. We shall give our Thoughts in a few words upon this great Work.

The Authority of the Fathers who have supported Aristæus's Narration ought not to stagger any Body after the demonstrative Proofs that have been produced against him. Nevertheless it must be own'd, that his Work is ancienter than Philo, [u] who had already allowed the LXX Interpreters to be Divinely Inspired. Besides, the Foundation of the Romance is true, and derived from History, as generally such sort of Pieces are; to which they add a Turn of Fancy to embellish them. To this end there is no need of multiplying the number of Aristæus's, whereof one Composed the rough Draught before our Saviour's time, and another has added the Ornaments; nor to say, that a Christian at last added, the Precept of loving Enemies; for this Precept was known by the Heathens themselves, and Socrates had given it before our Saviour. 'Tis the Dictate of purified Reason; and generous Souls practise it without Law. Why then must we have recourse to a Christian Hand, to foist this Precept into the false Aristæus? 'Tis probable, they told Wonders in Egypt of the Version of the LXX. these were believed by a Jew who made a Collection of 'em, and publish'd 'em in Aristæus's Name, whom the King had sent to Jerusalem. He thought hereby to do an honour to his Nation. Fifty Years were sufficient to alter the first Tradition, and to add several false Circumstances to it, which he took up. 'Tis no wonder, that this Work, which had been Published almost a Hundred Years before Philo, was received in his time as true, and that he followed a Prejudice so favourable to the Jews of Egypt. St. Epiphanius had read this Piece which is come down to us; but as he Paraphras'd instead of Copying it, and cited it Memoriter, 'tis not strange, that it has seem'd different. Let us try to disentangle Truth from Falshood in the Tradition concerning the LXX.

VIII. Ptolomy Lagus was the Person, that enter'd upon the design of this Version, who very obligingly treated the Jews, and was willing to know their History. And therefore there is some reason for introducing Demetrius Phalereus into this Project; but the Work was not finished till Philodelphus's Time, and for this Reason the Glory of it is ascribed to him. Two Reasons are urged against this Conjecture; one, that Philodelphus was a Prince profligately Debauch'd, who had kill'd his two Brothers, and Married his Sister, and that God, who refused a Temple from David's Hand, would have been far for suffering so impure a Man to assist in the Translation of his Law. But this is ridiculous; for the Kings of Egypt had no thoughts of serving the Glory of God, by the Greek Version of the Books of Moses. They were only touch'd with the Curiosity of knowing the History of a Nation, which accounted for the Origine of the World differently from the Egyptians; and as this People made a considerable Figure in his Kingdom, he was willing to know their Laws and Religion, which were singular. Philadelphus's Incest and Murder of his Brothers, were no obstacle to this piece of Curiosity, and God had no Interest to repress it.

IX. Dr. Hody's Objection [x] taken from the silence of a great many Heathens, who knew not the Jews, notwithstanding their Version of the LXX. is learn'd and much more reasonable. Nevertheless it proves too much; for whether this Version was made by the Jews of Alexandria, for the use of the Synagogues of this Country; or was done by the Order of the Kings, and plac'd in their Library, the Heathens might either have known, or not known it. They might not have known it, because all Manuscripts in Kings Libraries are not always known; and the Ptolomys did not trouble themselves to publish a Version which they had made for their own use. The Heathens might also have known it, tho' it had been made by private Hands without Authority. If Pliny, Plutarch, Acron, and several others, have not read this Version, 'twas their own fault, since it was undoubtedly made long before they wrote. I confess 'twas natural for the Jews of Alexandria to be proud of the Protection and Command, they had received from the King, to translate their History; but I must likewise acknowledge, that the Consent of all Authors about this Circumstance, determines me to believe it; and the rather, because it is not an extraordinary thing that a King, who observ'd a vast number of Jews dispersed in his Dominions, should be willing to know 'em.

X. 'Tis demonstratively proved, [y] that only the five Books of Moses were Translated at first, and that the Authors of this Version were Jews of Alexandria; but I must beg leave also to believe, that they sent to Jerusalem for Jews, because it was a persuasion that the constant Inhabitants of that Country might better understand the Hebrew Tongue than those of Egypt, who had taken the Grecian Customs, and might have forgotten part of their Language. What could hinder Ptolomy from solliciting the High Priest to send him some ingenious Persons of the Nation to contribute to this Work, and that they should be consulted upon occasion. But 'tis ridiculous to say, that the Palestine Inhabitants were the Pen-men who Composed the Greek Version. For common Sense will tell us, that this related only to the Jews of Alexandria accustomed to speak that Language: Besides, the Proofs produced are so strong, that 'tis impossible to answer 'em. Afterwards they have romanced this History; one has placed Esdras at Philadelphus's Court, by a fault in Chronology, [z] which is unpardonable in a Man, that pretends to write one; another has turned Eleazar, who followed Ptolomy Lagus, into a High Priest. The false Aristæus and Josephus that followed him, multiply the number of these Doctors to Seventy Two. He produces six out of every Tribe, [a] as if King Philadelpus, who required Interpreters had any Interest to distinguish the Tribes, and to desire an equal number out of each. That nothing might be wanting to their Dignity, they are made so many Nuntio's or Legates of the High-Priest; and also Counsellors of the Sanhedrim. Nor is Philadelphus's magnificent Reception and Entertainment of 'em forgotten: These are Romances and Circumstances tack'd to the History to dazle the Learned Vulgar. But by insisting on what is Plain and Natural in it, we may believe, that Learned Men were sent for from Judæa, to consult them, not only about the Language but the Ceremonies, the memory whereof might be decay'd in Egypt; and that the Alexandrian Doctors, upon the strength of this assistance, Composed their Version agreeably to the Style of the Place, in which they had always liv'd. 'Tis hard to conceive, why 'tis called the Version of the Seventy, unless it be that the Alexandrian and Jerusalem Doctors, who contributed to the Undertaking actually made this number.

XI. The Jews that remained in Egypt, had reason to authorize this Version, since they quickly forgot the Hebrew; but the Cells and the Feast of Pharos, celebrated in memory of this Work, or the Feast in detestation of it, are meer Whims. These Cells were never spoke of before Justin Martyr, and those who have fancied they have seen 'em lately, teach us not to believe Travellers upon their bare word.

The Christians also were highly concerned to enforce this Version; for the Greek Fathers who understood neither Hebrew nor Latin, had no other way to come at the Scripture. People run here into two different Extreams; for this Version may be very useful to illustrate many obscure Passages of the Original, since they were Men well skilled in both Languages that Composed it, before any Controversies could arise betwixt the Jews and Christians; but the Original is also necessary to correct the Faults crept into this Version; and when a Debate arises betwixt the Original and the Version, Reason dictates, in spite of all the subtlety of the interested or too opinionated Criticks, that the Original ought to be prefer'd.

XII. Thus you have the Origin of the Jews in Egypt; where they continued quietly enough till Philopater's Reign, who was a Monster of Debauchery and Cruelty. This Prince who had ravaged Judæa, being returned to Alexandria, shut up all the Persons of this Nation in the Hippodromus, with Design to have 'em crush'd by Elephants. We may imagine what were the Cries and Howlings of this Multitude doom'd to Death. Ptolomy was frighted with 'em, and deferr'd the Punishment some Days, at the End whereof he pardoned 'em, and delivered 'em of all their Fears. However they continued faithful to this Prince, who was mortally hated by his other Subjects, who revolted the Year following; for the Jews furnished this Persecutor with a numerous Army, of which he lost Sixty Thousand Men.

XIII. This Nation wanted a Temple in Egypt for the Service of God. I know not whether the Kings denied 'em this Liberty; but God had deprived 'em of it by confining his Worship to Jerusalem. Nevertheless Onias, a Fugitive in Egypt, by reason of the Maccabees's Usurpation, obtained Leave of Philometor to Purify a deserted Temple, or rather to build a new one in the lower Egypt, in the Province since called the Second Augustamnick or Imperial, because it was upon the Nile. Philometor was moved by the hopes of inviting a great Number of Jews, if they had a Place to Sacrifice in; and to succeed in this Design, they imitated the Temple at Jerusalem, and introduced all the Rites and Ceremonies, that the People imposed upon by this Similitude might more easily be accustomed to it. Onias added the Necessity of uniting the Jews that Worshipped in different Synagogues. Lastly he quoted a Prophecy of Isaiah, foretelling that there should be five cities in the land of Egypt, one of which should be called the city of destruction, and in that day shall there be an altar to the Lord. He adapted this Prophecy to his Interests by making two Alterations; for he read the City of the Sun instead of the City of Destruction, and made the Temple to be built by a Jew. Josephus, who had said that this Temple was built in the Time of Antiochus Epiphanes, afterwards retracted. But yet Godfroy of Viterbo has given it a greater Antiquity; making it to be built in Philadelphus's Reign, whilst the Septuagint Version was composing, and he places it at Memphis.

Dum quasi Legista Philadelphus transtulit ista,
Instituit Templum Templi Salomonis ad instar
Judaico more simili fabricavit honore.
Urbs Pharaonis erat quondam, cognomine Memphis,
Quâ dedit hoc Templum Domino Sother Philadelphus,

XIV. This Temple [b] drew new Inhabitants into Egypt, because those who were discontented at Jerusalem came hither: It occasioned great Divisions; for most of the Alexandrian Jews refused to Worship at it; and at Jerusalem they look'd upon both the Worship and the Priests that served it as prophane. The Rabbins have even said, that God had severely prohibited their settling out of Judæa, unless they were forced by a Superiour Power or a Famine. They ground this Prohibition upon these Words of David [c]: They have driven me out this day from abiding in the inheritance of the Lord. They included Egypt in their Prohibition, because the Sins of that Nation were greater than those of other People. 'Tis very likely, that these Prohibitions, which are not found in the Law of Moses, were only the Dictates of their Jealousie, who lived at Jerusalem, and saw with Indignation that Concourse of People, that settled at Alexandria.

XV. For indeed [d] the Numbers of the Refugees were so considerably increas'd at Alexandria, that besides a great many stately Synagogues, they had a particular Magistrate assigned to judge them by their own Laws. Onias's Children Fifty Years after saw themselves at the Head of Cleopatra's Forces, who disputed the Sovereignty with her Son Ptolomy Lathurus; and prophane Historians [e] give an Honourable Testimony of the Jews Fidelity at that time, who always fought for the Queen, whilst most of the Egyptians deserted her.

XVI. 'Tis pretended, that St. Mark found the Opportunity of an abundant Harvest amongst the dispersed Jews in Egypt, when he went to settle the Church of Alexandria; but not to recur to an uncertain Tradition, the History of the Acts informs us, that the Synagogues of the Cyreneans and Alexandrians were those, that most violently opposed St. Stephen, and contributed to his Martyrdom, by the Tumult raised by their Dispute. This Passage gives Interpreters some Trouble; but not to wander from the Subject we are upon, we may observe two things. 1. The Jews say, that their Nation had a lofty Temple at Alexandria; but 'tis probable they have mistaken that of Heliopolis built by Onias, and absurdly placed it at Alexandria. Selden, with all his Ingenuity has embraced this Notion of the Jews, and thought that there were Two Temples in Egypt, tho' Historians speak but of one. But at least this City had so fine a Synagogue, that Tradition says, that he who had not seen the benches of it, had never seen the Glory of Israel. They had moreover several Oratories in the same City, which were sufficient for the Exercise of their Religion in that Country. 2. But farther, they had a Synagogue at Jerusalem, where their Academy was. Hither they sent their Children to study the Law, and the Hebrew Tongue. Here they paid their Devotions when they came up to Celebrate the Feast of the Passover; for there was not room for every body in the Temple. The Jews of Cyrene had a Synagogue at Jerusalem for the same Use, and the Governours of these Synagogues were those that broke out with so much Violence and Injustice against St. Stephen the Proto-Martyr.

XVII. There were also Jews at Babylon, another City of Egypt. And therefore 'tis pretended that St. Peter having founded the Church of Alexandria, went thence to Babylon, where he found a Multitude of Jews, whose Conversion was committed to his Charge; and it was from thence, that he dated his Epistle to the Churches of Asia

[b] A Hundred and fifty Years before Jesus Christ. [c] 1 Samuel 26. 19. [d] A Hundred and Three Years before Jesus Christ.
[e] Joseph l. xiii. c. 21. Strabo Cappadox apud Joseph.

But as St. Peter's Journey to Alexandria not only appears doubtful but Chimerical, we muſt ſay the ſame thing of his Travels to Egyptian Babylon. 'Tis more likely that he went to the Babylon of Chaldæa, where whatever may be ſaid to the contrary, there were ſtill a great many Jews as well as in Egypt. From hence it was that he writ to the other Jews diſpers'd in Aſia; and all that can be cenſured in Salmaſius's Conjecture, is the long Stay that he gives St. Peter in Chaldæa. He abſurdly maintains that he never came from thence, whereas he died at Rome.

XVIII. Philo, who writ in that time, repreſents alſo his Nation very potent in Egypt by the deſolation that befel it, which occaſioned his deputation to Caligula. They had paid their Reſpects to this Prince at his firſt Acceſſion to the Crown; but having only made their Compliment by writing, and committed their Addreſs to Flaccus, this Governour who did not love 'em, ſuppreſs'd the Memoir, to make the Emperor believe that they were the only People, that had not aſſured him of their Obedience. This Governour having incur'd his Prince's Diſpleaſure by the violent Death of Macron, thought he could not better render himſelf neceſſary in Egypt, than by pleaſing the People, and to pleaſe them, there was no ſurer way than to licence them to inſult the Jews. Agrippa's arrival, who paſs'd through Alexandria, adminiſtred an Opportunity to this. The People inraged to ſee a Jewiſh King, equipp'd a Fool call'd Carrabas, like a Prince, and drew together a multitude of Children, crying behind him Marim; that is, Lord. Agrippa was ſenſible of the Inſult. The reſemblance of Names betwixt Carrabas and Barrabas, has made ſome obſerve here a juſt Puniſhment of God upon Agrippa, in revenge of the ridiculouſly dreſſing Jeſus Chriſt like a King at Jeruſalem. But this is fetching the Puniſhments of God a great way. Flaccus carried on his Point againſt Agrippa, and reſolved to deſtroy him: The Jews of Egypt gave him notice of it. Flaccus did not pardon them, and tho' there was a Million of People of this Religion in Egypt, he ſuffered them to be oppreſs'd. The Mob began, and burnt the Oratories of Alexandria, burying a great many Perſons in the Flames. They obliged the Jews to quit five Quarters of the City where they dwelt, two of which were called the Quarters of the Jews: They gathered them into one place, where many died with Hunger, becauſe they durſt not go out, for ſuch as did, were knock'd on the Head by the Rabble. The Governour countenanc'd the Mutineers by declaring, that the Jews were Aliens, and had no Right to defend themſelves. Some he cauſed to be ſeverely handled in his Palace. In a word, the Perſecution was violent; and Caligula, who had a Journal ſent him of all the Tranſactions, only laughed at them. A ſecond Sedition aroſe at Alexandria, and the two Factions ſent Deputies to the Emperor Caligula. Appion, who took the Title Alexandrinus, tho' he was born in Oaſis, was at the Head of the Egyptians, Joſephus reckons but three Deputies of the Jews; but Philo, who was the firſt of 'em, reckons five. This Deputation had no Effect, becauſe Caligula would be own'd as a God, and have Sacrifices offered him. They took Breath again under Claudius, who put out an Edict in their behalf.

XIX. 'Tis ſaid, that there were a Million of Jews diſperſed in Egypt, of which the greateſt part periſh'd. They drew upon themſelves theſe Miſeries by their Seditious and Rebellious Tempers. However they ſtill enjoy'd their Privileges of Citizens of Alexandria, and might come into Offices. They were headed by a Perſon, whom they call'd their Alabarch. Valeſius fancies that this Name was given him by way of Contempt and Rallery; but Joſephus, who could not be ignorant of the State of the Jews in Egypt in his time, repreſents this as an honourable Title, and attributes it to none but thoſe, whoſe Eminence and Birth he would enoble. Philo was Brother to one of theſe Alabarchs; and Mariamne, Daughter to Agrippa the Great, left Archelaus's Bed for that of Demetrius, who was then, ſays Joſephus, [f] powerful among the Jews of Alexandria, by reaſon of his Birth and his Wealth, and becauſe he was an Alabarch. This Poſt was given for Life, and 'tis often confounded with that of Ethnarch, which Title was ſo honourable in Judæa, that Archleaus the Son of Herod the Great, had never any other.

XX. The Refugees in Egypt encreaſed their numbers by the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem and the Temple; for the Holy Land being deſolated, and the Worſhip, which devoted the People to Jeruſalem, aboliſhed; they made no ſcruple to go into Egypt. And there was a neceſſity of doing it, ſince there were ſome Perſons of the Nation, who had had for a long time ſome conſiderable Eſtabliſhments there. In the mean time it may be ſaid, that they carried Divine Vengeance along with 'em, and the Miſery that attended them in all Places; for beſides the Miſery inſeparable from a Refuge ſo violent as that which they underwent, the Emperor obliged his Lieutenant in Egypt to ſhut up the Temple which Onias had built. The Example of that at Jeruſalem created apprehenſions. 'Twas feared, that the one being raz'd, the diſperſed would fortifie themſelves in the other, and enterprize ſome Project of Rebellion as obſtinate as that which was juſt ended in Judæa: And therefore Veſpaſian gave Orders to pull it down; but the Governour to whom the Order was ſent, qualified it, and only ſhut it up. 'Tis alſo probable, that he did not ſet ſo ſtrict a Guard upon it, but that the Neighbouring Jews aſſembl'd there ſometimes in ſmall Numbers, ſince Hiſtorians obſerve that Paulinus Lupus's Succeſſor in the Prefectſhip, alſo ſhut up this Temple, hindred them from exerciſing their Religion in it, and carried away all the Riches, that the Peoples Devotion had made Sacred.

XXI. Nor was this the only Misfortune, that fell upon the Diſperſion in Egypt; ſix or ſeven Hundred Aſſaſſins, who had made cruel Havock in Judæa, being accuſtomed to fiſh in troubled Waters, and to enrich themſelves with the Peoples Spoils, ſollicited their Brethren to rebel, and fell to murdering thoſe who yielded not to their Inſtigations. The Principals of the Nation, which had long been eſtabliſhed at Alexandria, eaſily foreſaw the Conſequences of this Storm, and reſolved to prevent them, by impeaching theſe Leaders of Sedition and Rebellion to the Deputy. They delivered up ſix Hundred of them, who at laſt received the Puniſhment due to thoſe infinite Crimes they had committed. Some eſcaped to Thebes, where they were purſued, and at once all were involv'd in the ſame Sentence and Puniſhment, who were ſuſpected of the Confedracy. So that a great many innocent People were brought in; nor were their Wives and Children ſpared. They would have obliged theſe latter to acknowledge the Emperor [g] their Master, but they chose rather to suffer Death, than to pay him that Homage; which shews, that these were the Remains of Judas the Galilean's Faction, which still survived.

their

XXII. Lastly, Their Miseries were redoubled by an Impostor. He was one of those Assassins, who having escaped the Hands of Justice, had gather'd together a fresh Company, by promising to shew them strange Prodigies. Two Thousand Fools from Lybia and Cyrene believed him, and enter'd his Retinue, who were quickly cut to pieces by Catullus's Troops, who took that opportunity to enrich himself. For Jonathas, which was the Impostor's Name, falling into his Hands; to please him, accused the richest Merchants of his Nation in Egypt, of being engaged in his Conspiracy. They were Executed, and their Estates confiscated. Three Thousand Persons perished in that Execution. Catullus, to his misfortune, was willing to go on, and caused some Jews of Rome to be nam'd as guilty of the same Crime; but Vespasian having seen the Informations, and caused the Impostor to be confronted with the Accused, discovered the Injustice, ordered Jonathas to be burnt, and acquitted all that were attainted. He pardoned Catullus; but God revenged his Injustice, by disturbing his Mind, which was tormented by abundance of Apparitions which he fancied before his Eyes.

XXIII. Some Refugees had passed from Egypt to Æthopia. If you will believe them, 'twas the Queen of Sheba, that carried Solomon's Religion thither, and a Child of this Prince, with which she was big, when she left him, who established it afterwards. They confidently assert, that Religion was preserved there without Books by the help of Tradition. And therefore the Kings of Æthopia call themselves at this Day Kings of the Israelites; and the Princes that from State-Jealousie are shut up in two Rocks call'd Gheseu, take also the Title of Israelites. They produce ancient Genealogies, by means whereof they prove the Descent of the Kings of Æthopia from Solomon. They find even in Christianity, which they now profess, some manifest Tracks of the Jewish Religion, which could not be effaced. Tho' these Arguments have been thought very solid by ingenious Men, who were well read in the History and Customs of this Nation. I must own, that it is hard to believe, that Judaism subsisted from the Queen of Sheba, through so long a Succession of Generations without Books and Writings. 'Tis much more probable, that it was carried thither from Egypt, where the Jews had been so long established, as indeed 'twas the Egyptians, that convey'd the first Inhabitants and their old Religion into this Country.

XXIV. 'Tis difficult to fix the time of this Event: But 'tis sufficient for our History to know, that Queen Candace's Eunuch Baptized by St. Philip, was of this Country. Baronius has thought that this Eunuch had no Religion besides that of the Æthopians, and that it differed not much from Judaism, nor even from Christianity. But 'tis strange how he could say it; [h] for the Natural Æthiopians were extremely Idolatrous. Jupiter Hammon had his Temple and his Altars there. They had barbarous Gods, and they placed in the same Rank all the great Men that died. Erasmus wittily said, that this Heathen Eunuch, who was Baptized in the way without Witnesses, had stole the Grace that belonged to the Jews. Which Rallery was only imagined to ellude the difficulty that arises from St. Peter's Ministry, whom God by a Miracle licensed to open the Gate to the Gentiles a long time after Philip had Baptized the Eunuch. But it must be said, that this Eunuch was a Proselyte, or a Jew, who, like the rest of the Dispersion, came to Worship at Jerusalem; and whether you make him a Jew or a Proselyte, there must have been People of this Religion in Æthiopia, who taught it others; and the Writings of Moses and the Prophets must have come thither, since this Eunuch was attentively reading the Prophet Isaiah, and was so favourably disposed to receive the Messiah declared to him. The Conveyance of Judaism into Æthopia through Egypt, appears the more easie, as the Kingdom of Candace was, as is believed, at Meroe very near Egypt; for the other Æthiopians excluded Women from the Crown. Philostorgius and Procopius [i] say likewise, that in Constantius's Reign, there were a great many Jews mingled with the Nations of Æthiopia, who Worshipped the Sun; and in the Sequel we shall find entire Nations there, that profess'd Judaism.

XXV. We know neither the Time nor the Manner of this Religion's spreading in Arabia. There was great Commerce betwixt the Arabians and Æthiopians; the Passage was short and easie. It might be said then, that it was this way that Judaism came among the Arabians; and that which confirms this Conjecture, is, that the Homerites, who were almost all Jews, and who were headed by a King of that Religion, dwelt beyond the Sea. They might have pass'd from Æthiopia to this Coast, and therefore they retained the Name of it. As the Arabians had taken this way to settle in Æthiopia; the Æthiopians and Jews might also have bent their Course thither after the Depopulation of Judæa, by Titus or Adrian; because they were necessitated to avoid the pursuits of the Romans, and to seek a Sanctuary in foreign Places. They Peopled a part of this Country; built Cittadels, and had their Princes; and therefore we shall see 'em mustering up Armies, and giving Battle to Mahomet, to oppose the impetuous Course of his Religion and his Conquests.

XXVI. It would be useless to shew, that the Jewish Nation was dispersed into the Cities of Asia and Greece, because this Dispersion is well known. Hence came that famous distinction of Hellenist Jews. Antiochus the Great had sent 'em into Lydia and Phrygia, from whence they multiplied into Thracia, and therefore they were found there when Constantine fix'd the Capital of the Empire in that Province. The other Kings of Syria, who often built Cities, drew Inhabitants to 'em of all Religions, and gave the Jews not only liberty of Conscience, but the same Privileges as their natural Subjects. Philo asserts, that in his time his Nation was settled in Bithynia, Macedonia, Pontus, Thracia, as well as in the Islands of Cyprus and Candia. They were so numerous in the Cities of Antioch, Apamea and Sidon, that they durst not Massacre 'em, when the Inhabitants of Ascalon, Ptolemais, Damascus, the Capital of Syria, Cyrene, and the Arabians unmercifully Murder'd them. Which manifests that they were dispersed into all Places. Lastly, Those who survived the destruction of their Temple and Country, were sold and scattered into all the Provinces of the Empire. Let this suffice to give a general Idea of the dispersion of this People in the East.

XXVII. 'Tis surprizing after this to see 'em ven-

turing to affirm, they have preserved the distinction of Tribes and Families. Maimonides [k] had the honesty to own, that they were so confounded after Senacherib's Time, as to be no longer distinguishable. Hinc familiæ internos confusæ sunt, ita ut dignosci nequeant inter se, nec locis ipsarum cognosci. The Thalmudists distinguish the places, where the true Jews are to be known. Babylon, say they, is sound, Mæson is dead, Media is sick, Persia is expiring. That is, according to the Gloss, "That all the "Jews of Babylon are of pure Blood, those of Mæ-"son are Bastards, in Media there are many of "pure Blood, and many that are not, in Persia "there are some of pure Blood, but few of this "Character." But this indefinite and general distinction does not regulate the Condition of each Family. The Thalmudists, who wrote at Babylon, raised the Glory of this City, and flattered themselves, that they were all of the Blood Royal of David. They founded their Nobility upon a thing evidently false; that all those that forsook the East to return to Jerusalem with Ezra, were Beggars, and the Scum of Israel. Ezra, say they, left the pure Flower at Babylon, and took with him the Dregs of the People. They add, "That all the Countries of the "World are an impure Mass in comparison of Ju-"dæa; but Judæa is a corrupted and depraved Mass "in comparison of Babylon." 'Tis easily perceiv'd, that all these Encomiums bestowed on Babylon, preferably to Judæa, arise from Self-Love, and are very ill grounded. The House of David, who had great Pretensions in the Holy Land, was far from leaving them to groan under Slavery of Foreign Princes. Ezra reckons Forty Two Thousand Families that returned with him. Of this Number there were Thirty Thousand of Benjamin and Judah, which doubtless made the Total, or at least the greatest part. We can't tell, of what Tribes were the Twelve Thousand Families, the Chiefs whereof are not put down. It may be said, that they were the Rascality of Judah, who could not shew their Genealogy with some Families of the Ten Tribes. So that we ought not to seek for David's Family in the East. This Proof has another manifest fault in it; for it seems to muster all the Nobles in one City, and all the Bastards in another, which is a thing impossible. It will have Media to be sick; whereas the Families might better preserve themselves unmixed there than at Babylon, since they had there their Cities and Villages. But the Thalmudists follow their Genius, and speak at random, because the Genealogies were horribly confounded by so many different Revolutions. Lastly, They say, without any Foundation, that Mæson is dead; for on the contrary, the Jews that went thither, came from Judæa, and must have had a purer Blood, than those that had been transported long ago to Babylon and Media, where the Families were confounded. For 'tis very probable, that Mæson was the City Emese, or Hems. For Herodian observes, that Mæsa the Mother of Saeme, from whom came Heliogabulus, and Mammea the Mother of Alexander Severus, took her Name from the City Emesa, where she was Born. This City depended on Antioch, which was Peopled with Natural Jews: It was near to the Palmyrenians, where they had a Queen of their Religion. It must be owned, that the Jews who came from Judæa or Antioch to Emesa, must have been of as good Families as those that were dispersed among the Medes; and it can't be said without rashness, that there was not in that place one single Person, that was a Jew by extract, or that Mæson was dead. The Rabbins can say nothing positive hereupon. Nor is there any thing certain besides the general Confession of Maimonides, that the Families are so confounded, that they cannot be known or distinguished.

I. WE have seen how one considerable part of the Jewish Nation was dispersed in the East, and had taken Sanctuary there. Let us at present learn how they were settled in the West, and in all the Roman Empire; that having a general Idea of the places we shall speak of hereafter, we may find less difficulty in their History, which may be said to extend from one end of the World to the other.

Italy and Rome are called in the Thalmud [l] the Cruel Empire of Edom. When you ask the reason of it, of their greatest Masters, as Abravanel, Aben Ezra, Joseph Albo, they maintain, by a surprizing Infatuation, that Italy and the Roman Empire were fill'd with Idumæans, who came to Rome after they had embraced Christianity.

Abravanel

Abravanel affirms, " That the Romans, and in " general all the Christians may be called Edomites, " as Isaiah call'd the Sinners of his time, a People " of Sodom and Gomorra, because they took their " Manners and Customs. He carries the Compa- " rison of the Romans and Idumæans farther. They " have one and the same Father, as Esau and Ja- " cob, which is God. Esau introduced Strangers " into the Patriarchs Family, and in the like man- " ner we find in the Roman Empire, and the Chri- " stian Church, a jumble of all sorts of Nations, " that provoke God. Esau hated Jacob and at- " tempted to rob him of his Birth-right, his Goods " and his Life; which is what the Christians do to " Israel. Besides, the Cabbalists maintain, that E- " sau's Soul pass'd by a Metempsycosis into the Bo- " dy of Jesus Christ. Hence they have received the " same Name. [m] Esau was born under the Con- " stellation of Mars; and therefore he became a " Hunter and Sanguinary. The Heroes who de- " scended from him, and reigned in Italy, were " Murderers, who eat the dead Bodies of those they " Conquer'd. Besides the Roman Emperors, were " Cloathed in Red, because Esau was Red, and had " a mind to eat of that Red. The Cardinals also " wear a Red Habit. Jesus Christ, who was " Born under the same Planet Mars, had Blood up- " on his Head; and therefore he was put to Death " with part of his Disciples. Lastly, Ramban af- " firms, that the Idumæans embraced Christianity, " and that the Romans followed their Example; for " which reason all Christians have been called Edo- " mites or Idumæans, because these were the first " that turned Christians. Ramban could not lye; " for he took this from Tradition, and perhaps had " read it in the Annals of that Time. 'Tis there- " fore past Dispute, that Idumæans govern'd Rome, " and that the Roman Empire is that of Edom, as " we read in the Thalmud.

Aben Ezra, [n] can't bear to have it said, that the Holy Nation is subject to the Idumæans; nevertheless he will not forsake Tradition, and therefore he turns the thing another way. He maintains, that the Cuthæans took Jerusalem, and led the People Captive to Rome. For the faithful Idumæans in Agrippa's Reign, brought Succours to Jerusalem. But Constantine having embraced the Religion of some Persons who had deified a Man, and who believed in him, was resolved to have it received at Rome; but none but some Idumæans observ'd his Orders; and therefore the Roman Empire was called the Empire of Edon; as the Egyptians and Arabians are called Ishmaelites, tho' they had among 'em but very few of Ishmael's Descendents.

Lastly, Joseph Albo [o] asserts, that the Roman Empire is call'd Edom, because 'twas an Idumæan Priest, that brought the Faith to Rome, and the Nations take the Name of those whose Religion they embrac'd, as the Jewish Proselytes are called Israelites.

There are therefore three Opinions concerning the Title given to the Roman Empire: One of the Conformity of Manners, the other concerning the Progress of the Christian Religion under Constantine; and the third concerning its Origine from an Idumæan Priest. These Opinions are too evidently false to be confuted. The Roman Emperors, who eat the Carkasses of their Enemies, because they were born under the Planet Mars, like Esau, and were habited in Red because Esau was Red, makes such a Jest, as is grosly ridiculous.

Joseph Gorionides [p] relates the Fact otherwise, Tsepho, Esau's Grandson, kept Prisoner in Egypt by Joseph, fled to Æneas King of Carthage, who made him General of his Troops. Æneas went from Africa into Italy, beat Turnus King of Beneventum twice, and carried off Janiia [q] or Lavinia, whom he designed to Marry. Pablus, Æneas's Nephew, was kill'd in the Battle, as well as Turnus, to whom were erected two Towers or Mausolæums, which were still seen betwixt Alba and Rome, when this Historian wrote. One was called Kopablus, and the other Copturnus. The Africans commanded by Tsepho, repass'd frequently into Italy to plunder it. 'Twas in one of these Expeditions, that Tsepho the Son of Esau once lost a young Calf, he found him again in a Wood; and in a Cave where a terrible Beast, who was half Goat and half Man, was tearing him in Pieces. He kill'd the Monster, and brought back his Calf. The Inhabitants being delivered from a Beast, that destroyed their Herds, look'd upon Tespho as a Hero, and made him Presents and Libations. They gave him the Name of Janus, which was that of the Beast he had kill'd. They call'd him also Saturn, from the Name of the Star they Worshipped at that time. So that Janus and Saturn were only one Man, the Grandson of Esau, who Reigned whilst he lived in the Country of Rome, and was Worshipped as a God after his Death.

Latinus [r] succeeded him. War arose betwixt him and Asdrubal King of Carthage. The ground of the War was a Bridge, that Æneas had caused to be built from Africa to Italy, to convey the Water by an Aquedact, because Janiia his Wife could drink no other without being sick. One part of the Bridge was over thrown. Asdrubal was killed in a Battle, and after his Death, Latinus Married his Daughter, who was of a charming Beauty. Being rid of a troublesome Neighbour, he carried on his Conquests into Germany [s] and Burgundy, and made them Tributary. He built a Temple to Lucifer, and made his Children pass through the Fire. The Trojan Æneas Reigned after him. Many Kings succeeded him, one of which called Aventinus, beat the Inhabitants of Tourain on the Banks of the Loire. Romulus came a great while after, who Reigned Thirty Years, and built Rome. David at that time was at War with the Idumæans, and Adaraser, and Tsir his Son deserted this Prince, and fled into Italy, where they built ancient Alba, where their Posterity still remained in Joseph's time. Romulus was afraid left David should re-demand of him his fugitive Subjects, and that the retreat he had given them, might be the cause of a War; and therefore he inclosed the Temples and Palaces of his Predecessors with a Wall, which was Forty Five Miles long. He made War, and afterwards a League with David. Thus the Jews established themselves in Italy by Esau's Grandson, and afterwards by two Officers of David's Houshold, who preserv'd their Habitation at Alba and Surento. This is sufficient whereby to judge of the Hebrew Joseph's Character, and of the Nations Taste in preferring him before the Greek Historian. Abravanel, who had quoted this Passage [t] of the Hebrew Joseph, to ground his Conjecture upon the Passage of Thespo into Italy, has swerv'd from the Original, by making him build

Palermo,

Palermo, and ſettle his Habitation in Sicily as well as in Italy. But he is not the only one; for Fazellus [u] giving the Hiſtory of this Iſland, produces two Inſcriptions, found in the City of Palermo, and engraven with ancient Characters, which neither the Greeks, nor Chaldæans, nor Arabians could decypher. One [x] of theſe Inſcriptions informs us, that Iſaac the Son of Abraham reigning in Idumæa, and his Son Eſau in the Valley of Damaſcus, a Troop of Jews being joyn'd by a great many Syrians and Phænicians, paſſed over into this Triangular Iſland, and founded their Habitation in this charming Place, which they call'd Palermo. Upon the Second Stone [y] we read theſe words, There is no other Deity but God alone; there is no powerful Being beſides the ſame God. The God we Worſhip is the ſole giver of Victory. The Governour of this Tower is Saphu, the Son of Eliphar, the Son of Eſau, the Brother of Jacob, the Son of Iſaac, the Son of Abraham. If we take the Jews word, they not only came into Italy, but into Sicily in Eſau's Time, which Conjecture is founded upon Monuments, which muſt needs have ſome Antiquity. But they are nevertheleſs doubtful, to ſay nothing harſher: And therefore, inſtead of inſiſting upon them, we will look after more certain Facts.

II. Pompey had convey'd abundance of Jews to Rome, and made Slaves of them. Their Maſters having given them their Liberty, they would not quit that City, in which they were firſt diſtinguiſhed by the Name of Libertines or Free-Men. They always preſerved their Religion, and ſent their Preſents to Jeruſalem, where they had their Synagogue, which is mentioned in the Hiſtory of the Acts; [z] for 'twas the Chief of the Synagogue of the Libertines, Cyreneans and Alexandrians, who roſe againſt St. Steven, and made him our firſt Martyr. A Critick extreamly bold, has fancied here three Sects of Paganiſm. The Libertines, ſays he, were Academicks; the Alexandrians were Ariſtotle's Diſciples, becauſe they preſerved in this City a vaſt Veneration for the Preceptor of Alexander, who had founded it. Laſtly, We muſt underſtand the Cyrenaick Sect by the Cyreneans. This ſo novel Conjecture is founded upon a Paſſage of the Gemera, which ſays, [a] that from Abba's School came four Hundred Diſciples, who had the Language and Wiſdom of the Greeks. They had learnt there to ſpeak Greek, and at once had ſtudied Philoſophy, and had enter'd the Sects of the ancient Philoſophers. We are obliged to relate ſuch a kind of Conjecture, by reaſon of its Novelty; but it deſerves not to be confuted, nor do we know who this Abba was, to whom he aſcribes ſuch a famous School. One Abba the Author of ſome Books, is ſpoke of; but it was Abraham Ben Aſhor, who had nothing to do with the Greeks. In effect, the Sects of Philoſophers were little known or eſteemed by the Jews in our Saviour's time; ſo far were they from having Schools and Aſſemblies to teach their different Opinions.

III. Mr. le Moyne, [b] who lov'd to make Conjectures, ſays, that we ought not to read the word Libertin's but Labithins in the Hiſtory of the Acts. Lapetho was one of the Bridges of the Iſle of Cyprus, whence the Jews, who were numerous in that Country, came often to perform their Devotions at Jeruſalem. He finds the Cyreneans in the ſame Iſland; for Cyrene or Cyrenia was a conſiderable City; and therefore he would not have us ſeek for theſe People at Cyrene, and among the Lybithenians of Africa, but in the Iſle of Cyprus, where the Jews were ſo prevalent as to Maſſacre all the Heathens. This Conjecture is no more ſolid than the other.

Laſtly, It has been ſaid, that St. Luke's Libertin's were Heathens, who having been ſold as Slaves in Judæa obtained their Liberty by embracing Moſes's Religion by way of Baptiſm, and the other Ceremonies common to Proſelytes. But Tacitus is a better Commentator of St. Luke, than the Chriſtian Criticks, who obſerves, [c] that there were above Four Thouſand Libertine Jews at Rome. What occaſion is there to ſeek them elſewhere, when they are ſhewn by a Heathen Hiſtorian, who could not but know 'em; and there was nothing more common, than for Strangers to have their particular Synagogue at Jeruſalem, where they pay'd their Devotions.

IV. Auguſtus favoured the freed Men at Rome, upon obſerving their Zeal for Cæſar, whoſe Death they lamented. Fuſcus Ariſtius was one of theſe Favourite Freed Men, a Poet of Repute, and ſuch an intimate Friend of Horace that he addreſs'd Epiſtles to him.

Urbis [d] amatorem Fuſcum ſalvere jubemus
Ruris amatores: hac in re ſcilicet una
Multum diſſimiles, ad cætera pæne gemelli:
Fraternis animis: quidquid negat alter & alter.
Annuimus, pariter vetuli, notique colombi.

Theſe two Poetical Friends did not agree in every thing as Horace ſays; for he had no Religion:

Nulla mihi unquam
Religio eſt.

But the other was zealous for his:

Sum paulo infirmior unus Multorum.

He was going to the Synagogue to celebrate one of the Feaſts of his Nation, when Horace ſtop'd him to get rid of an impertient Talker that follow'd him.

Sed [e] meliori
Tempore dicam hodie triceſima Sabbata.

This Thirtieth Sabbath, which was the occaſion of this Poet's Devotion, was the Thirtieth of the Year, whether it began with the Month Niſan or Tiſri; for at Rome they might reckon the Weeks by the Sabbaths. At leaſt this Conjecture is more ſimple and natural than all that is commonly ſaid upon that Subject. [f]

The Freed-Men ſo multiplied at Rome, under this Emperor's Protection, that Fifty Deputies arriving from Jeruſalem, after Herod's Death, to defend the

Privileges

Privileges of their Nation before Augustus, Eight Thousand Jews, Inhabitants of Rome, joined the Deputies, without reckoning either their Wives or Children. So that there was at that time Twenty Thousand Jews in this City.

V. The Jewish Historians, instead of acknowledging this Protection of Augustus, take him for one of their bittereſt Enemies. Observe how they relate [g] the Matter, which they have taken from the Archives of the Kings of Arragon.

Antony Emperor of the Romans, being upon the point of Besieging Jerusalem, with a Grecian King call'd Cesius, was informed that Cleopatra was the fineſt Woman in the World, and that he might Marry her since she was a Widow. In the height of his Passion, he sent to ask her Consent, but she would not give it, unless Augustus's Sister was Divorced; which was executed. The Senate exasperated at this, deprived Antony of the Empire, and gave it to Augustus; and as it was noised that the Jews were the contrivers of this Match, as thinking thereby to divert an impending Storm, the Senate ordered Augustus to march with a potent Army against Antony, and afterwards against the Jews. Antony was beaten, and Cleopatra, and her two Sons put to Death. War was declared against the Jews, who defeated one part of the Roman Army. The Emperor, in a Consternation, cried out, That he must retreat, as having to do with Lions rather than Men. The Generals incouraged Augustus, and resolved to wash off the stain of this Disgrace with the Blood of the Jews. Jerusalem was Besieged, taken and plunder'd by the Soldiers. The Emperor left a Deputy in Judæa, and went to Triumph at Rome. The Army was scarce out of sight, but the Jews Rebell'd, which brought Augustus back again to Besiege Jerusalem with a more powerful Army than the former. The Siege continued a Year; but the City being taken, dead Bodies were seen as numerous as grains of Sand upon the Sea-shore. Which obliged Augustus to lift up his Hands to Heaven, and to pray God not to lay to his Charge so many Murders, which the Jews had brought upon themselves. He carried the principal Persons of the Nation Prisoners to Rome, where they all died by the change of Air, and by reason of the Sins they continued to commit. 'Tis enough barely to intimate this History, which is different from the Roman, and it need not be confuted.

VI. Suetonius [h] says, that Augustus was well pleased to hear, that Caius, the Son of Agrippa, went to Jerusalem, but did not Sacrifice there. The Commentator affirms, that this Prince spoke against his Conscience; and a Critick, in defence of Casaubon, says, that he call'd the God Worshipped by the Jews, a Supreme God. Nevertheless Suetonius observes, that Augustus despised the New Ceremonies. 'Tis therefore most probable, that he then rejected the Sacrifices of the Jews, as well as of the Egyptians. 'Tis not Augustus, but Philo, who, speaking of this Prince, has said, that God was a Supreme Deity; and in the Edict which Augustus sent to the Jews, he takes the Jewish Style in speaking of the most High God. 'Tis only true, that Augustus changed his Opinion, and ordered Sacrifices to be offer'd for him in the Temple at Jerusalem. He grew more superstitious as he grew Old, but he always countenanced the Jews at Rome.

VII. They enjoy'd the Privilege of Roman Citizens. Cæsar confer'd it on Antipater; and St. Paul boasts of his being a Free-man of Rome, which was not common to him and all the Inhabitants of Tarsus, since this City was but a Colony. 'Twas a Privilege peculiar to his Family; whether his Father had purchased it, tho' he was not Rich; or any one of his Ancestors had merited by some important Service to the State. A Jew therefore might be a Citizen of Rome, [i] and have thereby a Claim to Honours and Dignities.

VIII. They had also Liberty of Conscience, and the Exercise of their Religion, and they observ'd their Feasts and Sabbaths in so publick a manner, that Augustus having number'd 'em among the rest that received Corn and Money Monthly, he order'd his Officers to reserve the Jews Portion till the next Day, when the Distribution happened on a Saturday. They had there their Oratories, their Synagogues and Doctors, that explained the Law; for he that deceived Fulvia, was an Interpreter of the Law. Lastly, They had at Rome a sort of Council or House of Judgment, which decided the growing Controversies; and 'twas doubtless to this House of Judgment, composed of the chief Members of the Nation, that St. Paul went to give an account of his Conduct, when he arrived at Rome in Nero's time. 'Tis also very probable, that this House kept Correspondence with the Sanhedrim about important Affairs; since St. Paul thought they had been inform'd of his Business, and these Roman Judges were surpriz'd, that they had received no letter from Jerusalem to acquaint them with a Controversie, which had caused so much noise there.

IX. Lastly, the Jews had a place beyond the Tyber, where they liv'd. Ancus Martius fearing lest his Enemies should seize upon the two Mountains, the Janiculus and the Vatican, which were near the City, placed some Inhabitants upon them. Part also of the Roman Citizens were obliged to keep Guard there, during the Comitia, to prevent surprize. During the Comitia, the Rabble settled in those Places, which were less convenient, and were the Houses were cheap. The Watermen, Carmen, Chairmen and Curriers, had their Habitation there. Martial and Juvenal [k] allude to it, in saying

Nec te fastidia mercis
Ullius subeant ablegandæ Tyberim ultrâ,
Et detracta cani Transtyberina cutis.

Not but there were also reputable Men [l] there: The Egyptian Merchants, and the Jews, who were in Credit at Rome, before the ruin of Jerusalem, and that vast Multitude of Wretches that Titus convey'd thither, had their Habitation in that Place; but they removed afterwards, and went into the Forest of the Nymph Egeria.

X. Aringhus [m] thought, that this ancient Habitation of the Jews was upon Mount Janiculus; for which he had two Reasons; one taken from the Tradition of the Aged Jews, who had dwelt at Rome a long time, and had learnt from their Ancestors, that the Nation had its abode there; the other, that we at present see there the Church of S. Salvador de la Corte, which took its Name from the Jews, who were called Curti, because they cut off the Præputium. Indeed Horace [n] gives 'em this Title:

Curtis Judæis oppedere.

Nevertheless there is nothing weaker than the Tradition of the Elders of the Synagogues; for how could these Old Men know from the Tradition of other Old Men of Fourscore, that the Jews dwelt in a certain Place of Rome fifteen Hundred Years before? The Etymology of St. Salvador della Corté, is still more ridiculous; for Horace might make use of this singular word [o] in a Satyr, which he also used for a Mule that had lost his Tail:

Nunc mihi curto
Ire licet mulo.

To conclude, because the Jews were called Curti, that this Name was given to a part of Rome; and that a Church built in this Part took its Name from hence of Salvador de la Corté, is to impose upon one's self. For [p] we know, that this word, which is very common at the decay of the Latin Tongue, did not respect the Jews, but signified the Tent, the Palace, or the Court of the Prince. Anastasius, speaking of Crammus, that famous King of the Bulgarians, says, they burnt his Court Curtis. This Term was taken up by the Greeks; for Theophanes and Cedrenus make use of it; and Constantine Porphyroganetus [q] observes, that is was one Subject of the Emperor Michael's Displeasure against Bardas, to see, that his Tapsteries and Curtains were plac'd higher than his own. Thus Allatius has Translated it; but he is mistaken; for we must understand by it the Emperor's Tent, which this Author expresses by the word Corté, which he had borrowed from the Latins. Moreover we may understand by it a Court of Justice, upon whose Ruins a Church was built, call'd on that account Salvador della Corté. This Conjecture is the better grounded, because there was a Tribunal beyond the Tyber, for the Inhabitants of Janiculus. Pomponius says, that five Persons were chosen to execute the Magistracy by Night on both the sides the Tyber. As this was done for the conveniency of the Magistrates, and the Security of the City, some one of them must have liv'd beyond the River to provide for urgent Occasions. Those who admit the Acts of Martha, and her Associates, can't doubt of it, since they were committed to Prison upon the Janiculus. There was therefore a Court and a Prison upon this Mountain; and hence came the Name of Corté, by which they distinguish St. Salvador's Church, which is in this part of Rome.

XI. Not to dwell upon uncertain Conjectures, we observe, that the Jews possess'd three different Precincts at Rome. The first was the Vatican, where at present is the Pope's Palace; for they inhabited beyond the Tyber and Pont St. Angelo, which was called Pont Elius, because Adrian [r] had built it. This Prince dying at Baiæ Antoninus, who succeeded him, ordered his Body to be carried to Rome; and as it could not be placed in Augustus's Tomb, it was laid [s] beyond the Tyber, in a place appointed for his Sepulture, called Molles Adriani; and to pass thither, a little Bridge was laid over the Tyber, near which the Jews had a long time dwelt. They were there before the Destruction of Jerusalem, and kept this Post for a great many Ages. First, It can't be contested, that the Jews, who were made free by Augustus, were sent to inhabit beyond the Tyber; and 'tis not probable they had a Place assigned them on the Janiculus, which in Augustus's time, was almost as well Peopled as the rest of the City; whereas the Vatican was much less, because People feared Nastiness and bad Smells, which made it look'd upon by Tacitus, as an infamous Place, Infamia Vaticani loca. 2. Here it was, that Fuscus Aristius, the Jewish Poet, and Friend of Horace, [t] went to celebrate the Sabbath. For if he was to go to the Janiculus, he would have kept Horace Company, who was also going that way, beyond the Tyber, towards Cæsar's Gardens. But this Friend left him abruptly near Vesta's Temple; because he was to take another Road, and keep on the Right to the Vatican, whilst Horace went on the Left to the Janiculus. 3. 'Twas on the Vatican, that Nero put a great many Christians to Death, who were then confounded with the Jews, and came most of 'em out of the Synagogue. They were condemned upon the places, where they were taken, and lived. And they were Executed beyond the Tyber during Nero's Persecution of the Church, as we have observed. 4. Here it was, that a great many Sepulchres were found, which Heliogabulus caused to be levelled, because their Elevation hindered the march of his Elephants. These Sepulchers of the Vatican belonged rather to the Jews, who buried their Dead, and had lived there a long time, than to the Romans, who burnt their dead Bodies, or to the Christians, who were very thin at that time, and were rarely permitted the Exercise of their Religion. 5. 'Tis pretended, that these Tombs were those of Martyrs, because the Bodies of St. Victor, and his Wife, and Seventy other Persons of the same Family, Palmatius the Consul, with Forty of his Domesticks, or Relations; Calepodius, and abundance of other Saints, were taken out from thence. But how is it known that these were all Martyrs, and that they were buried in the Vatican? Even St. Peter's Monument upon this Mountain, may reasonably be disputed, and is contested [u] by the Roman Catholicks themselves. For the Tomb of St. Peter, and a great number of Martyrs, is exactly found in the same Place, where formerly was Nero's Circus. But can it be imagined that this Prince repented of his Cruelty; and that after he had put to Death the Chief of the Apostles and his Followers in this glorious Combat, he demolished his Circus, and gave it up to the Christians to give their Dead an honourable Funeral? If the Heathens Circus became the Catecombe of the Christians, what a Confusion was this! There were some Martyrs buried in the Vatican under Nero; but they were not placed in his Circus. They conceal'd their Sepulchres instead of giving them a distinguishing Eminence; and those that Heliogabalus overthrew, belonged to the Jews, who had inhabited this Mountain for two or three Centuries. 6. Here it was that Benjamin of Tudela found his Brethren in the Twelfth Century, and thought that he had discovered the Tombs of ten Righteous Men of his Nation. 7. 'Tis here, that a Writer of the Thirteenth Century, who can't be suspected, has plac'd them; for this Author, who lived in 1220, a little after Benjamin of Tudela, says, that the Ælian or Adrian Bridge before mentioned, and which is at present the Bridge of St. Angelo, was called the Bridge of the Jews, because they dwelt there. Thus you see Jews inhabiting the Vatican beyond the Bridge of St. Angelo, where they had their Residence for Twelve or Thirteen Hundred Years.

lately discovered by a Learned Benedictine, [x] is stuffed with Fables; for he tells, that Romulus erected a Golden Statue with this Inscription, It shall not fall till a Virgin shall bring forth; and he adds, that the Statue fell at the Birth of the Son of God. He says, "That there were at Rome Marble Horses without Saddle, with naked Men, and "before them a Woman holding a Shell, because "Praxiteles and Phidias, being at Rome, presented "themselves stark naked to Tiberius, to inform him "that every thing was naked to their Eyes, not excepting the Emperor's Thoughts. They gues'd "what Tiberius had thought upon in the Night. "The Emperor being surprized at it, was resolved "to recompence them. They desired to have their "Statues erected; and they added to 'em those of "Horses pawing the Ground. They meant thereby to insinuate to this Prince, that a Potent King "should come, who should strike the Ground; "that is, should rule over the Nations of the "World; and the Woman was the Image of the "Church, in which we are saved, when we are "united to it; but first we must receive Baptism, "of which the Shell was a Symbol. He says something worse; for he affirms, that every Conquer'd "Nation had its Statue in the Capitol, with a Bell "fastned to its Neck, which sounded the very Moment that the Nation Rebell'd." I don't deny, but this Author in his short Piece has vented a great many Extravagancies. But, 1. 'Tis not for People that tell us greater Absurdities, and charge 'em upon the Saints to reproach this Author for what he says to the advantage of the Christian Religion. 2. 'Tis still true, that his Testimony ruins the Tradition of the old Men, whom Aringhus has quoted as his principal Evidence; for if this Man, who lived in the Thirteenth Century, saw the Jews inhabiting the Vatican, their Tradition is evidently false; unless to excuse them from the falshood, it be acknowledged, that they have confounded the Vatican with the Janiculus, as is sometimes done; for Martial, who could not but know the difference of these two Mountains, places Tullius Martial's Vineyard upon the Janiculus, tho' it was upon the Vatican towards Milvius Bridge.

Longo Janiculi jugo recumbunt.

3. Lastly, Tho' this Author was too credulous, yet we can't dispute his Ability to reckon the Bridges of Rome, and being certain of the Names they bore; that of Adrian was called the Jews Bridge. This was no new thing: And since we know they always lived beyond the Tyber, we are to seek for 'em there, rather than on Mount Janiculus.

XIII. The Jews also were settled in the best Part of Rome, in the Valley Egeria, called at present Caffarello. A little Rivulet called Almon runs into this Valley; in which the ancient Gaulish Priests annually washed the Statue of Cybele.

Et lotam parvo revocant Almone Cybelem.

'Tis still called [z] Acqua Santa, the Holy-water, because it is a Mineral, and useful to cure Beasts and Men. Here was the Cave of the Goddess Egeria, where Numa pretended to have secret Conferences with this Nymph. Here was the Wood of the Muses, and whether or no this Wood was neglected, it was let out to the Jews, which drew 'em into this Place with a great number of Beggars of the same Nation, that flock'd thither to beg. Juvenal speaks so positively of it, that the thing can't be disputed.

Sed [a] dum tota domus Rhedâ componitur unâ,
Substitit ad veteres arcus, madidamque Capenam.
Hic ubi nocturnæ Numa constituebat amicæ,
Nunc sacri fontis nemus, & delubra locantur
Judæis, quorum cophini fœnumque supellex;
Omnis enim populo mercedem pendere jussa est
Arbor, & ejectis mendicat sylva Camœnis
In vallem Egeriæ descendimus & speluncas.

'Tis pretended, that this change of Habitation happen'd after the ruin of the Temple at Jerusalem, because the Jews were in much greater Honour at Rome, whilst their Religion was in force; but the number of Captives and miserable People brought by Titus into the Capital of the Empire, made 'em contemptible; and they were sent to beg out of the Capene Gate, which was at a great distance from the Vatican, and they Farm'd the Wood that was there to try to get a Livelihood. This Conjecture is most likely. Nevertheless we must observe, that the Jews did not quit the Vatican to go and dwell at Caffarello; for those who lived beyond the Tyber, and were rich and considerable, had no need to change their Habitation to turn Wood-cutters. The ruin of Jerusalem did not destroy their Privileges, nor the Settlements which they had made before And therefore Juvenal, who places 'em without the Gate Capena, speaks also of those that dwelt beyond the Tyber. Therefore they were only Beggars and Wood-cleavers, that rented the Wood, and went to possess that part of the City; the other being too small and too full to receive all the Refugees from Judæa, that came or were brought thither after the Destruction of Jerusalem.

This observation is very perplexing to the Relick-Hunters; for here we have Jews, precisely seated in the two Places, that abounds most with Relicks. No Body is ignorant how they are found in heaps in the Appian way. Here it was [b] that Jesus Christ appeared to St. Peter to oblige him to return to Rome. Here we find those famous Catacombes full of Bodies and Martyrs. Whereas if the Jews buried their Dead in these Grotto's, from whence Sand had been dug, how are we to distinguish 'em at this Day? To say that the Jews carried their Bodies to the Vatican is to make 'em cross the whole City at their Funerals without Necessity, and against all probability; for since these Mendicants and Wood-cutters found subterraneous Places, where they might deposite their Dead without trouble and charge, how can we imagine that they were at a great Expence to go far for a Burying-place, which they had at their very Door? We must not wonder if there be such a prodigious quantity of Bones and Bodies in this Place, since the Jews, who buried there their Dead, inhabited there so long; and 'tis their Carcasses heaped one upon another that have been taken from the Appian Way. There let us leave the dead Bodies of the Jews; 'tis however true, that they dwelt at Caffarello as well as on the Vatican.

XIV. Lastly, The Jews liv'd in the Isle of the Tyber, near the Fabritian Bridge. This Island was made, as is pretended, by the heaps of Sheafs of Wheat which were thrown into the Tyber, out of ſpite to Tarquin the Proud, who was expell'd. It was at firſt Conſecrated to Eſculapius, becauſe his Statue had been brought thither; but afterwards a Temple to Jupiter was built on it. Ovid has deſcribed it in his Verſes.

Porrigit æquales mediâ tellure lacertos.

To join this Iſland to the City, a Bridge was made and called Fabricius:

Atque [e] à Fabricio non triſtem ponte reverti.

The Jews [f] at preſent inhabit this Iſle of the Tyber near the Fabrician Bridge, which they call the Four-headed Bridge, becauſe of ſome Statue of Janus. But this removal did not happen till they were driven from the Vatican, which became a Holy Place by the Preference which the Popes gave it before other Parts of the City. If any one will have 'em to have a fourth Allotment in the Janiculus where is the Field of the Jews, I have nothing to ſay againſt it; but it muſt be owned, that they have liv'd there but a little time, and in the latter Ages; and we have no proof of it, ſince there is nothing more uncertain and falſe than the old Mens Traditions.

XV. They were ſettled in the reſt of Italy in Auguſtus's time; for Cicero obſerves, that they ſent their Tributes to Jeruſalem, not only from Rome, but alſo from the other Cities of Italy. They were generally Poor. Martial makes them dealers in Matches; which they did not ſell for Money, but traffick'd for broken Glaſſes.

Urbanus [g] tibi Cæcili, videris
Non es, crede mihi, quid ergo? Vernaes,
Hoc quod Tranſtyberinus ambulator
Qui pallentia Sulphurata fractis
Permutat vitreis.

It can't be doubted, but theſe Glaſſes relate to the Jews, tho' they are not named, ſince this Poet repeats the ſame thing, in reproaching their Mothers with accuſtoming their Children betimes, to hold out their Hand and beg.

A matre doctus nec rogare Judæus
Nec ſulphuratæ lippus inſitor mercis.

Juvenal [h] makes 'em ſtill more ſordid. He ſeems at leaſt to make them Well-cleanſers, and Gold-finders, as if they had practiſed this Trade from the time of their Captivity in Egypt, and had appropriated it ever ſince. But 'tis more probable, that this Poet only taxes them with being Beggers and Miſerable. They lay upon Hay, and ſerv'd in carraying Earth, and cutting the Wood of the Goddeſs Egeria they had rented.

Cum dedit ille locum Cophino [i] fœnoq; relicto Arcanæ Judæa tremens.

XVI. Tiberius declar'd himſelf an Enemy to the Jews at Rome, and deſigning to aboliſh their Religion in the Capital of the Empire, he ordered four Thouſand of theſe young Freed-Men to be carried into the Iſland of Sardinia, whoſe bad Air incommoded all the Colonies, that were ſent thither. Tiberius argued thus; Either theſe Wretches will die, which will be no great loſs; or elſe they'll repreſs the Robbers that follow that practice in this Iſland. This Reflection proves, that there were then a great many Jews at Rome, ſince four Thouſand of theſe Freed-Men were then found there that were able to bear Arms. Suetonius and Tacitus ſay, that this Tranſportation was not ordered, till Tiberius had cauſed their Religion, and the Egyptians to be examined. Joſephus attributes this Exile to a Cauſe that is more ſcandalous to his Nation; for he relates, that a Rogue, who came from Judæa, and boaſted to be an Interpreter of the Law, and read Lectures in it, with three Aſſociates of the ſame Character, procured a conſiderable ſum of Money from Fulvia, a Jewiſh Proſelyte under pretence of ſending it to Jeruſalem; but they put this Roman Ladies Charity into their own Pockets. The Roguery being diſcovered, complaints were brought to Tiberius, who revenged the knavery of four Raſcals upon the Nation. On the contrary, Philo charges the diſgrace of this Colony upon Sejanus's Calumnies. This Favourite perhaps uſed all the Reaſons we have alledged to render the Jews odious to his Maſter. But if one of theſe Hiſtorians is to be prefer'd before the other, it is the ſureſt way to follow Philo; becauſe Tiberius having recalled the Jews after Sejanus's Death, 'tis evident, that this firſt Miniſter had a great hand in their Exile.

XVII. Caligula was as much againſt 'em as Tiberius. They had been the firſt to offer Sacrifices at Jeruſalem for his Proſperity, when they had the News of his Elevation; but this unhappy Prince reſolving to have Altars and Statues of his own, that he might have Sacrifices offered to him, and be ador'd as a God, he found no greater Enemies in all the Empire than the Jews, who only Worſhipped the Supream God, and paid no Religious Reſpect to any Creature. Some Heathens, who dwelt at Jamnia, having built an Altar of Brick in honour to this Prince, the Jews enraged at this Innovation, pull'd it down. Complaints were brought to Capito, the Receiver of the City and of all Judæa, who was cautious of offending Caligula in a thing which he laid ſo much to Heart. He ſupported thoſe that had built the Altar, and gave the Emperor an ill Character of the Jews, which he did not love before. One Circumſtance aggravated their Miſery. The Prince's two Favourites at that time were Helicon and Apelles; the firſt was a Slave that came from Egypt, and the ſecond who was born at Aſcalon, had been a Comedian; and both of 'em had brought from their Country a mortal hatred againſt the Jews. 'Tis no wonder that they gave him bad Councels, and that a Prince, already provoked, liſten'd to them with pleaſure. He order'd, that to repair the Fault they had committed, in pulling down the Brick Altar at Jamnia, a City where the Jews pretend that the Sanhedrim was already tranſlated, they ſhould place [k] in the Sanctuary of the Temple at Jeruſalem, a Statue as high as a Coloſſus, cloath'd in Gold. Petronius the Governour of Syria, being charged with this Commiſſion, foreſaw that he could not execute it but by force. fore fore he came to Ptolemais with his Troops. The People, the Women and Children came to meet him, rending the Air with their Cries, and plucking the Hair from their Heads, and representing to Petronius, that without any design of taken Arms, it was impossible they should obey the Emperor, since their Religion could not dispence with it. Petronius wrote about it to Caligula, and a Deputation was sent to him; he suffered himself to be moved, especially at the Intreaty of Agrippa, whom he loved; but this suspension of his Anger did not last long, for the same Year he commanded a Statue to be made at Rome of gilt Brass, which he designed to have carried and placed in the Temple, when he went to Jerusalem. He wrote also to Petronius to inflict upon himself the Punishment that a Man deserved, that disobeyed his Master; but Caligula was kill'd before Petronius received his Letter. He had also given an ill reception to the Deputies of the Jews of Alexandria, who came to Rome to preserve their privilege of Denization, which they had long possessed in that great City; and to excuse themselves from setting up the Emperors Statues in all their Oratories. He imagined for a little time, that these People were more unfortunate than wicked, in not believing him to be a God. The Condition of the Jews at Rome was very deplorable, whilst these Deputies of their Nation came thither from all Parts, and the Emperor sometimes disgracefully dismiss'd 'em from his Court.

XVIII. Dion, [l] who must have known the Emperor Claudius, and the chief Events of his Reign, since he had studied them, says, that this Prince was content to shut up the Synagogues of the Jews at Rome, and durst not expell 'em tho' he design'd it; because he understood that it could not be done without danger, their numbers being grown considerable, notwithstanding Caligula's Persecution. Suetonius [m] affirms on the contrary, that Claudius had banished the Jews from Rome, because their Leader Chrestus caused frequent Seditions there; and Suetonius's Testimony agrees with the History of the Acts, [n] from which we learn, that St. Paul found Priscilla and Aquila who were fled to Corinth, because Claudius had commanded all the Jews to depart from Rome.

'Tis easie to reconcile these two Historians by distinguishing the time, for Claudius contented himself the first Year of his Reign with depriving the Jews of the Exercise of their Religion at Rome, and shutting up their Synagogue. But they committed two Faults: 1. They would not obey him, but assembled in secret. 2. Christianity having penetrated into Rome, they had fervent Disputes among them about the Messiah; and Claudius, who did not love 'em, having born with these Commotions caused by the difference of Religions for six or seven Years, expell'd the People that only liv'd there by Toleration.

XIX. Baronius [o] could not bear, that Suetonius should accuse Jesus Christ of raising the Tumult at Rome, and causing the Jews there to be banished, He says, that the Historian attributes these Commotions to Chrestus, because his Disciples boasted of his Resurrection, and that the numerous Conversions which St. Peter made then at Rome by his Preaching, provoked the Fury of the Jews. He thinks too, that St. Peter was obliged to leave Rome in obedience to Claudius's Edict; and that it was then that he passed into Africa, where he founded the Churches of Carthage and Alexandria. The Criticks thinking these Reflections of Baronius not solid, have found out in Medals, a Jew called Chrestus, who raised these Seditions at Rome in Claudius's Reign.

They are all mistaken, because they will not be at the pains of explaining what Suetonius says of the Banishment of the Jews. The Jews fell into Divisions, when Jesus Christ Crucified was preached to them. Some looking upon him as the Messiah, and others rejecting him as an Impostor, who abolish'd the Law of Moses; the Disputes grew hot in the Romish Synagogues, as they had done before in those of Judæa. 'Twas not the victorious Preaching of St. Peter, that caused these Commotions in the Italian Synagogues; for he came not to Rome till Nero's Reign; and the Voyages ascribed to this Apostle upon Metaphrastes's Authority, to establish the Churches of Carthage and Alexandria are imaginary. For we confront with Metaphrastes, Tertulian, who owned, that the Churches of Africa were not founded by the Apostles. Nor was it a Jew, called Chrestus, who was Author of the Sedition; for 'tis in vain to produce a great number of Medals with the Name of Chrestus, not one of 'em speaks of a Jew, that bore it, living in Claudius's Reign, and causing any disturbance at Rome. But Suetonius [p] a Heathen Writer, little acquainted with the Jewish Religion, and yet less with the Christian, thought that Jesus Christ, who was the occasion of the Dispute to be still alive. Jesus Christ died in Judæa a few Years before, far from the place where the Controversie began. 'Twas natural for a Heathen to be ignorant of the Circumstances of the Fact, and to believe that this Christ was an Incendiary among the Jews, since his Doctrine and his Apostles caused some Commotions. This was the Dispute, which occasioned the Emperor Claudius to banish People that could not agree, and that made a disturbance at Rome by Disputes about Religion.

XX. For an absolute justification of the Christians, Josephus is consulted for the occasion of this Banishment. He asserts, that a Samaritan inform'd Quadratus, that the Jews would rebel at the instigation of one Dortus, who designed to head 'em; and the Governour having punished the Guilty, sent two High-Priests Prisoners to Rome, to answer for their Conduct to the Emperor. Here you have a Commotion of the Jews, that Claudius might punish. But the Difficulty arising from Suetonius's Testimony still remains; for he accuses the Christians of having a hand in it, and says their Master was the cause of the Tumult. Besides, 'tis inconceivable how a seditious Design, that was punish'd and prevented in Judæa could have occasioned the general Banishment of the Jews at Rome; so that ours seems to be a more natural and sound Conjecture.

XXI. Orosius [q] has been sufficiently censured, who too exactly copying Eusebius's Chronicle has been guilty of several Faults about Claudius's Reign, and has said that the Jews were banished in the Ninth Year of this Emperor, which is the XLIX. of the Christian Æra; for this event must have happen'd two Years later [r]. The Mathematicians were also expell'd out of all Italy at the same time by order of the Senate, whereas the Edict for Banishing the Jews, was given only by the Emperor himself, which facilitated their return.

For

For indeed they resettled themselves quickly after in this great City, and in Nero's Reign enjoyed a full liberty of Conscience, and even some Authority; for St. Paul [t] arriving at that time to prosecute his Appeal to Cæsar, summoned the principal Persons of the Nation, to whom he would account for his Conduct, which proves, that there were not only Jews there, but a kind of a Council. We know also, that their Devotions were publick, and that they illuminated their Houses on Festival Days.

Herodis venere dies, unctâque fenestrâ
Dispositæ pinguem nebulam vomuere lucernæ.

Lastly, in the common Commerce of Life, they dealt with the Romans, but deceived 'em even in their Oaths, as thinking themselves not obliged to perform the Promises they had made in the Name of the Heathen Gods: And therefore Martial who knew their Artifice, cried; Jura, verpe, per Anchialum.

XXII. 'Tis not probable, that Martial makes the Jews swear by a Statue of Sardanapalus, that was set up at Anchialus, a City of Cilicia; but this Oath was common with the Jews, who called to witness the Living God. For these two words are precisely found in the Oath, that Martial requires היא chi Æl, God lives. The first Syllable, which causes the difficulty, Ana, אנא was in use, to express a lively and pressing Sentiment, or an Exclamation, as in the 118 Psalm [u]; O God deliver us! For so 'tis Translated in the Syriack Version, and ought to be Translated. This Oath is natural, Oh! as God is living, I will do such a thing. God himself swore often by his Life: 'Tis no wonder then, that Martial, who would be secure of the Fidelity of his Man, required this solemn Oath of him.

A Critick [x] of very copious Learning has thought, that Martial would make him swear by Agialon, which is a Greek word, by which he meant a God, that loves the Banks, and he gave this Epithete to the true God, because the Jews often performed their Devotions by the side of the Sea or River. He had made before another Conjecture, in which Martial opposed the Temple of God [y], to that of Jupiter the Thunderer, but he forsook it, tho' it was more probable than the other; or rather he suffered himself to be dazled by a new Thought, as if it might be said, that God loves the Shores, because Tertullian calls Prayers Orationes littarales, and that this Title was a Character of distinction from the false Heathen Gods; and that this Oath, of which we can find no instance, was so customary among the Jews, as to be known by a Heathen Poet. There is no doubt but this word signifies, God lives; and since it was the Oath of the Jews, we ought not to seek for other Conjectures. Martial desired of the Jews, who were numerous at Rome in Titus and Domitian's Reign, that instead of swearing by Jupiter Capitolinus, which they afterwards laugh'd at, they would introduce the sacred Name of the God they Worshipp'd. Ah! God is living: Jura verpe per Anchialum.

XXIII. We shall pursue their History at Rome, when we shall have finished the general view of the Dispersions in the West, and shall here only observe two Things; one that the Synagogue of the Jews at Rome has some kind of Superiority over the rest. We find an Example of it in the last Century [z]; for R. Nathaniel Tribotti having advanced in his Treatise concerning the Baths of Women, some Propositions, that provoked the Rabbins to write against him, the Synagogue and Academy of Rome quieted the Storm by their decision, tho' it was in favour of Tribotti. I don't say this Superiority was founded upon any Right. It rose only from the Superiority of the City, and that in all Churches the most powerful is respected. 'Twas by this means, that the great Bishopricks have subjected the less, and that Christian Rome has raised it self above the other Seas.

We shall also observe, that Rome was a Nursery of the Jews, from whence they were transplanted into the rest of Italy; and from hence they spread into the Neighbouring Places. They sent their Alms to Jerusalem; not only from Rome, but also from the other Cities of Italy. They had therefore noted Establishments; and we shall see in the Sequel, that they have been very considerable at Cremona, Mantua, Bolonia and Ferrara, and in all the Ecclesiastical Territories.

CHAP. VII.

The Antiquity of the Jews in Spain, Germany, France, &c.

I. Marsham's Conjecture about the Jews passing into the West, confuted. II. Adoniram's Epitaph. An Officer of Solomon found in Spain. III. Whether this Prince sent his Fleets thither. IV. These Conjectures refuted. V. Whether Nebuchadnezar Conquered Spain. Nebuchadnezar only conquered the Asiatick Iberea. IX. The Arguments of the Spanish Jews confuted. X. Whether Titus transported only the Tribe of Judah into Spain. XI. The Spaniards Pretensions against the other Jews confuted. Their Settlement in this Country. XII. The Letter of the Jews of Ulm spurious. XIII. Another Letter of those of Worms concerning their Antiquity. XIV. Their Settlement at Triers and Cologne very ancient. XV. They were little known for many Ages. XVI. Their Passage into Poland. XVII. Into France.

I. THE famous Marsham went too far when he maintained that the Jews first began to be talked of in Europe, when they were expell'd out of the East in 1040, and that they pass'd from thence into France, and the Neighbouring Countries; for not to speak of the Laws of Constantine, which relate to the Jews of Triers and Cologne, the Councils of Elvira and Toledo made a great many Ordinances against the Jews of Spain. They were numerous and formidable there, and had famous Doctors long before the Eleventh Century. The Spanish Rabbins run into another Extream, in in pretending to be in this Country, which they call Sepharad, a great many Ages before the Destruction of Jeruſalem; which thing we ſhall examine.

II. Firſt they produce monumental Inſcriptions, proving that Spain, which was ſubject to Solomon, paid him Tribute, and that this Prince ſent Officers every Year to gather it. One would think that they ſhould not have thought of engraving Fables upon Stones and Tombs. But yet in the Year 1480, a Body was diſcovered at Sagunto of an extraordinary ſize, and upon the Stone that covered it were engraven theſe Hebrew Characters [a]:

זהואבבר ארונירם עבר המלר חשלמו שבא
לגבת את המס ונפטר יוס

This is the Tomb of Adoniram, an Officer of King Solomon, who came to raiſe the Tribute, and died the Day .....

Upon ſearch after this Monument it could not be produced; but 'tis no wonder it ſhould be broken in a Hundred and Fifty Years time. Nevertheleſs they have preſerved many Manuſcripts in Spain relating to this Event, and the Hebrew Inſcription is Tranſlated in theſe words [b]:

De Adoniram la foſſa es eſta, que vigne Salomo del Reſervent dia, y mori Tribut lo Pera Rebre.... falta la piedra, that is, the Stone is wanting.

Here is nothing repugnant to Scripture; for we find in Salomon's Hiſtory, one Adoniram a Commiſſioner in the receipt of Cuſtoms. And therefore Villalpand concludes from hence, that the Jews in Solomon's Time were ſpread over Spain and the whole World; and that from thence came the Preſents and Treaſures, he employed in the building of the Temple. He confirms this by another Jewiſh Monument found in the ſame City of Sagunto, and ſtill ſhewn in his time, the Epitaph whereof in Hebrew Characters ran thus: This is the Sepulchre of Oran Naban, the Governour, who rebelled againſt his Maſter. God ſupported him, and his Glory laſted till the Reign of Amaziah.

III. Some Criticks pretend, that Solomon ſent his Fleets to Spain, and ſo there would be no difficulty in it; for the Jews who were in this Fleet muſt needs have conſiderable Settlements in Andaluſia. An ancient Greek Author affirms, that there was ſuch prodigious Wealth in Spain, that they made uſe of Silver Mangers and Casks. Caſaubon, who could not believe it, changed the Mangers into Floors. But this change is not ſufficient: He ſhould alſo have ſtruck out the Account of Silver Casks, which are no leſs ſurprizing than the Mangers; or rather he ſhould have made uſe of Strabo's Obſervation, who gives us to underſtand, that Poſidonius [c] who ſays it, was ſubject to great Hyberboles. Nevertheleſs 'tis true, that Spain contained Mettals enough to furniſh Solomon with that abundance he had occaſion for in building the Temple:

After [d] avarus
Viſceribus laceræ telluris mergitur imis,
Et redit infœlix effoſſo concolor auro.

There was in the Streights near Hercules's Pillars, a City called Tarſis; and this Spaniſh City built by the Phenicians, was doubtleſs known in Solomon's time, as well as in Jehoſaphat's Reign. Laſtly, The Three Years time that was ſpent in the Navigation, ought not to ſurprize us; for as they were not well experienced, they coaſted along the Shores inſtead of venturing into the open Sea.

IV. This evidently countenances the Jews Antiquity in Spain; but for all this, it has no good Foundation. For tho' Adoniram's Tomb ſhould be preſerved entire, yet it would ſtill be falſe, that Solomon had made Spain pay Tribute to him; and the Inference we make from it, is, that we ought not raſhly to believe theſe Monuments, which Impoſtors have taken pleaſure to bury to impoſe upon the Ignorant. The ſending Fleets into Spain has much more probability. But Mr. Bochart has demonſtrated, that theſe Ships did not ſet out from the Mediterranean, but from the Perſian Gulf. From thence they went to the Indies, and could not paſs into Spain. We muſt therefore give up this Jewiſh Colony ſent into this Country in Solomon's Time, and reject the pretended Monuments that the Biſhop [e] of Mantua has produced to prove it. The ſecond Monument found in the Kingdom of Valentia, runs thus; Lament bitterly the great Captain, that God has taken from Amaziah. Villalpand relates it otherwiſe; This is the Sepulchre of Oran Nabat, Lieutenant [f], who revolted againſt his Prince; God ſupported him, and his Glory laſted till the ..... of Amaziah. But theſe Monuments are very uncertain or falſe.

V. From Solomon they came down to Nebuchadnezar, who having carried his Conqueſts into Spain, brought the Jews along with him, and accompliſh'd Obadiah's Prophecy, [g] by whoſe Mouth God promiſed, That the Captivity of the Hoſt of the Children of Iſrael ſhould poſſeſs that of the Canaanites, even unto Zarephath, and the Captivity of Jeruſalem ſhould poſſeſs that which is in Sepharad. The Canaanites are Germany, Zarephath, France and Sepharad [h], Spain. If you ask why the Jews call Spain Sepharad, they will tell you, that Sepharad and Spain are conſider'd as the Extremity of the World. And indeed it was not believed poſſible to go beyond Hercules's Pillars; here the Sun quenched its Flames in the Sea, and the World ended.

In [i] extremos aciem mittebat Iberos.

St. Jerom [k] had learnt from a Rabbin, that it was the Boſphorus, and pretended, that Adrian had conveyed a great many Jews thither, who ſhould one Day return to poſſeſs the Lands of the South, in the Neighbourhood of Jeruſalem. In the mean time theſe two Countries were at a very great diſtance, and in all appearance, the Prophet meant neither one nor the other.

VI. For indeed when we examine this Prophecy, without Prejudice and Intereſt, we find, that God here promiſed his People to reſtore 'em to the Holy Land; in which are all the Places noted by the Prophet. Here [l] we find the Territory of Ephraim, that of Samaria, and the Country of Gilead. Here we find the Canaanites, that could not be driven out of the Lands of Sidon and Zarephath, ſince they were ſtill there in our Saviour's time. There is no need therefore of ſubſtituting the Germans for the Canaanites, and France for the little City Sarepta. There only remains the Name of Sepharad unknown: But the LXX. remove the Difficulty, by Tranſlating

We can't ſee how Spain can be found in the midſt of all the Cities of Judæa. On the other hand, why muſt we quit the Holy Land, whereof the Prophet ſpeaks, to to go in queſt of a Sepharad in the Streights, which is known only by the Modern Jews? 2. 'Twas an Error of the Ancients, to think Spain the end of the World; but tho' it ſhould be true, it can't be hence concluded that Sepharad was this Country. 3. The Prophecy was accompliſhed at the return of the Captivity under Cyrus; for the Tribes of Judah and Benjamin took the Cities of the South, and the other Tribes, ſome part of which return'd, re-peopled the places noted by the Prophet, and they were all thus ſettled under Herod the Great, and in our Saviour's time.

VII. The ſecond Suppoſition, that Nebuchadnezzar conquer'd Spain, is ſomewhat better grounded than the foregoing, becauſe [m] Megaſthenes affirms, that This Prince who was eſteemed by the Orientals, had penetrated as far as Hercules Pillars. He [n] ſaid alſo, that Nebuchadnezzar had Conquered Africa and Iberia, and had carried their Inhabitants into Pontus. The Jewiſh Hiſtorians boldly relate, that Nebuchadnezzar Beſieged Jeruſalem with a great many Allies, that lent him their Troops: One of the chief of 'em was Hiſpanus, who gave the Name to Spain, who march'd with his Son in Law Pyrrhus King of the Greeks. The City being taken, there was no difficulty in dividing the Booty and the Priſoners, becauſe the City was ſeparated by three Walls. Nebuchadnezzar, for his ſhare, took the Workmen, &c. that inhabited the ſecond Wall, and gave Pyrrhus all thoſe that dwelt between the ſecond and the third Wall of the City. That was exactly [o] the reſidence of the Houſe of David and the Prieſts. Pyrrhus brought this multitude of Royal and Sacerdotal Priſoners to Andaluſia, and from thence to Toledo. The Poſterity of David removed to Sevil, and to the Kingdom of Granada.

VIII. But not to obſerve, that Megaſthenes a fabulous Hiſtorian, in the ſame place, makes Nebuchandezar a Prophet, and relates the pretended Oracle he ſpoke concerning the Birth of a Mule [p], who was to overthrow the Perſian Monarchy; 'tis very probable he took the European Iberia for the Aſiatick, or Spain for Georgia, which went by the ſame Name. And thus the Jews committing the ſame Fault, ſay Thubal Peopled Sepharad or Spain; but according to Joſephus, the Poſterity of this Patriarch were the Iberians ſeated near the Caſpian Sea. This Conqueſt ſuited better with Nebuchadnezzar, than that of Spain, which was too remote for his Expedition; and tho' he ſhould have conquer'd it, yet it does not appear from any Paſſage of Sacred or Prophane Hiſtory, that he carried the Jews thither, and their Hiſtory of Hiſpanus is a Romance.

IX. Nevertheleſs they affirm, that the Gothick Kings acknowledged this Truth, even when they made Laws againſt 'em; for they order'd them to be written in the ancient Language of Spain, which was grown out of uſe in their Reign, that the Jews, who had been a long time there, and ſpoke it ſtill, might underſtand them, and might not ſhelter their Diſobedience under the pretence of invincible Ignorance. As they were apprehenſive, that Ferdinand the Catholick and his Clergy would revenge upon them their Anceſtors Cruelty to Jeſus Chriſt, they produced an ancient Monument of the City Toledo, which they ſaid had been erected by order of a Biſhop, importing, that the Jews, the ancient Inhabitants of this City, had never left it, whilſt the ſecond Temple ſtood, which is a Confirmation, that they retired thither upon the ruin of the firſt, and in Nebuchadnezzar's time.

But theſe ancient and publick Monuments, which ſeem to afford a manifeſt proof are nevertheleſs deceitful. Thoſe, that ſee 'em laid, can't forbear laughing; and when the Air has fretted and defaced 'em, they begin to be reverenc'd, and conſider'd as demonſtrative Proofs of the truth of an Event. 'Tis with theſe Monuments, as with Faſhions, Titles, uſurped by upſtart Nobles, or ſuch as Fortune exalts above the Condition of their Birth. People ridicule the vanity of the Uſurpers. In the mean time old Age comes on, and a Generation paſſes over, and People forget what they have often ſeen; the Matter falls into the dark, and a ridiculous Title in its Birth, grows afterwards the Glory of a Houſe, and no Body dares diſpute it. 'Tis no wonder, that the Jews produce this Monument of Toledo, ſince many Chriſtians have been miſled by it, and yield to the Jews their boaſted Antiquity. They even call in the Sacred Writers to their aſſiſtance, and maintain that St. Luke relating that Jews of every Nation were ſeen at Jeruſalem on the Day of Pentecoſt, meant thoſe that had dwelt in Spain a long time before. In the mean time the Jews, who were devoted to the Promiſed Land, ſeldom left it to ſettle themſelves, and plant Colonies in other places. Thoſe that were carried to Babylon continu'd there, or returned to their Country after the Captivity; and at leaſt 'tis ridiculous to bring 'em in Multitudes out of Chaldea into Spain.

X. We muſt come down as low as Titus or Adrian, who having driven moſt of the Inhabitants from Judæa, obliged 'em to find new Countries. Their Chronicle ſays, that Veſpaſian carried many Families into Sepharad, which is Spain. Abravanel makes their number to amount to Fifty Thouſand amongſt which were two of the Houſe of David, which always reigned over the reſt. Abravanel, thought he proceeded from one of theſe Families. And therefore R. Menaſſeh, that was ſo famous in the laſt Century, and had Married in this Family, ſtrenuouſly attempted to prove its Empire over the Nation both in Spain and France. In King Alphonſo's Conference, Thomas the Advocate of the Synagogue, purſuant to this Prejudice, maintain'd that the Roman Emperor, who deſtroy'd Jeruſalem, ſent Forty Thouſand Families of the Tribe of Judah, and Ten Thouſand of that of Benjamin into Spain. Here you have Abravanel's Fifty Thouſand Families. But he adds, that thoſe of the Tribe of Benjamin went into France; ſo that all the Spaniſh Jews are of the Royal Race, and of the Tribe of Judah, Laſtly, We are told that the Gothick Kings deſcended from Gad, one of the Sons of Jacob; one of his Poſterity having gone to Rome, where he had been Conſul, and his Family being ſettled in the North. But 'tis eaſie to overthrow all theſe Prejudices of the Spaniſh Jews, who have borrowed the vain-glorious Genius of the Country where they flouriſh'd; and who pretend to deſcend from the Blood Royal, or from the firſt Tribe, tho' they have no diſtinguiſhing Character to raiſe 'em above their Brethren.

XI. Indeed but one of theſe four Things can be ſaid, 1. That many of Herod's Retinue who died in Spain, whither he was baniſhed, continued there after his Death; and that this was the firſt Original of the Jews of this Country. It would be more

conſiderable, were it true, that Herod made himſelf Maſter of all Spain, and drove out the King of it, who was guilty of Inceſt with his Siſter-in-Law. But could a Baniſhed King become a Conqueror in the Roman Empire? Beſides all the Courtiers, who had a kindneſs for this Tetrarch of Galilee, were not of the Tribes of Benjamin or Judah, or of the Race of David: They were rather Galileans, who followed their Prince, and whom the great Diſtance and Troubles that began to ariſe, hindered from returning Home. 2. When Jeruſalem was taken 'twas full of Strangers intermixed with the Citizens. Some came from all the Parts of Judæa, and others were Parthians, Elamites, Medes; in a word, they were the diſperſed of all the Nations, who came to celebrate the Paſſover at Jeruſalem. Did Titus then diſtinguiſh theſe diſperſed from the two Tribes of Benjamin and Judah, leſt the Families ſhould be confounded? This was the leaſt of his Thoughts. Joſephus affirms, that this Prince ſold the Jews like Beaſts in a Market. So that he not only made no diſtinction of the Tribes, to convey ſome into Spain and others elſewhere, but he confounded the Priſoners, who had the Fate of Beaſts brought to a Fair, which Dealers from Different Parts that buy 'em, ſeparate and carry away without diſtinction. Laſtly, Would a Colony of Fifty Thouſand Families ſettled in one and the ſame Place, have eſcaped Joſephus's diligence? The Heathen Hiſtorians have mentioned, that which Tiberius ſent into the Iſle of Sardinia, which was but of Four Thouſand Jews; and could Joſephus who was zealous for his Nation's Glory, have forgotten a Colony of above Three Hundred Thouſand Perſons, ſent by Titus in a Body into one Place! He had better have recorded this Event in his Hiſtory, than a general Sale, that involves the Nation into Shame and Confuſion. 3. The Tribes were totally confounded in Adrian's Time. At Jeruſalem there were left only ſome miſerable Remains of the Tribe of Judah. They were Families of all the Tribes, that returned to ſettle there to ſerve the Roman Garriſon, and took advantage of ſome Intervals of Reſt. This Prince did not muſter up Forty Thouſand Families of Judah, and Ten Thouſand of Benjamin, to make a National Body, and aſſign 'em a part of Spain; and he muſt be ignorant of this Prince's manner of treating the Jews, who talks thus. 4. Since there was no Colony ſent by order of Titus or Adrian, there remains but one Option to make, which is the only true one, in confeſſing that ſome Jews, that had weather'd the Storm, finding no receſs nor ſecurity in Judæa, went into Spain, as to other Places of the Roman Empire, where they could get their Bread; or elſe they were conveyed thither by the Maſters that bought 'em, and gave 'em their Liberty. But then it muſt be owned, that the Spaniſh Jews have no other advantage above the reſt, but that of being Richer, and more Powerful. And the Empire of the Abravanels is diſputed in the Nation as well as that of the other Branch, that goes by the Name of the Children of David; and ſome Doctors affirm this Family was extinct in Spain in the Twelfth Century.

One thing is certain, that the Jews had Settlements in Spain ſoon after the Birth of Chriſtianity, ſince the Council [q] of Elvira, one of the moſt ancient that was held, was obliged to make many Acts againſt them.

XII. The Germans boaſt as well as the Spaniards of having come into Germany before the ruin of their Temple, and in the Year 1348, was found at Ulm the Original of the Letter, that was written to 'em from Jeruſalem, to acquaint them with the Death of Jeſus Chriſt, which was this; To the Jews, that are at Ulm, in Suabia, Greeting. "We have reaſon to return Thanks to God, who has delivered us from a great Affliction; for we acquaint you, that Jeſus the Nazarene, the Son of Joſeph, is Dead. We could no longer bear his Blaſphemies; we impeached him to the Roman Prætor, who received our Accuſation, and cauſed him to be Scourged and Crucified according to his Merits. He has alſo put his Diſciples to flight; God have you in his keeping". This Letter is fictitious: The Impoſtor took care not to write it in Hebrew Characters, ſince his deſign was to precipitate the ruin of the Jews at Ulm, by making them odious. It was uſeleſs in a ſtrange Language, which neither the Prieſts nor People underſtood.

XIII. But thoſe of Worms pretend to have given good Proofs to the Emperor, and the States of the Empire, that they had no hand in our Saviour's Crucifixion, and that from time immemorial [r] they have been ſettled in this City, which is the reaſon they have been granted Privileges, which others are deprived of. 'Twas with this view they have inſerted in the Toldos Jeſchu [s] the Extract of a Letter, which the Sanhedrim of Worms writ to the King of Judæa, to diſſuade him from putting Jeſus Chriſt to Death. Let alone this Jeſus; and don't kill him; let him be fed till he contracts ſome ſtain, and defile himſelf. Mr. Huldrich, who has publiſhed this Treatiſe, and illuſtrated it with very learned Notes, obſerves, that the Expreſſion is taken from Animals, that were offered in Sacrifice to God, and about which they had any doubt or ſuſpicion of Impurity. It was not lawful to kill this Animal, nor to eat it. It was carefully fed, till ſome ſtain of defilement was obſerved in it. The Jews of Worms were for having Jeſus Chriſt left to deſtroy himſelf, and to incur Death by ſome Crime or other: But he adds, that the Author has inſerted this Extract to render the Inhabitants of Worms odious to his Nation.

On the contrary I am perſuaded, that the Author of this Book, which is full of Blaſphemies, was a Member of the Synagogue of Worms, whoſe Prejudices he has ſeconded to ingratiate it more and more to the Emperor's Protection. For if the Synagogue boaſted of its protecting Jeſus Chriſt, that it might be leſs odious, the Writer muſt have had the ſame view: If this Account brought 'em under the diſpleaſure of the other Jews, it was ſufficiently recompenc'd by the Protection of Chriſtian Princes, which they pretended to procure by it.

The inſtance produced of a Rabbaniſt, who makes the Karaites ſay, that Jeſus approved their Doctrine, that he would oblige his Diſciples to receive their Rites, and that he was killed through Malice to the Law of Moſes, is very different, becauſe it attributes to the Karaites and Jeſus Chriſt the ſame Opinions, and makes but a very little difference betwixt 'em, concerning the manner of the Reſurrection; whereas the Rabbin of Worms aſcribes only to his Anceſtors the wiſe Counſel of Gamaliel on a like occaſion: Let 'em alone, for if this Work be of Men it will come to nought.

It ſignifies little to gueſs at the intention of this Writer. 'Tis enough to obſerve the prejudice of the Jews of Worms, who pretend to have been in this Country before the Deſtruction of the ſecond Temple, and to have had a Council there ſo venerable, as to be conſulted by the King of the Jews, about Affairs of Importance, which is evidently falſe. They have ſuch another pretence of Antiquity in the Dioceſs of Mersbourg; for they ſay; that they were were ſettled there immediately after the taking of Jeruſalem; but they produce no proof of it.

XIV. We only know, that they were at Triers and Cologne in Adrian's time; and made ſuch a conſiderable Figure there in Conſtantine's Reign, that the Emperor put out an Edict [t], by which he permitted the Magiſtrates of Cologne to take the Jews into the Exerciſe of the Magiſtracy, and to make 'em Decurions. This Edict the Interpreters of the Laws have thought [u] very ambiguous. It ſeems to be a Confirmation of that of Alexander Severus, who to gratifie the Jews, gave 'em liberty to enter into Civil Offices, without practiſing any ſuperſtition, that wounded their Conſciences. As Severus's Edict was irrevocable, and People look upon it as an Honour to come into Offices, it has been thought, that Conſtantine's Edict ratified that of Severus, and that it was favourable to the Jews, ſince he gave 'em leave to be Decurions. But this Prince had a quite different meaning. There are Seaſons in which Offices are burthenſome; and ſuch were the Decurions at Cologne and Triers, and over all the Empire. The Teſtimony [x] of Ammianus Marcellinus, who taxes Julian with aboliſhing the Privileges of thoſe that thought themſelves exempt from this Office, is an undeniable Proof of it. 'Twas at the requeſt of the Magiſtrates of theſe two Cities, who complained that the Inhabitants were oppreſs'd, and the Jews exempted from the burthen of being Decurions, that Conſtantine declar'd, they might be made Decurions; which Conjecture is ſo true, that Conſtantine does not grant it as a favour, but permits and authorizes the Magiſtrates to chooſe ſome Perſons of the Synagogue to bear Offices, and deprives the Jews of the liberty of refuſing them. Beſides he made other Laws, by which he exempted the Jews, who were in Office in the Synagogue from accepting thoſe in the State; a manifeſt Argument, that he looked upon the neceſſity of accepting Offices as a burthen, and the liberty of refuſing them as an advantageous Privilege. Conſtantine therefore voided the irrevocable Edict of Severus, and ſubjected the German Jews to the neceſſities of the State, which ſhews they were numerous and powerful in this Country in Severus and Conſtantine's Reign.

XV. 'Tis true, the Jews in the following Ages made ſo little a Figure in Germany, as hardly to be known. Which is no wonder; for theſe ſpacious and vaſt Countries being Peopled with barbarous Nations, were ſcarce fit for the Commerce of Strangers. However it is manifeſt, they maintain'd themſelves at Triers and Cologne, where they had ſettled betimes. From thence they ſpread into other Places, proportionably as the Nations grew civiliz'd. They were already ſo numerous in Bohemia, in the Tenth Century, as to do a conſiderable Service to the old Inhabitants, by joining with 'em in the Expulſion of the Robbers; and 'twas by way of Gratitude for this remarkable piece of Service, that they had granted them the liberty of a Synagogue at Prague.

XVI. The diſperſion [y], that happened in the Eaſt in the following Century, contributed to their Multiplication in this Country and the Neighbouring Kingdoms, as Hungary and Poland. Villalpand [z] makes 'em much ancienter in the latter; becauſe he had learnt from the Poliſh Embaſſador at Naples, that they had opened a Tomb, wherein they found a Body of ſuch a prodigious bulk, that the Ring on his Finger might ſerve for a Bracelet, and come upon the Arm of another Man. This Tomb was that of a Jew, who repoſed there ever ſince the happy and flouriſhing times of the Commonwealth of Iſrael; for a great many Sheckels were found of Silver, as generally the Jews are; and ſince Agrippa aſſerted, that this Nation had penetrated far into Pontus, it ought not to be doubted but it had paſſed into Poland, long before the Birth of Chriſtianity; theſe Arguments are ſo feeble, that 'tis ſtrange that any Man of ſenſe ſhould offer 'em.

XVII. The Jews muſt alſo be very ancient among the Gauls ſince Xiphilin ſpeaks of a Jewiſh Orator, who haranguing Tiberius in the Name of his Nation, put him into ſuch a Paſſion, that he cauſed him to be thrown into the Tyber. This Orator was a Gaul by Birth. However, they did not appear ſo ſoon in France, unleſs we will comprehend in its limits Triers and Cologne, which were part of Belgick-Gaul. I don't know whether leaving Judæa, they came thither by Marſeilles, but they were not much known before the Affair of Cæſarius. They went ſtill later into England. However, they have had in theſe Places Synagogues and Academies, and Men of Fame, of whom we ſhall ſpeak in the following Hiſtory.

I. WE have already obſerved, that the ſtate of Judæa muſt be very miſerable after the ruin of its Capital in the Reign of Veſpaſian. Indeed, if we follow the Accounts of ſome Authors, who reckon 66240000 Inhabitants in this Province, it would not have been diſpeopled by the loſs of thirteen or fourteen Hundred thouſand Souls that periſhed in the War. But theſe extravagant Reckonings are ſuſpected, and only one falſe Suppoſition makes ſo great an Addition, that a Man ought always to be cautious. Villalpand [a] for Example affirms, that in Jehoſaphat's Time, there was in the City of Jeruſalem Eleven Hundred and Sixty Thouſand Men, able to bear Arms. Upon this Suppoſition, he finds the infinite number of Inhabitants we have remark'd. Whereas the Sacred Hiſtorian does not ſpeak only of the Inhabitants of Jeruſalem; he reckons all the Men, that Jehoſaphat could bring of all Judæa into the Field. He finds Eleven Hundred and Sixty Thouſand of 'em, beſides the Garriſons of ſtrong Places. This one Obſervation makes a prodigious difference in the Sum Total. Joſephus commending the fruitfulneſs of Galilee, obſerves, there was not a piece of Ground but what was cultivated. Large Towns [b] appeared every where, the leaſt whereof contain'd Fifteen Thouſand Inhabitants. Hence 'tis concluded, that each Wall'd City contain'd Ninety Thouſand Perſons. By giving each Tribe Sixty Cities of this force, you find Five Millions, Five Hundred and Twenty Thouſand Perſons, which being multiplied by twelve Repartitions, makes 66240000 Perſons. If their Numbers had been ſo prodigious in Joſephus's Time, the Holy Land would not have been much depopulated by the Maſſacre that was made in it, ſince it would have left near Sixty Five Millions of Inhabitants.

II. 'Tis eaſie to ſhew, that this Calculation is faulty; Firſt, It implicitely follows that of Joſephus, who has determined without any exactneſs, that the leaſt Town contained Fifteen Thouſand Inhabitants; which is inconceivable; and by rules of Addition, it gives all the Cities a number equally exceſſive; for there are a very few Places that have Ninety Thouſand Citizens. 2. A Concluſion is drawn from Galilee to all the other Tribes. Whereas Joſephus only mentions its fertility, to give it a Preheminence above all the other Parts of Judæa, in which there were Deſarts, and whereof all the Tribes were not equally large, nor Peopled. There were many Millions of Inhabitants in Judæa. But 'tis impossible to fix their number, and that of Villalpand is extreamly Hyperbolical.

III. We continue to observe a just Medium; and as we have asserted, that Jerusalem did not grow absolutely desolate after its Destruction, so for a stronger Reason, we maintain that there were in the rest of Judæa, a small number of Inhabitants, that liv'd there after the Destruction of their Country. The multitude of the dead of the Prisoners that were sold, and of the Fugitives, that fled into other Places, had depopulated it, and therefore Colonies were sent into it. But on the other hand there were still some natural Jews enough to re-establish themselves in a little time, since sixty Years after the Ruin of the Temple they rais'd again Forces. They fortify'd fifty Castles, in which they defended themselves against Adrian, without reckoning the City of Bitter, that sustained a long Siege.

IV. To pretend [c] that the Sanhedrim was remov'd to Jamnia, and from thence to Tiberias, where it subsisted till after the death of Judas the Saint, that Academies were established in many Cities, and that the Nation continued to be govern'd by a Patriarch, is to run into an illusion, which we have confuted in several places of this History.

There remained no Shadow of Power and Authority to this wretched People in the Country, that God had given them. Domitian covetous even to excess, help'd to sink it by his Taxes. It has been thought that this Oppression respected only the Jews of Rome, who having been expell'd out of this Imperial City, could not return again, without paying a certain Tax; but 'tis a mistake. The Tribute demanded by Domitian, related to all the Jews, and was not a new one. To prove it, we'll resume the Matter a little higher.

V. Pompey having subjected Judæa to the Romans, made it Tributary according to Custom. Julius Cæsar granted Hircanus, and even the Jewish People, some Exemptions. Nevertheless Josephus [d] adds, that they were obliged to carry their Tribute every two Years to Sidon. The Privilege then consited in having no Intendant nor Collectors, who in those times ruined Nations. They were also exempted from Winter-Quarters and the Entertainment of Soldiers. Lastly, They paid nothing in the Sabbatick Year, because the Lands lay Fallow. Alexander the Great had granted the same Privilege before. Herod being made King, and a Friend of the Roman People, 'tis imagined [e] that he was discharg'd from Tribute; but the Romans, says Tacitus, [f] continued to the Princes the Title of Kings, and at the same time made 'em sensible of their Slavery, by forcing 'em to pay Taxes. Cicero would have Jerusalem return Thanks to the Immortal Gods, that it had not been raz'd as Carthage, and that it had been rented out, Quod servata, quod elocata nobis debet. Appian [g] speaking of the Kings, that Mark Antony had made Tributary, names Herod with those of Pontus and Pisidia, and excepts only from this general Law the Princes of the Upper Armenia. That which might have misguided the Learned, is their not seeing any Intendant, or Receivers in this Province, till after Herod's and Archelaus's Death. 'Twas indeed a Shadow of Liberty left to this People, to suffer 'em to collect their Taxes by their own Receivers, as Josephus has observed; but it can't be hence concluded that they were not Tributary, and that this Kingdom was the only Exception to the General Law. It can't be doubted but this Tribute was regularly paid during our Saviour's Life time, since the Pharisees tempted him by it, and Jesus Christ discovering Cæsar's Image upon the Denarion, that was paid for the Poll, answered, They should render to Cæsar the things that were Cæsar's.

VI. The truth is, they paid two sorts of Taxes, one was a Subsidy laid upon the Lands, of which they paid the hundreth Penny. But besides this, Appian [h] observes, that there was a Capitation more intolerable to the Jews, than all the other Tributes. And therefore Judæa petitioned Tiberius to be exempted [i] from the Imposts with which it was overlaid, as well as Syria.

This Capitation did not seem to be great, since they only paid one Denarion; that is about seven Pence half Penny per Head. But it was equal for the Poor as well as the Rich. As the Didrachm was paid equally to God, so the Tribute which Cæsar exacted, was one and the same to all the Inhabitants without any distinction. There were two Reasons that aggravated this Yoke in Judæa, one, that this People priding it self in its Alliance with God, and thinking it self perfectly free, could not brook the Empire of the Infidels, especially since the Macchabees had shook it off, and the Capitation made 'em feel their Slavery. And therefore [k] Judas of Galilee rebelled, when Augustus sent to have Judæa enroll'd. There was another Reason, that render'd this Yoke insupportable; for the Money that was to be brought to the Roman Treasure, was stamp'd with the Prince's Image, and the Jew over scrupulously addicted to the Law, which only condemns the Worship of Images, could not see the Emperor's Figure upon the Money, he was obliged to pay without a Mortification:

Decicus aut Scripto radiet Germanicus auro.

VII. 'Tis said indeed that the Jews coin'd Money, having a Man's Head upon it, radiated with a Glory, and on the reverse was a Rose [l]. For a proof of which, they produce one of the pieces of Silver that Judas received from the College of Priests, having this Figure and word upon it. They have reason for keeping these sorts of Coins at Paris and Rome, because some Travellers are so easie, as to be deceiv'd by 'em; but these are rather proofs of humane Credulity than Tracks of ancient Custom. We are told also, that there were particular Coins for the Tribute, impress'd with the victorious Consuls, who had subdued a Province, which was represented in Slavery. Indeed Freherus [m] produces one of Plautius, Pompey's Lieutenant in Asia, who having defeated one Bacchius a Jew, who had set up a Kingdom in a Corner of Arabia, had stamp'd upon the Tribute Money, this Prince upon his Knees, having his Hand upon a Camil's Loins, and holding in the other an Olive Branch supplicating for Peace, with these two words:

BACCHIUS JUDÆUS.
Bacchius the Jew.

But these were rather Medals design'd for a Monument of the Conquest, than Money of the Republick imployed to pay the Tribute with. It would have been doubling the Jews Affliction, to have seen the Marks of their Slavery engraven upon every Penny they were to pay. But we must also distinguish betwixt Medals and Coins, and each Province had not a particular piece of Money for its Tribute;

but

but it was paid in the currant Coin, which after Cæsar, bore the Impress of the Reigning Prince.

Tiberius was so jealous of this Impression, that it was Treason to carry a piece of his Money in those Parts, which for Modesties sake are nameless, and a Master who had beaten his Servant, whilst he held a Denarion of Tiberius, was condemn'd as guilty of High Treason. All this aggravated the Yoke of the Jews. The Pharisees alluded to this severity of the Emperor, when they told our Lord; as they ask'd him whether they were to pay Tribute, Thou carest not for any Man, neither regardest the Person of Men; that is, thou bravest a Prince, that is infinitely jealous of his Tribute. But our Saviour acquainted them, that the payment of Taxes ought not to be confounded with our Services to God, and that Obedience to Kings ought to be distinguish'd from Religion; Render, says he, to Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, Pope Constantine, instead of paying the Emperor his dues, was for having his Image struck out of the Coin, because he had anathematiz'd him as a Heretick. He imitated Judas the Galilean, instead of following the Laws and Example of his Master.

VIII. Hitherto Judæa paid but one Tax upon Lands and the Capitation, which brought [n] Three Hundred Seventy Thousand, Eight Hundred and Thirty Three Pounds, Six Shillings and Eight Pence, into the Emperor's Exchequer; but after the taking of Jerusalem, Titus ordered the Didrachm which was paid annually to the Temple, to be confiscated; and Cicero observes, that they sent it from Rome, and the other Cities of Italy to Jerusalem, because they look'd upon it as a Tribute which they paid to God as his Subjects. But the Emperor usurp'd the place of God, whom they had forsaken, and appropriated this Tribute to himself. Each Didrachm was worth sixteen Pence, and so the Sum demanded of 'em was very considerable. But this third Tax was the more Disgraceful, because they were obliged to purchase the liberty of their Religion by it, and Domitian exacted it with the utmost severity.

IX. First Xiphilin [o] relates, that Titus after the Conquest of Judæa, ordered all the Jews, that would preserve their Religion, to pay the Didrachm annually to Jupiter Capitolinus. Secondly, The Romans made them purchase Liberty of Conscience by it. Tertullian complains bitterly, that they had rank'd the Christians among Prostitutes and Rogues, who paid a Tribute, to be suffered at Rome. The Jewish Religion therefore being grown infinitely odious after the Rebellion, its Professors were obliged to pay an annual Sum for their Toleration. Lastly, Suetonius [p] speaks of Domitian's injurious treatment, in demanding the Payment. They strip'd a Man to inform themselves of his Extract and Religion by Circumcision. Neither the Quality of Persons, nor the Age, nor the Oaths of such as chose rather to pretend to be Heathens, than to furnish the Sums demanded, were respected. A Man of Ninety Years of Age was forced to this scandalous Inquest, under pretence of which were committed a thousand Impieties.

X. Domitian's hatred [q] stop'd not there, and the Jews were comprized in the same Persecution with the Christians. We can't doubt of it; for not to observe that both of 'em were in the Opinion of the Romans, equally guilty of Impiety, since they Worshipped only one God, and rejected the Idols, which was reckoned an Atheism, and implied as a pretence to torment People: Dion affirms, that many Persons who had embraced the Jewish Religion, were condemned for the Crime of Impiety, and that some were punished with Death, and others only with Sequestration. This Persecution began in the Ninety fifth Year of the Christian Æra. I don't wonder that Baronius [r] is of another Opinion, and makes it last six Years. His meer fondness to rank Pope Cletus in the List of Martyrs, was sufficient to make him disturb the History of the Emperors. But 'tis strange, to hear a Man impeach the Testimony of Brutius, an ancient Heathen Author, who makes it begin in the fifteenth of Domitian; and this perfectly agrees with the account of Tertullian and Lactantius, who assert it was very short: For indeed it continued but a Year. This time was thought insufficient to give Evocatus orders, to arrest the Relations of our Saviour, and to send 'em from Judæa to Rome to be examined; but [s] besides that Domitian might have had some State-Jealousie and Mistrust, before he began the Persecution, since these two things are very different, one Year was sufficient for the making the Voyage we speak of.

Dodwell [t], whose Chronology we here follow, affirms, that Domitian being content with banishing those he Persecuted, spared their Lives. But this is evidently false; for without insisting upon Tertullian's Expression, who compared Domitian to Nero, because this Father might be charged with over-straining things according to his Custom and Genius, Death was the Punishment appointed of those that were accused of Impiety and Judaism. Indeed Dion asserts, that part of those who had embraced the Jewish Rites were punished with Death, and we ought to make the same Inference for the Impious, that is, the Christians. 'Twas [u] under this pretence that the Consul Clemens, Cousin German to the Emperor, was sentenced to Death. I know not why ancient Martyrologers don't speak of him; and having adopted so many Chimerical Saints, should reject him who was a true Martyr, and whose cruel Death is attested by a Heathen. We must also place Glabrion in the same rank, unless we'll restore him to the Jews; for Impiety was one of the Crimes he was charged with.

XI. In fine, Nerva, Domitian's Successor, did three things to the advantage of this Nation: 1. He absolved those who were accused of Impiety, and recall'd the Exiles; which shews, that if Domitian had that design, he was not able to execute it, being prevented by his Assassinators. 2. He forbad for the future the Subjects of the Empire to be tormented for the sake of Religion, of Impiety or Judaism. 3. He discharged the Jews of the Imposts, wherewith Domitian had oppressed them. We are taught this from a Medal [x], on which we read these words:

CALUMNIA. FISCI. JUDAICI SUBLATA.

Some [y] stretch this Inscription too far, by maintaining, that the annual Tax for the Didrachm was repeal'd; for Origin so positively asserts, that it was paid in his time, that there is no room to doubt of it. The Medal only says, that Calumny was abolish'd; that is, that the Jews were no longer impos'd great Fines upon false Pretences, as had been done in Domitian's Reign.

XII. We have placed the first of all the Patriarchs of Judæa in this Prince's Reign. 1. Because he was more favourable to the Jews. 2. Because there is no Probability that they could so suddenly have re-settled themselves after an almost General Diſperſion, and that they could have begun to create him under Domitian, who by his Avarice and Cruelty gave 'em no Reſt. According to this Account Gamaliel II. was then the Head of the Fathers, which the Greeks call Patriarch. We have already ſpoken of the Controverſies, which he had with one Joſhua, which caus'd him to be depoſed. "They "found it difficult to give him a Succeſſor, becauſe "he was a formidable Man. Joſhua could not be "elected, becauſe he was his Antagoniſt. They "caſt their Eyes naturally upon Akiba; but as he "was not of a noble Birth, 'twas feared Gamaliel "would bewitch him with his Looks. They next "pitch'd upon [z] Eleazar, the Son of Azarias, who "was of a good Family, and able to pay conſide-"rable Sums to the Emperor, if he was tax'd. His "Wife, whoſe Advice he deſired before he accep-"ted the Place, was afraid of his being depoſed: "but he removed her Apprehenſions by ſaying a "Man ought to accept of a Glaſs, tho' he knew it "would be broken the next day. They will deſpiſe "you, ſaid his Wife, becauſe your Beard is not as "yet grey. This was a great Perplexity, for Elea-"zer, who was but Eighteen Years of Age, had as "yet no Beard at all: but God made up this "Defect; for in an inſtant, ſprung out upon his "Cheeks Eighteen Rows of White Hairs. His Wife "yielded upon Sight of the Miracle. He immedi-"ately opened the Door of the Academy, and expell'd "the Porter that ſhut it againſt the Scholars, which "Gamaliel thought unworthy; which multiplied "their Number.". Joſhua was elected Father of the Senate, Eleazer was reconciled with Gamaliel, and they enjoy'd their Dignity together [a]. Hiſtorians ſay, that Eleazer preſided two Saturdays, and Gamaliel one, which ſhews that this Office eſpecially related to Religion, and the Divine Service.

XIII. The Jews endeavour to raiſe the Glory of their deſolate Nation, by making a great many Learned Men, (on whom they father many fictitious Works) ſurvive the Ruin of the Temple, and live in the Beginning of the Second Century.

Eliezer the Great lived at that time [b]. They make him the Son of a Perſon of Quality call'd Hircanus, who had ſo neglected his Education, that at twenty eight Years of Age, he was ignorant of the Law. He bewailed his Ignorance for many days; but at laſt the Prophet Elias told him of a Maſter. He made a Journey to John (the Son of Zechai) who taught at Jeruſalem, by whom he was inſtructed in his Prayers and ſome Points of the Law. Eliezer wept and faſted till he had learnt them, and Eight Days paſs'd over before he eat. His Father came to Jeruſalem to diſinherit him; but was raviſhed with the Learning and Modeſty he found in him: he would not ſit down before him: and inſtead of diſinheriting him, he gave him his Brothers Portions, who had put him upon this Deſign. Eliezer ſaid to his Maſter, that a Man could not draw more Water from a Well, than had been put into it; but he might from a Fountain that had a conſtant Spring; Signifying that he could teach nothing beyond what he had learnt, but that his Maſter was a Fountain flowing with more Precepts, than God had given on Mount Sinai. This Doctor owned as he was dying, that he had the Art of tranſplanting the harveſts from one Place to another.

Atque ſatas alio vidi traducere meſſes.

For walking one Day with Akiba, he ſhewed him in an inſtant a Field full of Cucumbers; and commanded them afterwards to change place and collect themſelves in a heap, which they did. The Thalmudiſts [c] repreſent him as a Man full of his Merits, who asked on his Death-bed, [d] Is there any Precept of the Law which I have not accompliſhed: Akiba confounded his Pride with this Reply, Maſter, thou haſt always taught us, that there was not a juſt and ſinleſs man upon earth.

XIV. The [e] R. Joſhua (Jehoſhua) was Eliezer's Aſſociate, whoſe Reputation was ſo great, that he is quoted in the Miſnah without any Epithet, or Character of Diſtinction. He did what he pleas'd at the Court of Trajan the Emperor, of whom he obtained Liberty to re-build the Houſe of the Sanctuary. He was ſo ugly and meager, that the Emperor's Daughter asked him one Day, how ſo great Wiſdom could be included, in ſo filthy a Veſſel. The Princeſs commended his Wit, at the ſame time ſhe inſulted his Deformity. Nevertheleſs he was affronted at her, and ask'd the Princeſs, why ſhe ſuffer'd Wine to be put in Earthen Veſſels, and adviſed her to put it into Silver. The Princeſs believed him: The Wine grew ſowre. Trajan was angry, that his Wine was ſpoilt. He ſent for the Author of the Advice, who inſtead of anſwering that he deſigned to ſhew, that Treaſures were poſſeſs'd in Earthen Veſſels; repreſented to the Emperor, that his Daughter firſt inſulted him upon his Uglineſs. They ſay, this Man had the Art of flying in the Air by Virtue of the Ineffable Name.

XV. We have ſpoken [f] ſufficiently of Simeon Jochaides, to whom they attribute the Cabbaliſtick Book intituled the Zohar. To whom we will join Eliezer Haggalili, or the Galilean, the Son of Joſes, another Cabbaliſtick and Cotemporary Doctor. He wrote the Thirty-two Properties [g] of the Law, with reſpect to the Thirty-two ways of Wiſdom. The Doctors admoniſh, that when a Man finds any one of theſe Myſtical Explications, he muſt ſtudiouſly retain it. There was alſo another Eliezer, the Son of James, whoſe Cloak had been burnt in the Temple, as a Puniſhment for his falling aſleep there. They make this the Third Eliezer, the Author of a Tract concerning the [h] Meaſures of the Temple; and Bartoloco thinks, that as this Man was extreamly ingenious, and had ſeen the Temple at Jeruſalem, the Doctors that ſucceeded him at a great diſtance, have taken their Knowledge from him; but this is giving a great Antiquity to Works that perhaps have but very little of it. For indeed none of theſe Doctors nor their Books are otherwiſe known, than by the Teſtimony of the Rabbins, that lived a long time after them. We alſo find evident Marks of Impoſture in them, ſince they quote Facts and Authors, that were many Ages later.

XVI. At that Time lived the Poet [i] Ezekiel, who Compoſed the Departure from Egypt, in Greek Verſe. He was a Jew, and probably meant to ſing a miraculous Deliverance to comfort his Nation dejected by the Romans, in giving it an Idea of a Redeemer like Moſes. He lived after Joſephus, who did not know him, and before Clemens Alexandrinus, who has quoted him. We muſt therefore place him at the End of the firſt, or rather at the Beginning of the ſecond Century.

XVII. We muſt alſo place at the ſame time the Author

Author of the Will of the Twelve Patriarchs. This Man has diſguiſed his Religion, and ſpeaks ſo often like a Jew, that [k] a Learned Man, who was the firſt Publiſher of this Work in Greek, which was known before, only by a bad [l] Verſion of the Biſhop of Lincoln, and ſome Fragments, maintains that the Original was in Hebrew, Compoſed by a Doctor of that Nation ſome time before the Manifeſtation of our Lord, ſince the Author has followed the common Prejudices of the Doctors of that time, who expected a General of an Army famous for his Battels, rather than a Spiritual Teacher. It ſeems the Biſhop of Lincoln had the ſame Thought, ſince he made miſerable Complaints of the Jealouſie of the Jews, who had ſo long concealed this Work from the Chriſtians, for fear they ſhould make uſe of the Prophecies relating to the Meſſiah.

XVIII. But the Twelve Patriarchs Will was Compoſed in the time we are upon; for the Author ſpeaks of the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and ſeveral Actions of the Meſſiah, and even of the Writings of the Evangeliſts, like a Prophet who had ſeen the Things. On the other hand Origen [m] had ſeen this Book, wherein he found ſome good Senſe, tho' the Jews had not put it in their Canon. I dare not ſay whether Tertullian made Alluſion to Benjamin's Will, not only becauſe he was an African, and had not much Commerce with the Greeks; but becauſe his Notion is very different, and ſeems borrowed from Jacob's Benediction. Benjamin, ſaid he, ſhall ravine as a Wolf; in the Morning he ſhall devour the Prey, and at Night he ſhall divide the Spoil. Tertullian applied theſe Words to St. Paul, who was at firſt a Perſecutor, and afterwards the Maſter and Doctor of the Nations. There was no need of reading Benjamin's Will to have this Notion, who foretold [n] his Children there ſhould ariſe from amongſt them a Man acceptable to God, who ſhould raviſh their Knowledge from 'em like a Wolf, and diſtribute it to the Ten Nations.

Whether Tertullian had or had not known this ſpurious Piece, it remains equally true, that it is very ancient, ſince Origen quotes it; but I can't ſay it was written in Hebrew, for it was never ſeen in that Language; and the Biſhop of Lincoln, who diſcovered it in the Thirteenth Century, had it only in Greek. Examine the Book, and you'll find no Hebrew Idioms, nor thoſe ways of ſpeaking, that were foreign to the Greeks, which Tranſlators can't conceal without deſtroying the Senſe. We read [o] in a Manuſcript, that the Writer has followed the Verſion of St. John Chryſoſtome in Greek. But not to enquire whether this Father underſtood Hebrew enough to tranſlate it, which does not appear by any of his Works, would it be poſſible, that if the Original Hebrew had been preſerved to the Fifth Century, and known by the Greek Fathers, as the Genuine Work of a Jew? They would not have drawn a hundred Arguments againſt 'em from the Prophecies interſperſed in every Page of it, and which are of an undeniable Evidence. The Author might be a Jewiſh Inhabitant of Egypt, where Origen found his Book; but having forſaken his Religion, and turned Chriſtian, he diſguiſed himſelf under the Venerable Name of the Twelve Patriarchs, to vent in form of a Prophecy, the principal Circumſtances of our Saviour's Life and Death; and the better to conceal himſelf, he ſcattered among his Prophecies ſome Tracks of his ancient Judaiſm, which were not yet perfectly obliterated. We ought neither to Father this Book on the Jews, nor draw Conſequences from it againſt 'em. We have ſaid enough of the Learned Men whom they make to live in this ancient Time.

XIX. The miſerable are more mutinous and reſtleſs than other People. There is a Spirit of Sedition [p] imputed to certain Religions, and to the Tempers and Inclinations of certain Nations. But this is only a Fancy; for all Men naturally love Peace and Quiet, leave 'em the Liberty of Conſcience, and the publick Enjoyment, or Increaſe of their Eſtates, and you'll ſee few Rebellions in States. The Hatred of Parties, Perſecution, and the Harſhneſs of Government are the common Springs of Tumults and Seditions; and Men do not ſwerve from their Natural State, except when they are forced by Deſpair or Violence. We muſt not wonder then, if the Jews, notwithſtanding their Miſeries, have ſo frequently an Inclination to rebel. 'Tis Miſery that puts Men in Agitation, and makes 'em turn on all Sides to be eaſie, and commonly, inſtead of compaſſing their Deſires, they add freſh Weight to their Burthen. The Jews miſ-timed their Attempts in Trajan's Reign. I know not what could make 'em ſo venturous as to brave the Power of ſo great a Prince. Being provoked and ſowred by their preceding Misfortunes, they carried, in their turn, Cruelty and Barbarity to a deteſtable Exceſs, beginning at Cyrene, a City of Lybia, where they had been ſettled and potent for many Ages. They had at firſt ſome Advantages over the Greeks; for ſo they called the Egyptians: but the Fugitives eſcaping to Alexandria, and carrying Conſternation and a Thirſt of Revenge into this great City, they murdered all the Jews that remained there. Thoſe of Cyrene inraged with a Reprizal they had juſtly deſerved, fell into the greateſt Fury; and being headed by one Andrew, they ravaged the Plain Country under his Conduct, and maſſacred Two Hundred and Twenty Thouſand Inhabitants in Lybia. The Romans returned into the Field, under Martius Turbo their General, whom Trajan had Commiſſion'd to quell theſe Diſorders. He did it, but could not defeat the Rebels, without long and violent Battels, and the Loſs of a great deal of Blood and Men; and Lybia remained ſo depopulate by the Maſſacre the Jews had made in the Beginning of the War, that the Emperor Adrian was obliged to ſend a Colony to inhabit it [q].

XX. Euſebius has run into a manifeſt Contradiction, as to this Rebellion of the Jews; for he affirms in his Hiſtory that it happened in the Beginning of the Eighteenth Year of Trajan's Reign: and he places it a Year ſooner in his Chronicle. The Hiſtory being exacter than the Chronicle, we ought to give it the Preference, and place this Event in the Beginning of the Second Century, and in the Hundred and Fifteenth Year of Jeſus Chriſt. The Jewiſh Hiſtorians ſay, that the War was cauſed by the Ambition of the Refugees, who were retired to Alexandria after the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and had built a Temple there. Some would fain lord it over the reſt, and the weaker Party called in Trajan to their Aſſiſtance, who kill'd Five Hundred Thouſand of 'em. But their Temple at Alexandria was imaginary; that of Onias being the only one they built.

XXI. The Thalmudiſts, who are always ignorant in Hiſtory, vary in a much groſſer manner. Some ſay, 'twas Adrian, that killed twice as many Jews in Egypt, as Moſes had conducted out of it. Others place this Event in Trajan's Reign. As we read, that 'twas Alexander the Macedonian, that made this Execution, they are hard put to it, to ſalve the Contradiction: One aſſerts, that the Title Macedonian ought to be expunged; and another maintains it is not neceſſary, becauſe the General of Nero's Troops, who might alſo have commanded thoſe of Trajan or Adrian, was called Alexander, and was of Macedonia. But by Misfortune, the General, that made War upon the Jews, was not named Alexander, but Martius Turbo. So that this is a new Blunder, that they make here. Here follows another.

XXII. Voſſius has been cenſured for making R. Ganz [r] ſay, that Imrah, the Emperor Trajan's Daughter was ſo in Love with R. Joſhua, the Son of Chananiah; that to expreſs her Paſſion for him, ſhe ſometimes put on a ſordid Dreſs, and kept not Wine in Gold or Silver, but in Glaſſen Veſſels. 'Tis evident, that theſe laſt Words, are not far from Nonſence; the rather becauſe the Young Ladies at Rome ſeldom drank Wine. It would be better tranſlated, that Imrah upbraided Joſhua with containing a great deal of Wiſdom in a filthy Veſſel, becauſe he was commonly ill-dreſs'd and ugly; and that to juſtifie himſelf he anſwered, that Wine was kept in Earthen Pots, and not put in Veſſels of Gold or Silver. But ſtill it remains true, that this Chronologiſt makes Trajan the Father of a Daughter called Imrah, which he never had; that ſhe is made the Diſciple of a Jew to be inſtructed in the Law; and this Jew is made ſuch a Favourite of Trajan, as to procure Liberty from this Prince of building the Houſe of the Sanctuary, whereas Trajan was ſo far from favouring the Jews, that he was one of the greateſt Enemies of the Nation, and made continual War upon it.

XXIII. For indeed the Diſorder did not ſtop there. [s] The News came of new Inſurrections in Meſopotamia. The Fate of Egypt threw the Inhabitants of this Government into a Conſternation, who ſaw themſelves menaced with the ſame Misfortune: but Trajan ſent a Moor thither, called Luſius Quietus, the greateſt General the Empire then had, or has had ever ſince; who in Execution of his Commiſſion, withſtood the Seditious, and by killing a vaſt number of Jews, intimidated the reſt. Nevertheleſs, as his Preſence was thought neceſſary to retain 'em in their Duty, and there was reaſon to fear, they would take up Arms again the very Moment they ſaw the Conqueror's Backſide; the Emperor made him Governour of Paleſtine, to keep a ſtrict Eye upon their Motions.

XXIV. A new Storm aroſe in the Iſland of Cyprus. The Jews in this Iſland began with the Maſſacre of Two Hundred and Forty Thouſand Inhabitants. Their own Hiſtorians don't diſſemble this Action, but ſwell the Number of the dead inſtead of abating it; for they tell you, that the Noiſe of the Inſurrections elſewhere, arriving at [t] Gophri, that is to ſay Cyprus; the Jews, who were very numerous in this Country, fell upon all the Heathens, and made ſuch a general Maſſacre, that not one of 'em remained. "Which obliged "Trajan to ſend Adrian, the General of his Forces, "againſt 'em, who ſubdued 'em; and afterwards "the Romans Publiſhed an Edict, abſolutely pro- "hibiting the Jews Acceſs to this Iſland.

I know not why Criticks trouble their Heads with correcting theſe Hiſtorians. Sometimes they would have Egypt meant here, inſtead of the Iſland of Cyprus, and fancy this Conjecture to be well-grounded, becauſe 'tis but changing a Letter in the Word [u] Giphri. They tell you alſo, that we are to underſtand by it a Caſtle built by Herod the Great above Jericho, which was called Cyprus, in Memory of his Mother of that Name. People give themſelves all this Pain to bring forth theſe Conjectures only to give Career to their Fancy; for I ſee nothing more inſignificant. We know that the Jews were conſiderable in the Iſland of Cyprus long before Trajan's Time; from whence came St. Barnabas, the Companion of St. Paul's Travels. Beſides all the Heathen, Jewiſh and Chriſtian Hiſtorians agree about this Event. Dion, who was a Heathen, ſays in expreſs terms, that the Jews of Cyprus, having put Artemion at their head, kill'd Two Hundred and Forty Thouſand Inhabitants of this Iſland; for which reaſon, no Jew was ſuffer'd any more to enter there, and thoſe that were driven thither by Tempeſt were kill'd. We have already quoted the Jewiſh Hiſtorians, who ſay the ſame thing, tho' it be to the Infamy of their Nation. Laſtly Euſebius relates, that the Jews had ruined Salamis becauſe they had maſſacred all its Inhabitants. The Chriſtian Hiſtorian reduces the Maſſacre to the City Salamin; but this is impoſſible ſince they reckoned Two Hundred and Forty Thouſand of the Dead, beſides the Murderers, who muſt have made a greater Number, for this Multitude of Inhabitants muſt have been diſperſed all over the Iſland.

Some ſay, there was no need of ſending Forces to revenge the Maſſacre, becauſe thoſe who had eſcaped the Fury of the Aſſaſſins, took up Arms, and made a reciprocal Slaughter upon the Jews. But they muſt multiply the Number of the Heathen Iſlanders prodigiouſly to imagine they could form a new Army after ſo much Blood ſpilt. The Jews Account in bringing over Adrian with an Army, who kill'd the Murderers, and made a new Law againſt the Jews for the future is more probable; which rigorous Order being put in Execution, few Jews were found in after-times in the Iſland of Cyprus, of which they had been Maſters before. They ought not to complain of being cruelly treated, when they begun themſelves.

I. THIS was only a beginning of Sorrows, Adrian compleated their Destruction. This Prince reduced 'em to such a wretched Poverty, that they were obliged to get their Bread by interpreting Dreams, and telling Fortunes. Juvenal, who had known 'em at Rome and in Egypt, where he was sent [x] during his Disgrace, and who must have lived till the Twelfth Year of Adrian, represents them as practising the Art of Trembling Soothsayers, and begging Alms in the Streets.

We need no other Evidence, than that of the Emperor Adrian himself, why says, he saw not one Jew in Egypt, but what was a Mathematician; which Name at present so Honourable, for the happy and strange Discoveries, as well as for the Birth and Merit of those who apply to this Study, was at that time odious, because the Mathematicians were generally so many Fortune-tellers.

II. The Thalmudists [z] relate, that Adrian dilibetated about expelling them all out of the Empire. He advised with his Council, whether a Man was obliged to preserve all his Life a stinking and rotten part of his Body, or whether it was not more prudent to cut it off. The Jews were this tainted part he designed to dismember. A Counsellor of State answered, that the thing was impossible, because God had foretold, that he would disperse them to the four Winds; that is, that it was as impossible, the World should subsist without Jews, as the Wind should cease absolutely to blow; and that if he attempted to expel the Jews out of his Empire, he would be look'd upon as a Tyrant. The Prince enraged with this so free Advice, condemn'd the Author of it to Death. A Roman Lady, who saw him put into the Hands of the Executioner, cried out, Woe to the Ship that departs from the Harbour, without having its compleat Loading. Meaning, that this Privy Counsellor would have but a small Portion in the other Life, because tho' he had the Glory to die for the Jewish Nation, he was neither a Jew nor Circumcised. The Man surpriz'd, tore off his Præputium, declaring that he died a Jew, and made Akiba his Heir. The Thalmudists don't name the Emperor, who treated his Minister so severely; but since Akiba lived under Adrian, 'tis more natural to apply to him this Thalmudical Romance, than to any other. But Adrian resolv'd to treat the Jews ill, only because they rebell'd against him.

III. The cause of this Rebellion is differently related. They say, that 'twas the Custom in their Country to plant a Cedar at the Door of the Houses where a Son was Born, and to set a Pine Tree upon the Birth of a Daughter. These Trees grew till the time of Marriage, and then they cut 'em down, to make a Bed for the Married Couple. The Princess, Adrian's Daughter, travelling in Judæa, her Chariot broke, and her Officers had the insolence to cut down one of these Trees planted before a House, wherewith they mended the Chariot. But the Relations and Neighbours provoked by this Action, mutined, and Massacred the Princess's Retinue, who being enrag'd, oblig'd the Emperor to take Arms, and subdue so fierce a Nation. We see by this, that the Jews love to over-turn History, and to imagine Facts and Adventures, which are not to their Honour; for if a Rebellion, which had such fatal Consequences to a Nation, began upon so slight a Motive, they deserved a part of what befel 'em: Let us see what the Christians say of it.

IV. St. Chrysostome [a] asserts, that the Jews, who always resist the Holy Ghost, have thrice attempted to re-build the Temple, and that their first Effort to restore their Republick, was under Adrian; that they Rebelled against him, without reflecting that they made War against God, and that 'twas impossible to conquer the Almighty; that this Prince having subdued 'em, placed his Statue where Jerusalem was; and knowing that this Monument of his Victory would not last for ever, he ordered that the City should bear his Name, which was still observ'd, since in his time it was called Ælia. St. Chrysostome has treated this Event like an Orator, that pretends to no exactness; for if he believed that the Jews designed to restore their Temple under Adrian, he is deceived, since they made no motion towards it; and the first of the attempts ascrib'd to 'em is evidently false. The same must be said of the second, if he thought the Jews went to re-establish their Re- publick. 'Tis not even true, that they attempted to re-build Jeruſalem. Moreover, Ælia had been built before the Rebellion. Laſtly, Jeruſalem did not ſtill go by the Name of Adrian; for it was ſo called at the Council of Nice; but Conſtantine having built Temples in this City, and Chriſtianity being grown Triphant there, it reſum'd its ancient Name of Jeruſalem. Euſebius, who had called it Ælia in his Hiſtory, always ſtiles it Jeruſalem in the Life of Conſtantine, when he ſpeaks of the Edifices, that this Prince had rais'd there. Gregory Nazianzen gives it the ſame Name, and Cyrill ſubſcribed in the Council of Conſtantinople, as Biſhop of Jeruſalem.

V. There were three Cauſes of the great Rebellion under Adrian. 1. This Prince had forbidden 'em, like Domitian and Nerva, to be Circumcis'd. Spartian ſays it, and I know not how the expreſs Teſtimony of an Author, can be conteſted, who liv'd under Dioclesian. Modeſtinus obſerves alſo, that the Jews addreſſing themſelves to Antoninus, he permitted them to Circumciſe only their Children, and forbad doing it to any Perſon of another Religion under heavy Penalties. Laſtly, There is a Law [b] forbidding all the Roman Citizens to be Circumciſed like the Jews, or to cauſe their Slaves to be Circumcis'd upon pain of Baniſhment, and Death to the Phyſicians that ſhould do it. It alſo Baniſhes and Condemns ſometimes to Death the Jews that cut the Children of another Religion. Did the Jews attempt to Circumciſe Strangers, in order to increaſe their numbers, whereby to go on afterwards more effectually in the Reſtoration of their Commonwealth, as St. Chryſoſtome has ſaid? Some great Men have ſaid it [c] after him. But it is not probable they believed, that the Converted Roman Citizens, or their Slaves could make up a conſiderable Army to reſtore their State. The Roman Proſelytes were never ſo numerous to poſſeſs them with this Conceit. Theſe Edicts were given only to prevent any changes of Religion, which now and then happened at Rome, and ſcandaliz'd the Heathens. Beſides, Antoninus licenſed them to Circumciſe themſelves after his War with them. This Prince being weary of their Rebellion, and ſeeing, that the denying them this Sacrament exaſperated them, yielded ſomething to pacifie 'em: But they were not then in a condition of Proſelyting ſufficient numbers to form Armies, and reſtore their Commonwealth. Adrian [d], who had forbidden them Circumciſion, offended the Jews in one of the principal Acts of their Religion. 'Twas robbing 'em of the Seal of the Covenant; the Mark that diſtinguiſh'd 'em from Heathens, and the Grace of God, which they thought annexed to this Sacrament. And therefore 'tis no ſurprizing thing that they ſhould mutiny, when they found themſelves deprived of this Ceremony.

VI. This Prince alſo had ſent a Colony to Jeruſalem, and built a City upon its Ruins, to which he gave his own Name, and conſecrated it to Jupiter Capitolinus. This ſecond cauſe of the War is as much diſputed as the firſt, ſince Euſebius [e] ſays, that the Colony was not ſent to Jeruſalem, till after the taking of Bither. But Dion ſays, this Colony was the cauſe of the Rebellion, becauſe they could not bear to have Strangers come and live in their City, and worſhip ſtrange Gods there; ſo that we can't doubt of the Truth of the Fact. However, [f] to reconcile Euſebius and Dion, we will ſay, that the Emperor's firſt Deſign was croſs'd by the Jews Rebellion before it was fully executed, becauſe the Jews had expell'd the new Inhabitants; but the Emperor accompliſh'd it, when he had ſubdued them. So that he had ſent the Colony before the War, as Dion affirms, and he compleated his Project, when the Rebellion was quell'd, as Euſebius ſays.

Laſtly, Barchochebas's Ambition who knew how to make his advantage of the Diſturbance which theſe two Circumſtances created in the Minds of the People, fully determined the Nation to the War. But ſince we are beginning to ſpeak of the falſe Meſſiah's that have deceiv'd their Nation, 'tis not amiſs to take the matter a little higher.

VII. The time was come, in which the Impoſtors appear'd with full aſſurance. Gamaliel had ſeen two of 'em periſh, and he was ſo moved with the ill Succeſs of their Enterprize, that he would not have the progreſs of Chriſtianity oppoſed, being perſuaded that Providence would bring the Deſign to nought, if it was not from Heaven [g]: Theudas, ſaid he, before theſe Days roſe up, who was ſlain, and all as many as obeyed him were ſcatter'd and brought to nought. After this Man roſe up Judas of Galilee, in the days of the Taxing, and he alſo periſhed: And now I ſay unto you, if this Counſel be of Men it will come to nought. The Chriſtians have been ſo thankful for this moderate Advice, that they have Sainted him with his Son and Grandſon. Their Relicks are ſhewn at Piſa, and Travellers are admoniſhed to invoke them, with the hopes of being ſaved by their Merit.

St. Luke placing Theudas before Judas, has perplex'd the Interpreters, becauſe Joſephus has placed Judas [h] in the Tenth Year of our Lord, and made Theudas live a long time after. Euſebius [i] has followed Joſephus in ſpeaking of Theudas in Claudius's Reign. On which ſide can the Fault lay? Has Joſephus overſet the order of Events? How came Euſebius to follow him rather than St. Luke, whom he believed a Sacred Author? Has St. Luke erred after Gamaliel, in ſuppoſing this Jewiſh Doctor could not be ignorant of his own Hiſtory, and of an Event he had been an Eye-witneſs of? Valeſius, according to the Genius of Commentators, who think it their Duty to cover the Faults of the Hiſtorians they interpret, takes Euſebius's Part, and to ſhelter himſelf from St. Luke's Authority, he pretends this Sacred Hiſtorian began his Narration with the laſt of theſe Incendiaries, or elſe that he has inſerted into Gamaliel's Narrative the Example of Theudas, tho' it did not happen till Ten Years after this Council of the Jews was held. St. Luke added this Example to the other which Gamaliel had quoted alone, becauſe it made a Proof of the ſame Nature, juſt as Virgil does, who makes Æneas adviſed to enter into a Port, which was not known in his time.

Portus que require Velinos.

What was Valeſius's Head to parallel St. Luke with Virgil? A divinely inſpired Writer with a Poet, who did not ſcruple to mix Falſhood with Truth, to embeliſh his Narration? Virgil is not pardoned for makig Dido live at the ſame time with Æneas, or for ſpeaking of the Port de Piediluco, Portuſque Velinos, which was not as yet made, St. Luke could not, without incurring Cenſure, anticipate an Event Twelve or Fifteen Years, nor make Gamaliel quite an Example, which as yet had no Being; and an Action that arrived not till he was Dead. The Commentator, who only took this ſide to juſtifie Euſebius, might do it another way, by diſtinguiſhing two Theudas's, one whereof liv'd under Claudius, as he affirms, and the other had rebell'd before Judas of Galilee, as St. Luke ſays, after Gamaliel. 'Tis no ſtrange thing, there ſhould be in the ſame Age two Men of the ſame Name, that enterpriz'd the ſame thing. There were in thoſe times two Simon's both Co-temporary, and both Magicians; the one a Samaritan, and the other of the Iſle of Cyprus. St. Luke has ſpoken of the firſt, and Joſephus of the ſecond. The ſame thing may be ſaid of the two Theudas's, one of which preceded, and the other followed Judas.

two

VIII. The Romans ſent ſome Forces againſt Judas, and he miſerably periſh'd. Alexander, Fadus's Succeſſor, perſecuted his Children, and cauſed them to be Murder'd. His Followers maintain'd their Maſter's Doctrine with an unſhaken Conſtancy, in the midſt of the moſt cruel Tortures. They ſubſiſted even notwithſtanding the violence that was offer'd them after the taking of Jeruſalem in the Caſtle of Maſſada, where they were ſhut up; and the Fugitives carried this Doctrine into Egypt, where it occaſioned new Maſſacres.

IX. Origin has alſo placed Simon Magus, and Doſitheus in the liſt of falſe Meſſiahs. Theſe two Men were Samaritans: Doſitheus was the Maſter, and Simon the Diſciple. The firſt, if we believe Origen, poſitively ſaid, that he was the Meſſiah ſignified by the Prophets, and the better to fill the Character, his Diſciples maintain'd, that he was raiſed from the Dead; and that if he did not appear to the Eyes of the World, 'twas becauſe he was to lie conceal'd for ſome Years in a Cave.

Simon aſſerted, that he was the great Power of God, who had given the Law upon Sinai, who had aſſum'd the Appearances and Figure of the Son under Tiberius's Reign, and who afterwards deſcended upon the Heads of the Apoſtles in fiery Tongues. It muſt be confeſs'd, that Simon pretended to be the Meſſiah, only in an indirect manner; but as he was the Head of a Sect, and there are great Chronological Difficulties about the time when Doſitheus liv'd, we'll ſpeak more at large of 'em in another place.

X. The firſt, or at leaſt he that made the greateſt Figure in Perſonating the Meſſiah, was Coziba or Barchochebas. He was a Robber, like the reſt, who hop'd to inrich himſelf with Plunder, and acquire ſome Authority in his Nation by his Out-rages againſt the Romans. 'Tis pretended that there were two Impoſtors of this Name, the Grandfather and Grandſon; and their Hiſtory is thus related by the Jews. Coziba I. was Elected King by the Jews, two Years after the ruin of the firſt Temple, and died at Bither, a City in the Neighbourhood of Jeruſalem, which was the Capital of his Empire. His Son the Red ſucceeded him; and afterwards reign'd his Grandſon Romulus, who was called Coziba. The Jews aſſembled about him, acknowledged him for the Meſſiah. The Emperor Adrian having notice of it, came with a numerous Army, took Bither, and deſtroy'd a multitude of Jews in the Seventy Third Year of the ruin of the Temple [k]. Hence it is concluded, that the Reign of the Three Cozibas's laſted One and Twenty Years. Some [l] are obliged to extend it much farther, ſince they make the firſt Coziba Reign under Domitian. The ancient Chronicle of the Jews on the Contrary, aſſigns but two Years and a half to Cozibas's Reign. But it only ſpeaks of the Grandſon, who was kill'd by his own People in the City of Bither, becauſe he had not the Character of the Meſſiah, which was to know a Man to be guilty by the Smell; and we read the ſame thing in the Thalmud [m].

XI. Here are as many Blunders as Words, and 'tis ſtrange that ingenious Chriſtian Criticks [n] have attempted to defend ſo ill-contriv'd a Narration. 1. 'Tis abſurdly ſuppoſed, there have been two Coziba's or Barchochebas's. Moſt of the Jews acknowledge but one, and they are in the right. 2. He that induced the Jews to Rebellion towards the end of Trajan's Reign, was not call'd Barchochebas but Andrew. Neither [o] did he call himſelf the Meſſiah, and this Rebellion was in Egypt, whereas that of Barchochebas happen'd in Judæa. 3. They have not known Trajan's Genealogy, ſince they ſay, that he ſent Adrian his Siſter's Son, againſt the Jews in Egypt; for Ulpia Adrian's Grandmother, was Trajan's Aunt, and theſe two Princes were only Couſins. 4. They are miſtaken in making the War with Coziba laſt ſo long, and giving him and his Heirs and Succeſſors a Reign of One and Twenty Years; for his Race ended with him, and the War was terminated in a little time, as we ſhall ſee in the Sequel. 5. They make him periſh in the Seventy Third Year of the ruin of the Temple. Adrian was alread dead, in the Year 141, and the City Bither, by which the War was concluded, had been taken in the Eighteenth of Adrian. This Chronological Error ſuffices to ſhew the vanity of the reſt. The Author of the Chronicle of the Jews is more exact than his Commentators; for he makes Coziba to Reign but two Years and a half, and ſpeaks but of one Impoſtor. 6. Laſtly, They tell us a Fable, which perfectly ſavours of the Rabbinical Spirit, in pretending that they tried Coziba by making him ſmell out the guilty, and that they judged of his Character of Meſſiah by his Smell. We muſt therefore acknowledge but one Coziba, who took the Title of Barchochebas, lived in Adrian's Reign, and was the Source of infinite Miſchiefs to this Nation.

XII. This Man having undertaken to perſuade the Jews, that he was the Meſſiah, did three things that facilitated the ſucceſs of his Enterprize. 1. He changed his Name, and took that of the Son of the Star or Barchochebas, in order to have it believed, that he was the Star that Balaam had ſeen afar off. He maintained, that he was one of the Stars of Heaven ſent to ſuccour the People, and retrieve 'em from the Oppreſſion under which they groan'd. 2. 'Twas perhaps to confirm this Notion, that he caſt out Fire and Flame from his Mouth when he ſpoke. At leaſt St. Jerome has ſaid, that he had Art of deceiving the People by means of ſome lighted Tow, by which he ſeems to vomit Fire. 3. He made choice of a Fore-runner of the ſame Character with himſelf, who was very aſſiſtant to him in theſe Deſigns.

XIII. This Man [p] was Akiba, when they make to deſcend from Siſera General of the Army of Jabin, King of Tyre, and from a Jewiſh Mother. He had ſpent forty Years upon the Plains, in looking to the Flocks of a rich Citizen at Jeruſalem, call'd Calba Chuva. His Maſters [q] Daughter being in Love with him, and unwilling to marry a Shepherd, adviſed him to apply himſelf to Study. They made a Clandeſtine Marriage, after which Akiba went and ſpent Twelve Years in the Academy, and brought back with him Twelve Thouſand Scholars. His Wife adviſed him to return again. He continued ſtill twelve Years more, and brought with him Twenty four Thouſand Diſciples. His Wife came to meet him with her Cloaths rent, becauſe her Father provoked with her Marriage, had diſinherited her, but no ſooner had he ſeen Akiba, but he fell at his Feet, revok'd his Oath, and gave him a great part of his Eſtate.

We are not told where this Academy was ſeated, from whence Akiba brought this prodigious and ſurprizing number of Diſciples; but 'tis a greater Aſtoniſhment to find theſe Twenty Four Thouſand Diſciples, died all betwixt the Paſſover and Pentecoſt, becauſe they had not reſpected one another, and were all buried near Tiberas, at the Foot of a hill, with Akiba, and his firſt Wife [r]. He continued teaching and writing Books, one whereof [s] is Cabbaliſtical, and is called Jetſirah [t]; but it muſt be diſtinguiſhed from that which is aſcribed to the Patriarch Abraham, and bears the ſame Name. He was ſo Learned, as to give an Account of the leaſt Letter of the Law; and 'tis boldly ſaid, that God revealed to him what he had concealed from Moſes. We find in the Miſnah and the Thalmud a Thouſand Sentences aſcribed to him, and which are look'd upon, as ſo many Judicious Deciſions. God had permitted him to enter Paradiſe, as well as Doctor Aſai, to whom he was to marry his Siſter, An entire Volume would not contain the remarkable things he has ſaid and done. Theſe are the Commendations they give this Doctor, who cauſed the Deſolation of his Country, and ſupported the Fraud of an Impoſtor, who call'd himſelf the Meſſiah.

XIV. Lightfoot [x] makes him a Preſident of the Sanhedrim, whilſt this Supreme Council reſided ſtill at Japhne Iſle, pretends, that he began his Authority in the Second Year of Domitian, after Jochanan's Death, whom he ſucceeded; and that he held this Dignity for Forty Years, till the Ruin of Bither, and his Death. We muſt not oppoſe againſt Lightfoot, what we have already ſaid of the Tranſlation of the Sanhedrim to Japhne, which is all Fancy; but the Doctors he follows are miſtaken, ſince they make Akiba die in the fifty-ſecond, or fifty-fifth Year after the Ruin of the Temple, which fell upon the hundred twenty-fifth Year of the Chriſtian Æra. Bither was not taken till 138. ſo that Akiba's Life muſt be lengthen'd to the Age of 133 Years, to reconcile theſe Chronological Calculations. No great Weight therefore can be laid upon what the Jews relate concerning the Birth and Death of Akiba, ſince they are ſo perfectly ignorant of the time.

XV. Barchochebas appearing at the time that Akiba's Fame was at the height, and that he was head of the Sanhedrim, this Doctor cry'd out, Behold the Star that was to come out of Jacob, and made himſelf his Squire, or rather his Fore-runner, as John Baptiſt had been of Jeſus Chriſt. Theſe two Men ſtruck in with the Prejudice of the People, who were for a conquering Meſſiah, who ſhould deliver 'em from the Roman Yoke, which the laſt War, and Adrian's Perſecution daily made more inſupportable. Barchochebas, who found People diſpoſed to follow him, muſter'd up an Army of two hundred thouſand Men, whoſe Strength and Courage they heighten by ſaying there was not one of 'em but could pluck up a Cedar of Libanus, as they run on Horſe-back. Bither was choſen for his Reſidence, and Capital of his Kingdom. The Jews call it the Houſe of Spies, ביתר Bethtar, becauſe after the ruin of Jeruſalem, Centinels were placed there to ſpie thoſe that went to Jeruſalem, who were accuſed of courting the Romans Favour, and deſiring Offices, or of ſelling their Eſtates, of which they ſtripp'd 'em, by virtue of theſe Calumnies. They even ſometimes impeached 'em to the Romans under other Pretences. Euſebius places this City in the Neighbourhood of Jeruſalem; but there were two Cities of this Name, one twelve, and the other fifty-two Miles diſtant from the Holy City.

St. Jerom has called theſe two Cities Bethoron, and maintains they were built by Solomon, and ruined by the War. Bethoron was given by Pharaoh for a Portion to his Daughter, when ſhe Married Solomon, who reſtored it to the Levites, in whoſe Partition it lay. But if we believe the Jetes, this is not the true Bither, ſince one ſignifies a Houſe of Spies, and the other a Houſe of Liberty. Barchochebas choſe this Place to receive the Royal Unction, and afterwards cauſed Money to be Coined, declaring himſelf at the ſame time the Meſſiah and Prince of the Nation. He waited to declare War, when the Emperor Adrian had left Egypt; but it burſt out in the Year One hundred thirty-four, in the Seventeenth of Adrian's Reign. This is what we are to prove, ſince the World is not agreed upon it.

XVI. St. Jerom [y] has ſpoke very variouſly of the time when the War began. He relates the Opinion of the Jews of his Time, who thus calculated Daniel's Weeks. Sixty-nine of theſe Weeks were paſs'd when Veſpaſian reduced Judæa, to a ſevere Extremity. Seven Weeks, that is forty-nine Years after this Prince appeared Adrian, who built Ælia, upon the Ruins of Jeruſalem, defeated the Jews by Tinnius Rufus, and then the Sacrifice ceaſed. There is a Tenth Week, which ought to be divided betwixt theſe two Princes; for Veſpaſian's War laſted three Years and an half, and Adrian's as long. Thus the Prophet's Seventy Weeks were accompliſhed. St. Jerom judiciouſly obſerves, that there were from the time of the Prophecy till Adrian, Ninety-nine Weeks and an half, and Six hundred and Ninety-ſix Years. So that the Calculation of the Jews is not exact. Beſides if we reckon the Seven Weeks from the Death of Veſpaſian, which happened in the Seventy-ninth Year, the War of the Jews under Adrian muſt have commenced in the Hundred twenty-ſeventh Year of our Lord; and if they begin it after the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem, the Error will be ſtill more manifeſt, ſince the Ruin of the Jews would have happen'd in the Year One hundred and nineteen, and we ſhall ſee that, that is impoſſible.

XVII. However St. Jerom [z] has followed this Account; for he ſays that in the Year 119 Adrian conquered the Jews who had rebell'd againſt him a ſecond time. But not to examine how this can be reckoned the ſecond Rebellion, ſince they had already revolted twice under Veſpaſian and Trajan; nor to determine whether Scaliger had reaſon to ſay, that he calls it a ſecond War in oppoſition to that of Veſpaſian, which was the firſt, ſince a freſher had been ſeen under Trajan. St. Jerom is not conſiſtent with himſelf; for he ſays in the Sequel "that the "Jews rebelled in the Year One hundred thirty-"three, and that Adrian ſent Troops to Tinnius "Rufus, Governour of the Province, to ſuppreſs "them. Cochebas appeared the Year following, and "laſtly [a] in the Year 135 the War concluded with "the abſolute Deſtruction of the Jews, who were "denied ſo much as the Liberty of going to Jeru-"ſalem." Here you have Opinions quite different. Scaliger endeavours to ſoften 'em by ſaying, there was a Commotion in the Year One hundred nineteen, and a more open War Fourteen Years after; but he hazards his Conjecture without any Authority. We muſt therefore ſeek for another Foundation to fix an Event that accompliſhed the ruin of Judæa.

XVIII. Dion

XVIII. Dion asserts, that Adrian having sent a Colony to Jerusalem, and placed a Statue of Jupiter where the Temple of God stood, this foreign Worship violently affected the Jews. "However [b] Adrian's "Presence, who was then in Egypt, and who went "from thence to Syria, stopp'd 'em for some time. "They contented themselves during this time with "making bad Arms, and selling 'em to the Romans, "that they might not employ them against them-"selves; but they revolted, when the Emperor was "gone." We must therefore know at what time Adrian went into Egypt and Syria to know the time of the War. Pagi affirms, that the Emperor made this Voyage in the Year One hundred twenty-eight, and he makes this Conjecture from the great Number of Medals that the Cities of Syria and Egypt then struck in Honour of this Prince. It can't be denied, that this Conjecture has some Probability; for 'tis likely that the Emperor's Presence excited the Peoples Liberality. However it can't be certainly concluded, that the thing was so. We have even a Proof to the contrary, since Adrian was still at Rome the Year following.

XIX. Phlegon, Adrian's Secretary, has preserved a Letter of his Master address'd to Servian the Consul. He gives him an Account of what he had seen in Egypt, and of the turbulent Inclination of its Inhabitants, and makes him a Present of some [c] Vessels which he had designed for him and his Sister; which he desires him to make use of at Meals; and 'tis easier to know the time of the Jewish War from this Letter, than from the Medals of the Cities of Syria; for it must have been written, when the Emperor left Egypt or Syria. Servian, to whom this Letter was written was his Brother in Law, since he made him a Present in common to his Sister and himself. This Servian is call'd Consul, which Dignity he had not under Adrian till 134. We must conclude then that the Emperor left not Egypt and Syria till the Beginning of that Year, and that his Absence the same Year gave a Handle to the Jews Rebellion. Another Heathen Historian quoted by Eusebius, asserts, that the War was in its whole Vigour; that Bither, which the Rebels had fortified, was taken [d] the Tenth of August, in the Eighteenth Year of Adrian. The War therefore began the preceding Year, since it was in its Vigour, and near its Conclusion. The Emperor gave his Name to the City he had built upon the Ruins of Jerusalem in the Year 136, in which he celebrated his Vicenalia. So that the War began in the Year 134, and ended two Years after. Lastly Buonarotti [e] produces a Medal struck by this Prince in the Eighteenth Year of his Reign, for having obtained a great Victory over the Rebels, and driven the Jews from Jerusalem. To this nothing can be objected, but the Authority of the Jews quoted by St. Jerom, who say the War lasted three Years and an half. But is it not plain that they have made this Calculation only to accomodate the Event to their false Interpretation of Daniel's Prophecy? Being obliged to divide a Week of Years betwixt Vespasian and Adrian, they have given three Years and an half to each of these Princes for their making War, and are not concern'd whether the thing be true or not. They have committed a more manifest Blunder in reckoning but 490 Years from the Captivity to the Destruction of the Temple.

XX. The Romans despised the Beginnings of this Rebellion, and were persuaded doubtless, that the Jews weaken'd by Trajan's Wars, the Remembrance whereof was hardly worn out, would difficultly support their Temerity. But when they saw the Numbers of the Seditious encrease, and that they fought with a Valour, that seem'd rais'd upon Despair, that all the Robbers of the Neighbouring Provinces join'd them in hopes of Plunder; and that not only Judæa, but all the World was in Motion [f], they were obliged to change their Measures. Some fancy that the Emperor march'd in Person against the Rebels, because they observe, that this Prince writing to the Senate, had not ventur'd to preface his Letters, with the ordinary Form; If you and your children are in good health, I am glad, I and my Army are in a good condition: because of the great Losses he had sustain'd in this War. Whereas Adrian only made War by his Generals. An Historian [g] says it in express terms. To imagine two Wars under Adrian, one managed by himself, and the other by his Generals, is allowing too much to Conjectures void of Proof. The Emperor therefore was in some Neigbouring Province, from whence he gave orders, and wrote to the Senate. Besides they attribute to him a View which he could not have; for 'tis not the Character of a General publickly to profess his Losses, especially after having conquered the Rebels, punished their Leaders, and taken their Strong Holds.

XXI. Barchochebas, who was superiour in Troops, at first committed great Disorders. Justin Martyr complain'd that he only attack'd and massacred the Christians, because they would not abjure their Religion. The Thalmudists don't deny, that Barchochebas obliged a great many Persons to be circumcised a second time, and to return to their deserted Judaism. His Hatred against these Deserters of his Religion, and Despair of making the Christians embark in his violent Measures, who had the same Interest as himself to declare against the Romans, might redouble his Cruelty. But can it be imagined that the Heathens against whom he declared War, and the Colony which Adrian had begun to send to Jerusalem were more humanely treated by this Usurper than the Christians? This Impostor only favoured his own Nation, and treated with the utmost Barbarity all others that fell into his hands. The Jewish Historian [h] has been guilty of a more manifest Error than Justin, in accusing Barchochebas of a horrible Massacre at Alexandria, in Egypt, and the Island of Cyprus, till Trajan sent Adrian thither. He has confounded two Events; one that happened in Trajan's Reign with Barchochebas's Insurrection against Adrian.

XXII. Tinnius Rufus, who had sometime before been the Emperor's Lieutenant in Syria, was there in Judæa. 'Tis said [i] that Akiba enter'd into a Conference with him, and his Wife also came to visit the Doctor, and attempted to raise in him an impure Passion: but as he saw her, he spat, he laugh'd, he wept. [k] He spat, because he remember'd, that she proceeded from a drop of impure Water; he laugh'd, because she foresaw he would turn Jewess, and he should marry her: Lastly he wept, because so great a Beauty must decay. He went afterwards to convert Rufus, by proving to him the Observation of the Sabbath, because the Smoke proceeded not that day from his Father's Tomb: but Turnus Rufus sent him back again. As it would be surprizing, that Akiba, who was then a Hundred and nineteen Years old, should think of marrying the Roman General's Wife; the Interpreters say that he had this Conference with Turnus Rufus, when he drew the Plough over the Ruins of the Temple, because Akiba was then but forty-seven Years old. The Fact to me ſeems ſo fabulous, that 'tis needleſs to examine, at what time it happen'd. Beſides, tho' they all agree to ſpeak of Tyrannus Rufus as a [l] wicked Man, who ſpoke publickly againſt the Law, and who was often convinced by Akiba; yet they give ſuch different and uncertain Characters to know him by, that the great Scaliger thought they ſpoke of Veſpaſian.

XXIII. We find by Euſebius and Syncellus, who has copied him, that the General, who commanded the Army in Judæa againſt Barchochebas, was call'd Tinnius Rufus. Adrian, who was not acquainted with the whole importance of the War, ſent him at firſt a great Reinforcement, but this General being often beaten, he ſent for Julius Severus, one of the greateſt Captains of his Age, from England. This able Commander durſt not give Battle to the over-numerous Jews; but he attack'd 'em in Parties, he ſtraitned 'em in their Camp, he cut off their Proviſions, and by that means growing ſuperior, he laid Siege to Bither, which they made their retreat.

XXIV. The Rabbins ſay, that there were in that City four Hundred Colleges, in each College four Hundred Profeſſors, and that each Profeſſor had four Hundred Scholars, who being muſter'd up, made a great Army. They ſuſtain'd the firſt Efforts of the Siege, tho' they were only arm'd with Pencils which they uſed to write with. [m] Barchochebas encourag'd all his Subjects, and Executed Tryphon a famous Rabbin, who talk'd of ſurrendring. Nevertheleſs the City was taken, and Barchochebas was kill'd. Adrian, to whom they had brought his Head, was deſirous to ſee his Body, but when they attempted to carry it, they found a Serpent about his Neck, which frighted the Bearers, and the Prince acknowledged that God alone could kill that Man. However, they have ſince own'd the Impoſture of this Man, whom they have afterwards call'd the Son of a Lye. The Scholars, who had ſo well defended the Place, were bound with their Books and thrown into the Fire. They add, that the ſlaughter was ſo great, that more People died in this War, than came out of Egypt. Upon one ſingle Stone, were found the Skulls of Three Hundred Children. The Torrents of Blood were ſo great, as to roll Stones of four Pound weight to the Sea, which was four Miles diſtant. Laſtly, The Inhabitants of theſe Places did not dung their Ground for ſeven Years together, being ſufficiently fatned by the Carkaſſes. And therefore they have inſerted in their Liturgy a Hymn appointed for the Faſt celebrated the eighteenth of the Month of Ab, which anſwers to the Month of July and Auguſt, in which they call Adrian a ſecond Nebuchadnezar, and pray God to remember this cruel Prince, who deſtroy'd 480 Synagogues.

XXV. Akiba was taken with his Son Pappus, whom ſome Chriſtians ridiculouſly Marry with the Sinner Mary Magdalene. They ſay, that Akiba was ſo Religious in his Priſon, that he waſhed with the Water that was given him to drink, chooſing rather to die with Thirſt, than not to waſh. But I queſtion whether he was left long enough in Priſon to run that hazard. Adrian cauſed his Skin to be torn off with an Iron Comb, and with him the honour of the Law vaniſh'd [n].

I know not how Lightfoot, who was ſo well vers'd in theſe Matters could ſay [o], that Akiba was the only conſiderable Perſon that periſhed in this Maſſacre; for ſince he generally implicitely followed the Jewiſh Hiſtorians, he ſhould have reckon'd in that Liſt of Martyrs Iſchbab one of the Scribes, who was kill'd at the Hour of Prayer [p]; his Carkaſs remained unburied, expoſed to the Dogs and wild Beaſts. Nor ſhould he have forgot Ananias or Chanina, the Son of Thardion, who was condemned to be Burnt, and the Book of the Law was caſt into the Pile and burnt with him, becauſe he had dar'd to read and explain it in contradiction to the Emperor. And therefore they celebrate his Feaſts the 27 of Sivan. Juda the Son of Bava [q], upheld the tottering Sanhedrim; for the Emperor had prohibited the Creation of new Senators, and the Senate was like to be ruin'd by it; but he plac'd himſelf betwixt the two Cities Uſcia and Sciaphara, where the Sanhedrim had been ſometimes Tranſlated, and there he gave Impoſition of Hands to five Doctors, one of which was the great Meir; and by this means, notwithſtanding the Emperor's Severity, the vacancies of the Sanhedrim were fill'd up. The Doctors he had laid his Hands upon fled; but Juda ſtirr'd no more than a Stone, he ſteadily waited the Soldiers, who pierc'd him three Hundred times with Lances, and left his Body like a Sieve. They [r] reckon farther in the Catalogue of Martyrs at that time, the Son of Suma, who was an admirable Man; for he was one of thoſe to whom God had opened Paradiſe. He [s] ſaw once Thouſands of Spirits upon the Mountain where the Temple had been built; and, inſtead of being frighten'd, he cried, Bleſſed be God, who has created all theſe Spirits to ſerve me. Others poſtpone his Martyrdom ſome Years; becauſe they ſay he was Preceptor to Juda the Saint, who came into the World the ſame day, that Akiba went out of it; for one Sun roſe when another ſet. Laſtly, [t] The R. Joſes Setham, ſo famous in the Miſnah, was baniſhed by Adrian to Tſippori, tho' he had not meddled in the Rebellion, and his only Crime was his being ſilent, whilſt the Romans were praiſed; which denotes a great ſeverity.

XXVI. Indeed Dion repreſents this War, as one of the cruelleſt that ever was. The Romans were frequently beaten, and loſt abundance of good Troops. The Jews, who had at that time a profound Veneration for Solomon's Tomb, ſaw it fall, and at once the wild Beaſts enter'd Jeruſalem, which was an Omen of the following Slaughter. The Preſage was not inſignificant; for [u] Five Hundred and Eighty Thouſand Perſons were killed in the Battles, and the numbers that periſhed by Famine, Miſery, or Fire, can't be reckon'd. After the taking of Bither, the Jews had ſtill Fifty fortify'd Caſtles, and Troops to defend 'em. It ſeems alſo from a Medal that the Emperor ſtruck the Year following, that he had obtain'd a Victory over 'em that Year; but in reality the reſiſtance was not long, and the Leaders being taken off, the reſt more eaſily ſubmitted.

XXVII. Adrian finiſhed the Building of Ælia, and the Jews of St. Jerom's time ridiculouſly aſcribe this Work to Ælius Titus their Deſtroyer. St. Epiphanius [x] ſays, that he gave Aquila his Brother-in-Law the care of theſe Buildings. But this Proſelyte, who turned Jew, after he had embraced Chriſtianity, had no Conſanguinity with this Prince; nor do we find, that he was intruſted with the Inſpection of theſe Buildings. The Circumference of the new City was ſomewhat different from the old; ſeveral Places being included in it, that were formerly without the Gates; but in the main they made uſe of the Foundations of the firſt City. Valeſius denies it, and for a reaſon alledges, that Adrian would be far from Re-building a City implacable to the Romans; and favouring the Jews, who had brought upon him ſuch a wretched War. But this Prince did not do it in favour to the Jews, he gave it to other Inhabitants. And therefore Hiſtorians obſerve, that they began to ſettle a Biſhop there, who came of Heathen Race: The Deſign was to mortifie the old Inhabitants, by excluding them for ever from their Primitive Habitation.

XXVIII. The Truth is, Adrian prohibited their return for ever; and to make the City odious, if it were poſſible, he changed the uſe of the remaining Monuments of old Jeruſalem; for he employ'd the Stones that had been uſed in the building of the Temple to make a Theatre, and he erected Statues of falſe Gods in the Places, where the Temple ſtood, or Jeſus Chriſt had been Crucified and Buried. This laſt particular related to the Chriſtians more than the Jews. Laſtly, St. Jerome ſays [y], that he cauſed the Image of a Hog to be placed over the Gate that led to Bethlehem, to ſhew that the Jews were ſubject to the Power of the Romans: But he is miſtaken; the Swine was not placed there to indicate the Jews Slavery, but to make 'em abhor entring into Jeruſalem, becauſe they hated this Animal, the uſe of which was forbidden by the Law, and they thought the Gate was defiled and profan'd by this Figure.

Adrian more effectually to evacuate the City of its old Inhabitants, cauſed a great part of 'em to be ſold at the Fair of Terebinth. Hegeſippus ſays, that the Terebinth was a Tree, that had continued from the Creation of the World, under which they met to Traffick: But 'was the place where Abraham had pitch'd his Tent, and receiv'd the Angels, which made it Venerable. The Jews were expoſed to Sale there at the price of Horſes; and thoſe that could not be ſold were carried to another Fair, which was kept at Gaza. In St. Jerome's time, they applied to this Miſery, theſe words; A cry was heard in Ramah, Rachel weeping for her Children; becauſe their Miſery and Affliction were exceſſive. This Father alſo applied to the Miſeries that happen'd under Adrian this Prophecy of Zachariah [z], I will feed the Flock of ſlaughter; becauſe that he had learnt from the Tradition and ancient Hiſtory of the Jews, that this Prince had put a great number to Death without being puniſh'd by God, and that afterwards he ſold them at Terebinth, or carried 'em into Egypt. This Father acquaints us with three things; 1. That he had read the Traditions and Hiſtory of the Jews concering their Calamities; and therefore there muſt have been ſuch at that time. 2. That Terebinth Fair ſtill continued; but that the Jews were aſham'd to be preſent at it, becauſe they remember'd the uſage of their Fathers. He adds in another place, [a] that the Jews aſſembled, and came in his time to buy of the Soldiers the Liberty of ſeeing Jeruſalem. They could not weep without paying for it; and thoſe who had bought the Blood of our Saviour, purchaſed their very Tears. The Women and Old Men, loaden with Tatters and Years, were ſeen with Tears in their Eyes to repair to the Mount of Olives, and bewail the Deſtruction of the Temple. The Soldiers made a long advantage of the Jews Veneration for the Rubbiſh of the Holy City, and of Adrian's ſeverity of forbidding their Entrance for ever; for they ſold 'em at a dear rate, the ſight of this Place, and the liberty of ſtrewing Perfumes upon a Stone there. Laſtly, St. Jerome aſſures us, that Adrian convey'd part of theſe Priſoners to Egypt, where their number was conſiderably augmented.

XXIX. It muſt however be obſerv'd, that this Father has over-ſtrain'd Adrian's Edict; he affirms, that this Prince baniſh'd the Jews all Judæa for ever, and he grounds upon Tertullian's Authority, who had ſaid the ſame thing before him. 'Tis eaſie to conceive, that very few remain'd after a loſs of ſix or ſeven Hundred Thouſand Men, who had been deſtroy'd by War and Famine; but nevertheleſs ſome ſtill remain'd in the Country, tho' Poor and Miſerable. 'Tis ſtrange that St. Jerome ſhould be ignorant or forgetful of the Patriarchs of the Jews, that reſided in this Country, or of the Schools of Tiberias which grew ſo famous, or laſtly, of the Doctors, that Origen had ſeen and conſulted in Judæa. People ſometimes ſay things without conſidering, and thus Athanaſius declared, That by a juſt Judgment of God Jeruſalem was no more.

XXX. Adrian having ſucceſsfully concluded the War in Judæa, ſtamp'd another Medal, on which was ſeen a Woman holding two naked Children, and Sacrificing upon an Altar with theſe words:

ADVENTUS AUG. JUDÆÆ.
The arrival of the Emperor in Judæa.

Triſtan [b] thought, that the Woman who Sacrifices, repreſents this ſubdued Province, which conſents to become Heathen, and to Sacrifice to the falſe Gods; and that ſhe brings to the Altar two naked Children, to ſhew, that ſhe renounced Circumciſion. 'Tis too ſubtile to find the want of Circumciſion in theſe naked Children. The Emperor meant rather to ſignifie by the Altar and the Sacrifice, that the old Religion was aboliſhed in this Province, which he had Colonied with new Inhabitants. We ſee another Medal [c] of this ſame Prince, where JUDÆA is repreſented as a Woman on her Knees, giving her Hand to the Emperor, and Three Children imploring Mercy. One of theſe Children is naked. Will it be ſaid, that the deſign of it was to ſhew his not being Circumciſed? The Medaliſt's intention was to impreſs a Monument, repreſenting the Submiſſion and deſperate Miſery of Judæa, after Barchochebas's defeat.

XXXI. Thoſe that dwelt in the Eaſt were much more fortunate. Trajan had carried the War againſt 'em as far as Meſopotamia. But Adrian upon his Acceſſion to the Throne, having prefer'd 'em Inglorious Peace to a doubtful War, conſented that the Euphrates ſhould be made the Boundary of the Roman Empire. So that the Jews of this Country, had no ſhare in this Princes War againſt their Nation. Dion inſinuates the Contrary; for he ſays, that the Jews roſe in all Parts to do miſchief to the Romans, and that all the Earth was in motion.

'Tis true, the Confederacy was form'd of three ſorts of Perſons. Some Inhabitants of the Neighbouring Provinces animated with the hopes of Plunder, and the firſt advantagious Succeſſes, join'd their ancient Enemies, to fight the Romans. Many Jews of other Provinces of the Empire, who ſtill breathed after their Liberty, and ſought an opportunity of recovering it, laid hold on this. Perhaps too, ſome came from the remoteſt Parts, and from beyond Euphrates to the ſuccour of their Brethren, and therefore the number of the Dead amounted to above ſix Hundred Thouſand, which number could not have been found in Judæa alone, after what it had ſuffer'd under Trajan. Nevertheleſs it can't be ſaid, that Adrian himſelf carried the War into the Eaſt, and paſs'd the Euphrates; for he went into his retreat of Tivoly, where he render'd himſelf compleatly odious, by the exerciſe of his Cruelties.

XXXIII. Some Criticks affirm, that this Prince added a new degree of Miſery to the Jews, by impoſing on them a Tribute for the Liberty of reading the Bible in Hebrew, and that this Tribute was ſtill paid in Tertullian's time, whoſe Authority they go upon; for he ſays in his Apology, [d] That the Jews every Saturday purchaſed the liberty of reading publickly by a Tax they paid. They say that the Jews, that had highly esteem'd the Septuagint Version, began to abhor it, when they perceiv'd it was more favourable to the Christians than the Hebrew. But Adrian commanded 'em only to use this Version; so that they were forced to pay Money to read the Hebrew in the Synagogues on the Sabbath.

XXXIII. Criticks are commonly bold in framing imaginary Systems. 'Tis true, the Christians found the Septuagint the more advantageous to 'em, because there were few that understood Hebrew, whereas the Greek Tongue was spread over all the Empire, and this made it odious to the Jews. The same motive induced 'em in Justinian's Reign to prosecute those, who read this Version in their Synagogues; and 'tis easily conceived, that this Prince, who was concern'd to countenance the Progress of Christianity, maintain'd the Privileges of those that read the Scripture in Greek. But 'tis not conceivable that Adrian had any such Motive: It was equally indifferent to him, whether they read the Greek or Hebrew in their Synagogues or Houses. On the contrary the latter Language being barbarous to most of the Latins and Greeks of the Empire made Judaism the less dangerous. Besides this Impost levied by Adrian upon the Jews has never been spoken of. Whereas it must have been much better known, if it had been paid from the beginning of the Second Century, to Tertullian's time. But Tertullian neither speaks of Adrian, nor of the reading of the Bible in Hebrew rather than in Greek; he only signifies the Liberty of Conscience, and the publick exercise of Religion, which was bought by some Tribute. Tertullian designed to prove the Scripture to be ancient, and having shewn that Menedemus and Aristæas testifie it, he adds a Proof from publick Custom; for the Jews still read it publickly, and they have every Sabbath made use of the liberty they have obtained by a Tax. This Tax is rather, that of the Didrachms, which the Emperors still exacted in Origen and Tertullian's time. This Reflection accords with the History of the Jews; for they say, that Judas the Son of Sciammia, Meir's Disciple caused the Emperor's Edict to be abridg'd, who forbad Sacrificing on the Sabbath, reading the Law, and Circumcising Children. [c] The Jews weeping and crying before the Gate of a Roman Lady; We are the Children of one and the same Father by Isaac, and of one and the same Mother by Rebecca, why do you use us so severely? Obtained their Desires.

I. WE are told, that Akiba left a great many Disciples, who all distinguished themselves by their Learning and Virtue. The Moderns, who are infatuated with them, make the Glory of their Nation depend on 'em. And therefore they preserve their Names, and all that the Tradition of the Thalmudists has brought down to them.

Juda, the Son of Elai, [f] never sinned in his whole Life. Hence it is, that when any good Action is spoken of without naming the Author, they Father it upon him. He was reckoned in his Nation the Prince of Orators. He obtained the Favour of the Romans by praising them for Adorning publick Places, and restoring the Bridges and Baths. Simeon Dochaides, who could not bear these Encomiums, cried to him: "The Romans adorn publick Places to entertain Prostitutes; they repair Bridges more easily to gather Taxes and Baths to wash with Pleasure. This was reported by a Traitor, and the angry Romans condemned Simeon to Death. The Jews banished Joses Tsippori, because he had given Consent by his silence; and they openly protected "their Panegyrist Juda." He became Head of an Academy [g]. He Composed a Commentary [h] upon Leviticus, which they call the Books by way of Excellency. Some think this Commentary is preserv'd, because there is a very ancient one upon this Sacerdotal Book. He fasted almost all the Year, living on Beets, and drinking no Wine but on Festivals. He died with the Reputation of a Saint, and therefore the Jews still visit his Tomb, which they have plac'd upon a Mountain cover'd with Olive Trees, near a little City of Galilee, call'd Enun Zaithun.

II. There was a Chanina, the Son of Chachini, whom they reckon among the five Judges, who had their Court at Japhne. "He Married young; but he left "his Wife to study the Law; and so violent was his "Application to it, that being returned Home, he "neither knew his House nor his Wife [i]." Eleazar Chisma another Disciple of Akiba, was so great an Arithmetician, as to count the Drops of Water in the Sea. It has been said [k] of him, that he descended before the Ark; that is, that he instituted a Custom practised by Votaries at this Day of prostrating themselves before the Chest where the Law is kept, and saying their Prayers there, thinking hereby to accomplish the saying of David, I have called upon the deep places,

We should not speak of Eleazar the Son of Simeon Jochaides, who was pursued by the Romans, and concealed a long time with his Father, were not some Prayers ascribed to him, which the Italian and German Jews make use of. We have reason however to doubt of 'em, since they contain the Names of Angels, which are wholly barbarous and unknown to the ancient Doctors of this Nation.

Names

IV. But the most famous of all Akiba's Pupils, was the Illustrious Meir. They give him this Name, because he was the Light [l] of the Learned, and open'd the Eyes of his Disciples. They said of him, Meir had for his Preceptor Akiba, the Light of the World. He became the Light of the Age, and left behind him the Light of the World. Juda the Saint, who was his Disciple. They make him the Son or Grandson of the Emperor Nero, and a Proselyte of Justice, as was his Master Akiba. Vorstius also makes him the genuine Son of Juda the Saint: But the Historian [m] that he Translated, never meant to say so great an Absurdity. He only affirms, that this Doctor liv'd so long, as to assist at the Wedding of Juda the Saint's Son. He Married a Learned Woman, whose decisions the Thalmudists receive with greater Reverence than those of her Husband, notwithstanding all their Veneration for him.

V. For they remark, that Meir in explaining the Law, advanced the Opinions of another. This other was his Master Eliscia [n], whose Name he conceal'd, because being entered into Paradise, and surprised with the Glory of the Angel Metatron, he fell into the Error of the two Principles. The Thalmudists, who were afraid, that Meir vented his Master's Sentiments, and were ashamed to derive their Doctrine from an heretical Hand, do follow not Meir's Opinions, but when they are found consistent with the Decisions of other Doctors; but for his Wife, they list her among the Tanaites. She has left Three Hundred Traditions, which she learnt from Thirty Masters. Some [o] also reckon Three Hundred Doctors, that the number of Masters may exactly answer that of her Decisions.

VI. There were in her Neighbourhood wicked Wretches, that disturb'd her Husband, who said to God as David [p], Let the Sinners be consumed out of the Earth, and let the wicked be no more. Beruna disturb'd at this Interpretation, represented to her Husband, that he did not understand the words of the Psalm, since the Prophet only beg'd of God, that Sins might be destroy'd, after which, the wicked would be no more. David did not desire the Destruction of Sinners, but of Sin, which is much more Charitable.

A Heathen asking her one day the Explication of these words of Isaiah [q], Sing, O barren, thou that didst not bear; she answered, that the Jewish Church was this barren Woman, whose Happiness the Prophet admired, because she did not bring forth Infidels to be damn'd. Nevertheless this so learned a Woman made an ill End. She suffer'd her self to be seduc'd by one of Meir's Scholars, who acted in concert with his Master, and gave him his place at the Assignation she had assign'd. She hang'd her self in Despair, and her Husband who had deceived her, was so asham'd of this misfortune, that he left the Holy Land and went to Babylon. There he Married a second Wife, not so Learned as the other, and return'd to Judæa.

VII. He is said to die in the Year 130 of our Lord; but this is impossible, if he was at the Marriage of Juda the Saint's Son. This latter was not Born till the Year 135, or 136. Nevertheless Meir was his Preceptor. How then could he die six Years before: He don't pretend to censure Bartolocci's Reflection [r], as a fault; nor precisely fix the time, in which all the Doctors we speak of taught. We only know it from the Jews, whose Chronology is very uncertain. They are evidently out concerning Akiba's Rebellion, and the taking of Bither, which they anticipate many Years. It suffices, that all the Doctors we here give the Character of, lived in the Second Century.

Meir had heard a Voice crying, Cease to employ thy self in Commerce, Study the Law. If thou interrupt'st that Study, thou shalt suffer much, but God shall abundantly recompence thy application to it. He took the Advice, which he thought came from Heaven. He knew Three Hundred Parables about Foxes. He had the Art to maintain Pro and Con, the Affirmative and the Negative. He one Day prov'd that a thing was unclean, and the next Day he prov'd the contrary, by Arguments that startled his Auditors. Had he not reason after this to boast, there was not a more Learned Man in the World than himself, and to call God to witness it?

VIII. Dosithay or Dositheus, was one of Meir's Disciples, we must not confound him with one Dositheus a Priest, sent by Esarhaddon to the Cuthæans to teach 'em the Law, that they might not be devoured by Lions. 'Tis true, these two Men had not only the same Name, but the same Father [f]. But we ought to separate them by the space of Six or Seven Hundred Years, or rather the first is imaginary. There was also another Dositheus, who was the Son of Janni, who could not have studied under Meir, since his Father lived not till the end of the Second Century. This is a fresh Instance of the Confusion found in the Jewish Chronology; for 'tis not likely, there were three Dositheus's Doctors of the Law, and that the Fathers of the two first had the same Name. This Man determin'd [t], that it was no Crime to forget some Portion of the Law, except when it was done voluntarily, and this forgetfulness became innocent, when Application to Study was the cause of it. The Decision is not very curious; but yet it has admitted Dositheus into the Rank of Tanaites and Fathers; whose Sentences are Religiously preserv'd. He was ask'd one Day concerning the difference of Mens and Womens Voices, because the Spouse says in the Canticles, Thy Voice is sweet. To explain this Passage, he consider'd the Man and the Woman, and the Place of their Birth. The Woman was taken from the Side, and the Bones rubbing against one another, made an agreeable sound, whereas the Earth of which the Man was formed, has no Voice nor grateful sound at all.

IX. Somechus the Son of Joses, was another of Meir's Scholars; so ingenious as to give Forty Eight Reasons upon every Question that was proposed to him. This is the Elogy they give him. But is this commending a Doctor to the best advantage? 'Tis very difficult for all Reasons to be good, when they are numerous: The Multiplication weakens them. The Imagination is pleased with the number, and the quickness of the Author, but good Sense requires Weight instead of Number, and one that is solid ought to be prefer'd before Forty Eight that are dazling and transparent. By this they would extol the subtilty of Somechus, who had been imitated by the School-Divines.

X. Chelpeta, a Citizen of Tsippori, had two Sons that studied under Meir. Joses grew the most famous. The Emperor Adrian banished him from Tiberias, and sent him to live in his Native Country, where the Learned were not honour'd as in an Academy. Here he took to the Trade of a Currier. The Jews, who find most part of the Doctors to be only Mechanicks, have turned their Reproach into Glory, by making a Law, commanding all the Rabbins to learn a Trade. Some [u] Chriſtians imagine this was done in emulation of the Apoſtles and Diſciples, who labour'd with their own Hands. But this Reaſoning is unjuſt; for if the Handicraft of the Apoſtles was a ſubject of Jealouſie, the Council of Trent ought not to have deſtroy'd this Glory, and changed it into a Reproach, by forbidding the conferring of Orders, on a Man that had not a Benefice or a Patrimony ſufficient to maintain him. Beſides it was better to get a Livelihood by honeſt Labour like St. Paul, than to Authorize ſuch a begging Lazineſs, as that of the Monks. Without engaging here in any Diſcuſion, it muſt be owned, that the Chriſtian and Jewiſh Doctors laboured at that time out of pure Neceſſity. Joſes was obliged to be a Currier, becauſe his Inheritance that was ruin'd by Adrian, could not give him Bread. For indeed 'tis obſerv'd, that there were neither Olive-trees nor Olives at that time, becauſe the Romans had pluck'd them up. Notwithſtanding his Poverty, he Compoſed a Chronicle [x] that begins with the World and ends at Adrian's Reign. At laſt the Jewiſh Hiſtorians [y] make him the Author of this Work, which has been lately Re-printed with Notes. Bartolocci thinks alſo, that he has diſcover'd a new Proof, that this Book is truly his, becauſe his Name is at the end of it. But we have already ſhewn this Piece to be ſpurious, and wanting the Antiquity that is given to it.

XI. His younger Brother Scimon, who liv'd under Antoninus, and the following Emperors with Juda the Saint was a Man that work'd Miracles. "For "he met [z] a hungry Lion, who would have torn "him to pieces, had not God rain'd down Bread, "which the Lion prefer'd before this Doctor's Body. "He was ſo poor as not to have wherewithal to ce-"lebrate the Sabbath. He expreſſed his Grief to "God, who dropt from Heaven a Precious Stone in-"to his Hands. He preſently mortgaged it to a "Jeweller, and made a Treat for his Friends. His "Wife did not approve her Husband's Conduct, but "ordered him to reſtore the Stone to God. Thus he "returned to the place where he had received it, "and preſented it to God, who reſum'd it by a "ſecond Miracle greater than the firſt.

XII. The ſame time produced another Scimon, the Son of Eleazar, to whom an adventure happened, that diſcover'd his Pride and taught him Humility. As he returned from his Maſter's School, mounted upon an Aſs, a Man of prodigious Deformity accoſted him, and had a mind to diſcourſe with him. Scimon imagined him to be a Fool, and contemptuouſly asked him, whether all the Children of his City were as ugly as himſelf? I don't know, ſays the Paſſenger, but come hither, and ask him that made me, why he has made a Veſſel ſo filthy and contemptible? The Doctor acknowleged his Fault, alighted from his Aſs, and asked Pardon; but the other would not grant it him, unleſs he would follow him into the City, to ſee whether all the Inhabitants were as ugly as he. As they arrived [a] all the People ran to meet Scimon to ſalute him, Rabbi, Maſter, Lord, who brings you hither? Peace be unto you. The Paſſenger told the Story, repreſented the Pride of the Doctor, and pardon'd him on Condition, he would not be guilty of the like Fault. Indeed Scimon profited by his Adventure, and laid it down for his Maxim, that a Doctor ought not to be as hard as Cedar, but as ſoft as a Reed, becauſe we cut the Reeds as we pleaſe. They ſerve to write the Law. By this he cenſured his Moroſeneſs for the natural Defect of an unknown Perſon, and would have People accommodate themſelves to the Genius and Imperfections of thoſe they meet with on the Road.

XIII. Laſtly, Meir had the Glory to teach Juda the Saint, the Author of the Miſnah, and Patriarch of the Nation. But we have ſpoken of him, and what we have now ſaid is ſufficient to ſhew the Genius of the Doctors of that time, and their Panegyriſts, and perhaps we ſhall be thought to have been too tedious on this Subject.

I. ANtoninus Pius, who was adopted by Adrian was originally of Niſmes, from whence his Family came to Rome, and was raiſed to Dignities. He was good-natured, liberal, conſtant in Adverſity. The Jews [b] have a great Eſteem for him, not only becauſe they lived happily in his Reign, and that of his two next Succeſſors, whilſt they perſecuted the Chriſtians, but alſo becauſe he had received Circumciſion. They tell, that Adrian having forbidden the Circumciſion of Infants, Juda the Saint was exchanged with Antoninus, and preſented to the Emperor with his Præputium, who was not a-ware, that a Preſent was made him of a Child of his own Family. In the mean time Antoninus by ſucking Jewiſh Milk, during this Journey, became happy in this Life, and in the other; for he was made a Diſciple of Judah the Saint, and learnt the Law of him. He

Circumciſed

Circumciſed himſelf with his own Hands, that he might be qualified to eat the Paſchal Lamb. He always diſſembled his Religion; and tho' he profeſs'd Judaiſm, which he was perfectly acquainted with, yet he appeared devoted to the Service of Idols. But he conſtantly [c] favoured the Jews, and ſo ſtrenuouſly applied himſelf to the ſtudy of the Law and Tradition, that he joined with his Maſter Judah in the Compoſition of the Miſnah. We have already obſerved the Hiſtorian's Fault about Judah's exchange with Antoninus, who was Forty Three Years Old when this Rabbin was born, and could not then paſs for a ſucking Child. Another Hiſtorian [d] of the ſame Nation conteſſes, that Judah was but Thirty Years Old at the end of Antoninus's Reign, and he muſt have been young, ſince he died in Commodus's Reign.

II. If the Fable be not manifeſt enough, we may add what they ſay concerning Antoninus going daily through a ſubterranean Walk from his Palace to Judah's Houſe to ſtudy with him. He planted two Centinels, one at the Palace Gate, and another at the Rabbins, to hinder his goings and comings to the Jew from being perceived; and the better to conceal the ſecret, he conſtantly kill'd them at his return; and thus this ſecret Commerce daily coſt the Lives of two of his Guards. One Day the Emperor found Chanina. There have been ſuch a number of Amoraites that have had this Name, that it is a very hard matter to diſtinguiſh them. Nevertheleſs there is one, to whom it is given by way of Preheminence. The Emperor was going to kill this Stranger, leſt he ſhould reveal the Secret, but Chanina told him, he was not a Man but an Angel. Antoninus that was ſomewhat incredulous, ſent him to the Gate to raiſe the Sentinel he had kill'd; which he perform'd. Antoninus being more convinced than ever of the truth of this Religion retain'd it to his dying Day.

III. The Jews heap up the meaſure, by maintaining that Antoninus had a Son call'd Aſſuerus, to whom he had deſigned the Empire, and that if he be not found in the Liſt of Emperors, 'twas becauſe this young Prince died too early to do any thing conſiderable. This is but a wretched knowledge of the Genealogy of this Prince, from which they bring their Heroes; for Antoninus never had a Son called Aſſuerus. The two Sons that came from his Marriage with Fauſtina, M. Aurelius's Aunt, were M. Aurelius Fulvius Antoninus, and M. Galerius Aurelius Antoninus of their Father's Name. They died ſo young [e] that Hiſtory does not ſpeak of 'em; and 'tis certain that neither of 'em was alive when Antoninus was made Emperor, ſo far was he from being capable of deſigning the Empire for them.

IV. They not only relate Antoninus's frequent Conferences with Judah; but own that this Rabbin taught him many things. The Emperor maintain'd, that the Body and Soul might equally make their Apology before God. The Body may ſay, that 'twas the Soul that ſinn'd, ſince it has remain'd unactive from the time ſhe left it: The Soul may ſay, 'twas the Body that was culpable, ſince ſhe has been free ever ſince her ſeparation. Judah ſolved the Difficulty by the Parable of a Maſter, who had intruſted the Cuſtody of his Garden to a blind M n and a Cripple. The blind Man took the Cripple on his Shoulders; and ſo the Fruit was eaten. They excuſed themſelves to their Maſter by their Impotence; but he diſcovering the Artifice, puniſh'd them both, becauſe they were Aſſociates in the Theft.

Antoninus asked why the Sun after Riſing in the Eaſt, went to Bed in the Weſt. He is obliged reply'd Judah, to abaſe himſelf, becauſe it is written, that the Armies of Heaven worſhip him. By this he pays his Homages, which he defers till the Evening, for the convenience of Labourers and Travellers.

Hitherto Judah was Antoninus's Inſtructer; but this Prince deſigning to know the time of Union of the Soul and Body, and Judah anſwering that 'twas at the moment of the Formation, the Emperor perſuaded him that this Union ought to be allowed a much earlier date, becauſe a piece of Fleſh could not remain three Days without being ſalted. Judah entering into the Princes Opinion, who placed the Soul at the moment of the Viſitation, proved it by a Paſſage of Job. They do [f] Antoninus a great Honour to make him more Learned than the greateſt Maſter of Iſrael; but this is invented.

V. The truth is, Antoninus inſtead of countenancing the Jews, continually made War againſt 'em, becauſe they had rebell'd againſt him. Adrian's Prohibition of Circumciſion was ſtill in force. They had obey'd an Emperor, who forc'd 'em to it by the Torrent of his Conqueſts, and Power of his Arms. But they could not long brook their being depriv'd of this Sacramental ſign of their Religion. They roſe the firſt opportunity, and were reſolved with Sword in Hand to oblige Antoninus to give 'em this liberty. Capitolinus in intimating this War, has concluded all Antoninus's Victories in the compaſs of five or ſix Lines, and by his Brevity has occaſioned Baronius to believe, that the Inſurrection of the Jews happened in the firſt Years of his Reign. But the Jews, who were diſperſed, and extreamly debilitated by Adrian, had need of ſome Years to gather up a Body, and capacitate themſelves to make head againſt a potent Prince. Beſides Capitolinus's Account is a Compendium of this Prince's noble Actions, which ought to be diſtinguiſhed, as having been exploited at different times. The Jews were unſucceſsful and defeated by Antoninus; but when he had beaten them, he reſtored them the privilege of Circumciſion.

VI. This Law contained three things: 1. It only related to the Jews; but the Samaritans, who profeſs'd the ſame Religion, had not the benefit of it. Celſus makes Origen [g] an Objection againſt our Martyrs, taken from the Patience wherewith the Samaritans ſuffered this Misfortune. Origen anſwered, that theſe were not Martyrs for their Religion, but Aſſaſſins, Sicarii, guilty of Diſobedience towards the Magiſtrate, and Circumciſion alone manifeſted their Crime. I confeſs it; but at the ſame time, it proved alſo that they ſuffered for their Religion, ſince it was one of their Sacraments as a Chriſtian, who ſhould be condemned to Death by the Magiſtrate for receiving Baptiſm and the Euchariſt would be a Martyr to his Religion. Origin's Argument therefore was falſe. 2. Proſelytes were alſo excluded, and none of 'em were ſuffered to be made. 3. 'Tis added, that the Law forbad Caſtration; to which they apply [h] the requeſt of a young Egyptian, who deſired to be made an Eunuch, in order to juſtifie the Chriſtian Church from the ſcandals that were thrown upon it of polluting it ſelf with horrible Inceſts in nocturnal Aſſemblies. The Surgeons he ſent for refuſed to perform the Operation unleſs he obtained leave of the Roman Governor at Alexandria, who denied it, and afterwards the Chriſtian came to himſelf. Antoninus's Law only prohibited Phyſicians upon pain of Death the Circumciſing Children like the Jews. But they concluded, that if this Prince prohibited the Circumciſing of Strangers, under ſo great Penalties, they would be much more Criminal, if they Caſtrated a Chriſtian. And therefore they diſmiſs'd him to the Governour for the Explication of the Prince's Law.

Justin Martyr [i] observ'd, that this Privilege of the Emperor was prejudicial to the Circumcised, because this Character of Distinction promoted only the burning of their Estates, and hinder'd them from settling at Jerusalem. This reasoning is not just, for the Jews prefered their Sacrament to the pleasure of returning to Jerusalem. But this Father's Observation teaches us, that notwithstanding this Condescension of Antoninus, they were still treated severely, by having their Cities, their Towns and Harvests burnt, and their return to the Holy City hinder'd.

VII. Justin Martyr had at that time a Conference with Tryphon. The Jews speak of a famous Rabbin who was Preceptor or Collegue with Akiba, called Tarphon; and Lightfoot [k] thinks, 'twas he that Justin Martyr disputed with. He was not only Rich but Charitable; for we are told that Akiba being employed to take care of the Poor, he gave him Four Thousand Gold Crowns, which he distributed in one Day. Tho' he was a Disciple of Schammy's School, yet he has been esteem'd, and many Sentences of his are preserved, and inserted in the Maxims of the Fathers. He [l] sollicites Men to hasten their Sanctification, because Ars longa sed vita brevis. God demands it, and the recompence will be considerable. Nevertheless he teaches, "That Man is not obliged "to the performance of the whole Law; and pro- "vided he do his endeavour to know but one part "of it, yet he shall receive a great Reward." So that this Doctor had a loose and easie Morality.

We are taught also from him, [m] that the Name of twelve Letters ceased to be pronounced at that time. The Name of Jehova is ineffable, because it expresses the Essence of God [n] without Ambiguity, whereas the others only make him known by his Attributes, There was moreover a dispute among the Doctors about the manner of pronouncing it. Lastly, The prophane who increased their Numbers after the Death of Simeon the Just, abused it: And therefore they left off pronouncing it. Instead of this Ineffable Name was substituted one of Twelve Letters, which the Priest uttered in giving the Blessing to the People. But Tarphon affirms, that one day coming near the Priest to hear him pronounce his Benediction, he perceived that he did not articulate the Twelve Letters; but that he only mutter'd whilst the Brethren sang; and the reason of this change proceeded from the number of the Prophane, which was increased. They highly commend the Wisdom of this Tarphon, and his knowledge in the Law.

VIII. We are told, [o] that Tarphon having fled into Greece after Akiba's defeat, engaged in a Conference with Justin. But besides [p], that the Jews are little acquainted with their Tarphon, of whom they only relate some Sentences; he that had the Conference with Justin Martyr, does not appear to have had the Title, or knowledge of a Doctor. He disputes weakly, and hardly gives any answer to the Prophecies urged to him; so that this Jew was rather a private Person whom the Desolation of his Country had obliged to fly from place to place to Corinth, and afterwards to Ephesus, where Justin [q] met with him.

IX. The Criticks are divided about the time when this Conference happened. But not to examine their different Opinions, we will advance one, which tho' new, will perhaps be never the less certain. 'Tis uncontroverted, that Justin had not this dispute with Tryphon, till after he had presented his Apology; since he quoted it, in saying, that he does not even spare the Samaritans his Countryman, and that he has accus'd 'em to the Emperor, because they suffer'd themselves to be drawn into the Sect of Simon Magus. This we find in both [r] the Apologies of Justin; one whereof was presented to Antoninus about the the Year 150. of our Lord, since it mentions Marcion; and the other to Marcus Aurelius, as is prov'd by Pagi against Valesius. It signifies little to determine, which of these Apologies Justin has quoted. I take the Side that is most to my disadvantage, and believe it was that which was presented to Antoninus Pius, because he there expresses himself more clearly concerning the misfortune of the Samaritans.

There is another Character which indicates the time wherein this Dialogue was written; namely, that Tryphon [s] was retired to Greece by reason of the War which had been lately made against them. 'Tis reasonable to say, that this can't be applied to the War of Adrian, if the Apology was not presented till Twelve Years after; for Justin's Expression will not allow us to carry that Event so far. Besides, Tryphon's Friends retired to discourse of this War: It must therefore have lately happened; for People are neither curious nor impatient to talk of an Event Twelve Years after; and this doubtless obliged Father Pagi to place it almost Ten Years sooner. But all these Difficulties are removed by saying, that the Jew speaks of the late War, of Antoninus against them.

X. I confirm this Conjecture by a third Character which can't be disputed [t] Tryphon was Circumcised; which he made no secret of; but confess'd it to Justin at the beginning of their Conference. And therefore Adrian's Inhibition of Circumcision must have been taken off by Antoninus, when Justin had this Conference with Tryphon, who urged the absolute necessity of Circumcision, and wore it as a Seal of the Covenant.

Now to fill up these Three Circumstances, we must necessarily say, that the Dialogue with Tryphon happen'd in the Year 155, or thereabouts; for when Justin had presented his Apology for the Christians, Antoninus had suppressed the Jewish Rebels; and in order to quiet them, he had restor'd them the liberty of Circumcision, as we have proved.

XI. I shall not ingage in a Discussion of this Dialogue, which the most scrupulous Criticks ascribe to Justin, as the only Work that remains of him, and which another in the farthermost North boldly rejects as a spurious Piece. I only will observe, that as Justin had very exactly read the Writings of the Prophets, he has made his Excellence consist in heaping them one upon another, without much Art, and perhaps without much Choice; and the Jew might have justly told him oftener than he does, that these Quotations don't prove what he designs. The Yards and Masts of a Ship, and the extended Arms of Moses, are but feeble Arguments for the Cross of Christ; tho' there are Christians at this day, who disdain not to quote them after so many others. Let us rather observe what relates to the Jewish History we treat of. Justin represents [u] to the Jew, that their Cities were burnt, the Country inhabited by Strangers, and that they could no more go to Jerusalem; a sign that the Prohibition of going to Jerusalem was still religiously observed; and the flight of Tryphon and his Friends is a sufficient Demonstration that there was but little security for 'em in Judæa.

He [x] objects to 'em, that in spight of the Misery, that overwhelm'd them, they ceased not in their Synagogues to curse to Hell all that believed in Jesus

Christ

Christ. Since they could not persecute 'em nor put 'em to Death, they branded 'em as Atheists and Impious Men.

He taxes [y] the Rabbins of being poor Divines from the time that the Misnah was Composed, running after Trifles, and subtile Explications, as they have done since; and they had reason to forbid their Disciples ingaging in Conferences with the Christians, who were more ingenious.

Tryphon [z], who found himself hard press'd, was vex'd; but the Conference had no other effect, each continued in their Opinion; and the Disputants reciprocally prayed to God for their Conversion and Prosperity. The Emperor Marcus [a] Antoninus died some time after.

XII. Tho' Marcus Aurelius was naturally of a mild Temper, yet this exempted not the Jews from a great deal of Misery in his Reign. This Prince had so bad an Opinion of them, that as he once passed through Judæa in his way to Egypt, he cried out, that he had found People as wicked as the Marcomans and Sarmatians. Those barbarous Nations, that made continual War, and ravaged a great part of his Empire in his Reign.

Qua [b] modo Marcomades post horrida bella vagosque Sauromatas.

And besides, there were two Circumstances very prejudicial to 'em. Vologesus King of Parthia was making War-like Preparations at the time that Antonius died; and he commenc'd the War a little after his Death by violent Incursions. Severian the Governour of Cappadocia attempting to oppose him, perished with his whole Army. Marching afterwards into Syria, the Parthians made terrible Destruction. The Eastern Jews, who were Subjects to the Parthians, and Enemies to the Romans, join'd them and encreased the number of their Troops. Marcus Aurelius sent Lucius Verus his Colegue with the best Officers of the Empire; but he stop'd at Antioch to debauch, and left the War to the management of his Generals. Cassius, who commanded, beat Vologesus, and pursued him to his Capital Ctesiphon, which he took, and ruined the Palace of the Kings. Babylon, which still made some Figure, Mesopotamia, and the Lands of the Medes, where there were a great number of Jews, were laid waste. Seleucia, upon the Banks of the Tigris, voluntarily surrendered: But the Romans violating the Capitulation, kill'd Four or Five Hundred Thousand Persons. Lastly, By a Treaty of Peace concluded four Years after the beginning of the War, Mesopotamia and Osroene remain'd subject to the Romans. And thus the Jews of this Country were reduced once more under their Obedience.

XIII. [c] Cassius, who left the East to go and vanquish the Sarmatians, flush'd with so many Exploits and Victories, which raised him to the Rank of Heroes, incouraged, as is said [d], by Faustina, Marcus Aurelius's Wife, who was for making an Emperor, that she might Marry him after her Husband's Death, whom she thought a dying, assum'd the Title of Emperor in Syria, where he was Governor, having first spread a report, that the Throne was vacant by Marcus Aurelius's Death. His Reign was but a Dream, for it lasted but three Months and six Days. However the Jews, who only waited for an Opportunity to rise, seeing the Fire kindled in the Neighbourhood, added Fuel to the Flames, by joining with the Rebels. Marcus Aurelius pardoned the Children of Cassius, whose Head had been brought to him, and spar'd the Blood of the Senators, who had engaged in the Conspiracy. He even caused his Letters to be burnt, that they might not be known. But he could not bear the Insult which the Jews had offer'd him, and to punish them, he renew'd Adrian's Laws against 'em. But yet whether these Laws were ill executed, particularly in Asia, where the Jews were numerous and very remote from the Capital; or that they bought the liberty of mischieving the Christians, they signalized themselves in this Country by their hatred. Justin Martyr had before charged upon 'em the Consequences of this Passion, which frequently broke out. But they manifested it at Smyrna at Polycarp's Martyrdom; for they not only join'd their Voices with the Heathens, in crying in the Theatre, He is an Atheist, but they were also the most vehement round his Pile. They persecuted this great Man after his Death, by soliciting the Judge to deny his Body to the Christians under the false pretence that they would Worship it, and forsake Jesus Christ for him. At last the Captain of the Guards seeing the bitter Rage of the Jews against the dead Body, caused it to be reduc'd to Ashes.

We will not here examine at what time this Event happen'd. Pearson and Dodwel those Learned Englishmen, place it in the Year 147. under Antoninus. But Cardinal Noris [e] observes, that he died in the Year 166, the Twenty Second of February, which was a great Sabbath.

These Commotions might be made by a mutinous Rabble, and tolerated by reason of the hatred to the Christians: but yet 'tis certainly true, that the Jews enjoyed great liberty of Conscience at Smyrna; since they were present at the Theatre, and distinguished themselves from the Heathens. Moreover we find some Footsteps of their Authority in Phrygia by the answers, that an Orthodox Person made to the Montanists, who accused us of being Murderers of the Prophets. "Is there one of them that from the Origin of their Sect has been persecuted by the "Jews, or kill'd by the Impious? Is there any Woman who has been whip'd in the Synagogues or "Stoned? This Author attributes to the Jews the Persecution of the Christians, and the Branches that divided Christianity. He adds there the power of Scourging in the Synagogues, as was done in our Saviour's time. [f] The uncontroll'd and numerous Rabble in Asia, in Marcus Aurelius's time, pursued the Christians in the Streets with Stones, and sometimes Crucified them. 'Tis even very probable, that Thraseas Bishop of Eumenia, or of Emalbisar in Phrygia Pacatiana, was Martyr'd in this manner. Lastly, The Circumcised must have been numerous in this part of the World, since Montanus indeavoured to allure 'em, by giving the Name of Jerusalem to two little Cities of Phrygia, which he look'd upon as the principal Seats of his Sect.

XIV. This time produced the Conversion and unusual Baptism of a Jew. A Man of this Nation travelling in the Reign of Marcus Aurelius with Christians in a Desart, was taken with such a violent Thirst, that it was thought he was going to die. He demanded Baptism with an impatience, which made the Christians uneasie, as being utterly destitute of Water. One of 'em supplied the defect, by taking Sand, which he threw upon the Catechumen's Body, pronouncing the Sacramental Form, I Baptize thee in the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. The Jew recover'd by this new Baptism, and march'd on to the City of Alexandria. Dionysius, who was then Bishop there, being informed of the Fact, ordered the Jew to be Re-baptized with Water. Nicephorus adds [g], that such another Instance happened under Athanasius, and he has annexed a third Example, that fell out in his time at Constantinople. Some Children were bathing on the Sea-shore, and it came in their Head to Baptize a little Jew that was with them. After the Baptism they made him a sort of Head-piece with the lappet of his Coat, and put a Stick in his Hand instead of a Wax Taper; they conducted him in Pomp to the Church singing as they went: They enter'd in, and received the Blessed Bread, or the Holy Gifts, and the Jew took 'em like the rest. This Affair made a noise, the Jews were in an Uproar; and the Bishop of Constantinople was inform'd of it. The Child was cited, who appeared notwithstanding the indeavours of his Parents. What was defective in his Baptism, was supply'd, and he was made a Priest, when he had attained to fit Years to enter into Orders.

and

XV. There is a great defect in this relation of Nicephorus; for he makes Dionysius of Alexandria live in Marcus Aurelius's Reign; whereas this Prince was dead before Dionysius was born. It might be imagin'd, that he was mistaken in the Name of the Bishoprick, and meant Dionysius of Corinth; but there is no Desart near Corinth that could be made the Scene of this extraordinary Event. Which makes us believe, that this Historian has copied Moschus, who [h] tells a Story perfectly like it, and makes Dionysius Bishop of Ascalon, determine the Question concerning Sand-Baptism. Indeed it is not probable, that the same thing should happen twice. Moschus's story would have somewhat more Authority than Nicephorus's, because he affirms he had it from the Mouth of an Eye-witness; but that we know this Legendary made no scruple to vent a great many Fables as certain Truths.

'Tis no wonder that Children should Baptize with Sand, or play the Fool upon the Sea-shore, in imitating the Actions of Priests administring the Sacraments. But it would be very strange for Ecclesiasticks to approve these Childish Plays, and such prophane Sacraments. 'Tis true, two Popes have allowed Baptizing with Wine, when Water is wanting, and the Criticks, who maintain, that these decrees are forged, are evidently mistaken. But there is a great difference betwixt Wine and Sand, betwixt a Priest Baptizing seriously and Children doing it in jest. 'Tis hard therefore to conceive, that this was approved. But if the Facts related by these Historians are true, we must refer the first to the Seventh Century, and the second to Nicephorus's time: Which Periods are far enough asunder. But these three Baptisms are so extraordinary, that we have not been willing to divide 'em, and it must be confessed, they don't do much Honour to the Christian Religion.

XVI. The Conversion of Hegesippus, who liv'd at that time, seems also dubious to a great many. 'Tis agreed that he was a Jew, and that he embraced Christanity; but the Anti-Trinitarians challenge him as a Man, that went but half way, and that not being able to give up the Principle of the Unity of God, which he had suck'd in with his Milk, he remained in the Sect of the Ebionites, who denied the Divinity of the Son. Hence he was called [i], the Jewish Christian. He only made use of the Hebrew Gospel, which was particular to the Ebionites. 'Tis acknowledged that his Works are lost, since they abounded with Errors against the Divinity of the Son.

Tho' the Truth would not be weaken'd by the loss of its Defenders, and by the Judgment we make at this Day of his Doctrine, yet we can't forbear saying, that the Arguments produced against him are very weak. That taken from the Gospel of the Nazarenes is false; for Eusebius [k] only says, that he had published several things drawn from the Hebrew and Syriack Gospel, and the unwritten Traditions of the Jews. It should therefore be concluded, that he continued a Jew, because he used the unwritten Traditions of the Synagogue; as 'tis concluded he was an Ebionite, because he has sometimes quoted the Hebrew Gospel. Nevertheless no Body denies that he embraced Christianity. Valesius who suspects his Works of Errors, is not positive, that they respected the Divinity of the Messiah, nor can it be said without rashness. Indeed Hegesippus says, that he went to Corinth; where the Church continued constant in the Purity of the Faith, and that Primus, who was then Bishop of it, gave him great comfort by the Discourses they had concerning the Truth. From thence he went to Rome, and maintained constant Communion with the Bishops who had the See. The Church of Corinth was neither Arrian nor Ebionite. Hegesippus attributes to it the Profession of a true Faith. He united with this Bishop, and conversed with him about this pure Faith, 'tis therefore indisputable, that Hegesippus was of the same Religion with the Bishop and the Church, whose Purity of Faith he commends, and that he held the Doctrine received at Corinth and Rome.

XVII. 'Tis not Hegesippus's Conversion, that chiefly engages us to speak of him; but he informs us; 1. That there were Traditions among the Jews, and that they were not written in his time. We have had reason therefore to say, that Judah the Saint did not Compose the Misnah, till Commodus's Reign [l], towards the end of the Second Century, since they were not yet published in Hegesippus's time, who lived under Marcus Antoninus. Eusebius had first placed him under Adrian; but it seems that he discovered his Fault and corrected it. 2. This Hegesippus speaks of Seven Sects among the Jews, and Thebutis, who was one of 'em, was the first that dishonoured the Church by sowing Errors in it, in spite for not being made a Bishop.

XVIII. Hegesippus speaks of Four famous Sects among the Jews; the Samaritans, the Pharisees, the Sadduces, and the Essenes; to which he adds the Galileeans. These were the Followers of that famous Judas, who rose in the Days of the taxing made by Augustus, and who would not have the Emperors acknowledged for their Lords, nor Tribute paid to 'em. This Spirit of Sedition was still in being, and these Sectaries were those who had caused the terrible Rebellions, which compleated the ruin of the Nation. The Hemero-baptists are charged by St. Epiphanius of having incorporated all the Errors of the Pharisees and Sadauces; but I don't see what reason there is for this Accusation; for their Name only denotes their care to wash themselves every Day, or many times in a Day. 'Twas a Branch of the Pharisees, that Jesus Christ taxed with fondness for Washings, and who afterwards separated from the Body of the Sect to make a particular one, and perhaps a more rigid one in point of Washings.

XIX. Lastly, Hegesippus reckons the Masbothæans amongst the Jewish Sects. This Sect arose after our Saviour; for they are not known by the Gospel, nor by any more ancient Author. We discover their true Opinion in the [m] Apostolical Constitutions: They denied a Providence, and believed that every thing happen'd by chance: And they also rejected the Immortality of the Soul. So that the Masbothæans were a Branch of the Sadduces; as the Hemerobaptists proceeded from the Pharisees. I don't know why it has been thought, that their Name was borrowed from the Sabbath, which they observed more religiously than others; for there is no Analogy betwixt the Terms Masbotheans and Sabbatarians. We find in their Name the Name of GOD, and it might be said, that they introduced it there, because they denied his Providence. Masbo or Basmo might be a barbarous Term, which signified some such thing. 'Twas the Character of the Hereticks of that time to confound Languages, and to coin unknown Words from 'em. There were other Masbotheans, Disciples to Simon Magus, which Theodoret [n] has distinguish'd from the Jewish Sectaries; and with reason; for they derived that Pedigree from one Masbotheus their Founder, and may be rank'd among Christian Hereticks.

XX. Justin Martyr [o] gave Tryphon a very different account of the Sects, that divided the Jews of his Age, tho' he was Cotemporary to Hegesippus. For 1. He passes over the Essenes in silence, as if they were vanished; and I could easily believe, that Hegesippus only mention'd 'em, because they had formerly made a considerable Schism in the Nation. 2. Justin Martyr supplies three Sects, the Genists, the Merists, and the Hellenists. 'Tis said, the Genists derived their Glory from being the Descendants of Abraham the Father of the Faithful. The Merists divided the Scripture, and did not receive all the Prophets, because they were animated by different Spirits. These Merists might be those mentioned by Benjamin of Tudela. He found a Schism at Cairo, because the Jews of Babylon and of the Irack divided the Scripture differently from those of Syria. The former so partition'd it, as to read it all in one Year, the others multiplying the Sections read it but in three Years. Scaliger [p] imagined that the Schism was between the Greeks and Babylonians, because he had read in Benjamin the word Igrikim, which he Translated the Greeks. But Constantine the Emperor, who Published and Translated his Travels, read it עירחקיין irræakiin. The Jews of the Irack were perhaps Hegesippus's Merists, who began to seperate about the manner of reading and dividing the Scripture.

XXI. The Hellenists began also to set up a new Sect, of which it will not be amiss to trace the Original. After the Conquests of Alexander the Great, a distinction was made of the Hellenist Jews, which is expressed in great Characters in the Gospel. This Name was given them, because they were mingled with the Greeks, spoke their Language and read the Holy Scriptures in it, after it was Translated. We observe this only difference between them and the other Jews, with whom otherwise they partaked in the same Religion, Sacrifices and Ceremonies.

Scaliger imagined, that the Jealousie and Hatred were of very long standing betwixt these two Parts of the Nation, and that they had always made a kind of Schism. They reproached the Hellenists with reading [q] the Scripture in the Egyptian way, from the Left to the Right, and this was a kind of an affront. From Reproaches they came to Blows; and whilst the second Temple stood, Eleazar, the Son of Tsadoc, entring the Synagogue of the Alexandrians at Jerusalem, said all the most provoking things, his Rage could suggest to him. Scaliger found Footsteps of this Schism, as low as the Twelfth Century.

If Scaliger was in the right, the Sect of the Hellenists would be much ancienter than we make it. But tho' there was some jealousie betwixt the Hellenists and the Jews of Palestine; yet it proceeded not to Seperation or Schism. The Hellenists were even permitted to build a great many Synagogues at Jerusalem for their use, where they performed their Devotions, whilst Josephus has related no Dispute upon this Matter, nor Philo complained, that his Country-men were ill used.

XXII. Whence then came the Division, what was the cause of it, and at what time was it formed? The Learned are divided, and run into Extreams, as is usual. Some, as Salmasius, make the Epitaph of the Hellenist Tongue, and think they have proved, that the Bible was never read in Greek, because it is not read in Arabick, which is more common, and better known by the Jews than the Greek could be. Another joins together both Hellenists and Jews into one Synagogue at Jerusalem; and he fancies that he finds a proof of it [r] in the History of the Acts, where the Jews and Greeks were divided about the Creation of Deaconesses; which could not have happened, had they not been both in the same Synagogue, as if the Question there was not about the converted Greeks and Jews, who made but one Body in the Christian Church, where they could not continue long without dividing.

Others [s] conceited with the Septuagint Version, find it every where, and exalt it far above the Original. The safest way is to embrace a due Medium. Necessity required, that the Hellenists who understood not Hebrew, should read the Law in Greek in their Synagogues. Tho' it were true, that Philo, and some other of the Learned, understood the Syriack, there would be still the same necessity of the Greek Version for that great number of Hellenists that were in Egypt, and in all the great Cities of Asia under the Roman Jurisdiction. The Jews of Jerusalem could not condemn this Practice, since they had such another in using the Chaldee Paraphrases; and when there were no written Paraphrases, they fill'd up this Defect by an Explication of each Verse, which Custom being as ancient as Ezra Authorized that of the Greek Versions in all the Places, where the Chaldee was not the Language of the Country. What we say is so natural, that Simeon the Son of Gamaliel, who lived at the time of Titus's War, determined, that the Law might be read and written in Greek. We shall see hereafter why [t] the Gemara has limited this Decision to the Five Books of Moses. We may add, that R. Levi, coming to Cæsarea, where there were many Greeks, was surprized to hear the words שמע Hear O Israel pronounced in Greek. But R. Joses asked him, whether those that understood not Hebrew never read the Law, and added, without waiting for an Answer, That whoever reads in a Language he knows or understands, does his Duty. Lightfoot, who could not deny but that there were Greek Copies in the Synagogues, imagined that they were placed there by way of precaution, that when the Heathens came in to cry down their Religion, they might be convinced by their own Eyes, that it was not bad. But this is not consistent with the Decisions which we have been quoting, nor with good Sense. Would the Jews, who were extreamly poor, have been at the charge of having in all their Synagogues Greek Copies, lest by chance some Heathens should come to dispute there, which was very rare?

To own that there were Greek Copies in the Synagogues, is to confess that the Law was read in this Language, and the Hebrews hindred not a Custom that was universally received in the Land of the Roman Empire. Nevertheless, they both of 'em considered the Original as sacred and preferable as well to the Versions, as to Chaldee Paraphrases, because 'twas God that had made choice of this Tongue.

that

XXIII. Christianity disturb'd this Harmony of the Jews. The Christians disputing with 'em always used the Version of the LXX, which not only was better known, but more advantagious to them. Justin Martyr produces Proofs out of it; for he taxes the Hebrews with having lately struck out these words of Jeremy, I am like a Lamb that is led to the slaughter, which were found in the Seventy's Version. He carried his Proofs farther, in quoting a Passage of Esdras, which is no where to be found, and which he is accused of having put into the Greek, tho' it be more than probable, that this fraud was more ancient than he that made use of it. These Reproaches well or ill grounded began to disgust the Jews with the Greek Version, and to give 'em less esteem for those who were obliged to use it. The Originals were cried up above the Version; which was rejected, and found pernicious; they flew into an excess, and this Dispute produced Four effects. 1. The Name of Hellenists became odious, and those that wore it finding themselves abused with bitter Reproaches, set up the Sect mentioned by Justin Martyr. Here then you have the Origin of the Sect we seek for. 2. They laboured upon new Versions, of which we shall give an account. 3. The Gemarists not being able to prohibit the reading of the Greek Books confined it to the Pentateuch; because these five Books contained less disputed Prophecies than those of the other Prophets. 4. As the hatred to the Hellenists continually increased, those fabulous Prodigies were invented, said to be wrought at the time that the LXX Version was Composed, and they talk'd of a Fast that was celebrated on the account of this Version, of which no mention is made in the Thalmud. Thus it is we disintangle the History of the Hellenists, and not only extricate it with probability, but our Conjectures are bottom'd upon many irrefragable Testimonies. These new Sectaries appear'd therefore a little before Justin Martyr, or rather the Name of Hellenists, which was hardly odious before, grew so then, and became the Title of a Sect.

XXIV. That we may finish here what relates to the Sects, which were multiplied after Jesus Christ, let us observe, that the Author of a Catalogue, said to be St. Jerome's, and which multiplies 'em to the number Ten, has committed a gross Fault; for he makes most of these Sects say, that Christ had taught 'em. The Essenes, that were more ancient than the Christian Church, said, that Christ had "Commanded "them the Abstinence they observed. The Galileans "maintained, that Christ was come, and had taught "them not to acknowledge the Empire of Cæsar, nor "to make use of his Money. The Marbonneans gave "out, that Jesus Christ had taught 'em to Sabbatize "in all things; tho' the Pharisees denied the Mes-"siah was come." We must remove all these Sects out of the Synagogue, and place them in the Bosom of the Church, or acknowledge, that they did not own Jesus Christ for their Master, nor shelter themselves under his Authority. However it be, we learn from Hegesippus, and Justin Martyr, that the Jews instead of being sensible of the effect of their Miseries which ought to have re-united them, continued dividing themselves into different Parties.

XXV. They fell to work upon several Translations of the Scripture, and this sort of business became much in fashion among the Jews: Whether the Hellenists we have been speaking of, desired it; or that they became more necessary to dispute against the Christians dispersed over all the Roman Empire. Aquila was the first that engaged in it; whose Version was received with a general Applause of the Hellenists. Origin affirms [u], That all the Jews who did not understand the Hebrew, were accustomed to this Version, which they looked upon to be the best of all. Philastrius not only says the same thing, but adds, that some Hereticks followed it. In the mean time the Thalmudists [x] full of that Jealousie that had for some time prevailed against the Hellenists made their Efforts to disgust the People with it; and reduce them to the Hebrew Bible. We find in their Writings several strokes of Censure against the Greek one. The Christians complained of it, because it came from a suspected Hand, and which had robb'd 'em of many places of Scripture; but however they sometimes made use of it; and St. Jerome, who had condemned it, praised afterwards the Exactness of the Author. Theodotion made another of 'em [y]. The Jews carried off this Conquest from the Church; for Theodotion, who was born a Heathen, had embrac'd Christianity; but having tasted of these two Religions, he was Circumcised. He was a Native of Pontus, where he had known Marcion his Countryman, and had enter'd into his Sect. But from thence he went to Ephesus, where the Jews were numerons and considerable; and he lifted into the Synagogue. It seems that this was an Invasion upon Antoninus's Law, who forbad the Jews the making of Proselytes, and Circumcising them. But we have already observed, that these Laws were ill executed in Asia, and perhaps Marcus Aurelius had revoked them; for Theodotion made no Mystery of his Circumcision, and the Christians knew it well enough. He learnt of his new Masters Hebrew enough to translate the Scripture, or rather to Copy the LXX; for he followed 'em so close, that Origen made use of his Version to fill up the Chasms and Vacuities, that were found in the Septuagint. 'Tis said, that he publish'd it the first Year of Commodus's Reign, [z] according to the Custom of that time; for the Learned took a Pride to Publish their Works in the Decennalia or Vicennalia, and at the Birth of Princes, or when they came to the Throne. But not to dispute about this Custom, did a Jew make a sufficient Figure in the Empire to honour Commodus's Coronation by a Version of the Holy Scripture? As odious as his Person must have been, the Christians reap'd some advantage by his Work, and to read publickly his Translation of the Prophet Daniel, because that of the LXX. was full of Faults; or rather because this Version was by a Hand that was much inferiour to those that had work'd upon the Pentateuch. Also the Ebionites and Nazarenes prefer'd it before all the others. Symmachus Composed a Third Translation in Severus's Reign. It appear'd much clearer, and more useful than the preceding ones; because this Author had more respect to the Sense, than to the signification of Words. The Christians made use of all these Translations, tho' they were only made to their Prejudice, and by Doctors that infinitely hated them. However the Version of the LXX. still raised its Head above all these new-born Pieces. In the mean time it must be owned, that they were only undertaken to weaken its Authority, to hinder its being used in the Synagogues, as it hitherto had been, and to prevent the Christians, who disputed with the Jews from drawing Objections out of it. For indeed these last Interpreters had robb'd us of Isaiah's Oracle; A Virgin shall bring forth.

I. A Bulpharages [a] relates, that Severus becoming Maſter of the Empire after Commodus's Death, a Civil War aroſe betwixt the Samaritans and Jews in the firſt Year of his Reign. They fought a bloody Battle, after which a great many Dead were counted on both ſides. We can't conjecture where this Arabian Hiſtorian has detected an Event unknown to the Heathens. 'Tis a queſtion too, whether the Samaritans and Jews notwithſtanding the hatred that ſtill reigned betwixt theſe two parts of one and the ſame Nation, were in a Condition to make War with one another. The preceding Loſſes muſt have made 'em wiſer, and they were too much weaken'd to engage in War. We only know, that there was at that time a Captain of Robbers, called Claudius, who ſcowred the Country with a Troop of Armed Men. He even ſurprized the Emperor, and ſaluted him as if he had been one of the Tribunes of his Army, and afterwards fled ſo as not to be diſcovered. If Claudius's Soldiers were Jews as himſelf, 'tis very probable they plundered the Samaritans and their Lands with greater violence, who attempted to ſtop his Incurſions, and this is what Abulpharages took for a Civil War.

II. Peſcennius Niger being [b] proclaimed Emperor in Syria, endeavoured to make Judæa, which was adjacent declare for him; and finding this People of an unſhaken Fidelity for Severus, he did 'em all the miſchief that the ſhortneſs of his Reign could permit him. Severus was not ſo ſenſible at firſt as he ought to have been of this piece of Service. Princes think every thing is due to 'em. Beſides he was taken up with more important Affairs; being obliged to carry the War into the Eaſt [c] againſt Vologeſus, King of Parthia. The Jews, who were numerous betwixt the Tigris and Euphrates, ſuffer'd much from this War. Adiabene, whoſe Kings had profeſſed Judaiſm at the end of the laſt Century, and the begining of this was ravaged. Babylon and Seleucia were taken. The Siege of Cteſiphon laſted long, becauſe the Romans were reduced to the feeding on Herbs and Roots; but this City being carried by Storm, part of its Inhabitants were put to the Sword, and a Hundred Thouſand Priſoners carried out of it.

III. We are told, that Severus being apprehenſive, that the Jews diſperſed in the Eaſt would declare for Vologeſus, ſoftened them by many Edicts. But it does not appear, that they were diſtinguiſhed from the reſt of the Subjects of the Parthian Empire, and the favourable Edicts were not given till after the War.

IV. On the contrary, Severus at his return march'd into Judæa, and I don't know whether he found any Crouds in Arms, or whether Claudius's Robberies, who haraſſed the Country with a band of Wretches of his Nation ſufficed to decree a Triumph for his Son. But Euſebius [d] ſays poſitively, that Severus made War with the Samaritans and Jews. Beſides the Senate confounding what the Father had done in Syria, and the Son in Judæa decreed [e] a Jewiſh Triumph. The Emperor in the ſame Journey made ſeveral Laws relating to Palaſtine, one of which prohibited the turning Jew. He left this Nation liberty to Circumciſe their Children; but hindered the receiving Proſelytes and initiating Strangers by this Sacrament. Laſtly, Tertullian [f] upbraided them, that they Had neither Man nor God for their King, that they were Wanderers and Vagabonds in all the Univerſe. It was not permitted 'em to ſalute their Country, nor to enter into it in quality of Strangers nor Travellers. They had an Abode and ſome Settlements in Galilee; but the Inhibition of living at Jeruſalem was ſtill in force in Severus's Reign. It can't then be doubted, but Severus declar'd againſt this Nation in the firſt Years of his Reign.

V. But he grew favourable to 'em afterwards. The reaſon which Tertullian aſſigns for it is, that the Prince found there were very conſiderable Perſons in this Nation. But two others may be added, one, that they repreſented their Fidelity in the Competition of Peſcennius Niger; which was ſo much the nicer, becauſe this General was an ingenious Man, and in great Eſteem at Rome; the Prince might reflect upon this Fidelity, when he was more at leiſure. 2. Severus being infinitely covetous, the conſiderable Perſons of the Nation eaſily bought his Protection and Favour preferably to the Chriſtians. This is not a bare Conjecture; for the Hiſtorians acknowledge, that this Prince Did no prejudice to their Religion, and permitted 'em to enter into Offices. He raiſed great Taxes upon them, and laid heavy Burthens upon them.

VI. There was another Law, made in the ſame Prince's Reign, importing, that The Privileges of the Jews extending only to things, that might prejudice their Religion; they ſhould be called to the Tutelage of the Heathens like the reſt. Guardianſhip was burthenſome in all Ages. Nevertheleſs Strangers were excluded from it at Rome; and a Man could not exercise it without being a Denizen of this great City. Some Criticks have imagined, that these two Laws respected also the Christians, admitted to Offices by Severus. Baddæus was of this Opinion; and perhaps this famous Lawyer has drawn others into it. Nevertheless this Prince persecuted the Christians instead of promoting them to Dignities. Ulpian, who hated them, and was the Author of the Persecution, easily distinguished the Jews in an Age, wherein these two Religions were sufficiently known.

VII. These Laws therefore shew, 1. That the Jews were look'd upon as Roman Citizens, since they were charg'd with the Guardianship not only of Children of their own Nation, but with that of Idolatrous Strangers. 2. That they were capable of Offices and diverse Imploys; and this irrevocable Edict was observed for a great many Years; but at last Leo abolished it. There was a Clause in the Law of Severus, which rendered it doubly advantageous; for by giving the Jews the enjoyment of all the Privileges of Roman Citizens, they were left the liberty of refusing Offices of Court, and being made Decurions; because if there was any degree of Honour in these Posts, yet they were too burdensome. They were shun'd instead of being canvassed for; and those that were call'd to 'em, were forc'd to an acceptance. The Emperors shew'd a favour to such as they exempted from 'em; and the Eunuchs of Constantius made a Trade of these Immunities which they sold. His Successor Julian [g] has been highly commended for cancelling all these Exemptions, and for his being so rigorous on that respect, that he scarce granted it to those who endeavoured to discharge themselves for never so good reasons. Severus therefore shew'd a great Favour to the Jews in giving 'em these Exemptions.

VIII. This Protection raised their prostrate hopes; and their Doctors [h] applied to Marcus Aurelius and Severus, Daniel's Prophecy, which Praphyry explain'd of the Victory which Mathatias had obtained over the Town of Modin, and the following Doctors attributed to Julian the Apostate, who favoured the Jews. This Oracle of Daniel was indeed ambiguous enough to be fixed to different Subjects, since the Prophet barely says, When they shall fall they shall be holpen with a little help. As they found themselves protected by Severus after so many Disasters, they thought Daniel had pointed out such a favourable Circumstance. These advantages render'd 'em insolent to the Christians, whom the Emperor Persecuted. Tertullian [i] who wrote his Apology at that time, was strangely offended to see a Man of this Nation walking the Streets of Carthage carrying the Picture of a Man, who had Asses Ears, and a long Garment, and holding in his Hands a Book with these words, The God of the Christians. This proves, 1. That the Jews had passed from Egypt into the heart of Africa, and had then a Settlement in the Capital City Carthage. 2. That they lived very peaceably whilst the Church was Persecuted; for a Man seldom turns Buffoon to insult the Persecuted, when he is Persecuted himself. 3. However Tertullian should have let this Mockery pass in the Streets of Carthage, without introducing it into his Apology. The Jews have born a great many of these Affronts from the Christians: These Insults upon the miserable proceed from a sordid Soul; but the Vulgar take their turn to be abusive in proporrion to their Prosperity; and this is not called Persecution. Nor was the Invention new; for Tacitus had represented the God of the Jews much after the same manner.

St. Jerome [k] says, that in the Twelfth Year of Severus, a Jubilee was Celebrated. This Term is peculiar to the Jews; but Scaliger has remark'd, that whatsoever way we reckon the Years, the Jewish Jubilee could not happen in this. The Christians had borrowed this word from the Synagogue. But yet it was not a Jubilee of the Church, and those that should refer the Origine of that celebrated at Rome, to this, would be grosly mistaken; but Severus causing the secular Games to be celebrated in the Empire, the Christians, who partaked in the Feast, called it a Jubilee.

IX. 'Tis believed, that Caracalla followed his Fathers Steps: It can't be doubted but that he loved the Jews from his Childhood, since one of 'em at Court was his Play-fellow; which young Child being whipp'd by the Emperor's Order [l], Caracalla fell a crying, and was so afflicted, that he would not see his Father for several Days. Caracalla was in all probability the Son of Julia, Severus's second Wife: And so these Tears were shed [m] in the 195 Year of the Christian Æra; for he must have been then about Seven Years Old. This Prince afterwards totally changed his Temper, and you could no longer discover that Child, you had seen affectionate and liberal in his tenderest Years. Nevertheless as we don't find that he acted any thing against the Jews, we have reason to believe, that they took the advantage of a long train of peaceable Years, to make their Collection of Traditions.

X. We have already shewn, that Judah the Saint, who was born the same Day that Akiba died, could not flourish under Antoninus, and that he must be placed under Marcus Aurelius, and the following Reigns, as is done by one of the ablest [n] Chronologers of the Age. He adds, "That this great Man "did not work upon the Collection of Traditions, "that were scattered among the Greeks, 1. Be"cause there were at that time a great number of "these Traditionists, as the false Ezra; Theodotion, "who published the Additions to Daniel, the Hi"storians of Tobias and Judith; the Authors of the "Book of Enoch; of the Prayer of Joseph, of the "Assumption of Moses; of the Prophecies of Eldad "and Medad, who were not known by the Rabbins, "and have no place in their Compilation. 2. Be"cause the Misnaioth are Posteriour to Judah the "Saint, since he is not only quoted there, but use "is made of the Testimony of his Children, and "of those that succeeded him.

XI. This Discovery is new: But may it not be rectified by saying, there were two sorts of Traditions; some that were peculiar to the Hellenists, of which we have spoken in the preceding Chapter, and others received by the Hebrews of the Holy Land descended from the Pharisees? The former Traditions vented by the fore-cited Authors, were actually unknown and rejected by the Tiberian Doctors, whose Contempt and Hatred of the Greeks increased daily.

XII. As the Hellenists wrote Traditions, and successively published Books that were full of 'em, the Hebrews would have a like Collection, either to apply to upon occasion, or to oppose the Traditions dispersed by the Sectaries. "'Tis true [o], these Tra"ditions were neither ancient, nor taken from the "Books of the Doctors; for Akiba and Simon Jo"chaides, who are reckoned the Fathers of 'em "lived under Adrian." It has also been reasonably said, that this Collection must have been made later, since Judah the Saint is quoted in it. However we may follow the common Notion, 1. Because the

Reigns

Reigns of Marcus Aurelius, Severus and Caracalla left the Jews more at liberty to apply themselves to Study. 2. That was the time when the Academy of Tiberias, where Judah the Saint wrote, grew famous. An Arabian Author [p] has thought it much ancienter, since he makes the LXX Interpreters To depart from Tiberias with the Copy of the Law written in Characters of Gold for King Ptolemy. 3. Lastly, The Consent of all the Jews Ancient and Modern, who owned Judah the Saint for the Author of the Misnah, has always stagger'd me; and 'tis no wonder, that he himself is quoted in his own Work, because very considerable Additions were made to it after his Death, and his own and his Childrens particular Traditions were inserted, as he had made a Collection of the Decisions of the preceding Doctors.

XIII. We have spoken sufficiently of the Misnah, Jochanan [q], the Head of the Amoraïm made a Commentary to supply in part what was defective in his Master's Work. This Man was of so extraordinary Beauty, that he was made to stand at the entrance of the Baths, that the Women coming out being struck with his Figure, and retaining his Idea, might have Children as handsome as he.

XIV. Bartolocci [r] spends time in censuring the Character given to Jochanan, because the want of a Beard was sufficient to ruin this so celebrated Beauty, and because the desires he possessed the Women with, are condemned by the Word of God. But he observes at the same time the exorbitant Faults of the Jewish and Christian Chronologers, who say, "That Jochanan Published not his Work till Three "Hundred Years after the ruin of the Temple. In "Correcting these Faults he alledges, that Judah "the Saint died in the Year 194 of the Christian "Æra. Chanina, whom he had nominated to his "Place in the Academy, possess'd it but Five Years "of the Ten that are [s] given him. Jochanan, who "was born in the Year 184, was then but Fifteen "Years Old. Nevertheless they have put him at "the Head of the Academy, because there was a "deficiency of able Doctors; and if this Honour "was confer'd on R. Asche in the Academies of the "East, tho' he was but Fourteen Years Old, it "ought for a stronger reason to be done in Judæa, "where great Men were more scarce. He Publish'd "not his Book till Fifteen Years after his Installation. Wherefore those that maintain, that he was "assisted by Samuel the Lunatick, and by Rau, are "mistaken; for they were gone to Babylon long before.

XV. It seems to be a labour sufficiently vain to criticize the Faults of the Jewish Chronology; for we find no solid Ground whereon to fix our Foot. After a harsh and ungrateful Task a Man is often obliged to perplex his Calculations. Bartolocci is forced to build like the rest upon Suppositions, or Testimonies, as uncertain as those which he confutes. We must take in some foreign Principles, would we unravel the perplexity of the Fact we are examining. We pretend not to force the Reader by the strength of our Arguments, but only to offer something that carries some probability.

XVI. First it is a matter uncontested by the Jews, that Judah the Saint was born the Day that Akiba died, in the Year 135. He could not therefore Compose his Collection of Traditions under Antoninus, but rather in the Reign of Marcus Aurelius, Severus, or Caracalla. St. Jerome, who makes Akiba and Aquila the Depositors of these Traditions, to live before the Destruction of Jerusalem, is more out of the way than the Moderns.

Secondly, We have had reason to prolong Judah's Life to the beginning of the Third Century. Bartolocci will have him die in the Year 194, upon the Testimony of some Authors, who have said that he liv'd under Three Emperors, whereas he would have liv'd under more of 'em, if he had enter'd into the Third Century. This reason is not only infirm, but built upon a Supposition manifestly false, that Judah was one of the Favourites of Antoninus.

XVII. Our more certain Chronology is founded upon the History of the Christian Church. For Hillel II. was known by Origen, and he embraced Christianity in the Reign of Constantine. We have given an account of this Conversion, attested by St. Epiphanius and Eusebius of Vercelli. By making Judah the Saint to die in the Year 194, we must give a prodigious long Life to his Son, who was already of Age to be Head of the Nation when Judah died. We must also prolong that of Hillel II. vastly, in order to fix his Conversion in the beginning of the Fourth Century, about the Year 315, whereas, according to our Calculation, we find no Chasm in the History of the Jewish Patriarchs, which requires to be fill'd up, by ascribing an excessive number of Years to one of the three. Judah the Saint born in the Year 135, lived Eighty Years, to the Year 210, or 215. His Son Gamaliel was Prince till the Year 230. Judah his Successor died about 250. Hillel II. whom Origen knew might easily reach to the beginning of the Fourth Century, and Constantine's Reign, which can't be said if we make Judah die in the Year 194.

This Chronology appears the more certain, as being founded upon two fixed Points: One is the Birth of Judah, at the taking of Bither by the Emperor, sufficiently known in prophane History. The other is the Conversion of his great Grandson in the beginning of Constantine's Reign. Besides, it removes all the Difficulties in the Genealogy of the Patriarchs, which would be otherwise invincible. Lastly, It discovers Jochanan's Age, and the time when he might have written.

XVIII. Indeed Bartolocci makes him President of the Academy at Fifteen Years of Age, which is repugnant to Decorum. To which purpose he supposes that the great Men were more rare in Judea than at Babylon, which is false; for according to the Tradition of the Rabbins, the Doctors not finding Employ in Judæa, went to set up Academies at Babylon; and so great was the Reputation of that of Tiberias, and its Professors, that Nathan the Son of the Prince, and many others came from the East, to study under them, and consult them. In fine, 'tis shocking probability to affirm, that a Youth of Fifteen Years had made such Proficiency under his Master Judah, as to be able to Compose the Thalmud of Jerusalem. Let Sixtus Senensis's Opinion be rejected as much as you please [t], who affirms, that the Jerusalem Thalmud was made Three Hundred Years after the Ruin of Jerusalem, and who adds, that That of Babylon was written at Grand Cairo. This may be said to be exorbitant: But it must be likewise owned, that Jochanan, who was born in 184, could not be Director of the Academy Fifteen Years after. His Master was still alive. Chanina, whom he had named his Successor, possessed the Place Ten Years, as the Jewish Chronologer affirms. Jochanan enter'd not upon the exercise of his Office, till about the Year 225, being near Forty Years of Age. He had had time to study under Judah, to perfect himself under Chanina, and to begin his Work with the assistance of Rau, and Samuel, who were in Judæa [u], as we have intimated, in ſpeaking of the ſecond Order of the Jewiſh Doctors.

XIX. He is made to live 95 Years. He left two famous Diſciples, of which the moſt Learned was called R. Aſe; and the ſecond, which was R. Ame boaſted he had written Four Hundred Books. He had not Compoſed them, nor ſo much as Tranſcrib'd them; for it ſuffices to write one Verſe of Deuteronomy [x], which contains ſeven words to make a Ligitimate boaſt of having written theſe Books; and by this method Jochanan's Diſciple arrived to the number of 400. Both theſe Scholare had received Impoſition of Hands [y] whilſt their Maſter liv'd, and were Heads of the Academy of Tiberias after his Death; more fortunate than one of their Collegiates, who wept miſerably, that the ſame Dignity had not been confer'd on him [z].

XX. They very narrowly eſcaped a terrible Perſecution in Heliogabalus's Reign. This Prince had been [a] Circumciſed, and abſtain'd from Swines Fleſh out of Devotion; and that he might more purely ſerve the Gods. He might have borrowed this from the Jews, in whoſe Neighbourhood he was born, and with whom [b] his Family had much Correſpondence; but this eſpouſal of their Rites would not have ſecur'd them from his violence, had not Death prevented it. When he left Syria he carried his God to Rome, whoſe barbarous Name frighted the Senate. He call'd him Eliogabalus. I know not how ſome Hiſtorians and the Criticks after 'em could doubt whether this God was the Sun, or Jupiter; for the Greek Name manifeſts it to be the Sun. The Inſcriptions where the Emperor is call'd put it beyond all queſtion. Laſtly, Herodian relates, [c] that Heliogabalus deſigning to Marry this God, (whoſe Name he had taken, from being his Prieſt) at firſt order'd the Statue of Pallas to be brought, which had never been ſtir'd ſince it was convey'd from Phrygia, but Correcting his Error, he took this War-like Wife from his Deity, and ſent for Urania's Statue to Carthage, and endow'd her with all the Riches of his Temple; and this Urania, whom the Africans adored with ſo much Devotion, was the Moon, who was Married with the Sun.

There is greater difficulty in finding the Origine of the barbarous Name of this new God. Caſaubon [d] has found in it two Syriack words ſignifying the God of the Mountain, אלה גבל Alah Gabal. This Name was given him, becauſe his Temple was ſituate upon a Mountain, as they called the God Carmel, who was Worſhipp'd in the Prophet Elias retreat: So that his true Name was Algabal. Scaliger [e] found in it the Tutelar God of the Gabalites, as thinking the Emperor came from Gibel, a ſuffragan City of Antioch.

Qualis Latinus Gabalus iſte fuit.

But he is miſtaken in this Princes Country and Genealogy; for he was not born at Gibel, but at Emeſa, which gave his Grandmother her Name Maſa, who artfully procured the Empire for Alexander, who was alſo her Grandſon by Mammæa. From hence it was that his Family came, and even his Mother's Name was Syriack; for Euſebius ſays, that this Prince was kill'd with his Mother Simia of Syria [f]. Laſtly, Ammianus & Marcellinus ſpeaking of the unexpected Exaltation of ſome Perſons, quotes that of Heliogabalus Antoninus, who came from Emeſa, when Macrinas was at Antioch. 'Tis not therefore the Tutelary God of Gibel, but of Emeſa we are to ſeek for, and 'tis own'd, that they Worſhipped the Sun upon a Neighbouring Mountain of the City, and which the Inhabitants ſaid had fallen from Heaven as well as the Image of their God. But muſt we ſay, that the Sun-Mountain was this Divinity? I know not why we ſhould ſeek for a Mountain here, or that the Name of the Divinity muſt be taken from Ælah, which ſignifies GOD; for it appears evident to me, that this word is compounded of two Languages: The firſt word is the Sun, [g] הלא. There is another well enough known, which is Baal [h]. The Orientals were accuſtomed to give this Title to the Gods they Worſhipped, and particularly to the Sun. The Bahalins were unknown at Rome; and therefore both the Name, and the manner of Worſhipping this Deity ſeem'd barbarous. Laſtly, There is a third Hebrew word, גאה Gah, which ſignifies High, Exalted, Excellent. From whence the Doctors have derived [i] one of their Orders, which they called Gaons, Excellents. This Title ſuited with the Sun, by reaſon of his Elevation, and with reſpect to the exalted Place on which he was Worſhipped, Deus in Excelſis, as the Jews commonly ſaid, or elſe they ſignified hereby the Excellence of this Luminary, Heliogabalus therefore was the Sun, God, Excellent, or Exalted above all. They praiſed the Divinity by that mixture of Terms, which is no unuſual thing. For 'twas the Cuſtom of that time to aſſociate two Languages, and to coin barbarous Words from 'em, as the Example of the Gnoſticks ſufficiently proves. This muſt have been more common in Syria, where they equally ſpoke Greek and Syriack. If you'll have the word to be entirely Syriack, you'll find in it the High and Potent [k] God, which is more natural than the God of the Mountain, and this would accord with ſome Inſcription where he is called HELAGABAL. Nevertheleſs our firſt Conjecture is more probable, becauſe the Queſtion is about the Worſhip, which the City Emeſa and the Emperor paid the Sun. Let us ſee at preſent what ſhare the Jews, who were ſettled in the Roman Empire, might have in Heliogabalus's dotage for his God.

Lampridius relates, that this Prince having built a ſtately Temple to the Honour of Heliogabalus, order'd the Palladium the Veſtal Fire, the Mother of the Gods, and whatſoever was held moſt ſacred by the Romans, to be convey'd thither, being reſolv'd that Heliogabalus ſhould be the only God to be Worſhipped. To render this Union of Worſhip more compleat, he formed the deſign of introducing the Samaritans and Jews Religion, who were well known to him. The Lives and Fortunes of the Jews depended upon the Execution of this Deſign, for they would never have conſented to have Worſhipped the Sun in the Emperor's Temple, with that heap of Ceremonies his Religion conſiſted of; and they could expect nothing but Death, and the moſt cruel Tortures from a Prince, whom the Hiſtorians compare to the Nero's and other Monſters, that have govern'd the Empire. The unexpected Death of this Prince, who was Aſſaſſinated by his Soldiers, ſecur'd 'em from this impending danger. Indeed he only ſays, it was a deſign of the Emperor's, and that he talk'd of doing it. Beſides, tho' Heliogabalus had ſent the Image of his God, and had order'd it to be plac'd in the Senate above Victory, even before his entrance into Rome; and tho' the Hiſtorians relate the Extravagancies he committed to honour this Divinity, yet it required time to build the Temple, in which all Religions were to be combined. Euſebias ſays, it was not raiſed till the Year of his Death, and ſo God thereby preſerved 'em, as well as the Chriſtians, from a Scourge that was like to deſtroy them.

XXI. The Clemency of Alexander Severus contributed doubtleſs to the flouriſhing State of the Jews; for indeed this Prince openly favoured the Nation. The Wits of that time called him an Archi-Synagogue of Syria; for he came from that Province [k]. But why was he call'd Head of the Synagogue, ſince there was no ſuch thing among the Chriſtians or Heathens? The former had aſſumed the Title of Biſhop, and the latter had in Syria, their Syriarch, as thoſe of Aſia had their Aſiarch. There was alſo an Alitarch, or High-Prieſt of Antioch. Afranius [l] was in the Third Century; and 'twas he that reſtored the Olympick Games. There was no Head of the Synagogue in Syria except among the Jews. And from hence Alexander Severus was called Archi-Synagogue, becauſe he favoured the Jews, correſponded with 'em, and was inſtructed in their Religion, of which he had received ſome Tincture from his Mother Mammæa. Indeed this Prince had a medly of Religions in his Head. He never abandoned the Gods of his Fathers, nor the Heathen Idolatry, which ſtill prevail'd. But he liſted among theſe Gods, Abraham the Father of the Faithful, and the great Patriarch of the Jews. He meant alſo to admit Jeſus Chriſt among 'em, the Founder of the Chriſtians. It ſeems as if he only did it to rectifie the Deſign Heliogabalus had form'd of Writing [m] the Samaritan, Jew and Chriſtian with the Heathens in the ſame Temple; but he did it with gentleneſs for himſelf, and tormented no Body elſe.

XXII. Alexander Severus was for having the Names of the Officers he ſent into the Provinces proclaim'd. and the People licenſed to accuſe them; becauſe as the Jews and Chriſtians proclaim'd their Prieſts that they might be known, 'twas fit the ſame thing ſhould be done in point of Governors, who were intruſted with the Lives and Fortunes of the People. In fine, he often repeated this Maxim, which he had learnt from the Jew and Chriſtian: Do not to others what ye would not have them do unto you.

XXIII. The following Emperors continued the Tranquility which this Nation enjoy'd. Philip who was born in Arabia, where the Jews had ſo great a Commerce, gave 'em countenance. Decius, who perſecuted the Chriſtian Church in hatred to the Protection Philip had granted it, might have confounded them with it. But beſides that, the difference of theſe two Religions was well known, it does not appear that they had any ſhare in the ſhort and violent Perſecutions this Prince brought upon the Church. Nor muſt they be admitted into Valerian's Perſecution, nor conſider'd as the Authors of it: Tho' Dionyſius of Alexandria ſays, this Prince was compell'd to it by an Archi-Synagogue of Egypt. 'Tis true, this Term was peculiar to the Jews, as we have already obſerv'd: But whether the Egyptians, who were confounded with 'em, had borrowed this word, which ſo puzzled Valeſius, that Learned Interpreter; or whether the Magicians of this Country had places of Aſſemblies and Heads, to whom they would not give the Style that was conſecrated to the Temples and Heathen Prieſts; or that Dionyſius of Alexandria applied this Expreſſion particular to him, to the Preſidents of the Magicians, in hatred to the Jews, it is ſtill true, that an Egyptian Magician corrupted Valerian, and that the Circumciſed had no hand in the Perſecution, which was made by this Princes Orders.

XXIV. We will relate in the following Chapter what ſhare they had in Aurelian's Expedition into Armenia. At preſent we'll only obſerve, that they place the Doctor Sceſciath at the end of the Third Century [n]. He was blind [o]; but nevertheleſs became very learned. He had alſo a Diſpute with the Chriſtians, in which he had ſome reaſon. It was their Cuſtom to turn to the Eaſt, in praying to God. St. Baſil [p] ſays, this was a Myſtery few People underſtood, and that they were taught by this, to breath after their ancient Country, the Garden of Eden, which God had placed in the Eaſt. The more ſubtile Moderns ſay, they had reſpect to Jeſus Chriſt, The Eaſt from above, and the Son of Righteouſneſs who brings healing in his Wings. This is far-fetch'd, and improper to excite Devotion. What ſignified it in St. Baſil's time to wiſh for a return to the Terreſtrial Paradice, poſſeſſed by the Perſians, eſpecially if thoſe that prayed towards the Eaſt, were ignorant of the reaſon why they did it? Sceſciath had reaſon to exclaim againſt this Superſtitious or trifling Worſhip, and to ſay, that when a Man Prayed, he might turn himſelf towards all the parts of the World, becauſe God is every where. He added, that a Man ought not to turn towards the Eaſt by reaſon of the Hereticks; that is, the Chriſtians who did it. By which he fell into another Extream. Two Works are aſcribed to him; one upon the Cabbala, which was an Explication of the Splendors [q], the Manuſcript of which was in the Heidelberg Library; the other was a Targum, or a Chaldee Paraphraſe upon the Scripture.

I. AN ancient Jewish [r] Author observes, "That "a Hundred and Seventy Years after the "ruin of the Temple, the Persians fell upon the Romans, at which time Sechanias died, who "left his Son Ezechias his Successor, who ordered "himself to be buried in a City of the Holy Land, "call'd Arbeel, which was executed after his Death. This City was probably that of Hebron, known in the Scripture by the Name of Kariath Arba; and which, according to some Interpreters, was so called from Four great Men, who were buried there, Adam, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. It was made a Point of Devotion, to have their Bones convey'd thither to those of the Patriarchs.

Nathan was Born after Ezechias died. He went into the Holy Land, where he had some Imploys, and left his Son Huna, whom we consider as the first Head of the Captivity of Babylon; but as this contains some difficulty, and the Little Chronicle of the Jews makes the Persons before-mentioned Princes and Heads, 'tis necessary to offer here some Illustration.

II. The Confusion is great, because if we follow the number of Years noted in the Little Chronicle, we must reject the Persian War with the Romans to the Year 236 of Christianity, under the Empire of Alexander Severus. Indeed this Prince made War with the Persians, who began to re-establish themselves after they had ruined the Parthian Empire. But at the same time we must place very far into the Fourth Century, the Doctors R. Huna, and Samuel mention'd by this same Chronicle, tho' they lived in the middle of the Third.

If we go by the Catalogue of the Heads of the Captivity, and the Doctors named in the Little Chronicle, we must place the Persians War with the Romans under the Reign of Trajan, who actually took the Title Parthicus during his Sixth Consulship, and then there will be a false Chronology of 130 Years. There is another fault in this same Chronicle, which shews the Author not a Learned Man; for he makes Agrippa succeed Herod the Great, who had, says he, reign'd a long time. After Agrippa's Death, his Son Monabaz succeeded, which is two evidently false to be criticised. Besides, he founds upon the Tradition of the Wise Men, a succession of the Heads of the Captivity, who were of the House of David. Obadiah died in Herod's Reign, and was succeeded by his Son, as some Wise Men relate. Sechanias follow'd, and not only saw Jerusalem taken by Vespasian; but Bither ruin'd by Adrian; in a word, he liv'd 166 Years after the ruin of Jerusalem, and 'twas during the War of the Persians with the Romans, that Ezechias his Son succeeded him. So that this Tradition is not only uncertain but false, and we are not oblig'd to follow it.

III. We have already shewn, that the Princes of the Captivity are not of such Antiquity. Josephus, who wrote under Trajan, did not know them. When Justin Martyr objected to Tryphon, that his Nation had neither King nor Head, and that under Herod, who was a Stranger, they preserv'd the liberty of observing the Ceremonies of their Religion, of which they were depriv'd. Tryphon left his Adversary to triumph by his silence. Would not he have cried up the Title of Prince, and the Succession of these Princes from Jechonias, if that Dignity had been a known and real one?

IV. We only find in the Little Chronicle the Names of these pretended Heads of the Captivity, and we know 'em no other way, excepting Nathan, who came from Babylon to Judæa, whilst Simeon the Father of Judah the Saint was Patriarch. This Man is famous among the Jews; not only because he became Father of the House of Judgment at Tiberias, but because he Composed a Collection of Sentences [t] of the Fathers, which were afterwards inserted in the Thalmud of Babylon. Buxtorf has judiciously concluded, that this Author lived in the Year 230, but he has confounded his Work with a Book of the same Name, tho' different [t].

V. This Man could not be Prince of the Captivity, and quit a Dignity, that set him over the Nation, to go and be Father of the House of Judgment in such a little City as Tiberias. He could not go into the Holy Land, except in a time when it was laid waste by the ruin of the Temple, and by the avarice of Domitian, and perhaps too when Adrian's War had given the finishing stroke to its Desolation. 'Tis improbable that a Man, who had been Prince of the Captivity, would have gone and beg'd Imploys in a strange Land. 'Tis true, that Simeon, who was Patriarch, saw him arrive with jealous Eyes, because he ought to have contented himself with the Honours he had in his Country, without coming and taking the Bread from the Children of the Houshold. The Honours he enjoyed at Babylon, could not be the Command of the Nation, since he would not have quited it for a Post much inferiour to his own. We only know that his Father had been very rich; that he was eminent for his Furniture and Vessels of Silver; that his Treasures had render'd him considerable at the Parthian Court; and this doubtless made him pass for a Prince, as in Italy, a rich Jewish Merchant has been been called The Duke of the Hebrews, Il Duca de gli Hebrei. Nathan not contented with his Riches, came in queſt of Learning and Employs at Tiberias; but he was not a Head of the Captivity. Let it be farther obſerved, that he lived very long, ſince they rank him among the Thalmudiſt Writers, who appear'd not till after the Miſnah, Compoſed by Judah the Saint; and this perſuades me, that he came not to ſee the Patriarch Simeon till after Adrian's War, and under Antoninus's Empire.

VI. He returned home after a long ſtay in the Holy Land; and as he had ſeen a Patriarch Head of his Nation, tho' Poor and Miſerable, he had doubtleſs the deſire and deſign of the ſetting up the like at Babylon. But the Wars of the Romans with the Parthians, in the Reigns of Marcus Aurelius and Severus, gave no opportunity for a change of this Nature. It could not be made till after the Conqueſts of Severus, who had reduced the Parthians to a very miſerable Condition at the end of the Second Century.

VII. We have had reaſon therefore to ſay, that Huna, Judah the Saint's Cotemporary, was the firſt Head of the Captivity at Babylon, ſince the Succeſſion given of 'em by the Author of the Little Chronicle, is evidently falſe and fictious[u]. We have placed Huna's Creation in the Year 220, having removed it the ſpace of ſome Years, becauſe the Revolution that happen'd in the Kingdom of Parthia, gave them a favourable opportunity to make this new Eſtabliſhment. But we may, without fixing it preciſely, ſince 'tis only done upon Conjecture, place it in the beginning of the Third Century, and then eſtabliſh a Prince of the Captivity at Babylon, as there was a Patriarch at Tiberias. Their Authority was not great, ſince they groaned under the ſlavery of the Parthians and Romans, or of a new Uſurper: And the faſtuous Titles of Prince and King, which they often aſſumed, related rather to the Merit and Knowledge than the Power of theſe Maſters. 'Tis the common Stile of the Thalmudiſts to call thoſe Kings Melachim, who are raiſed above others, and themſelves by their Vertue; for they are more Kings than the Kings themſelves. And thus the Doctors reduce the extravagant Elogies given Solomon to a miſtical ſenſe, who is made the King of all the Earth, of Plants and Animals, and of all the Kings of the World, becauſe they related to his Knowledge and Vertue. In brief, we have already obſerved, that the Heads of the Synagogues of Germany, or of ſome Provinces of Italy, ſtiled themſelves Dukes and Princes of the Jews, and no Body ſhould be miſled by theſe pompous Names, as if the Supreme Authority was annex'd to 'em; for commonly Poor and Miſerable Doctors take 'em. But however Huna the Cotemporary of Judah the Saint was the firſt of theſe Heads in the beginning of the Third Century, and 'twas at the ſame time, that the Academies of Babylon, which grew ſo famous, were erected. But we muſt explain this Event a little more at large.

VIII. The Parthians had for a long time rul'd in this Country. Artabanes had carried the Crown from his Brothers after the Death of their Father Vologeſus. Caracalla, meaning to take advantage of this Diviſion, and having no pretence of making War, ſent to demand his Daughter in Marriage, being perſuaded ſhe would be refuſed upon the difference of Manners, and that upon this refuſal, he might declare War. The thing happened as he had projected. The Parthians, who were not prepared, were obliged to retire before the Roman Army, which ran over Meſopotamia. Caracalla being kill'd[x], whilſt the Parthians were muſtering up their Troops, Macrinus, his Succeſſor, was minded to ſignalize himſelf by a Victory, which might procure him the Title of Parthicus. He advanc'd as far as Niſibis. Herodian[y] ſays, that they fought two whole Days together, and that on the third, a Wall of dead Bodies ſeparated the Combatants: But Dion affirms[z], that the Roman Troops, which were uſed to live effeminately, were twice beaten, and that Macrinus purchaſed Peace with a Bribe of Nine Millions to Artabanes's Miniſters.

IX. This Prince was fully intent upon the Reeſtabliſhment of his Kingdom, impoveriſh'd by the War, when a new Accident diſturbed his quiet. Artaxerxes was the Son of a Shooe-maker, call'd Pabec, or of a Soldier, call'd Saſan; for his Birth remains very uncertain: But yet we may determine in favour

2. Salathiel, his Son, under Belſhazzar.
3. Zorobabel, his Son, who brought back the People under Cyrus.
4. Meſhullam, his Son, under whom Prophecy ceaſed. He died in the Reign of Alexander the Great.
5. Hananias in the Reign of Salmon, Alaſcan and Mapparis Kings of the Greeks, Succeſſors of Alexander. Salmon is Ptolomey, the Son of Lagus, Alaskan is Seleucus, and Mapparis Caſſander. He died in the Year 140 of the Greeks, or of the Seleucides.
6. Barachias his Son, under Ptolomey, who cauſed the Law to be Tranſlated into Greek; and under Antiochus, who built Antioch. He died in the Year 170 of the Greeks.
7. Haſadias, his Son, in the Year 175. The Jews ill uſed by Nicanor, rebel and kill him and all his Army. Simeon Maccabeus lived at that time.
8. Iſaiah, his Son.
9. Obadiah, his Son, who died under Herod the Great.
10. Samaias, his Son, who makes the Tenth Generation of the Houſe of David after the Captivity.
11. Sechanias, his Son, who died in the Year 166. of the Ruin of the Temple, or 236 of the Chriſtian Æra.
12. Ezechias, his Son, who was buried at Arbéel.
13. Nathan Poſthumus.
14. Huna, his Son.
15. Akob, his Son.
16. Mahum, his Son.
17. Jochanan, his Son.

  } Theſe Four Heads had but one Maſter or Preſident of the Academy, call'd Nabaneel.

18. Saphat, his Son.
19. Anam, or Honà, his Son. Samuel the Lunatick was his Council. Nahardea was taken in his time. He cauſed himſelf to be buried in Judæa near Chaia.
20. Nathan, his Son, with Ezechiel his Council. The Perſians reſolved to Perſecute the Jews in the Year 245. of the Ruin of the Temple.
21. Nathan, his Son, with the Doctor Sarbi.
22. Achabias, his Son, with the Rab. Ada. He was buried in Judæa. The King of Perſia ſubdued Syria.
23. Mar Hona, his Brother, with the Doctors Abai and Joſeph the Son of Hama. Sapor took Niſibes.
24. Ocha, his Brother with the Doctor A. Henanel.
25. Aba, his Nephew, with Rabbà and Rabbenà. The World was without King in the Year 416. of the ruin of Jeruſalem.
26. Cahanà, his Brother.
27. Saphira, his Brother, with Atta Marpotens.
28. Cahana, his Son, with Rabbenà.
29. Hona, his Nephew.
30. Hona, Uncle to the preceding. He Married the Daughter of Hanina Head of the Academy.
31. His Son was the ruin of the Houſe of David; for having ill uſed Hanina, the Plague conſumed all the Family excepting 32. Zutra Poſthumus. Iſaac the Head of the Academy was kill'd in his Reign. Mir the Great appear'd. He ſaw a Pillar of Fire, he rebell'd againſt the Perſians, acted as King for Seven Years, was kill'd. Zutra alſo was Hang'd.
33. Zutra, his Son, was obliged to retire to Judæa, and to deſire the Preſidentſhip of ſome School. He was was made Preſident of the Senate 452 Years after the ruin of Jeruſalem, 522 of the Chriſtian Æra.

of the latter, since Abulpharages [a] calls all the Kings of Persia Sasanides. This Man of so mean an Extraction endeavour'd to restore the Persian Monarchy, and to overthrow the Parthian, five hundred and fifty-five Years after Alexander's Defeat of Darius. We know not what could contribute to this Design, or the happy Success that follow'd it. But this bold Man won [b] Three Battles over the Parthians, kill'd Artabanes, and became Master of all the Kingdoms he possess'd. He push'd his Conquests even into Media; and hereupon he wore a double Crown: And, in order to restore the Monarchy in all its Splendor, he undertook to drive the Romans out of Asia. Alexander Severus [c] raised a prodigious Army to oppose him, having separated it into three Bodies the more conveniently to subsist it; but not venturing to advance with that, which he commanded, the two others were often beaten, and his own suffered very much. 'Tis said likewise that he was obliged to fly; but other Historians affirm on the contrary 'twas Artaxerxes that deserted his Standards upon seeing Ten Thousand of his Troopers arm'd Cap-a-pe fall. 'Tis certain that Alexander Triumphed for this Conquest; that he brought off abundance of Persians who were sold for Slaves, and that Artaxerxes was oblig'd to ransom them to avoid the Shame and Reproaches of the Nation. He died in the Year 244. and left his Kingdom to his Son Sapor, a Name that grew very common to the Kings of Persia, under whose Dominion the Jews came in again.

X. This Revolution was advantageous to 'em. For indeed these Two first Kings of the Persians had such Esteem for the Rabbins, that one of 'em bore the Name of these Princes. For they say [d] that Samuel Sirnamed the Lunatick, on the Account of his Skill in the Motions of the Stars, and whose Astronomical Tables are pretended to be [e] in the Vatican Library, was also called Antiochus, or Artaxerxes, because his Counsels had the same Authority as Royal Edicts. After Artaxerxes Death, they gave him the Name of his Son Sapor. He was Ingenious and Learned in the Law. He presided in the Academy of Nahardea, where he had a great multitude of Scholars.

XI. If we believe Agathias, the Usurper Artaxerxes, whom this Historian [f] calls Artaxares, brought the Magi again in Reputation. They had been thitherto very much despised: but under his and the following Reigns, they had so great an Authority, that the State was governed by their Advice. They were consulted in private and publick Affairs, and nothing seem'd right, but what was supported by their Suffrage. The Greek Historian talks almost like a Jew, who says that Samuel was called by the King's Name, because his Counsels pass'd for so many Orders of the Sovereign. Moreover the Magi were Men of Letters among the Persians; it would be no wonder then, that the Jews, who were able Physicians and Astronomers, being confounded with the Magi had great Interest at the Court. And indeed this was the time that their Academies at Babylon were erected and grew famous.

Samuel the Lunatick, or the Astronomer, had left Judæa to go into the East. He settled at Nahardea, which he render'd very famous by his Astronomical Lectures. He found out the Method of fixing the four [g] Revolutions of the Year, or the Solstices. He was Counsellor to Hona, Prince of the Captivity. He is said to die in the Year 250 of the Christian Æra. His Glory was eclips'd by that of Ada, who was born at Babylon, and had an exacter knowledge of the Course of the Sun than his Predecessor. We shall not repeat what we have said [h] of him in another Place. We'll only observe that the Jewish Historians make him live 170 Years, because they confound two Doctors of the same Name. We must not take literally what they say, that a Jewish Merchant, a Friend of his at Babylon, the Son of Bonias was so rich, that he had a Thousand Ships upon the Sea, and as many Cities upon Land. They only mean, that there were at that time very considerable Men of their Nation at Babylon, as well as Learned Men in their Academies.

XII. The Honour of this Academy was supported by two great Men, who lived in the same Century: one [i] was Jehudah the Son of Eliezer. He is absurdly placed at Pundebita, which Academy was not yet erected. He raised himself by his Learning much above the Professor of Sora, who could not stand against him, but by his Alliance with the Prince of the Captivity. We find in the Babylonian Thalmud abundance of his Decisions. His Hatred of the Heathens, which he compares to Asses, manifestly appears there. But this Aversion to Strangers has generally raised the Glory of the Doctors instead of depressing it. Nachman also possess'd this Chair, and kept up the Succession of Eminent Doctors. This was the State of one of their Eastern Academies in the Third Century. Let us pass on to that of Sora, which is no less noted.

XIII. Abba Aricha, who is intituled [k] Rau by way of Excellence, and known only by that Name, had gone into Judæa, to study under Judah the Saint, with Samuel the Astronomer. But after his Master's Death he return'd to Babylon to teach there. He refused to settle at Nahardea to avoid Competition: but he erected his Academy at Sora, where he remain'd 'till his [l] Death. One of the Princes of Babylon call'd Adarchan, was so fond of him, that he went to hear his Lectures, and was Circumcised. They make him [m] the Author of a Commentary upon Ruth, and some other Books. But as the Number of Authors was very great at that time, their Works are hard to be distinguish'd. Rau determin'd that the Synagogues ought to be raised above all the Houses of a City. The City where it is not so shall perish, said he [n], for God hath extended mercy unto us to set up his house. He never went to Sea with an Infidel, lest God should exercise his Judgment at that time. He imagined the Romans were to become Masters of all the World, Nine Months after the Coming of the Messiah the Son of David.

XIV. Huna, a Relation to the Prince of the Captivity, and of the same Name, succeeded him in this Academy. This Man pluming himself upon this Alliance, or being full of Vanity, was the first that took the Title of Prince of the Academy [o]. He had a Hundred and Sixty Volumes of the Law; but one was found illegitimate [p], because it was as long as broad. This suffices to give us a guess at the Character of these Princes of the Academy, and what Taste they had of Learning.

Let us add another Learned Man call'd Cohana. He had left his Country like the rest, to go study in Judæa; which was the Travels all in fashion. A Man was not thought to be learned, unless he had seen the Academy of Tiberias. Having heard Jochanan, and seen the Patriarch Samuel, he returned to Babylon, where he officiated as a Priest. Some doubt of it, yet he affirms he was of the House of Ely.

All the Learned that sought a Retreat in the Per- ſian Empire, and erected Academies there, demonſtrate, that Artaxerxes treated them with a great deal of Clemency.

XV. Sapor's Reign [q] is ſomewhat more ambiguous than that of his Father. It appears that he correſponded with the Rabbins, and diſputed with them. As it was not the Cuſtom of the Perſians to bury their dead, he wonder'd that the Jews ſhould do it. He ſent for Chaſda, one of the Learned of that time, who was afterwards Preſident of the Academy of Sorah, and who reckon'd twelve thouſand Scholars. He ask'd the Reaſon of this Cuſtom, and would have him prove it by an expreſs Paſſage of the Law. The Doctor was reduced to Silence; but another that was more ſubtile, turn'd off the Objection; and inſtead of a Precept produced Examples. Sapor likewiſe quoted the Example of Moſes, who was not buried. The Doctors ſtill evaded the Difficulty by ſaying, that the People wept for him.

XVI. This Prince from Controverſy came to Perſecution: at leaſt a Jewiſh Hiſtorian had read in the Annals of Perſia, which had been ſent to the King of Spain [r], that the People of his Nation had till then been very happy under the Dominion of the Perſians, becauſe their Rabbins had a Learning and Integrity equalling that of the Doctors who lived before the fall of the Temple. But the People provoked by the Eſteem they were held in, obliged the King to perſecute 'em. He reſiſted ſome time; but fearing the People would mutiny, and the rather becauſe the Arabians threaten'd him with a War, he impriſon'd againſt his Will Three of the Principal Jews [s] of his Dominions, and would force them by whipping to renounce their Religion; but they bore it with Conſtancy. Being vexed with this unſucceſsful Attempt, he made all the Princes of the Jews Priſoners, and tortur'd 'em ſo cruelly as to leave nothing but Skin upon their Bones. But God aveng'd them; for the Perſians were no longer ſo happy as they were before. The Arabians made War againſt 'em, and bound all the Perſian Kings with Cords. The King of the Arabians, a more equitable Man, as the Kings of this Country always are, ſent Officers with Promiſes to the Jews, that if they would retire into his Territories, they ſhould enjoy a full Liberty of Conſcience, becauſe a Religion embrac'd by Conſtraint becomes uſeleſs. The Perſians perceiving that the Violence they had exerciſed, drew theſe Chaſtiſements upon them, permitted the Jews the Profeſſion of their Religion. There are ſo many obſcure things heap'd together in this Story, that 'tis hard to believe theſe Annals of Perſia, that were ſent into Spain. But if any one will follow 'em, he muſt underſtand by the Arabians the Palmyrenians upon the borders of this Country, and the Saracens commanded by Odenat, who actually reduced Sapor to very hard terms.

XVII. The Perſians had again taken up Arms againſt the Romans, and beſieg'd Antioch, which was forced to ſurrender. I don't know why it is conteſted; for Capitolinus who is quoted as an Evidence, ſays [t] that the Perſians held it, when Gordian came to the Aſſiſtance of the Subjects of the Empire. This Prince obtain'd many Advantages by means of Miſitheus his Father in Law, and his Prefect of the Prætorium, who took Carræ Niſibis, and drove Sapor to his Capital. Gordian march'd to the Extremities of Perſia, where he was kill'd by Philip. The Soldiers in honour to their Commander's Memory, ſet up a Tomb: To Gordian Conqueror of the Perſians, of the Goths and Sarmatians; to him that appeas'd the Seditions of the Romans, who conquer'd the Germans, and could not conquer the Philippi [u]. The Latin Word is equivocal, and may ſignifie that he could not conquer, or keep the Field of Battel at Philippi, becauſe he had been beaten there by the Alanes, or elſe he had been conquer'd by the Philips, who had caus'd him to be kill'd [x]. This Inſcription [y] was engraven in Perſian and Jewiſh Characters, that every body might read it. This is a farther Confirmation that there were at that time abundance of Jews in the Perſian Dominions; and that they ſpoke Hebrew, becauſe theſe Characters were us'd to communicate to them the Encomiums beſtow'd on Gordian.

XVIII. They had a new Occaſion of glorying from Zenobia the Queen of the Eaſt. Theodoret [z] is groſsly miſtaken concerning her, in ſaying that the Romans had entruſted her with the Government of Syria and Phenicia: for this Woman, who became ſo famous, had married Odenat King of Palmyrene, and Commander of the Saracens of that Country, which was but a Day's March from the Euphrates. This Prince ſeeing every thing ſtoop before Sapor ſent him Preſents, and wrote to him in Teſtimony of his Submiſſion. This Conqueror, who had penetrated already into Cappadocia, and taken Cæſarea, tore Odena's Letter, and ordered his Preſents to be thrown into the River. Being exaſperated of himſelf, and by Zenobia, as haughty a Princeſs as ever was, he made an Alliance with the Romans, declared War with Sapor, gave him a great many Battels which he always won; obliged this Victor of ſo many Provinces to give up all the Treaſures he had amaſs'd in Syria in the Garriſon of Edeſſa, to purchaſe his Retreat. Odenat purſued him, ravaged Meſopotamia, beat the Nobility of the Kingdom ſeveral times, who were aſſembled upon the Neceſſities of State; and twice beſieg'd his Enemy in Cteſiphon. But after abundance of Conqueſts, and being declared Auguſtus, Zenobia his Wife, who would reign alone, cauſed him to be killed [a] with a Son he had by a former Wife. Vopiſcus [b] aſſerts that ſhe took Poſſeſſion of the Empire with her Sons, and govern'd in their Names. But we ſee a Medal of hers, on which ſhe is alone with the Title of Auguſta.

Septimia Zenobia Auguſta.

And Hope holding a Cornucopia is on the Reverſe [c]. She alſo took the Title of Queen of the Eaſt, and made her ſelf Miſtreſs of Syria and Phenicia. So that Theodoret ought not to ſay, that the Romans had deputed her to the Government of theſe Provinces: for ſhe commanded as a Sovereign, and afterwards aſſociated her Children with her in the Empire.

XIX. This Queen was a Jeweſs. Abulpharages [d] ought to have read in Euſebius's Chronicle, that this Princeſs, being a Votary to her Religion, underſtanding that Paulus Samoſatenus look'd upon Jeſus Chriſt only as a Man, approv'd this Opinion, which came nearer to that of the Synagogue; and that this was the reaſon that obliged her to give him the Biſhoprick of Antioch. This is not in Euſebius. But however [e] Theodoret owns that Paul of Samoſata thought to pleaſe this Princeſs, who was a Jeweſs, by reviving Artemon's Religion. St. Athanaſius [f] propoſes her for an Example, becauſe tho' a Jew, ſhe gave not the Chriſtians Temples to be turn'd into Synagogues by the People of her Religion; and he concludes from thence, that the Arrian Princes were more unjuſt than ſhe. But this Father of the Church was inconſiderate; for ſhe at leaſt gave the Temples and the fineſt of all the Chriſtian Churches to a Man more Heretical than the Arrians; and reſerv'd to her ſelf the Power to build Synagogues for the Jews. Indeed it can't be doubted but they made great Uſe of her Protection, and became then very potent [g] in the Eaſt under Odenat her Husband, who carried every thing before him: and when ſhe came to the Throne, ſhe added Egypt to her firſt Conqueſts; extended her Arms into Aſia Minor, as far as Tyana and Ancyra; paſs'd into Bythinia where ſhe took Chalcedon, at leaſt if Vopiſcus's Teſtimony who affirms it, is to be preferr'd before that of Zozimus, who denies it.

XX. Indeed here it was that Aurelian began to reſtore the Affairs of the Empire, which Zenobia had ruined. He enter'd into Bithynia, which reſum'd its former Maſter without Reſiſtance. From thence he went on to Cappadocia, and the Gates of Tyana being ſhut againſt him, he ſwore he would not leave a Dog alive in it; but afterwards relenting, and deſiring to ſave his Oath, he permitted the Soldiers to kill all the Dogs. Zenobia was at Antioch, from whence ſhe advanced her Troops as far as Immes, which was not far from it. The Battel was fought near the River Orontes. Aurelian's Troops retreated, that they might put the Queen's Horſemen, who were heavily arm'd, out of Breath: falling afterwards upon them, they put 'em to flight. Zabdas, who commanded for the Princeſs, foreſeeing that Antioch would ſhut her Gates againſt him, if they had notice there of his Defeat, dreſs'd up a Man, and calling him Aurelian, he gave out that he carried the Emperor Priſoner. The Stratagem was quickly diſcover'd. He ſtaid no longer at Antioch, than to take Zenobia along with him and make the beſt of his Way with her. A Second Battel was fought, in which Aurelian's Cavalry was broken: but whilſt the Palmyrenians purſued it, they fell upon the Infantry which was cut in pieces. Zenobia had no other Option to make, than to ſhut her ſelf up in Palmyra, whoſe Situation was advantagious. The Perſians, Saracens and Eaſtern Nations ſtill devoted to this Princeſs, notwithſtanding her Misfortunes, in vain attempted to ſuccour her. The Perſians were beaten, and the Saracens obliged to liſt in Aurelian's Army. Zenobia ſecretly departed out of the City to ſeek for Succour among the Perſians. But as ſhe was going to paſs the Euphrates, Aurelian's Couriers, who purſued her, took her Priſoner. Palmyra ſurrender'd. Zenobia was led in Triumph with her Son. She was loaded with ſuch ponderous Chains of Gold, as required many Officers to ſupport them. She was adorn'd with Jewels, and mounted upon a ſtately Chariot, on which ſhe had hoped to make a Triumphant Entry into Rome, whereas ſhe enter'd like a Slave. Odenat her Husband's Chariot was alſo one of the Ornaments of Aurelian's Triumph, who expoſed to View whatever was moſt rich and precious in the Eaſt, which by his preſent Victories he had re-united to the Empire. Zenobia lived at Rome, or rather at Tivoli, where ſhe had a Country-houſe. 'Tis even very probable that ſhe Married again, ſince many Hiſtorians affirm it. St. Jerom ſays there was ſtill in his Time a Family at Rome, which bore Zenobia's Name, and was deſcended from this Princeſs. 'Twas not the Cuſtom for Husbands to take their Wives Names; but there might be an Exception in Favour of a haughty Queen, who had render'd hers too Illuſtrious to ſuffer it to periſh.

XXI. This Glimpſe of Proſperity and Authority of the Jewiſh Nation vaniſh'd, unleſs we will ſay that Vaballat her Son, to whom Aurelian gave ſome Sovereignty in Armenia, had embraced his Mother's Religion, and favour'd the Jews as ſhe had done; which is very uncertain. Caſaubon [h] has even thought the Man himſelf to be imaginary, and that the Latins hearing the Syrians ſpeak often of their Bagnallat [i], that is to ſay their Queen, thought it to be a Man, whom they raiſed to a Hero. He knows not, whence Vopiſcus took this Third Son of Zenobia, unknown, ſays he, to all Antiquity. He has been ſupported by other Criticks [k], who diſpute him his Birth, and affirm that he was the Son of Herodian of Athens, and Odenat's Grandſon. Laſtly they rob him of his Crown; and read in his Medals the Name of Hermias, common among the Greeks for that of Armenia. Caſaubon's Fault is from henceforth too manifeſt, and his Conjecture overthrown by Vaballat's Medals, which ſuffer us not to doubt that there was a Prince of this Name. He was Son of Zenobia; and Vopiſcus's Authority, who affirms it, ought to prevail above Triſtan's weak Conjecture. His Mother aſſociated him with her in the Empire, and he follow'd her in the Reverſe of her Fortune; for he was carried in Triumph with her. But afterwards Aurelian, who had deſtroy'd the Two other Children of Zenobia, with a great Number of Nobility, repented of his Cruelty. We have kill'd, ſaid he to himſelf, Palmyrenians enough, we have put to the Sword their Peaſants, murder'd their old Men, maſſacred their Children, we have not ſpared their Women; to whom then ſhall we leave the Cities and Country, that are already deſolate, unleſs we pardon thoſe that remain? He pardon'd 'em in reality, and gave ſome Part of a Kingdom to Vaballat in Armenia: for we ſee ſome Medals, in which he takes this Title, Vaballat of Armenia; with Aurelian's Face, from whom he held the Crown. There are others on which the Years of his Reign are noted. But however kind Zenobia's Son's Fortune might be to the Jews, they had a great Loſs in the Fall of this Princeſs. Tho' the Son had protected them, this Protection could not extend very far.

XXII. Moſt retired into the Cities of Perſia, where their Doctors continued in ſome repute. They boaſted highly at that time of one Chiia, the Son of Aſcè, who not being able to maſter the Motions of Concupiſcence, threw himſelf into a ſmoaking Bake-houſe. We can't eaſily conceive, what Effect the Smoak of an Oven could have upon Concupiſcence, unleſs he meant to mortify himſelf by the Smoak, and to atone for ſome Fault by it. He renew'd the Cuſtom cenſur'd by our Saviour in the Goſpel, of waſhing his hands up to the elbow; for he order'd thoſe, that waſh'd before they ſat down to Meat, to hold their Fingers cloſe and contiguous, that the Water thrown upon 'em might run along the Arm. He urg'd, that the Soldiers themſelves were not diſpens'd with waſhing after Meals [l]. The Reaſon he alledg'd for this Cuſtom is Comical enough. 'Tis believed there is in the Salt ſomething of the Sulphur and Salt of Sodom; 'tis feared that ſomething of it may ſtick to the hands, and that afterwards by rubbing the eyes, a Man may loſe his Sight. Wherefore there is an indiſpenſible Obligation of waſhing after Meat.

XXIII. There was moreover at that time a famous

[m] Diſputant,

[m] Diſputant, who not only gave no reſt to the Babylonian Doctors, but to ſhame 'em the more, he made [n] his Wife diſpute againſt 'em. He was call'd Jeremy, and the Maſter of the Queſtions.[o] Laſtly, Other Doctors were ſeen at Sora, where they flock'd together, becauſe the Academy of Nahardea was fallen with the City, which was taken and plunder'd. Zirà, ſirnamed [p] Kattinà, was ſtill there. He at firſt left his Country to go and ſtudy at Tiberias, where he had alſo received the Impoſition of Hands; but the Authority and Friendſhip of Huna had recall'd him to his Academy, where he liv'd till the Year 300. when deſiring to lay his Bones in Judæa, he choſe rather to carry his living Body thither himſelf, than to make it travel after his Death. So that tho' the Jews of Babylon had a great Eſteem for themſelves, yet that hinder'd not their going to ſtudy in Judæa, and commonly to return thither before they died.

XXIV. Manes appear'd towards the end of the Third Century [q]. The Religion of the Jews, and even their God was not to his liking; and the Sacred Hiſtory with all the Miracles it is fraught with, ſcandalized him, inſtead of ſubduing his Reaſon and his Wit. He could not bear a God of Battles; who cauſed all the Nations to be extirpated, that were found in the Road of his People. He doubted not, but a Divinity, that lov'd Vengeance, Murder and the Deſtruction of the Creatures, was an evil Principle, an Enemy to Mankind, and ſtill a greater Enemy to God that made them. The Goſpel ſuted ſomething better with his Taſte, becauſe it manifeſts more Mercy, and leſs Juſtice, more Grace, and leſs Chaſtiſement. Nevertheleſs he had great Conferences with the Jews of Perſia, where he had much Correſpondence, whether he deſigned to be fully inſtructed in the Law, or rather deſired to recover 'em from what he call'd their Infatuation. The Modern Jews are not agreed about their Anceſtors Conference with Manes, and in their Kalendar they fix the Origine of his Seat towards the end of Conſtantine's Reign.

XXV. Laſtly, [r] Diocleſian's Perſecution happen'd ſome time after. But the Savage and cruel Princes, who govern'd the Empire at the end of the Third Century, ſpar'd the Circumciſion and the Synagogues at the ſame time, that they fell foul upon the Temples and Profeſſors of Chriſtianity. Diocleſian did not think 'em perhaps worthy of his Anger; and their number being extreamly leſſened in the Roman Empire, it was not thought neceſſary to employ Force and Conſtraint againſt a Religion, whoſe Poverty and ſmall numbers gave Heatheniſm no jealouſie. But yet they tell, that this Prince had a deſign to Perſecute 'em, being induced to it by the ſharp Ralleries of Judah the Saint's Diſciples, who laugh'd at him for his having kept Hogs; that they eluded his Wrath by telling him, That if they had deſpiſed the Swine-herd, they reſpected the Emperor. This Fable perhaps is a miſtaken Commentary of the Prediction that had been made to Diocleſian, that He ſhould be Emperor, when he had kill'd a wild Boar, which engag'd him to go frequently a hunting of theſe Animals. But this Boar was Aper, Prefect of the Prætorium, whoſe Death open'd his way to the Empire. For tho' Diocleſian was of a mean Birth, yet it is not true, that he had been a Swine-herd. Were Judah the Saint's Diſciples in Dalmatia, his Birth-place, to reproach him thus; or durſt they do it, when he went into Syria, being already extreamly formidable? This is ſo much the worſe imagin'd, that they make Judah the Saint to live in the time of Antoninus.

I. THE Jews were not much happier under the Chriſtian Emperors, than they had been under the Reign of Idolaters. Their Fate varied according to the Genius of Princes. The Chriſtians were ſo ill handled by the Perſecutions they had ſuffered, that they could not ſo ſuddenly reſolve upon a change of Maxims. Conſtantine contented himſelf with making ſome Laws, that confined the Jews Liberty to narrower Bounds, tho' they were the Objects of his hatred; but by degrees way was given to the bent of Nature, which tends to the Puniſhing and Perſecuting thoſe that contradict us in Point of Religion. The Councils themſelves, that ought to have been more equitable, were of this Temper, and became Incendiaries, that inflam'd Princes againſt the remains of a miſerable Nation. We often boaſt of Humanity, and fancy the Inſtincts of Nature ſufficient to make us compaſſionate to other Men: But we don't well conſider this matter. For Pride is another Principle in Man, which has far the Aſcedant over Humanity; which riſes upon ſeeing thoſe conſiderable Parts of Mankind, who think differently from us, and aſſume the privilege of conteſting the Truths we believe our ſelves poſſeſſed of. Humanity ſpeaks firſt, and ſuggeſts motions of Lenity; but Pride quickly impoſes its ſilence, and inflames the Heart, and deaffens the Mind to the Dictates of Juſtice and Equity. And as all Men are obnoxious to this Paſſion, 'tis no wonder to find Perſecutions in all Religions. Thoſe that handle the Myſteries, are more cruel than the reſt, becauſe beſides that, they are puffed up by Religion, which raiſes 'em above the level of Men of equal Birth, they fancy the Oppoſition made againſt the Myſteries of which they are the Defenders and Miniſters, to be a Perſonal Affront upon themſelves. So that Councils commonly Authorize and begin the Perſecutions, which Kings afterwards carry to the utmoſt exceſs.

II. The firſt Event we find in the Life of Conſtantine concerning the Jews, is related by Zonaras. This Hiſtorian ſays [f], they had a Conference at Rome with Helena this Emperor's Mother, who was yet unconverted. They repreſented to this Princeſs, that tho' her Son had reaſon to aboliſh Heatheniſm and its Idols, yet he had made no great progreſs towards his Salvation, ſince inſtead of the Heroes of ancient Heatheniſm, he Worſhipped a Man who had been Crucified but a few Ages before. Helena, who was devout and reſtleſs for her Son's Salvation, oblig'd the Doctors to a Conference with Pope Sylveſter, who quickly triumphed over the Enemies of the Chriſtian Religion. But as they were ſtill diſputing, one Zambres a Magician, whom the Rabbins had brought with 'em, cauſed an Oxe to fall down dead at Silveſter's Feet. He was not ſurpriz'd at the Miracle; for he raiſed the Oxe again; whereupon all the Aſſiſtants acknowledging the Pope's Power to be ſuperiour to the Magicians, required Baptiſm; and Helena alſo deſired Inſtruction. This is a Monk's Story. But yet as there are Underſtandings of all ſorts and ſizes in the World, if there be any one credulous enough to digeſt this Conference and Miracle, and ſudden Converſion attending it, he may ground upon the Authority of an Arabian Hiſtorian, who [g] aſſerts there were Twelve Thouſand Jews and Heathens, without reckoning Women and Children, who were Baptized at Rome in Conſtantine's Reign. Abulpharages does not mention the Miracle, but by tacking the Arabian Story to the Greek Monks; the latter Event may be conſidered as the Conſequence of the former; and the Converſion of ſuch a Multitude as the Proof and Effect of the Oxe's Reſurrection.

III. 'Tis ſaid likewiſe, that Conſtantine perſecuted the Circumciſed; for St. Chryſoſtome [u] affirms, that upon their aſſembling once to re-build Jeruſalem, this Prince diſguſted with their raſh attempt, ſurpriſing them, cauſed their Ears to be cut off, and afterwards diſperſed 'em into all the Territories of his Empire, as ſo many Fugitive Slaves. Eutychius adds [x], that Conſtantine oblig'd 'em all to be Baptiz'd, and to eat Swines Fleſh on a Paſſover Day. Perſecution can't be carried farther; but I queſtion the Truth of theſe Particulars. St. Chryſoſtome has great Authority in the Church; but it is not always ſafe to believe him in telling of Stories: For the Jews ſay themſelves, and are back'd by Abulpharages [y], that 'twas the Emperor Adrian, who cauſed their Ears to be cut off, like the Slaves which he ſold at the Fairs of the Empire. Beſides, Jeruſalem had been re-built under Conſtantine's Empire; its Biſhop had aſſiſted at the Council of Nice, and the Emperor had raiſed ſuch ſtately new Buildings it in, that Euſebius told him, in a prophane manner [z], that 'twas the New Jeruſalem, foretold him by the Prophets, which he had built. How then could the Jews mutiny and rendevous to do a thing which was done before? Laſtly, Tho' the Theodoſian Code contains many Laws againſt the Jews under Conſtantine's Name, yet there is not one condemning them to the loſs of their Ears, to be Baptized, or to eat Swines Fleſh.

IV. But this Prince Publiſhed ſeveral Edicts, which acquaint us with the Condition and reſtleſs Humour of the Jews under his Reign. The firſt is one of the moſt important: It was iſſued, if I miſtake not, upon occaſion [a] of Joſeph, who had abandon'd the Synagogue to embrace Chriſtianity. The Jews incenſed by his Converſion, went to inſult him in his Houſe, and finding that he read the Goſpel, they forc'd his Book from him, loaded him with Abuſes and Blows, hall'd him to the Synagogue, where they unmercifully ſcourg'd him. But not content with this firſt Outrage, they puſh'd him into the River Cydnus, whoſe Current carried him far enough to give 'em the joyful Hopes that he was drown'd. But God preſerv'd him. He receiv'd Baptiſm, made himſelf known at Court, and obtained the Emperor's Leave to build Temples in ſeveral Places, where none had been before. The Jews were re-ſettled at Diocæſarea, Tiberias, Nazareth and Capernaum, and had ſo appropriated theſe Cities to themſelves, as not to admit any Strangers, without excepting the Samaritans, who profeſſed the ſame Religion. Joſeph undertook to introduce the Chriſtian Religion in all theſe Cities, and to that effect built Churches in 'em. At Tiberias, he met with a reſiſtance, that drew down Miracles from Heaven. There was in that City, where the Miſnah was written, and the Academy ſtood, a great Edifice, which had been deſign'd for a Temple to the Emperor Adrian, whoſe Name it bore. Indeed there is a Medal, which perfectly explains what St. Epiphanius ſays [b]; on it we find a Temple, in which the Emperor is ſeated with this Legend; Τιβερ. Κλαυδ. ετ Αρ. that is, that they were the People of Tiberias. who had ſtruck it in the Year 101. of their [c] Epoch, which began under Tiberias. The Emperor, that appears in the Temple of Tiberias, is Adrian. Nevertheleſs, as this Edifice was never compleated, it was deſigned to the uſe of Bagnio's. Joſeph deſign'd to Conſecrate it to God. He wanted Lime to finiſh it, and to this purpoſe he erected Kilns without the City. The Jews enraged at his Deſign, had recourſe to Magick, as Epiphanius ſays; which Art was ſo ſucceſsful as to hinder the Fire from kindling, and the Lime from being made. Joſeph being vex'd at ſo unexpected an Accident, went out of the City at the head of a Multitude of People, curious to ſee what he was going to do. When he came to the Place, he made the ſign of the Croſs, invok'd the Name of Jeſus over the Water which he had brought in a great Veſſel, and hereby communicated to it the vertue of diſſipating the Magical Spell, and rekindling the Fire. And at once throwing the Water into all the Kilns, the Wood immediately was ſeen to kindle, and the Flame to come out. This Miracle converted a multitude of Jews: But yet the reſt continued to oppoſe the Conſtruction of the Temple, of which they could only build one part, wherein they erected a little Church.

St. Epiphanius ſeems poſitive of the Truth of the Miracle. For our part we will only obſerve, that the Jews were ſtill powerful in Judæa under Conſtantine's Empire, ſince they alone poſſeſs'd four Cities, one of which was Nazareth, where our Lord was Educated. Their numbers rendered them inſolent, ſince they ill uſed thoſe that were turn'd Chriſtians, and ſo publickly oppoſed the Execution of the Princes Orders for the building of Temples.

V. This doubtleſs oblig'd Conſtantine to publiſh the Edict before-mentioned. He taxes them with ſtoning, or burning whoever had a mind to renounce their Religion; and he condemn'd them to the ſame Puniſhment, with all their Accomplices. Herein we ſtill ſee the Footſteps of that furious Zeal, which they thought Authoriz'd them to kill thoſe who were taken in a notorious Crime. They imagined theſe were the Precepts of the Oral Law; and ſaid, that Phineas had executed the verbal Order of Moſes. They produced another Example under the Macchabees, when Mattathias kill'd a Jew, who was practiſing Heathen Ceremonies. The Doctors Authoriz'd this Practice; for Philo doubted not but God had eſtabliſhed it. The Eſſenes thoſe auſtere Votaries order'd, that if any Man had blaſphemed againſt Moſes, he ſhould be kill'd. Joſephus ſays [d], that they puniſhed him with Death. The Interpreter has ill Tranſlated it; they condemn'd him to Death. For as this Sect had no power of Life and Death, it puniſhed Blaſphemers by a motion of Zeal. Notwithſtanding the terrible Diſorders, and the Torrents of Blood that the Zealots had cauſed to flow at Jeruſalem, yet this dangerous Maxim was ſtill preſerv'd; and the Miſnah teaches, that if any one renounces the Foundation; that is, the Articles of Faith, he ought to be kill'd, and purſuant to this Principle, they ſton'd, burnt and drown'd thoſe that deſerted them in Conſtantine's Reign. This oblig'd him to repreſs that violence, and as they did not obey the firſt Law, he was forc'd to make a ſecond.

VI. He [e] alſo forbad the Chriſtians to turn Jews upon pain of an Arbitary Puniſhment. There was more danger in point of Slaves, who might be brought over by their Maſters: And therefore this Prince Publiſhed a Law ſix Months before his Death, prohibiting the Jews to Circumciſe thoſe in their Service; and giving liberty to all who accuſed their Maſter of having Circumciſed them, or that embraced Chriſtianity. Euſebius, who muſt have known this Law, [f] gives it a greater extent; for he ſays, that the Jews were not allowed to buy Chriſtian Slaves, and keep 'em in their Houſes; aſſigning for a reaſon of it, that it was not juſt, that thoſe who were ranſomed by the Blood of Jeſus Chriſt, ſhould be ſubject to the Murderers of the Prophets of the Son of God.
